THE TRUTHSEEKER

DEVOTED TO SCIENCE, MORALS

FREETHOUGHT AND HUMAN HAPPINESS

Vol. 5. No. 1. {PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY D. M. BENNETT.} New York, Saturday, January 5, 1878. {SCIENCE HALL, 141 8th St., NEAR BROADWAY.} $3 per Year.

Notes and Clippings.

THE discussion on hell waxes hot.

THERE are 50,000 colored persons who profess the Catholic religion in Georgia.

BEECHER says it is not his fault that he got into the Church, and it is not his fault either that he did not get out of it long ago.

THE American Baptist Quarterly has suspended. There was a lack of subscribers, and many who had subscribed were too slow in paying up.

THE Baptist Publication Society has cut down the salaries of all its employees, from the greatest to the least, at rates varying from 10 to 30 per cent.

IN London, Ont., a man has been fined $5 in gold for swearing on the street on Sunday. If this were impartially done in this city, our municipal debt might be considered as provided for.

THE important judicial question is before the New York courts whether a wife who was induced to marriage by the representation of a husband that he was a Jew is entitled to a divorce on discovering that he is not a Jew in all respects.

AT Corpus Christi, Texas, on a recent Sunday the rector of the Episcopal church on opening the Bible to read the Scripture lesson found a well-selected euchre hand of cards between the leaves. He made it the occasion for a close talk with his people.

A CURIOUS complaint comes from the South. It is that the colored converts to Catholicism hold fast until they come within reach of a Methodist camp-meeting. Then they return to their first love and the process of conversion to the Roman Catholic Church must be done over.

"WHAT is your chief consolation in life?" asked a pastor of a young lady in his Bible-class. The young lady blushed and hesitated, but on the question being repeated, the ingenuous maiden said: "I don't like to tell you his name, but I have no objection to tell you where he lives."

THE Rev. W. J. Parkinson, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal church, Shelburn Falls, Mass., has retired from the charge, having married a wealthy young widow of seventy-five years of age. He believes in taking care of the dollars and letting the souls take care of themselves.

THE new and beautiful building of the Congregational church at Seneca Falls, N. Y., cost $34,000. Yet a $10,000 mortgage proved too much for it to carry, and it has been knocked down under the hammer of the sheriff's auctioneer. A friend of the church bought it for $8,000, and will let the church-people use it.

RULES FOR BEHAVIOR IN CHURCH.

Let your thoughts be fixed on high,
And rearrange your cardinal tie.
Put from your mind all thoughts of sin,
And readjust your diamond pin.
The last words hear with contrite heart.
And fix your pullback when you start.

THIEF stole Talmage's coat. Talmage ran after thief and caught him. Thief slipped out of Talmage's hands. Talmage and police ran after thief. Thief caught. Overcoat now hanging up on the hat rack of Talmage's. Thief in durance vile. "If any man take away thy coat give him thy cloak also."—J. Christ, in his recent Sermon on the Mount.

MR. VANDYKE who was recently hung at Canton, N. Y., for wife murder, requested that he might be hung at 11 o'clock, A.M., so as to be able to get to hell in time for dinner. He evidently did not expect to be "jerked to Jesus' as is usually the case, and having been a patron of second-class boarding houses, he realized the importance of getting to the table on time.

THE Baptists are having another set-to with the heretical sects on the much or little water question. It strikes us if they would just turn the faucet, let all the water run out, and then start a missionary enterprise among the heathens of New York, they would find that Christianity consists not so much in "What are you talking about?" as in "What are you going to do about it?"

IN England and Wales the Roman Catholics number one-twentieth of the population. In the United States, of the ten archbishops four are Irish, and of the fifty-six living bishops twenty-nine are of the same nationality, while of the 5,200 priests in the United States no less than 3,000 belong to the Irish race. The same proportion is manifested in the laity, who are officially returned at 6,500,000, and of these 4,000,000 have been supplied by the Irish.

WHEN a missionary asked the chief of a South African tribe to embrace Christian religion, he replied, "You have many Christians here trying to convert my people. I notice that you call yourselves by different names—one a Baptist and another an Episcopalian—and that you are envious of each other and hardly speak together. Now, when you all become as brothers, I will join you and not before." We are afraid that that poor benighted chief will die in his paganism.

SOME of the promoters of Sunday concerts in London were much annoyed by the efforts made to close their halls. So they formed themselves into a new religious sect, which, under the laws, they had a right to do. The name they adopted is "The Religious Recreationists." Now they drive on with their Sunday concerts as freely as they please. In this country the Religious Recreationists have not had occasion to organize themselves into a sect, yet the denomination is large and increasing.

THE Southern Presbyterian Publication Board has sold its stock of books and removed to an upper story near the roof, renting the lower floor, which it formerly occupied, to a large clothing concern. Among all the religious publishing concerns that have wriggled their troublous way through impecuniosity, bankruptcy, and the like, probably no one can point to a history of more incompetent management than this. This is the concern which let Brother Baird accidentally, ignorantly, and unintentionally, get away with $22,000.

WHEN the pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Swedesboro, N. J., had got as far in his sermon last Sunday as to "thirdly," he and his hearers were suddenly summoned by the sexton to subdue a conflagration which had broken out in the church loft. An ungodly stovepipe, defective in its most heavenward joints, had caused the mischief. Timely efforts saved the sacred edifice. The rest of the Rev. Mr. Wanderer's sermon was lost to the congregation, who were left to consider whether or not they ought to be thankful for the wicked pipe.

HERE is a fine chance for a cultivated clergyman to secure a call. The church on the island of St. Kilda, Scotland, wants a pastor. There are seventy-five persons on the island, none of whom gets drunk or is otherwise vicious. The pay is not large, but the expense of living is small. The labor of pastorial visitation to the widows and fatherless is far less than that of the Brooklyn pastor who says he spends eighty cents a day in street-car fares going his rounds among his flock. The St. Kildaites are not exacting in the matter of preaching, and it is possible that a good reader of old sermons might get along.

NAPOLEON BONAPARTE used to say that in war, "Heaven usually took sides with the heaviest artillery." In the present Eastern war this is apparently true. Russia has the largest guns, the most men, and the most money. But Heaven for some time seemed at a loss which side to befriend. Both sides have too much religion and of an extremely poor quality, at that. The Turks are a miserable nation of corrupt, ignorant, superstitious vagabonds, and the Russians are little better, with a religion as low and degraded as it is possible for a religion to be. Heaven must have been in a puzzle to decide which side to espouse.

IS THE bottom of Hell dropping out sure enough? The Rev. T. T. Munger, a Congregationalist of Massachusetts, has declared his doubts about the existence of Hell; and though they are substantially the same as those expressed by another clergyman, the Rev. Mr. Merriam, a council in North Adams voted unanimously to install him as pastor of a church in that town. The council was presided over by ex-President Hopkins of Williams College, a leading light in the Congregational Church, a man who for years has laid down the law to younger ministers. A prominent member of the council also was President Porter of Yale College, the oldest and most prominent seat of theological learning in the country. See also what Mr. Beecher has to say about Hell. If the heads of these two orthodox colleges do not think a belief in the existence of Hell is of any necessity, does it not look as though the bottom had dropped out in reality? When Hell is gone the Devil goes with it, and there is nothing to be saved from. When the Christians give up the sweet idea of a burning lake of fire for poor erring mortals to be thrown into there will be little use for all their terrible theological humbugs and scarecrows. People may then be left to be governed by the higher moral principles inseparably connected with enlightened human nature. There is much ground for hope.

THE LAST SUNDAY OF THE YEAR.—To-day is the last Sunday of the year 1877. Doubtless the preachers will all refer to the fact and draw from it moral and religious admonitions for the benefit of their hearers. It has not been a year remarkable for the progress of the churches. The revival efforts of Moody and Sankey have not been kept up during the twelvemonth past on the large scale of their first attempts to arouse the public. The evangelists seem, indeed, to be gradually passing out of sight, and it is not likely that they will again attract the notice they once got in our great cities. It was the novelty of their methods, added to the fame they brought with them from England, which captivated the public and drew such vast crowds to their tabernacles. Now that the novelty is gone, the curiosity to see and hear them having been satisfied, they cannot hope to have their early experiences in New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Chicago, and Boston repeated. What have been the permanent results of their efforts? Has the church and has religion gained by the extraordinary means used by them for the conversion of men? These are questions which the denominations that most encouraged the revivalists can best answer; but it is safe to say that the effect left by them has not been deep or lasting, and it may be doubted whether they did not do just about as much harm as good; whether the reaction from the religious excitement they created has not been a bad thing for the churches. One of the most noteworthy and suggestive phases of the religious year has been the exposure of the criminal practices of so many men conspicuous in the church. The list of defalcations, breaches of trust, embezzlements and forgeries by highly respectable church members is surprisingly long, and every few days we are called upon to make additions to it. The preachers will do well if they treat this grave subject to-day honestly and manfully, and warn their hearers against the wickedness of using religious profession and an outward religious behavior as a cloak for business iniquity. Another feature of the year has been the steady advance of the columns of Infidelity against the positions of the church. The fundamental doctrines of Christianity are steadily assailed by very many learned and skilful writers, and it cannot be denied that there are signs of wavering on the part of their defenders. We find Canon Farrar of Westminster Abbey arguing away an eternal hell, while in this country Dr. Porter of Yale College, and Dr. Hopkins of Williams, both venerable seats of orthodoxy, so far agree with him that they are ready to install a Universalist as the pastor of a Congregational church. The spread of heterodoxy is further attested by the cases of Dr. Blauvelt and Dr. Miller, who have many sympathizers, even in the so-called evangelical churches. It is undeniable that some of the old-fashioned doctrines which have always been held essential parts of the orthodox theological system are now utterly rejected or adroitly explained away by divines who command the ear of the public. The preachers might well give a candid statement to-day of their views as to these efforts to alter the received faith and their convictions as to the importance or otherwise of the doctrines assailed. It is worth considering whether, if hell goes, heaven will not next follow; and the logical sequence is the denial of immortality itself.—N. Y. Sun, Dec. 30.

Events of the Week.

THE legislature of this State convened on New Year's Day.

A BAKER named Mink was murdered in this city on New Year's night.

PROF. HENRY, of the Smithsonian Institute, has discovered a new planet.

A PLEASANTER New Year's Day never was known than the one just past.

THE yield of gold and silver in the States and Territories west of the Missouri in 1877 was $38,500,000.

EIGHT hundred and seventy-four failures are reported to have occurred in this city in 1877. Liabilities $52,000,000, assets $21,000,000.

COL. R. G. INGERSOLL is to deliver a lecture in Washington on the 13th inst. He will also lecture in this city on the 29th—the 141st birth day of Thomas Paine.

LESS wine, brandy, and whisky were offered to New Year's callers, on Tuesday last, than usual. Tea and coffee were largely substituted and less drunkenness was the happy result.

THE Silver bill will undoubtedly demand the earliest attention of Congress when it reassembles on the 10th inst. A great amount of anxiety is felt upon the subject. The capitalists and bankers of this and other Eastern cities are opposed to the remonetization of silver because it will increase the amount of legal tender in the country and reduce the relative power of the quantity they hold. The interest of the poor man and of those in moderate circumstances lies in a plentiful supply of money which will pay every variety of debt. It may be set down as an axiom that the best interests of the masses do not consist in yielding to the wishes of the capitalists, who are struggling for resumption. The contest bids fair to be extremely lively in Congress within a very few weeks.

DR. T. S. LAMBERT, President of the late American Popular Life Insurance Co., was, on the 2d inst., sentenced to five years at hard labor in the State Prison for perjury in making false and fraudulent returns. Upon being asked by Judge Brady why the sentence of the law should not be passed upon him the Doctor made a speech of two hours' length, protesting his innocence, calling for sympathy for his family, complaining that he had not had a fair trial, etc. Judge Brady, before passing sentence, proceeded at some length, saying that a fair trial had been afforded the prisoner, that the crime was one of great magnitude against society, and he was surprised that a man of so much intelligence as Dr. Lambert possessed should be guilty of it. He felt sympathy for the family of the condemned man, but it was the accused himself to whom his family had to look as the cause of their trouble, and he alone was to blame. The judge felt it to be his duty to extend his sympathy to those who had been injured by the prisoner's wrong-doing. The court-room was filled with attentive listeners.

THE war excitement is waxing hot in Europe. Russia has refused to accept England as a mediator between Turkey and herself, at which John Bull is very angry and feels very much like rushing to arms. Italy is also excited, but apparently in opposition to Turkey and England. The horizon of Europe looks very threatening. Every nation in it may be involved before the expiration of three months. Not very much is doing at the seat of war. The snow and frost interfere greatly with active operations. The weather is colder than usual in Turkey. The Russians had to march through deep snow in order to occupy the Balkan passes. The Turks are very anxious to negotiate for peace. An armistice has been proposed by Austria and probably will be effected. The Grand Vizier at Constantinople has announced that the Porte has all along intended to make Batoum a free port, and is willing to conciliate Montenegro, but will not forgive Servia for the part she has taken during the war. A dispatch from Bucharest to London says communications across the Danube are still interrupted. A dispatch from Athens says there are serious disturbances in Crete and that an attempt was made to assassinate the British consul.

Radical Romance.

The Darwins.

BY MRS. ELMINA D. SLENKER.

CHAPTER I.

"Good morning, Jennie; I've run in to see if you would go with me to call upon the Darwins, who have lately moved to the Forks. None of the town-people have been to see them yet, and as they are strangers in the vicinity, it is the duty of old citizens to make the first call."

"Very true, Edith, but I prefer not to cultivate their acquaintance, for my Sunday-school teacher told me last week that she heard the Darwins were Infidels; and she said that young people, whose opinions were not firmly fixed, should keep away from all such associates, and, moreover, that those who did go there were guilty of upholding them and consequently in a measure responsible for the prevalence of their ideas. So just take off your things and spend the afternoon with me and we will have a nice time playing euchre."

"I should really enjoy a few games with you, Jennie, but how comes it that you have taken to playing cards again when you all agreed to give it up the time the Church made such a fuss about it?"

"Oh! we knew there was no harm in playing, so we never quit at all, but were only private and quiet about it, just as our mothers are when they do a bit of sewing or baking on Sunday, if it happens to be more convenient, and no one knows about it."

"But, Jennie, you are aware that I do not approve of underhand doings, and believe that whatever cannot be done openly and above board had better not be done at all."

"Yes, Edith; I know you are powerful particular; but father and I often play at home, and ever so many more of the church-members do the same. Though father is a preacher, he isn't a bit fogyish."

"And you, Sue, how is it with your parents? Do they play and encourage you to do so?" said Edith, turning with a comical smile, to Jennie's companion.

"Now, you know you are poking fun at me, Edith," said Sue, "Just fancy my pious paternal relative as much as touching one of those bits of pasteboard with a ten-foot pole! Such a faithful, consistent church-member as he is! Always with a Bible text ready for any occasion, and pious mottoes, representations of the crucifixion, death-bed scenes, and other holy pictures hanging all around our walls teaching us 'the way, the truth and the light.' He play cards! No indeed! Nor would he allow me to do it—but I have a will of my own, and don't mean to spend all my leisure time reading dry old books of sermons, Lives of Martyrs, or trashy Sunday-school volumes containing pictures of some ancient, antediluvian age. Old Mrs. Jones was reading one yesterday when I called there, and she said it was 'such a good book!' Bah! I wouldn't give a rusty copper for the whole box full. They are only the cast-off, dilapidated refuse of some New England Sunday-school which the managers thereof thought 'good enough for the South,' but entirely 'too slow' for those who had evoluted as they had;" and Sue laughed a bitter, sarcastic little laugh as she concluded.

"And how can you be so wise concerning those books?" asked Edith, smiling at the impetuous warmth with which her friend had spoken.

"Oh, I heard Rev. Mr. Dean telling his sister about it the other day, as I stood in the hall shaking the rain-drops off my dress preparatory to knocking at the door," said Sue. "I wasn't eaves-dropping either, for I'd scorn to do that, or any other real mean thing, if I do play cards and act underhandedly now and then. Mr. Dean was talking quite loud, and the door was ajar, so I couldn't help hearing."

"Well, I must be going if I intend making my call," said Edith, "I shall ask Myra Scott if she will not go with me."

"Oh, she'll be glad enough to go," said Jennie, "for she was talking about the Darwins only yesterday, and said she should like to see them just to know how real Infidels looked, talked, and acted in their homes. I have no doubt, for my own part, but that they are terrible folks and quarrel and fight among themselves like cats and dogs, and drink liquor and blaspheme and swear all the time, just as 'Old Tom Paine' did."

"It may be that they are not very nice people, Jennie," said Edith, "but I think I will call, this once at least, and see them—but as for Mr. Paine being so bad as we have always thought him, there must be some mistake about that. I've learned some new things about him lately; but I am in a hurry now and must go on, so we will leave the discussion of Mr. Paine for some other time."

"Well, be sure and call and tell us the news as you come back," said Sue.

"I will if I am home early enough."

"Oh! I fancy you will see plenty of the menagerie in a little while," said Jennie, laughingly, as she bade her friends good evening and commenced dealing the cards for euchre.

Perhaps I may as well pause here and introduce our young people more particularly. Edith May was a pleasant-faced girl and had an abundance of genial good nature and strong common sense. She was about twenty-eight years of age, and the only child of Widow May, who owned Rose Hill, one of the prettiest places in town. The widow also had a small income derived from some railroad shares, which, with Edith's wages as music teacher, not only gave them a comfortable living, but enabled them to materially assist those who were not so well off as themselves. Edith was not at all handsome, but there was such a winsome charm in her way and manners, and such a friendly cordiality in her greeting, that one always felt at ease in her presence; and her sensible, practical ideas made her a useful as well as an interesting companion; and therefore her society was sought for by young and old, and especially by those who were in trouble or difficulty of any sort.

Jennie Martin was the only child of Rev. Mr. Martin. She was passably good-looking, quick, bright, and sharp, and was determined some day to make a mark in the world and be somebody, instead of merging her identity in that of a man and feeling that he was always fancying himself head and shoulders above her in intelligence and capacity.

Sue Conway was the eldest of half a dozen children who surrounded the meagre board of old Deacon Slim, as he was characteristically called by his neighbors. The Deacon was a tall, lean, lank, sour-visaged old gentleman, and was very particular in the outward observance of church rules and discipline and a great stickler for Bible morality; but he was not a good man at heart, though few dared say as much, on account of the sacred (?) office he held, for he had been deacon of the Campbellite church of the village of P—— for some twenty years. His wife was a feeble delicate woman who had slaved herself almost to death, to be cook, laundress, seamstress, wife, mother, and general housekeeper—all in one. Her sole aim in life was to try to please her grumbling, morose, and selfish husband and to care for her children and home; and had it not been for the thoughtful assistance of Sue, she would long ago have sunk under the accumulation of her manifold labors. Stout, healthy, and cheerful when she married, she was now a mere shadow, and seldom a smile passed over her wan visage. The Deacon was comfortably well off, but miserly and stingy in his provision for his family, and their home was bare and shabby in the extreme, therefore it was no wonder that Sue often rebelled against her environments and longed for better things. She was a smart, bright, intelligent girl. Her fair open forehead, with reddish-brown curls clustering about it, her rosy cheeks and dimpled chin, and the sweetest and bluest of blue eyes, made a pleasing picture to look at.

But she had been schooled in duplicity all the years of her life—being taught to care more for what people would say than for actual right or wrong, and then everything was hidden from "father" that would make a fuss; and she well knew the Deacon himself did many mean things that he was careful his neighbors should not find out, lest they should discover the difference between his theory and practice, so altogether it was no wonder that our little friend Sue was something of a dissembler.

Myra Scott was a gay, sensible, good-looking sort of a girl about nineteen years of age. She was blunt spoken and very abrupt in her ways, and would tell unpleasant truths directly to a person's face in the frankest manners, and use sharp, cutting expressions, which very naturally, often gave offense to those with whom she came in contact; but she was so perfectly honest and truthful, so good and kind at heart, and so loving and affectionate, that she soon healed the wounds she made, and was, in spite of all, a general favorite. Even those who were most hurt by her plain speeches were often compelled to own that they were benefited by seeing themselves as others saw them.

The Darwins were Connecticut Yankees and had been living for some years in Tennessee, where they had been part owners of a small woollen-mill, but thinking they could do better, financially, in Virginia, they had bought the old mill-site at the Forks and moved there a few weeks previous to the commencement of our story.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Elder Evans in the Tribune.

To the Editor of the Tribune: Why do you great and powerful editors allow the God-in-the-Constitution party to persecute, unopposed, D. M. Bennett, editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER? Are there any people more anxious to protect the youth of our nation from the corrupting influence of obscene publications than the Shakers? Yet, as my soul liveth, I would rather have the repeal of all laws for the suppression of vile publications than this robbing of the United States Mail, these pious, lying, decoy letters, this interference with, and suppression of, free opinion on theological matters, where the orthodox Infidel is just as good a man or woman as the orthodox Christian, as good an American citizen, and a thousand times more safe with human liberty in his custody. What pranks before high heaven are these that are being played in the name of religion, when men who are like Jefferson, Franklin, and Paine—founders of our Government—are being persecuted by officers of the Goveenment which the founders gave their lives to establish! F. W. EVANS.

Mount Lebanon, Dec. 27, 1877.

Discussion.

The Bennett-Teed Discussion.

1.—JESUS CHRIST IS NOT ONLY DIVINE, BUT IS THE LORD GOD, CREATOR OF HEAVEN AND EARTH.

MR. BENNETT'S FIFTH REPLY.

MR. CYRUS ROMULUS R. TEED, Dear Sir: In your effort to prove that "Jesus Christ is not only divine but that he is Lord God, creator of heaven and earth," you lead me through such a whirligig of the mazes of idealism and take me up such aerial flights into the thin ether of metaphysics and imaginativeness as almost to make my head swim. A dizziness comes over me that I would prefer to avoid; and that the amusement is becoming somewhat labored and Teed-ious I will not deny. I must admit that your imagination is far more active than my own and that you live in the ideal world far more than I do. This is doubtless all perfectly right, but nevertheless it is difficult for me to fully comprehend you, and the effort it requires to occupy the same plane of thought and belief with you is quite apparent. When you say, "The highest—most interior—of mental, spiritual, or soul life is both the origin and law of mutation leads to this and no other conclusion, and product of all activity, whether mental or physical; the the mind that will not perceive it is still in a state of stupor. Jesus reached this final and ultimate condition, and became the universal will, Jehovah, or Lord. He did this through the law of mutation, completion, or fulfilling all law, thus being the beginning and the ending. Others before him at regular and stated intervals have reached the same state and, like Jesus, become one with this central power, and in regular and stated succession men will arise to this supreme condition and adopt or become the everlasting Father, the Lord God and Creator," etc., etc., I am lost in wonder, and, with elevated hands, mentally exclaim, "Is that so? How in the world did you find it out? Is it all as you say, or is it partly imagination and guess work?" I fear, my friend, as beautiful as all that is—if it were possible to comprehend it—it is mere fancy, a fine theory, the work of an active and fertile imagination, "the baseless fabric of a dream." I cannot accept it as fact.

I perceive, too, that you have discovered the very centre of the Universe, for you say: "The physical Universe has one spacic centre which is the focalization of millions of qualitative conditions as the same focal point in space; these qualities being the convergence of forces from as many circumferences. . . . Not only is the physical Universe composed of an absolute, and only one absolute, focal point in space, and an expanse and circumference to correspond, but the mental and spiritual or functional Universe in its structure is the correspondent of the physical, and has its focal point or centre, which is the central functional potency of all existence and being—the origin and source from which perpetually proceeds the life of all function and all form. This centre is both the source of all outflow and the receptacle of all inflow," etc., etc. If this is so, what a wonderful discovery it is; but if it happens not to be so, the discovery is less wonderful. I call for proof before I accept it only as one of your fine theories or idealisms. How a Universe which is necessarily infinite—without end, bounds, or circumference—can have a centre is a mystery to me; and if there is a centre, how any man can locate it is more than I can understand. And then for him to tell not only where the centre is but what it is is wonderful indeed—if he has not merely guessed at it. Guess work is very good when it hits and is true and can be demonstrated, but when it lacks those essentials its value shrinks within very moderate proportions.

It would rather seem consistent to me that a Universe which is infinite, boundless, endless in every direction, having no limits or circumference, can also have no centre. One place is just as much the centre as another. And if possibly there is a centre, there is not a man living upon this planet who can tell within thousands of billions of miles where it is or what it is when reached.

You seem to have two Universes—one physical and the other mental, spiritual, or functional. This is all speculation. There is but one Universe, and it comprehends and contains all existences, all being, all forms of force, all forms of life. It is and ever has been equal to every result that has ever been produced; it requires no exterior aid or assistance; it is the sum total of all that is or ever was. This being the case, there is no room nor necessity, as before remarked, for any Brahm, Jupiter, Jehovah, Jesus, or Mumbo Jumbo, or any kind of a god which man has devised. The Universe exists and we know it. The gods may exist, but we do not know it. There may be one god, there may be a million gods, but until there is a shadow of proof that such is the fact, it seems utterly a waste of time for intelligent people to fix up theories about them, their qualities, their natures or attributes. It is impossible to learn anything of them or to ever know anything about them, and, in my settled conviction, they live only in the domain of human imagination—no existence at all. To argue the necessity of a creator or controller, a grand architect, a God, detracts from the Universe itself; and as it is found equal to every emegency, every operation, and every product, I insist that it is idle to hold up any ideal God and say, "This is the Creator and Ruler of the Universe; bow down and worship it." The Universe is God enough for me, and I can see no place or necessity for another. There is no office for him to fill and nothing for him to do. As I said before, there may be a God, and it is just as possible that there may be a million, but no proof is to be found that it is so, and until such proof is rendered, every man has a right to reject all assumptions upon this subject.

Extended remarks in this direction are necessary. The position is a simple one. If you believe there is a God and you wish me to believe in his existence, you have only to give me positive proof that he exists. It will not be sufficient for you to point out this or that operation of Nature and say, "here is my proof of a God." These are only qualities and capabilities of the Universe, and it is only a species of robbery to take the credit of the same from the grand, glorious old Universe and bestow it upon an ideal God. I cannot go with you there.

For thousands of years it has been held to be a great virtue to believe in one or more of the vast catalogue of gods which men have imagined, and if a thoughtful man has stopped to consider the matter, and concluded that there was no proof of such a character, he has been decried as a vile man, hardly fit to dwell upon the earth; and countless thousands have been put to death because they did not have the acceptable belief about the gods, their laws and requirements. These imaginary gods have been numbered by the thousands and hundreds of thousands. It is said Greece alone had thirty thousand gods and goddesses, little and big, good and bad, who were believed to be dwellers on Olympus, but they have all passed away as well as the thousands of gods of the other nations, and hardly one is left to receive homage. They performed great and glorious deeds; but they have had their day, and one after another they have gone to sleep in the night of oblivion. But the Universe still remains and still will remain, wholly unaffected by the dreams and imaginations of men and women.

The Jewish God was adopted by the nations of Europe and with emigrants from those lands crossed the Atlantic, and found a pretty firm footing on the Western Hemisphere. Sixty thousand temples of greater or less magnificence are now standing in our own country, dedicated to this revengeful deity, and hundreds of millions of dollars are annually expended in his service, and it seems that his throne is impregnable in the land. But confidence in him is weakening. Opinions are greatly divided as to his nature, character, and attributes, no two persons agreeing exactly in their conceptions of him. He, too, is passing away. His character is ceasing to be admired, and thousands upon thousands are denying his existence. It is fair to conclude he is also passing away to join his brothers who long ago fell into a sleep which knows no waking. But the old Universe is still here, and will never pass away. It is a reality that will never deceive us, never will sink into sleep and forgetfulness. It is worth countless millions of such gods as men have devised and manufactured, and have been the work of man's imagination. You still hold on to this deity, or rather you have transformed him into his own son, which he begot upon the person of a young Jewish maiden, and this son, who for a brief period is said to have figured in the obscure country of Palestine near nineteen hundred years ago. This personage, whose very existence is extremely mythical, you claim to be the creator of heaven and earth—the Universe itself—and that it has to be controlled or run by him, otherwise it would go into chaos and utter disorder. I must confess it seems singular to me how an intelligent person can for a moment entertain such a belief. But precedents are numerous. The world has been filled with men who have firmly believed in all manner of impossible chimeras of the brain that never had a real existence and never can. Thus we differ. You have great faith in the impossible, while I have little. But as proof is what settles the questions I call upon you for it. Fine theories, speculations, and idealisms will not answer my purpose. If there is and individualized deity who rules over the Universe, I ask you to give me the positive proof.

You speak of matter and mind as correlates, in the sense, as I understand you, that they are convertible one into the other. I have only to repeat that mind is evolved or produced from matter as a motion or function of the brain, but mind in no sense is a basis of matter. Mind cannot exist independent of matter, but matter does exist independent of mind.

You call for a definition of "a physical and mental organization." This seems hardly necessary. I fancy I said enough before to make myself clear upon this ground. You and I are such organizations. We have physical organs to perform various functions, as seeing, hearing, smelling, tasting, feeling, digesting, walking, etc. The mental organization, the brain and nervous system in connection with digestion, assimilation, etc., gives birth to thoughts or mental phenomena—all the mind that anybody knows anything about.

You taunt me with "dodging," which I think is unjust. I am not aware I have dodged anything. You say, "Thoughts and mental phenomena can only be produced from thoughts and mental phenomena." Not so; thoughts are produced solely by the brain and the connecting physical organization.

Your play upon the words "ascent" and "descent" and your effort to involve Darwin in inconsistency do not strike me as being specially successful. Man has descended down through the ages that have gone by, and he has ascended from a lower scale of existence to a higher. There is nothing very absurd in that.

I will not undertake to dispute your positionthat "no mental and physical structure was ever propagated that was not preceded by a mental and physical structure." That may be true. Like produces like. In propagation there must be a parent to every child. Something can not come from nothing, though there may be a gradual improvement in the progeny. Higher forms of life may have evolved from the lower forms. As the same causes, under the same circumstances, must always produce the same results, it is impossible to say when mentality could not have existed. The material and the forces that exist to-day have ever existed, and so, when conditions favored, mental phenomena could always have taken place.

You take me to task somewhat upon the definition of "protoplasm," but as I had not said a word about the meaning of the term, you very prudently preface your remarks with an "if."

You say, "All thoughts are born to me thus in pairs, male and female, the product of the Garden of Eden." Well, that is a singular, or rather a plural, idea. I will not deny that thoughts are male and female; and if they possess sexuality, I cannot understand why hearing, seeing, tasting, smelling, feeling, speaking, etc., etc., should not also be male or female. Will you please inform me how you determine the gender of thoughts? I confess I possess not the secret.

There are other points in your last letter with which I cannot agree, but as my reply is already long enough I will defer further criticisms for the present.

Very sincerely yours, D. M. Bennett.

Scientific Department.

Tyndall on Man's Soul.

THE PHILOSOPHER'S RECENT ADDRESS AT BIRMINGHAM.

An address was delivered by Prof. Tyndall on Monday evening, October 1, 1877, at Birmingham, England, as President of the Midland Institute. We take from the London Times of October 2d the concluding and more important portion of it. After a recapitulation of the scientific principles governing the correlation of forces, Prof. Tyndall went on as follows:

The quickness of thought has passed into a proverb, and the notion that any measurable time elapsed between the infliction of a wound and the feeling of the injury would have been rejected as preposterous thirty years ago. Nervous impressions, notwithstanding the results of Haller, were thought to be transmitted, if not instantaneously, at all events with the rapidity of electricity. Hence, when Helmholtz, in 1851, affirmed, as the result of experiment, nervous transmission to be a comparatively sluggish process, very few believed him. His experiments may now be made in the lecture room. Sound in air moves at the rate of 1,100 feet a second; sound in water moves at the rate of 4,000 feet a second; light in ether moves at the rate of 190,000 miles a second, and electricity in free wires moves probably at the same rate. But the nerves transmit their messages at the rate of only seventy feet a second, a progress which in these quick times might well be regarded as intolerably slow. Your townsman, Mr. Gore, has produced by electrolysis a kind of antimony which exhibits an action strikingly analogous to that of nervous propagation. A rod of this antimony is in such a molecular condition that, when you scratch or heat one end of the rod, the disturbance propagates itself before your eyes to the other end, the onward march of the disturbance being announced by the development of heat and fumes along the line of propagation. In some such way the molecules of the nerves are successively overthrown; and if Mr. Gore could only devise some means of winding up his exhausted antimony, as nutritive blood winds up exhausted nerves, the comparison would be complete. The subject may be summed up, as Du Boys-Raymond has summed it up, by reference to the case of a whale struck by a harpoon in the tail. If the animal were seventy feet long, a second would elapse before the disturbance could reach the brain. But the impression after its arrival has to diffuse itself and throw the brain into the molecular condition necessary to consciousness. Then, and not till then, the command to the tail to defend itself is shot through the motor nerves. Another second must elapse before the order reaches the tail, so that more than two seconds transpire between the infliction of the wound and the muscular response of the part wounded. The interval required for the kindling of consciousness would probably more than suffice for the destruction of the brain by lightning or even by a rifle bullet. Before the organ can arrange itself, it may, therefore, be destroyed; and in such cases we may safely conclude that death is painless. The experiences of common life supply us with copious instances of the liberation of vast stores of muscular power by an infinitesimal "priming" of the muscles by the nerves. We all know the effect produced on a nervous organization by a slight wound which causes affright. An aerial wave, the energy of which would not reach a minute fraction of that necessary to raise the thousandth of a grain through the thousandth of an inch, can throw the whole human frame into a powerful mechanical spasm, followed by violent respiration and palpitation.

A MERCANTILE ILLUSTRATION.

The eye, of course, may be appealed to as well as the ear. Of this the lamented Lange gives the following vivid illustration: A merchant sits complacently in his easy chair, not knowing whether smoking, sleeping, newspaper reading, or the digestion of food occupies the largest portion of his personality. A servant enters the room with a telegram bearing the words, "Antwerp, &c. * * * Jonas & Co. have failed." "Tell James to harness the horses." The servant flies. Up starts the merchant wide awake, makes a dozen paces through the room, descends to the counting house, dictates letters and forwards dispatches. He jumps into his carriage, the horses snort, and their driver is immediately at the bank, on the Bourse, and among his commercial friends. Before an hour has elapsed he is again at home, where he throws himself once more into his easy chair with a deep drawn sigh, "Thank God, I am protected against the worst, and now for further reflection!" This complex mass of action, emotional, intellectual, and mechanical, is evoked by the impact upon the retina of the infinitesimal waves of light coming from a few pencil marks on a bit of paper. We have, as Lange says, terror, hope, sensation, calculation, possible ruin, and victory compressed into a moment. What caused the merchant to spring out of his chair? The contraction of his muscles. What made his muscles contract? An impulse of the nerves which lifted the proper latch, and liberated the muscular power. Whence this impulse? From the centre of the nervous system. But how did it originate there? This is the critical question. The aim and effort of science is to explain the unknown in terms of the known. Explanation, therefore, is conditioned by knowledge.

WHAT MAKES AN ENGINE GO?

You have probably heard the story of the German peasant who, in early railway days, was taken to see the performance of a locomotive. He had never known carriages to be moved except by animal power. Every explanation of this conception lay beyond his experience, and could not be invoked. After long reflection, therefore, and seeing no possible escape from the conclusion, he exclaimed confidently to his companion, "Es müssen doch pferde darin sein" (There must be horses inside). Amusing as this locomotive theory may seem, it illustrates a deep-lying truth. With reference to our present question, some may be disposed to press upon me such considerations as these: Your motor nerves are so many speaking tubes, through which messages are sent from the man to the world; and your sensor nerves are so many conduits through which the whispers of the world are sent back to the man. But you have not told us where is the man. Who or what is it that sends and receives those messages through the bodily organism? Do not the phenomena point to the existence of a self within the self, which acts through the body as through a skillfully constructed instrument? You picture the muscles as harkening to the commands sent through the motor nerves, and you picture the sensor nerves as the vehicles of incoming intelligence; are you not bound to supplement this mechanism by the assumption of an entity which uses it? In other words, are you not forced by your own exposition into the hypothesis of a free human soul? That hypothesis is offered as an explanation or simplification of a series of phenomena more or less obscure. But adequate reflection shows that instead of introducing light into our minds it increases our darkness. You do not in this case explain the unknown in terms of the known, which, as you stated above, is the method of science, but you explain the unknown in terms of the more unknown. The warrant of science extends only to the statement that the terror, hope, sensation, and calculation of Lange's merchant are physical phenomena produced by, or associated with, the molecular motions set up by the waves of light in a previously prepared brain. But the scientific view is not without its own difficulties. We here find ourselves face to face with a problem which is the theme at the present moment of profound and subtle controversy. What is the casual connection, if any, between the objective and subjective—between molecular motions and states of consciousness? My answer is, I know not, nor have I as yet met anybody who knows. It is no explanation to say that the objective and subjective effects are two sides of one and the same phenomenon. Why should the phenomenon have two sides? This is the very core of the difficulty. There are plenty of molecular motions which do not exhibit this two-sidedness.

CAN WATER THINK.

Does water think or feel when it runs into frost-ferns upon a window-pane? If not, why should the molecular motion of the brain be yoked to this mysterious companion—consciousness? We can present to our minds a coherent picture of the processes—the stirring of the brain, the thrilling of the nerves, the discharging of the muscles, and all the subsequent mechanical motions of the organism. But we can present no picture of the process whereby consciousness emerges, either as a necessary link or as an accidental by-product of this series of actions. Yet it certainly does emerge—molecular motion produces consciousness. The reverse process of the production of motion by consciousness is equally unpresentable to the mind. We are here, in fact, upon the boundary line of our intellectual powers, where the ordinary canons of science fail to extricate us from our difficulties. If we are true to these canons we must deny to subjective phenomena all influence on physical processes. The latter must be regarded as complete in themselves. Physical science offers no justification for the notion that molecules can be moved by states of consciousness; and it furnishes just a little countenance to the conclusion that states of consciousness can be generated by molecular motion. Frankly stated, we have here to deal with facts almost as difficult to be seized mentally as the idea of a soul. And if you are content to make your "soul" a poetic rendering of a phenomenon which refuses the yoke of ordinary mechanical laws, I, for one, would not object to this exercise of ideality. Amid all our speculative uncertainty there is one practical point as clear as the day—namely, that the brightness and the usefulness of life, as well as its darkness and disaster, depend to a great extent upon our own use or abuse of this miraculous organ. We now stand face to face with the final problem. It is this: Are the brain and the moral and intellectual processes known to be associated with the brain—and, as far as our experience goes, indissolubly associated—subject to the laws which we find paramount in physical nature?

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Theodore Schroeder
OCT 11 '41
977372

Correspondence Extraordinary.

Letters from the Devil.—No. 1.

My Dear Readers of The Truth Seeker: I have for some time had it in my mind to write you a series of letters, and conclude I can find no better time to begin than with the commencement of the Fifth Volume of your favorite paper, when its editor proposes to double the number of its pages, affording largely increased facilities for correspondents. I have a good many things I want to say to you and I am glad to avail myself of the kindness of your editor to let a person be heard—even one who is so much despised and slandered as is your humble servant. I have kept my eye on this paper and its struggles since its editor started his humble enterprise in a Western State over four years ago. I have noticed its earnest search after truth and its fearlessness in speaking it out when found. Although I have had the name of being sly and intriguing, I am very fond of frankness and boldness, and I despise a hypocrite and a coward. Your editor is neither of these.

I have observed with especial pleasure that very many excellent persons read your fearless sheet and I am glad to see that your numbers are increasing. I have for some time thought that when I got ready to talk to the sons and daughters of earth I would sooner do so through the columns of The Truth Seeker than any other publication I am acquainted with. Its past has been rather brilliant considering its chances and opportunites, but I predict a more brilliant career for it in the future. Let it just pursue the straightforward path it has thus far taken, and I give you my word its friends will increase in numbers and enthusiasm and it will live long enough to accomplish a great amount of good, and it will leave a good influence behind it that will exist a long time after its editor is laid in his grave, and his name will be remembered with gratitude and respect, when that of his enemies will have sunk into oblivion.

It speaks highly for his fairness and impartiality that he is willing to let me have two columns every week in his valuable journal while there are so many hundred papers in the land which would not give me even the smallest corner. An editor who keeps his columns open, especially for clergymen, lawyers, doctors, professors, non-professors, and the Devil himself, ought certainly to be commended for his even-handed justice. I am not unconscious of the fact that there is a great stigma resting upon my name and character—which by the by is extremely unjust—and there are many among your most respectable journals and religious papers that would no more accept the Devil for a correspondent than they would consort with the vilest prostitutes, thieves and murderers. I have sounded your editor upon the subject, and while I could hardly have access to one of the eight thousand journals published in the United States, he readily consented to give me a place, and even evinced a pleasure in doing so. I shall never forget him for this mark of kindness and justice on his part, and I hope his readers will not forget it either.

I well know how curious men and women are, and many will wonder and inquire by what means the Devil is able to communicate with The Truth Seeker; whether I write a letter on real paper and send it by mail as other folks do or whether I telegraph, or telephone the editor or impress myself upon him or some of his contributors, but that is a secret for the present between the editor and myself and we think we can keep that little affair without help. So long as I am able to convey my thoughts and wishes to you and you are able to clearly understand them, it is not necessary that you should know whether we have a grape-vine telegraph for our special use, or whether I appear to him in person or not. I am very sure he would not be frightened if I did appear to him, if I breathed upon him, if he heard my voice, and even if I were to touch him with my hands. Why! some people would be nearly frightened out of their wits were they to get one squint at me, but were he to see me thoroughly for an hour he would not be frightened at all, for he regards me as a good sort of fellow, and he is quite right, too. His fearlessness in this respect and his freedom from superstition and terror command my admiration.

Let me assure you all, right here at the commencement of my letters, that I do not wish to say a word that will injure any one, not even the prettiest little girl in all the land. My object is to amuse and instruct; and as I am a familiar sort of character, and write in a familiar style, I hope my letters will not be found stiff, lifeless, or dull. I shall be glad to impart some information to you, for, be assured, if I can do good to any one I shall be made happy.

I wish to say to you, and all intelligent persons, that for many centuries I have been most foully misrepresented. Those calling themselves good people have wronged me exceedingly. They have spoken all manner of evil things against me falsely, (for Christ's sake,) and have painted my character in colors which do me grossest injustice. They have called me "the father of lies," "the enemy of the human race," "the deceiver of the innocent and unwary," "the hater of truth and knowledge," "the lover of darkness and villainy," "the promoter of evil and strife," "the fermenter of wars and contentions," "the instigator of wickedness and corruption," "the inciter to crime and immorality," etc., etc. Now, this is all utterly false, and has not the shadow of a foundation in truth. I have never been an enemy to the human race; I have never been a deceiver of the innocent and unsuspecting; I have never been a hater of knowledge and truth—in fact, I have done more to stimulate men to investigate and study into the nature of things than any other individual, not even excepting my Big Brother, who would have everybody believe that he is the author of all that is good and great, and that I am the author of everything evil or vile. I am not a lover of darkness; I am just as fond of light as anybody, and the fact that I am called "Lucifer, the Son of the Morning," "the Power of the Air," an "Angel of Light," etc., ought to go far towards exonerating me from the opposite foul and slanderous epithets which my enemies have applied to me. Why, I fairly glory in the beautiful element of light, and would be glad to have all men and all institutions come out into it and dwell in it. I have not been a promoter of discord, strife, and quarrels. The fact is, I am uniformly a very quiet, good sort of fellow, and would much rather do a person a good turn than a bad one. It is that Big Brother of mine who has so delighted in inciting wars and in leading his favorite people to fields of blood and carnage. In fact, he has delighted in the title of "the Lord of Hosts," "the God of Battles," etc. A few thousand years ago he seemed to take more pleasure in battle-fields, and in putting men, women and children to death, than in any other amusement he could find to engage in; but I will have more to say about this business after a while. I have not been an inciter to deeds of crime and villainy. I tell you the truth when I say that I never knowingly induced any person to perform an ignoble deed nor to commit a mean, dastardly act. I perfectly abhor that kind of conduct, and I certainly would not incite a person to do that which I positively detest.

As much of slander and vituperation as have been heaped upon my name; as much as my character has been defamed, I can proudly say, in the full confidence of truth, that I have never performed an ungentlemanly act; have never committed a crime in the sight of man. In fact, I have been one of the most harmless individuals that ever had an existence, real or imaginary. Whenever any of these things have been repeated against me, the charges have been slanderous, wholly unfounded in fact. To convince every person having the slightest interest in the cause of truth and honesty, I hereby call, in a public manner, upon all my enemies, especially the clergy, who make a great boast of being in the service of my Brother and my Nephew, to come forward and show the truth of their statements, or forever hold their peace.

If I am a liar and the father of lies, I call upon my defamers to point out one lie that I ever told. A great deal has been said about the interview that was reported to have been held between myself and a female by the name of Eve, and it is said that I misled and deceived her by lies and misrepresentations concerning the qualities of a certain mysterious fruit which my Brother raised in his garden. A greater untruth was never told. I did not lisp the first word of falsehood to that notable lady, but told her the truth in every particular. Every utterance I made on that occasion was strictly correct, and every event I predicted passed off precisely as I foretold it. In the matter of eating that fruit, according as the story stands upon the record, Adam and Eve did not die on the day they ate of the fruit. It was that Big Brother of mine who said they would die, and I said they would not. Inasmuch as they lived some nine hundred years afterwards, I submit it to all who read these lines to say whether I told a lie or not. You cannot do otherwise than to admit that I spoke the simple truth. And so it has been in every instance in my long career. Whenever I have spoken or given an opinion, I have uttered words of truth; and I defy any one to show to the contrary. I defy any one to show when I have injured a single man or woman in person or property, where I have ever taken a false advantage of any one, where I have taken the life of the meanest individual, or sought to bring him into trouble in any way. I would say, right here, that those men who call themselves divines ought to cease dealing in slanders and assertions and bring forward their real facts. If I have robbed anybody, why don't they show when and where it was? If I have set one man at killing his brother, or one nation at butchering another, I ask them to bring forward the proofs. Now, if they had made those charges against that Big Brother of mine they could easily have brought out the facts as they stand upon the record. It was his principal occupation for hundreds of years, as I said, to get his people into wars and bloodshed, and he used to delight in taking a hand himself and killing fifty, a hundred, or even five hundred thousand men in a single day.

As the very opposite of these characteristics, I have been a person of peace. I have quietly pursued my purposes, and have accomplished them without killing anybody or wronging any man or woman, living or dead. I have worked by the arts of peace rather than war, of gentleness rather than bluster. I have left to my pugnacious, ambitious and warlike Brother the management of wars, massacres, carnage, bloodshed and death. He has taken pleasure in them, and I have not. In fact, I have not, as I said, caused the death of any person, while my Brother has the credit, at least, of taking the lives of countless millions of human beings of all ages. Even at this day, after all the improvement he has made in his conduct, manners, and reputation, those who claim to be his fast friends and advisers insist that an old person of ninety years or a little child but a month old cannot die unless he takes their last breath and shuts off their feeble current of life. According to the representations of these friends and courtiers of his, the way he goes around in all your larger cities and smaller villages, and all over the broad countries in all the nations on the globe, killing little infants, prattling children, blooming youth, young men and women, those in middle life, the elderly and the aged, up to a hundred years and more, is a caution to all the gods, and all the murderers, and all the assassins that ever had an existence. Now, if I were to do the like of that, I would not blame people if they called me a bad devil, an unfeeling monster, a cruel fiend, and all that sort of thing. But because I mildly attend to my business, killing nobody and wronging no one, men and women call me evil and vile and all the hard names they can lay their tongues to, while that cruel, unfeeling Brother of mine gets the credit of being a person of great goodness, kindness and love. He is bowed down to, revered and worshiped, and every hour in the day he is howled to in loud prayers, and told how benevolent and kind he is, and how his mercy and long-suffering endure forever, while not a second of time passes, according to the same authorities, when he is not taking some babe, child, youth, man or woman, in some part of the globe, permanently out of the world!

In view of all these facts, I submit it to the good sense of all who read what I here write if a great amount of injustice has not been done and is still being done to me in this business. I leave for you to decide whether in simple justice it is not I who is the good being and my furious Brother the bad one, for you must know that we have both the same parentage and are equal in age and birthright. That my power and skill are equal to his, I have only to point to the world of mankind as they exist to-day, and to the accomplishments ascribed to me by those who pretend to know more about me and my Big Brother than anybody else. If any god or any devil could do any better or any more than I have done with the same chances I should like to know where he is and who he is.

The fact is, my Brother has always been a great deal more arrogant, haughty and assuming than I have been. Though I am just as old as he is, though my origin is as high and noble as his, and though I have just as good right in this world and all the other worlds that ever had an existence as he, he has always been trying to crush me and to get everybody down on me and to make them think I am a great deal worse than I am, so as to exalt himself in their estimation and good opinion. As bad as I am represented I never would stoop to anything so mean as that. Why, it is a clear case; if I was not one of the most patient, forbearing, forgiving and good-natured beings in existence I would not put up with all this injustice and maltreatment for these many, many centuries without scarcely opening my mouth in my own defense, but would have raised such an uproar in this little universe as was never heard; but, thanks to the progress of knowledge and truth, my time has come to demand justice from the hands of men as well as that Brother of mine. Here is a paper that has grown up from a small beginning to be what it is, called The Truth Seeker, that dares to speak the truth and to let others speak it also, and I have secured the opportunity to write a series of letters to appear in it from week to week, of which privilege I gladly avail myself. I do not know of another paper on the face of the broad earth that is more free and independent, more earnest and truly courageous, than this same sheet, and I am glad to see signs of increase in its patronage and influence. Through this excellent medium I have great hopes that I will set myself right before the inhabitants of the world. I have kept quiet for a long, long time, but now my time has come to speak and my voice shall be heard in all parts of the land. The opposition to this Truth Seeker that has tried to crush it shall not be successful. If its friends will only continue to rally under its standard its success and its great triumph shall be secured.

To show how jealous my Brother is of me, I have only to tell you that just as soon as he found out I was going to become a regular contributor to the columns of The Truth Seeker he wanted to become one also. It has always been so. If he has seen I have a good thing he tries to get it away from me and appropriate it to his own benefit, but I shall not give way this time till I have had a chance to tell a good many things I have long wanted to communicate. After I have had my say for a few weeks I will be gentleman enough to give way to Jehovah, Brahm, Fot, Ormuzd, Osiris, Jupiter Ammon, Ahrimanes, Typhon, Pluto, Odin, Thor, and even Mumbo Jumbo and any of the rest of those fellows who have made such a noise and commotion in the world one time and another. They all want a chance to be heard in THE TRUTH SEEKER, and I will give place to them after a while, but as the editor goes a good deal upon the principle of "first come, first served," I have the first chance, and shall improve it to the extent of my ability.

I have just mentioned a few of my competitors and colleagues in this god and devil business which has caused the world so much trouble and excitement for thousands of years and there is a good deal to be said about it all; for take us just as we are, we are a queer lot. It is not my purpose in this letter to say a word against either of my competitors for the praise and adoration of men, as this is only preliminary to what I have to say. The spirit of fairness, however, induces me to say that all these compeers of mine are equally entitled to respect with myself, except it is my Big Brother; he has caused far more fighting and bloodshed and loss of life than all the others put together. I can easily show this.

We all have an equal existence and have no stones to throw at each other in this respect. We occupy the same realm—the realm of the imagination—and neither should be deprived of the rights and privileges pertaining to that realm. I will not pretend to say that the world would not have been better off if none of us had existed, but here we are, or here we are supposed to be, and what are you going to do about it? Why, give me a chance to speak and defend myself, to be sure, in giving a history of my origin and career, of the mysteries and ramifications of theology, mythology, demonology and other ologies and isms too numerous to mention.

Pardon, Dear Readers, my prolixity this time, while I subscribe myself your most obedient servant and guileless friend,

LUCIFER,
Vulgarly called "Splitfoot."

Communications.

The "Labor Question."

The prosperity of the nation lies in the prosperity of the individual. A country in which every person had a moderate competence would never suffer from hard times. No one, I think, can successfully dispute that. The manner in which this is to be brought about is the rock on which the eminently wise and learned political economists are wrecked. Some will tell you that a currency with the expanding quality of a giant balloon is the only remedy, while others will gravely assert that only by dividing this earth, including the sea, into ten-acre cabbage-patches can man be rendered happy. Still another class, and they are the men who want to go to Congress on the laboring man's vote, will solemnly assure you that in legislation of some sort—they don't know exactly how, but they soon will—lies the only remedy for hard times. There are as many remedies as there are men; but none of the doctors ever think of asking what made the man sick; or if they do, they only give it a passing thought, and hasten to prescribe their potion.

Another statement which our learned political economists will not question, is, that there are more men in this country than there is work for. Some estimate it at three millions, but the number makes no difference in the principle. In the poor-house graveyards will be a few more graves, a few more coffins will have to be made, a few more pine head-boards to be set for the wild brier to crawl over, a few more pauper graves to be grown over with rank weeds and trampled into the ground by the hurrying tread of the careless future. And on every one of those rough boards should be carved, in letters of eternal shame, "Died of ignorance."

The large proportion of the people in the United States live by ei labor; but very few have an income sufficient to support them. And of this large proportion, nearly all live by their days' work. No work, no food. Labor, like any other commodity, only commands a high price when it is scarce. At present the market is glutted. A manufacturer who, when the market was full and there was absolutely no sale for his goods, should continue to manufacture his wares, would be considered a fool or a lunatic, and rightly regarded as on the sure road to bankruptcy. Yet this is just what the laboring man is doing. With hundreds of thousands of poor men out of work, and no prospect of better times, he continues to beget children. The workmen's families in this country will average seven. With a demand for labor that would keep him employed all the time he would find it difficult to provide comfortably for so many. But with employment scarce, and wages low, it is simply impossible for him to feed, much less educate them. They are born in poverty, reared in ignorance, and die in sin. His sons keep the ranks of our criminals full, and his daughters are our children of shame.

When the market is overstocked with coal, or wheat, or wool, or cotton, the producers withhold the supply, and the only remedy for the laboring man is to make a "corner" in labor. But it cannot be done with thousands starving. Most men would rather be slaves than die of hunger. And slaves they will be so long as there are more workers than there is work to be done. A man with only two children can live on less than a man with seven. Too many children keep men poor, poverty keeps them ignorant. And we can reverse the proposition. Ignorance breeds many children; many children keep men poor. But it is easier to get knowledge than money at present, and that is what the poor man should do.

The causes of the present state of society are found in Tobacco, Rum, and Religion. I mean the religion which places "God" above man. The religion expounded by the priests teaches that it is better to have seven children to be swung into heaven from the gallows, converted at the last moment, than it is to have two who are born in health, live in comfort, and die at a ripe old age, if the reduced family is the result of knowledge. Ministers say that children are the gift of God. Perhaps they are; but if so, God's care ends with the giving, and man is better than his God. In addition to supporting his family the poor man has got to pay the priest for keeping him ignorant.

After the monopolist has taken all he can from the laborer the priest begs the rest.

A standing army is looked upon as a curse to the country and an unnecessary drain upon its resources. An army is a necessity at present, although it is a body of non-producers which in the future may be dispensed with.

With the exception of illegitimate children and ignorance, the priests are non-producers.

The working men of this country cheerfully support seventy-five thousand priests in luxury, getting nothing in return but ruined homes here and a promise of heaven in the future. Wherever there is poverty there you will find priests. The greater the want among the people the larger the number of priests they support. When the capitalist has laid the victim of ignorance in a pauper's grave, the priests send him to hell because he has no money to buy his way to heaven.

Costly churches, built by the toil of the poor; magnificent marble cathedrals, whose every stone is paid for by the superstitious, cumber our country from shore to shore. And beside the church you will find the hovel. Where the tall spire points with silent finger to an imaginary heaven, the lowly hut close by tells surely the story of an earthly hell. I have seen a building in the grandest city of our country—and it is only one of many—which is set apart for the worship of "God." It covers hundreds of square feet of valuable ground. The interior is painted and decorated in the richest manner. Cushioned pews, carpeted aisles, altars glittering with silver and gold, form but a slight part of the useless waste of money. Outside it looks like a feudal castle of three centuries ago. Its walls are covered with the shimmering vines and velvety moss of years; its windows, with their blood-red picturing of a crucified savior, glisten in the sunshine; and a tall spire surmounts the structure, which stands there for the worship of an unknown God—empty. By its side squats a shanty. It is only one story high, made of rough boards, unpainted, unfinished, unkempt. It is covered with mud and dirt. One little window, stained with dirt, lets in what light the imates have. They number ten, as I counted. Poor, filthy, ragged and ignorant, they were of the class who supported the church and priests next door. If you say to them, stop praying and go to thinking, they will mob you, set the mangy cur that howls around the door upon you, revile you, and then cross themselves and go back to their beads and crucifixes and priests. They are the people who create our strikes.

Education is the only remedy for hard times; the only doctor that can make us well. And that can do but little good so long as the priest has more influence than the schoolmaster, or the church is regarded as of more importance than the college.

The rich man has learned to take care of himself; the poor man must learn the same lesson. It is only through knowledge that he can understand his disease, and only by the application of that knowledge can he cure it. But he must be his own physician. Neither Congress nor the Church will ever help him. The one robs him of his money for the benefit of the rich, the other of his mind for the glory of God. Until our legislative bodies become honest and our clergy enlightened, the poor man must help himself.

But the Church is not the only enemy the working man has to his progress. He has more, and they are not asleep, but are attacking him night and day. They approach him stealthily and devour him remorselessly. Over the dark river they carry their slaves, and in the valley of the shadow of death they number their victims by millions. Their conquest is slow, but it is none the less sure.

They are rum and tobacco.

A poor man has no business with either. They rob his wife of his company and his children of his care. Every corner saloon has its customers among the laborers who are slowly drinking themselves into the grave, and reducing their families to beggary or the poor-house. But has the poor man no right to his beer and tobacco? As much right as the rich man when he can afford it. A man has a right to a mansion and a carriage, but he can't afford it, and so he goes without. Neither can a poor man afford whiskey, for it not only takes his money but his manhood. The sorrow and shame, the broken hearts, the ruined homes, that whiskey has caused, can never be known. And it is among the ignorant and poor that it has made its worst ravages. The intelligent shun it, the rich drink moderately. As long as the poor man visits the dram-shops, hard times will visit him. Until he keeps his family within his income, he will never be other than a labor slave. Men may legislate till the day of doom, but they cannot create work where there is nothing to be done. They may borrow from the future to feed the present, but a day of settlement must sometime come, and when the balance-sheet is struck they will find the balance on the wrong side.

The working men of this country can never be brought to vote or work in concert for the benefit of the whole, but each poor man can say to himself, "I will bring no more children into the world to slave for and bring up in ignorance; I will drink no more whiskey, nor use any more tobacco. I will devote my money and leisure time to self-improvement." That would certainly enable the individual to improve his condition, and a prosperous individual adds to the prosperity of the nation. It would reduce the number of criminals, paupers, and prostitutes, and who shall say that that is not a great part of the "labor" problem?

EUGENE MACDONALD.

Answers to Inquirers.

QUELP.—Who is the author of the following couplet?

"Now twilight lets her curtain down,
And pins it with a star."

Ans.—Fitz Greene Halleck.

X. Y. Z.—When, and by whom is the first allusion made to the Gospels? Ans.—By the Christian Father Irenæus, in the year 182, A. C.

HENRY.—When was glass discovered? Ans.—It is said to have been discovered 209 years B. C., and in this manner. Some Syrian merchants who were shipwrecked, gathered together a heap of seaweed and made a fire; and the weed, mixed with sand, produced glass. Its manufacture was introduced into England from France. The French learned it of the Italians; yet we have no account of its having been employed in domestic architecture in France before the fourteenth century, and its introduction into England was probably not any earlier, though Hallam is of opinion that the English had once possessed the art of making glass and had lost it. As late as the beginning of the seventeenth century, glazed windows were considered as movable furniture, and bore a very high price. It is related that when the Earl of Northumberland left Alnwick castle the windows were taken out of their frames, and carefully laid by. In the reign of George III., a tax was imposed on windows, as well as upon medicines and teas. The window tax was repealed in 1851. The manufacture of bottles and tumblers was established at London, 1557. Drinking glasses were considered more precious than silver. Before their invention the poor drank from wooden cups, and the rich from cups of silver and gold. Looking-glasses were carried about by ladies in their girdles.

W. C. C.—When the Mercury shows 60° F. in the shade, what would he the temperature in a cellar furnished with an air duct 300 feet long and 4 feet deep; and what when the thermometer stands at zero? Ans.—We know of no rule by which this may be calculated. The nature of the soil, whether rocky, sandy, or clayey, would doubtless have considerable to do with it. Probably some of our readers may give an answer.

SAME.—Does tiling make a good duct, and if so, what should be the capacity of the tube for a cellar 24 feet square? Ans.—Tile is considered a good and cheap material for a duct, and it should be 4 to 6 inches in diameter.

SAME.—How much fall should the duct have from the mouth of the refrigerator to the other end? What I want is to secure an even temperature of 45° F. to winter bees in. Ans.—Our information on this subject is not sufficient to justify an answer. Will some of our readers give the desired information?

CORRESPONDENT.—What educational institutions have Liberals established? Ans.—The most conspicuous are Girard College, Philadelphia; the Smithsonian Institute, Washington; Cooper Institute in this city, and Cornell University. These were founded by persons of Liberal views, and to them may be added the munificent bequests, by James Lick, for scientific purposes, an observatory, etc., in California, not yet completed.

The Radical Pulpit.

The New Song of Christmas.

SERMON BY O. B. FROTHINGHAM, DELIVERED SUNDAY, DECEMBER 23, 1877.

I am to speak this morning upon "the new song of Christmas." I call it a new song; it is an old song with a new name; the old song of peace and joy and hope and expectation for the future. It is a common impression, I suppose, that Christmas is a Christian festival—there never was a greater mistake. Christianity adopted it because it could not do otherwise, but so far from inventing it, it has done what it could to take out of it the original spirit. The festival is very old, of an unknown unimaginable age; it comes from the far East, and is connected with that primeval nature-worship which Christianity found already old when it came into the world. It is a festival always marked by joy, by ecstacy, by expectation; by a special genius varied with the land in which it was domesticated. Thus, in the far East, in Persia it was royal and magnificent and stately, georgeous in color, bright with glory, abounding with lordly processions, the Emperor at the head, the priests following, white horses, golden chariots, hymns of rejoicing, popular choruses sung in unison, majestic in every part, full of glorious symbolism, uplifting, magnificent. In Italy, where it was domesticated naturally, not borrowed, far back in the primeval times, before the present Italian people came into existence, the spirit of it was hearty, jovial, rollicking, democratic, the Southern people are essentially democratic; they like pomp and ceremony. In Italy the old ceremony was full of popular mirth and jolliness, the slaves for the time were free; the schools were closed, the courts were no longer held, criminals were emancipated, and all over the cities and villages through the land there was this spirit of free, elastic pleasure which characterizes the Southern people wherever they are found. In Northern Europe, in Scandinavia where it was equally ancient, the festival was wild and noisy and tumultuous; there the great Yule-logs blazed, there were the flaming torches; the wassail bowl went round; the songs of mirth were loud, there were the wild danses and orgies that ran even into indecency. England borrowed it from the North, the same wild fantastic elements of jollity, masquerading, mummery, eating and drinking, rollicking, fantastic dresses, and the like, kept alive the season. Everywhere the festival was a festival celebrating the birth of the sun-god, and it fell at the precise season when the sun-god was supposed to have withdrawn himself for a term of months, and gradually to have graciously returned to gladden the earth. He was Isis, he was Apollo, Hercules, Bacchus, the name of the deity being only another name for this sun-god whose coming brought light, peace, joy, new fertility to the earth, new pleasure to the minds of men. About one hundred years ago some Frenchmen undertook to show that our Christ, the Christ of Christianity was but another name for the old sun-god, and was Christianity under another form, and they resolved the Christmas ceremonies of Christendom into a mere repetition and continuance of pagan ceremonies. As it was, the attempt was very ingenious, exceedingly subtle and almost persuasive; it failed precisely here, that the resemblances were on the surface of it, numerous as they may have been; the differences laid down in the heart of the matter. The Christ was not the old sun-god under another name; he was a new divinity of the vision that he called into being; and was a fresh and more glorious vision. The Hebrew traditions of a Messiah celebrated something more than the return of the sun to the earth; it celebrated a reign of justice, and peace, and humanity, and good will to men; he was "the sun of righteousness." The quality of holiness entered into his very couch where he slept. And the Christ of Christianity, he was nothing more or less, nothing other in fact than the Hebrew Messiah realized as was supposed, symbolized something more than the return of fertility to the earth, the mirth of the farmer and husbandman. He symbolized the return of a new hope and faith, a new spirit and soul of man; he was the birth of a new humanity.

Thus Christianity set itself against Christmas, and did its utmost in the East and West to denounce the pagan observances; it was obliged to adopt it, because it proved too weak to exterminate it. In the fourth century St. Gregory of Nazianzen did his utmost to discountenance the Christmas usages of his time, telling people that they must keep the festival, if they kept it at all, in a heavenly not an earthly manner; that they must not eat and drink and stuff themselves with food, but that they must behave as human beings, and vindicate that claim to be superior to the nature that the pagans adored. In the sixth century a council of the Church was held at Poitiers, in France at which a decree was passed condemning Christmas, and forbidding Christians to deck their houses, their windows, or their doors with ivy and garlands of moss as they had been accustomed to do before they were converted. In the seventeenth century, the character of the Christmas observances in England had become so obstreperous, that in the town of Canterbury, the town-crier, by direction of the mayor of the city, went through the streets making public proclamation that Christmas and all superstitious days must be put down. Five years later than this, the evil was so predominant all over England, the rioting had gone to such barefaced excesses, that an act of Parliament was passed that decreed that this particular day, the 25th of December, usually kept as Christmas, should be neglected, and none of the ceremonies that came on that day should be observed. Thus we see Christianity from first to last set itself against Christmas, instead of building it up. Christmas instead of being a Christian institution, is precisely one institution that Christianity has tried to put down. The question to-day is, is Christmas pagan or Christian? More pagan than Christian. The churches are thronged, not to listen to the sermons or the flowing prayers, or to make the confession; but, to listen to the music, to hear the choir, to observe the decorations, to look into the happy faces of friends and companions; in a word, there is not a Christian church on Christmas day, in which the elements of Christianity, the bleak, ascetic elements that belong to the faith, are not, just as far as possible, abolished. The charm is in the basement, where the young people are getting up their theatricals, the attraction is in the spirit that is in the air; the last thing that Christians remember when they go to church on Christmas-day, is the bloody sacrifice that makes the centre of their creed. Now, what shall we do? Shall Christmas be allowed to go by the board? Shall we have no more Christmas at all? Shall we make it over to the children? Shall we simply borrow the old pagan practice of giving gifts to the young, of decorating our Christmas-trees?

For those who have no land, but who are walking around, is then the lesson of Christmas lost? For those who are no longer young; for those who are immersed in the struggle of life; for those whose winter lasts not for a season but for the greater part of the year; for those who dwell in the darkness, and in the cold; for those whose hope is faint, whose memories are bitter; let us trust that the time is yet coming when the Christmas festival shall mean something for men and women as well as for boys and girls. But what is it to be? The old pagan festival is not for us—this is for the young folks. The essence of the pagan festival of Christmas was gratitude to nature, subserviency to nature, submission to nature. The old people lived on the sunlight, the sunbeam was their regenerator, was their inspiration. Living in the cold and darkness, their lives unprivileged and bitter, hedged about by limitations manifold, they hung upon the coming over the hills of the sun, as people who are wretched and sick, and feel the nightmare, long for the morning—and worship was at the bottom of the observance. Verily they adored Apollo, Hercules, Bacchus, but their gods were in the vapor, were in the sky, in the earth, their deity was the sun, was the moon, was the stars, the ocean, the rivers, the brook, the standing pool. Every tree was a deity, the bushes, the herbage, the flowers, all had their separate divinities; nature was peopled with gods and goddesses, beneficent and fierce.

Sacrifices were brought, hymns were sung, prayers were made, holy festivals were instituted, out of gratitude, to propitiate some of these deities of nature, that were all about, visible or invisible, to bless or curse mankind. There was no science, there was no art, no literature, nothing—nothing! Hopeless and helpless man lived; the beam of light was their divinity; cowering and trembling, crouching to the earth in fear and terrer they looked about them and waited for these elemental powers to bring them help. Neither can we accept the Christian idea, founded upon a hatred of nature. Christianity has for its fundamental idea an abhorrence of nature.

Nature was a source of evil, nature held the hidden curse, nature was a thing to be abhorred, to be fled from. The birth of Christ was not to the Christian the birth of the sun-god. It was the birth of a redeemer coming to rescue a race bound in sin and condemned to everlasting wrath. The religion therefore is grim and gloomy, awful and ascetic; it discourages passion, it discountenances joy, it abhors light and color, and the song and the dance are alien to its spirit.

The lesson of Christmas, therefore, to the Christian, is not a lesson of joy and expectation, as he believes he is totally depraved and that a deliverer has come to rescue him from the consequences of his depravity. Now, we do not believe that we are totally depraved, we do not believe that the human race is lost, we do not believe in sin, we do not count ourselves to be miserable sinners. We believe in the power of thought, in reason, in conscience, in the strength of our hearts to subdue the world. We believe that man is his own providence, his own deliverer, his own regenerator. We do not look for a supernatural redemption. To us, the story of the birth of Christ is legendary, it is a myth. We do not believe that such a person as the Christ ever lived. To us the Christian mythology is like any other, rich and beautiful it may be, but mythology still, created by imagination; a phantasy, not believed to be in the domain of history. The essence therefore, of the gloomy Christmas of the Christian we cannot accept. What then? Is the Christian festival nothing to us? Cannot we share the joy, the glorious inspiration of a better future, that is implied in the symbol of the birth of the divine man? To me, beams this, the birth of the human, the birth of the true humanity, the birth of that which makes man to be man, and woman to be woman.

I would not use any vague phrases; let me tell precisely why. By the birth of Christ I mean this, the birth of a living hope in us, and for us that man should predominate over matter and ignorance. It is a full, vigorous, active faith in knowledge, in science, in the power and potency of thought. It is a fresh and elevating vision, that human reason sits upon the throne and holds the sceptre, and is to make the world new. This human reason is the first quality that distinguishes the man, the human creature from the animal, the mineral, and the vegetable world. By the human I mean the sympathy, the feeling in the heart, man's relation to his fellow-man, the sentiment of kindness, the birth of charity and good-will, the conviction that each may submit more than he or she knows to make the world better, to establish something like a brotherhood, to build up society. By the human, once more, I mean the faith in the future, the conviction that the world is to be better; that a more glorious day is coming for mankind; that evils are to be put away; that ignorance is to be delivered; that power is to be increased; the sentiment of prophecy, this deep, ineradicable conviction that the to-morrow is to be better than to-day; that each year that succeeds the years gone by will bring some new acquisition of light and power, is to me the grandest quality to glorify human nature; without this we are not men or women; the man or woman who does not believe in a better time coming, misses not the charm merely, not the ecstasy, not the glory of life, but misses the quality of endeavor, of patience, of courage, that makes life worth having at all; for life as it is, is hardly worth living. But to make it worth living, to do, to feel that there is a magnificent conflict going on in which you can take part, this makes anybody's life worth living. There may be a dull, stupid, inanimate kind of humanity without this thrill of expectation, but there can be no elevated, brave humanity without these three elements—faith in the supremacy of man, faith in the power of kindness, faith in the laws that are always regenerating, and which will make the future better than to-day, constitutes the greatness of human nature, and this symbol of the birth of Christ means that.

Let me illustrate in one or two ways the supremacy of the human over the inhuman. In the first place in regard to nature, the outward world, the pagans were afraid, worshiped it in terror, and they crouched before it; the Christians abhorred it, excommunicated it, laid it under a ban. What do we do? The human asserts itself supreme over nature. We are not afraid of the world. We do not call ourselves its servants. We do not worship it. We do not push it away. It is a magnificent force, a reservoir of potency. We come. "Give up your secrets, unloose your mystery. We want power, you have it; we insist upon your surrendering it;" so the chemist extracts from it the secrets of its potency; the naturalist studies plants and flowers and extracts from them the poison. We make nature ours; she must drive our factories; she must carry our letters; she must bear our messages; she must do our drudgery. Year by year, we are emancipating ourselves from nature, compelling her to do what slaves did once. Day by day we are abolishing superstition; her volcanoes, her terrible upheavals, we are coming to understand them, and we say, "in vain do you play off your terrors upon us." We have done with worshiping nature; we believe in making nature worship us; gathering together her forces, dragging out from her secret places the agencies we need for the hour. To say that nature, brute nature as she is, illustrates the eternal laws, cannot be proved. Your natural religion, which undertakes to show the kindness and the wisdom and the goodness of God, from the visible universe, breaks down; we have got beyond that; for against every form of beauty, I will set a form of ugliness; against every gleam of light, an ugly patch of darkness; against everything that elevates mankind, something that drags man down; against every blessing, a curse; all creation is at war; with its animals glutting themselves with the blood of their kind. We wish to blend these. We wish to create harmony in nature. The sentiments of justice, the halo of goodness is in our hearts, not in the material world without us. And we would compel the material world to take on the light of our humanity. We have made a beginning, and our science of to-day aims at this, and in time will accomplish it, and it is one of the beautiful things about our modern science.

We boast a good deal of the power of light over darkness. Is darkness something negative, or something positive? Darkness, we say, is the absence of light. For us there is no such thing as night; day alone is positive. Darkness is a negative, but it has very positive effects; for darkness means superstition, credulity, crime. In the darkness the beasts of the forest crawl forth; in the darkness the imagination is alive, and peoples the world with apparitions and spectres; there are ghosts that walk abroad in the darkness. Try to imagine, if you can, the state of the world in those old primeval times, when people had no means to light up their darkness except in sunbeams; how awful their state, narrow, cramped, and limited, they shrank from themselves and lived in corners. Was not the dark a positive power when it crushed the very minds of men, and compelled them to cower before the superstition of their own minds? What effect is produced in a dark chamber by bringing in a candle; the darkness is dispelled; the night-mare is at an end; the spectres disappear; the solid form is seen to be an apparition, and goes. Can one born blind ever be educated—thoroughly educated? Taught many things it can be certain; but how many things can be taught only by the help of the eye! and if the eye is extinguished, what darkness settles upon the mind! Is ignorance a negative? Ignorance, we say, is the absence of knowledge; but what an absence is the absence of knowledge! All the enormities of society come from the absence of knowledge. Why do men hate each other? Why these wars and oppressions? Why these attempts on the part of one people to put another people down? Why these mutual envies and jealousies? Why these strivings? Why these wars of religion? Why these antipathies in our churches? Why these missionary enterprises—efforts on the part of one church to put another church down? Why these quarrels between creeds? Why all these dividing lines between sects? Simply because they do not understand each other. Simply because light has not come on their darkness.

Here is one study born in this generation, new to-day, at present limited to very few scholars, the study of comparative religion—the study of all religions in the world from a scientific point of view. Here are men gathering together all the sacred books of the race, reading them with open and sympathetic hearts. The very idea of it is regenerating; the birth of that idea is the birth of the new son of man. Establish that thought, that all religions are human, that all faiths are but creations of mankind, marking the different steps of its progress, that no one church has a right to domineer over the other, that no one system of belief is privileged over the other; establish that belief, and wars of religion cease, the dogmatism of theologians is at an end, there is no more of that bitter bloodthirsty hate that has cursed Christianity from the beginning, the reign of dogmatism is over, the creeds are disenchanted—are exorcised; the men that abhorred each other are brothers; the priests no longer administer sacrifices in the name of the only God; there are no missionaries going abroad to convert to the letter of the faith a people who have a better faith than theirs; at once, the sceptre falls from the hand of priestcraft, the crown is taken from the old ecclesiastical dignitaries, and a sweet, feeling of sympathy runs through the world from end to end. The bibles are open to each other. Men behold how many bibles echo the same word; how from the conscience of the race, in all lands, in all generations, comes the same solemn, the same grand principle. In this one thing we have an illustration daily, an illustration that no generation had before us, or even so much as expected to, of the supremacy of the human element over the divine element.

When Professor Huxley gave his course of lectures in New York upon evolution, he made this remarkable statement: "I have no doctrine to propound. I have no scheme of conversion to establish. I am not pledged to any interpretation of the scriptures. I study facts as they are in my domain as far as I can see them; do you study the facts in your domain, you in yours, and when we have all the facts there are we can begin to form some idea of creation."

This sentiment, that guided the words that were spoken to that effect by Thomas Huxley, reveals a new future to the whole world. Emancipation of creed, and the doctrine and spirit of pure, liberal aspiration, the simplest, the truest—willing to wait—marks a new effort, and I claim just as soon as the philosophical world, the religious world, the scientific world shall find itself in sympathy with Thomas Huxley, then, that moment a child shall come, over whose birth the angels may well sing their happiest songs. One point more, the supremacy of the human over the evil. This was intimidated in the symbol of the birth of Christ, in the song which the angels sung: "Peace on earth, good will to men, glory to the highest." "Peace on earth, good will to men." How enchanting a prophecy, how lovely a vision, how transporting a dream. "Peace on earth." No more wars; no more hate; no more feuds; no more conflicts of interest; no more struggle of man against man. What a vision it is! "Peace;" for is not war the evil of evils, the one evil? mention one, and you mention every suffering, every pain, every affliction, every sorrow, to which the human race is incident. Poverty, misery, orphans, widows, untimely death, devastation of fields, breaking up of homes, the retarding of civilization, the destruction of all the forces that keep up our human society, pulling down society, destroying the pillars upon which it rests, impairing and embarrassing the march of history, preventing the incoming of a better future. We spoke now of what war has done, alas, what has it not undone! The angels sing "Peace on earth." Has the church that calls itself by the name of that little child brought it? Has Christianity abolished war? Has it done anything to abolish war? It cannot be proved that any great war has been prevented by the power of Christianity; possibly, it may have been, and yet for every time that this religion of Christ has prevented war, it has started one. The wars of Christianity, the wars of Christendom, the wars of the Church, were the bloodiest, longest, most terrible that have ever been waged, wars in defense of dogmatism, in defense of creed, credulity, wars of the church against other churches, wars to suppress opinion, wars to keep down the growing spirit of humanity, wars against heresy, wars against faith. It is asserted by responsible men, that Christianity has made more war than it stopped. It has done so, simply because it does not represent the human element, but the element of narrowness and closeness, the principles of dogmatism. We look for the time when war shall cease through what agency? through preaching, or through sacrifices, or through ecclesiastical domination? Not so; but through the prevalence of the human element of justice. How is it with the great war now raging in the East? Before that war could be declared, the war which after all is a religious one, the Greek church on one side, the Moslem on the other, before that war could be declared, the council, the devices, the efforts on the part of people in Europe to prevent it, to make an arrangement, to make the outbreak unnecessary, and every step in it has been followed by the watchful eyes of the people of Europe who are determined to do what they can to prevent it running beyond their control. In what spirit have these efforts of prevention been made? Not in the spirit of brotherly love, not in the idea that they all believe in a common salvation, that they were all believers in the same Christ; but that they were all human, that nations were groups of the human family, that all are natives of a common country, and that our interests run in the interest of peace.

We must have peace, we must break up these old prejudices, these ancient superstitions, born of ignorance, born of that inhumanity which has characterized every government, every religion that has ever been established. To be sure, we have not got very far, it is a little child in the manger, not a man yet; but when this hope of humanity is in this sense of supremacy, the supreme value of the mind, this faith in kindness, this glorious expectation of a better day coming, when this shall become mature, widespread and universal, then what may we not see?

Three or four days ago I listened to a clergyman, one of an advanced Christian denomination. I heard him speak in the bitterest terms of dependency, about the tendency of things in America; how we were all going from the bad to worse, and in fifty years we shall be further and further; with the inhumanities and crimes of Europe surrounding and crushing us down, if we did not come back to the old prejudices, and revive the old lives.

I did not believe in a word of it, because if I see anything, I do see this: that the element of humanity, respect for intelligence, reverence for knowledge, belief in the power of sympathy and kindness, the resurrection of the human conscience, faith in the power of human achievements, is growing, is spreading. Help it grow. Help it spread. We shall find that there is not an evil which we cannot easily remove; not a burden that we cannot lift without an effort; not a mischief settled upon us, in America, which, when we will, we cannot brush away like dust. It is so. It is so; all that is necessary is, that we should feel that the human nature in us is coming to its rights. And then the angels will sing their ancient song once more, but they will sing it in our own heart, and they not only will make the promise, "Peace and good will," but they will fulfill it.

Selections.

[From the Index.]

A Protest.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS., Dec. 20, 1877.

EDITOR INDEX:—Your first editorial in reference to obscene literature and its circulation I read with great delight, a delight which portions of your second editorial on the same subject do not tend to intensify. While your utterances prompt me to thank you for stating your own position in so manly a fashion, they also induce me to state that there is at least one man—whether "in his senses" or out of them others must judge—who "ventures to tell the public explicitly that he is in favor of abolishing all legal restrictions upon the use" of the mails for the circulation of really obscene literature. To develop the argument by which he maintains this position might involve him in a discussion for which he has no time, and he therefore contents himself with the simple assertion, adding only that the editor of The Index would be no more justified, on this account, in representing him as "going before the world as a champion of obscene literature," than he would be in representing the editor of The Index as going before the world as a champion of drunkenness on account of his opposition to the enactment of a prohibitory liquor law. On the contrary, his hatred of obscene literature is surpassed only by his hatred of that spirit which endeavors to make other people moral by encroaching on their rights.

Sincerely yours, BENJ. R. TUCKER.

The Freedom of the Press.

Anthony Comstock's name is becoming quite familiar to newspaper reading people, but whether for praise or for blame may not yet be perfectly apparent. Within a fortnight two editors, one, Mr. Heywood of The Word in this State, the other, Mr. Bennett of THE TRUTH SEEKER in New York, have been arrested by him, for sending through the United States mails some of their publications which expressed sentiments and ideas not compatible with his notions of propriety. We had thought that the constitutions both of Massachusetts and of the United States guaranteed the freedom of the press; but to imprison under any pretense, editors and authors for sending their publications through the mails seems to us to be a very plain violation of constitutional law. People who do not like another's sentiments or ideas need not read them; but because those sentiments or ideas are not agreeable to Mr. Comstock, or to any one else, is no sufficient reason why their authors may not publish and send them through the mails.—Norfolk Co. Journal, Hyde Park, Mass.

Arrest of Lottery Men.

However immoral or illegal the lottery business may be, we cannot approve the means which have been resorted to by Anthony Comstock for its suppression. He arrests men for sending lottery circulars through the mails. There is a statute of the United States which purports to authorize this; but it seems to us that a policy regulation like this lies entirely outside of the province of national Government. That Government was not established to regulate the private morals of the people.

All spying and prying into the contents of the mails is highly objectionable; and we do not see where the Federa Government derives its rights to discriminate between dif ferent kinds of mail matter on the ground of a difference in its moral quality. One of the most arbitrary assertions of power ever made in the interest of slavery was that of the right to exclude anti-slavery publications from the mails. This was vigorously denounced on the floor of Congress as unconstitutional, and it was one of the most odious of all the pro-slavery measures. It undoubtedly exercised no little influence in hastening the downfall of slavery. The act prohibiting the transmission of lottery circulars through tne mails is immoral in its tendency; it is also unconstitutional, and should be repealed. There are other and better means for the suppression of lotteries.—N. Y. Sun.

Invasion of Liberty and the Common Right to Knowledge.

As never before ought the Freethinkers and Liberals of every school to unite in the maintenance of free speech and a free press. "These are times that try men's souls." Tyranny, like a crowned demon, has its hands on the throats of the people. Heavy fines and penalties are being imposed upon honest, out-spoken men, who are infidels to the system of modern Christianity and differ from the old schools of thought. E. H. Heywood, of the Word and D. M. Bennett of the TRUTH SEEKER are arraigned before Tribunals of the United States Government on the charge of circulating obscene literature. Mr. Heywood is guilty of sending Dr. Trall's "Sexual Physiology" and "Cupid's Yokes," through the mails. Mr. Bennett published an "Open letter to Jesus Christ" and "How do Marsupials Propagate their Kind," an article written originally for the Popular Science Monthly, and circulated them through the same agency. Now, if the Government has a right to enforce a gag-law, what becomes of the press? If Dr. Trall's book and similar works are obscene, then why not enforce a law that physiology as a study shall be abolished in the public schools, and moral educational societies be prohibited the right of discussion on the various topics that come up from time to time, as human beings are considered physiologically and every other way. The prenatal conditions of children were considered in one of these meetings held not long since in Boston. Had a reporter been present and recorded the sayings of these good people, probably it would be unsafe to deliver the same through the mails, as Comstock in his late arrests has done the same as to declare that physiology can be studied to a certain extent, but beyond a certain limit it tends to moral degradation.

When the question of obscenity is fairly open to discussion we will find it a big one. What will become of the Bible, the productions of Byron, Shakespeare, Shelly, and a host of others, and some of the newspapers, if all obscene writings are to be suppressed? The question is not, or should not be, whether Heywood or Bennett are right or wrong in their theories, but shall they be denied the right of expressing their opinions. The lawyer who plead the case of Mr. Heywood said that within one week he had received information that many of the youngest children in the public schools in this city were familiar with all forms of vice. That they had been detected in the most vicious ways. I guarantee their parents are unfamiliar with Trall's "Sexual Physiology." (I quote that book because it was carried into the court by Comstock.) No mother or father who understands the entire physiological development of the body will leave a child of either sex to become destroyed through ignorance. It is the want of such knowledge and not the use of it that carries vice into the schools, destroys the intellect and corrupts the bodies of the children. If it is important that physicians understand the human body and its functions why is it no equally so that all come in possession of the same knowledge.—Hull's Crucible.

The Truth Seeker.

D. M. BENNETT, Editor.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

The largest and cheapest Radical Journal published in Europe or America, containing nearly seven hundred square inches more of Reading Matter than any other Journal of its class.

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, JAN. 5, 1878.

The New Year:—The New Volume.

This, as we write, is a beautiful New Year's morning, and we wish the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER a happy New Year. May 1878 be a happy year to them and may they live to see the return of many more. If we had it in our power it would afford us great pleasure to place every one of our friends and every person in the country, for that matter, in a condition to be comfortable and happy. To do this we would give them, First, good health, with the knowledge how to preserve it, and a good store of healthy, nutriitous food; second, we would make them self-sustaining, placing them in a position where they could have a remunerative occupation to pursue. This is doubtless one of the two great essentials to happiness and contentment; Third, we would cause them to possess a lively mental anxiety for knowledge and truth; we would stimulate them to a fondness for studying scientific works which teach the operations of Nature, her laws and demands. We would induce them to be anxious to learn the causes and effects, the why and the wherefore of everything that occurs. We would divest their minds of all things tending to superstition, mysticisms, theological dogmas, mythological absurdities and everything of the kind and cause them to be more fond of the real, substantial, tangible truth than all things else.

With pleasant surroundings, with a good occupation, with enough to eat and wear, a comfortable home, with a dislike for all falsehoods, errors and chimeras, and a fondness for living truths, how happy the world might be!

Of course, we would cause every person to read THE TRUTH SEEKER, for by this means we should be morally certain that they would have much of truth placed before them, and that by perusing its pages they would imbibe a strong love for it, and a corresponding dislike for all error, hypocrisy, and fraud.

Now, if we had but a tithe of the power and goodness ascribed to the supposed personage who rules and directs all the affairs, not only on this little planet, but millions of others larger and grander, we would make it our business to place everybody in a position to be happy on the basis herein marked out. But it so happens that we have not almighty power, and so all we can do to bring this desirable state of things about is to use the influence of argument and persuasion addressed to the best reason of our readers. There is the possibility in our country to bring this happy condition of affairs into existence, if the public can only be induced to make use of the means which will lead to it. There is land enough, there is room enough, there is air enough, sunshine enough, health enough, truth enough, happiness enough, work enough, for every man, woman, and child, if the means are taken to secure them all. To show the right way to achieve this great desideratum is the sole object and aim of THE TRUTH SEEKER; and we are convinced that there are thousands ready to co-operate with us in this commendable enterprise.

We hope that this initial number of Vol. V. of THE TRUTH SEEKER, as it starts off with a doubled capacity and a partially new dress, will meet the approbation of its many friends. It is to be hoped that they will see many marks of improvement and progress in its added pages which wil more and more endear it to its friends, and make them more and more anxious to contribute to its success and long life.

Among the many new features which have been added to these columns, it may not be amiss to mention a few, for it would seem a pity if they should escape observation and appreciation.

1st. The new type; in which above half of the paper is printed. We purchased five hundred pounds of "long primer" for this purpose and we trust that the words and sentiments printed from it in these columns and in tracts, pamphlets and books may be read by hundreds of thousands within the next few years.

2d. The new Radical story; "The Darwins," by the general favorite, Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker. We doubt not that the thousands of persons who read "John's Way" with so much interest will take an equal amount of pleasure and derive an equal amount of instruction from this story. We have no doubt that it will be duly appreciated by our many readers.

3d. The Radical Pulpit; in which will be given discourses by O. B. Frothingham, Felix Adler, J. W. Chadwick, and others. They will be reported expressly for THE TRUTH SEEKER by Mr. Gustavus Hamburger. We apprehend that this is an addition with which thousands will be delighted; for here they will always find the latest and most advanced thought of the times, expressed in the most eloquent language and happiest style. This feature alone is worth fully the additional price asked for the paper.

4th. Letters from the Devil and his compeers. It is not necessary that we should say much about these. We feel sanguine that they will receive due appreciation, and that not a little interest will be taken in what "Old Splitfoot" has to say from time to time, as well as what may be said in the same department by the other misty, fogy old fellows he mentions, all of whom are anxious to have a hearing.

5th. The Scientific Department (revived), in which will appear the writings of Haeckel, Tyndall, Spencer, Huxley, Proctor, Wallace, and other scientists. We know many will hail with delight the reappearance of this department.

6th. The Home Circle. In this department will appear, from time to time, such articles as pertain to home, the family, domestic life, etc.

7th. The Laws of Life and Health. Under this head will be given, from time to time, information relative to physiology, life, health, disease, hygeine, etc., valuable for all to understand.

8th. Answers to Enquirers. In this column will be answered such questions as may be sent in by readers, touching theology, Freethought, science, literature, and a thousand other things that constatnly arise. This is an instructive and valuable addition.

9th. Currency and Finance. There is much to be said on these subjects. They are vital questions and they have been tabooed too much heretofore in these columns.

10th. Social Topics. Embracing subjects pertaining to social life, relations of the sexes, the population question, woman's rights, female suffrage, etc.

11th. Selections. Under this head will be given such worthy articles from magazines and reviews as we can find room for.

12th. Useful Recipes, for cooking, household matters, etc. The utility of this column will be seen at once.

13th. The Matrimonial Department. Containing notices, enquiries, applications, etc., pertaining to the vital subject of matrimony—a sort of social exchange for the benefit of those of both sexes who wish to extend their acquaintance.

14th. George Francis Train! The epigrams and sharp, pungent sayings of this remarkable man are popular and sought after by a large number of readers. It is but right that Mr. Train should have a chance to be heard.

With these useful features added to the others prominent in THE TRUTH SEEKER, an argument is not necessary to convince any reasonable person that the journal must be one of great value. The next thing necessary to be done is to largely increase its circulation. With expenses doubled, and the price increased but fifty per cent., it must be evident to all that its number of patrons should be largely augmented. It costs a good deal of money to issue weekly a sixteen-page paper of the size of this; and if any one doubts it, they have only to try the experiment to be fully convinced. Then, to make the enterprise a success, many new subscribers will be necessary.

We are grateful to those friends who have sent in new names, and we earnestly hope the good work may be continued for months to come. Thousands of names of patrons should be added to our lists. If every friend will constitute himself or herself a committee of one to obtain from one to ten new subscribers, a great good and certain success will be accomplished. We are quite willing to hold up the Banner of Truth to the best of our ability if friends o'er the land will give us their aid.

Those who favor the work in which we are engaged, will undoubtedly give us their patronage and induce as many others to do the same as possible. Those who wish to see THE TRUTH SEEKER die a death of starvation, will of course withdraw their support and try to persuade others to do so also. We submit it to every reader whether, in view of the exigencies of the times, this is a fitting period for friends to grow cold-hearted and indifferent as to the prosperity of our cause. Every one, of course, must decide this question for himself.

It is hardly necessary to again ask old patrons to be prompt in renewing, for all must know how needful it is that we are properly supplied with funds to carry on our business. Those who find it inconvenient to remit the amount for a year, can send $1.50 for six months, or 75 cents for three months. It takes promptly-paying patrons to make a paper a success. We have hitherto owed everything to our patrons, and we hope this debt will not be lessened.

If all our friends will co-operate with us and do all they can to help us, our labors will be made comparatively light. Before the close of 1878 may THE TRUTH SEEKER find itself permanently and successfully established upon its feet.

Will You Join Our Ranks?

Copies of this initial number will be sent to many who are not subscribers now, but who are asked to become so. We wish them to consider themselves invited to allow us to add their names to our lists. For this large paper we only ask $3.00 per year, $1.50 for six months, 75 cents for three months, postage included.

We will be glad if friends will send us the names of such parties not now taking THE TRUTH SEEKER as will be likely to appreciate it, and who will probably become subscribers. If they feel like enclosing a small sum to pay cost, postage, etc., it will not be refused.

This number will be sent to the trial subscribers who have been taking it two months that they may see its improvement. If they wish to continue taking the paper, they must write at once, and send the price for three, six or twelve months. If they do not do this the paper will not be sent longer. We will be glad to add as many of these to our regular list as possible. They will be certain to receive the full value of their money.

As the price of the enlarged paper is fifty per cent. more than heretofore, the credits on the list will be changed to suit the alteration of price; thus those who have paid $2.00 for the present year will be credited for eight months, and shorter terms in the same proportion—the time credited at the two dollar price will be shortened one-third to adapt it to the three dollar rate. Those who wish to pay up to the end of the volume, which ends also with the year, will do well to do so, and they will thus know how much to remit. Those who find that the date on their tab is wrong, will please write and notify us of the fact.

Extra copies of this issue will be sent to various friends to hand to those not now subscribers but myy be likely to become so if once made acquainted with the sheet. Thus, those receiving extra copies will please hand them to such persons as they know, who ought to become patrons, and urge them a little in that direction.

Those Petitions.

Our friends who have been getting signatures to the petitions to Congress will please send them in, so as to arrive here by the 15th inst. It is desirable to send them on to Washington in a body by that time. We are getting many in already. W. F. Barkley of Mt. Pleasant, Pa., sent in one with four hundred and twenty names to it, and several have sent in with over one hundred names. A friend in the West writes that he thinks he will obtain over two thousand signatures. But those which only contain a limited number of signers, are also acceptable. Those who can use more petitions are requested to send for them at once. Let the good work go on.

Premiums Awarded.

To induce new subscribers, friends, to join our ranks and lend us their aid, we make the following offers:

All new patrons who send us $3.00 shall be entitled to the enlarged TRUTH SEEKER for 1878 and ten numbers of 1877.

All new patrons who send $3.50 shall be entitled to THE TRUTH SEEKER for 1878 and a copy of the "Humphrey-Bennett Discussion" or "The Truth Seeker Collection"—containing nearly 600 pages each—as they may select.

All new patrons who will send us $4.00 shall be entitled to THE TRUTH SEEKER for 1878 and the four volumes of Truth Seeker Tracts—2,100 pages—in paper.

All new patrons who will send us $5.00 shall be entitled to the paper for one year and either of the following works: "The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers," Amberley's "Analysis of Religious Belief," Thomas Paine's "Great Works in One Volume," "The Champions of the Church" (as soon as issued), or four volumes of The Truth Seeker Tracts in cloth. We trust our old patrons will not ask to be hired to keep on with us.

All persons who order Vol. V. and any of the preceding volumes bound (for prices of which see another article) shall be allowed a discount of 20 per cent on each.

Those who will send $25.00 shall be entitled to ten copies of the enlarged TRUTH SEEKER for one year.

May hundreds and thousands avail themselves of the liberal offers.

Volume IV., Bound.

A limited number of THE TRUTH SEEKER for 1877, can be furnished, sent post-paid for $3.00. Volumes I., II., and III., can also be furnished, neatly bound, at $1 in paper, $1.50 in cloth, for Vol. 1., $2, and $2.50, for Vol. II. (sixteen months), and $2.50 for Vol. III., cloth. Those wishing the four volumes in cloth, can have them sent by express for $7.50, which is very cheap. By mail, $1.75 additional for postage will be required.

Books, Books, Books.

This is the season of the year when we have long evenings for reading. Let those who wish to help us along send to us for what books they wish—first, those published by ourselves, and second, those published by others, sent post-paid at publishers' prices. We make some profit on books and orders for them are a benefit to us. Friends will please govern themselves accordingly. When they wish books let them not forget us.

Trial Subscribers.

Two months ago we offered THE TRUTH SEEKER to trial subscribers, two months for twenty cents. Nearly two thousand availed themselves of the opportunity, or their friends did for them. The paper being now enlarged to double size, we will make the still more favorable offer, to send it two months for thirty cents to new trial subscribers. This barely covers the price of the white paper alone. Those who have taken the paper before, either as regular or trial subscribers, are not included in this offer. Who will send in the names of one hundred new trial subscribers?

Turning the Tables.

The following is clipped from a Boston paper. It shows that Brother Heywood has decided to fight the enemy with his own weapons:

"A SUIT AGAINST ANTHONY COMSTOCK.—Anthony Comstock, Special Agent of the Post-Office Department to suppress the sending of obscene matter through the mails, and who recently arrested Mr. E. H. Heywood of Princeton, Mass., for sending two books, "Sexual Physiology." and "Cupid's Yokes," has been sued by Mr. Heywood, in an action brought in the United States Circuit Court at Boston, for damages for false arrest and false imprisonment, and to test the legality of Mr. Comstock's proceedings, it being alleged that he has abused his legal authority in this case."

This is just the right course to pursue. We wished to take the same in our own case, but our attorneys advised to the contrary. It will be well for Comstock to show why he willfully annoys peaceful, quiet citizens. If he can have ten or twenty suits brought against him and be forced to give bail or go to prison, it may give him a taste of the sweets he has been bestowing upon others. We hope Bro. Heywood may succeed in bringing him to justice.

We have received intelligence that Comstock has recently caused the arrest of Frank Rivers for sending "The Fruits of Philosophy"—a strictly scientific work—through the mails. So the inveterate prosecutor, it seems, has not yet had enough of "law." It is to be hoped that at an early day he will be satisfied and be able to turn his attention in some other direction. We trust that Mr. Rivers will come off as well in this case as recently when the State authorities pitched into him on the same charge. Our own case is not yet decided.

SALAMANCA, N. Y., December 25, 1877.

EDITOR TRUTH SEEKER:—I am pleased to announce that Rev. S. W. Sample, of Meadville, Pa., (whom we named "The Young Ingersoll," at the Randolph meeting) will lecture at any place in the United States during the months of January and February, 1878, on payment of his actual expenses. His lectures are:

1. Liberal Demands and Duties.
2. Free Religion.
3. Woman's Right to the Elective Franchise.
4. The Betterment of the Laboring Classes.
5. What is Infidelity?
6. Buddha and Buddhism.
7. The Religion of Worldliness.

Allow me to add, that the first and third I heard our young friend deliver at Randolph. They were both able and eloquent. Liberals, keep this young man in the lecture field. H. L. GREEN.

Defense Fund.

The following donations have been received up to date:

DONATIONS.—Joseph Sedgebeer, $10.00; Milo and Sallie Miner, $5 00; E. M. Davis, $5 00; S. Berendsohn, $5 00; A Friend, $5 00; Julius Samson, $3 00; M. D. Cohn, $2 00 A. J.. $1 00; A. C. C. Tamsen. $2 00; J. B. Fenerty, $1 00; F. J. Freese, $1 00; Theodore Berendsohn, $1 00; A. Folck, $1 00; Z. T. French, $1 00; Thomas W. James. $1 00; A. A. Lewis, $1 00; James Quinn, $1 00; Joel Stokes, $1 00; Lester B. Reading, $1 00; C. W. Sylvester, $1 00; Benjamin Griffin, $1 00; J. H. Granthan, $10 00; Jos. Woods, $10 00; Charles W. Bouser, $5 00; Granville Cretors, $5,00; William H. Geohagen, $2,00; Jacob Cretors, $1.00; Timothy Bowe, $1,00; Dr. Hoyt, $1,00; James D. Southerland, 50 cents; Joseph Bradbury, $10.00 Mrs. Sarah Bradbury, $5.00; Wm. McDonnell, $10.00; Dr. E. Newberry, $5.00; Wm. Rowe, $5.00; J. A. Hart, $1.00; M. Babcock, $10,00; Almond Owen, $10,00; W. A. Ramsdall, $4.00; James Body, $1,00; Dr. Geo. Chapman, $5,00; Richard Matlock, $5.00; R. McIntosh, $10.00; Jesse Swain, $5 00; Jos. Woods (second donation). $5.00; J. M. Woods, $1.00; J. H. McGriffin, $1.00; M. Bronson, $5.00; Leonard Garney, $3.50; a Friend in Washington, $3.00; G. W. Baldwin, $5.00; Mrs. C. A. N. Smith, $10.00; Edward C. Swain, $1,00; W. H. Sadden, $1.00; J. Warner, $10.00; John N. Morrill, $5.00; Theo. Lees, $1.00; E. Marquis, $1.00; Hiram Thomas, $1.00; Free Religious Discussion Society of Baltimore, $7.00; F. Kruse, $5.00; P. C. Johnson, $5.00; Frank L. Curtis. $1.00; Theodore Folster, $5.00; D. A. Belden, $1.00, John Hatch, 2 00; Wm. Atchison, $2.00: Samuel Mellor; $5.00; William Mitchell, $1 00; Gatlisch Wohlgesinger. $2.00; James McCoy, $2.00; Fred. Folster, $2.00; John B. Bullard, $2.00; Samuel Pelton, $2.50; Jacob Sassdelowsky, $2.50; George Bruce, $1.00; George W. Remine, $1.00; William Wayne, $2.50; Patrick L. Cleary, $5.00;, D. J. Ely, $1.00; Robert S. Haight, $1.00; G. H. Kruschke $1.00; a friend in Minneapolis, $1.00; C. E. Beardsley, M. D., $5.00; John Mahara, $5.00; Mrs. A. B. Mahara, $5.00; Wm. M. Rogers, $1.00; Hiram Gardner, $1.00; G. F. Kessler, $1.00; Charles Hursch, M. D., $2.00; F. W. Smith, $2 00; N. S. Fowler, $2.00; R. E. Nye, $1.00; A. Minski, $2.00; R. M. J. Vail, $1.00; Mrs. Caglieresa, $3.00, Levi Kendall, $10.00; Otto Wellstein, $10.00; John Jamieson, $1.00; J. G. Watts, $1.00; John Vanderly, 50c.; a friend, 50c.; H. W. Beckett, 50c.; J. M. Fenn, 50c.; W. Dibble, 50c.; H. F. Alexander, 50.; E. A. Gaston, 50c.; D. Sutherland, 50c.; F. M. Kyte, 50c.; Geo. W. Alexander, 50.; N. M. Green, 50c.; L. Hubbard, 50c.; B. F. Garretson, 50c.; F. J. Emary, 50. Charles Armstrong, $1.00; M. Brannin, $5.00; H. T. Pollock, $3.00; Lewis Knapp, $1.00; Martin Christiansen, 50c.; Martha Gale, $5.00; A. M. Hendry, $5.00; L. K. Jackson, $10.00; A. D. Longnecker, $1.00; D. C. Beckman, $1.00; W. H. Cosad, $3.75: Mrs. Mary L. Millspaugh, $1.00; Fred Busch, $5.00; Wilber Sykes, $1.00; T. A. Capehart, $1.00; A. M. Sidwell and wife, $2.00; J. H. McCoy, $1.00; J. P. Whipple, $1.00; Lee Norton, $1.00: N. Beall, $5.00; D. C. Marsh, $3.00; A. P. Tilden, $2.00; F. W. Evans, $1.00; Wm. Dudgeon, $10.00; Michael Mullin, $3.00; Oliver Gardner, $5.00: Isaac Eastlake, $1.00; Geo. W. Shoch, $1.00; a friend, 50c.; Wm. Watson, $5.00; Wm. Oderkirk, $1.00; David Davis, $1.00; J. J. Cowans, $1.00; Mrs. Henry P. Davis, $1.00; Wm Hains, $1.00; F. M. Helm, $1.00; J. Francis Ruggles, $2.00; A. E. Rogers, 1.00; Edward Cochran, 1.00; F. H. Tracy, 1.00; W. H. Gale, 3.00: E. D. Richmond, 3.00; J. Warner, 10.00; P. Brace, 5.00; Wm. Norris, 1.00; S. Goldsmith (loan) 10.00; F. Purdy, 2.00; L. O. Bass, 5.00; James M. Pratt, 2.00; Wm. Hillery, 1.60; J. Helm, 10.00; Elmina D. Slenker, 1.00; A. Y. Fuller, 1,00; Thomas Granger, 2.00; Charles Wiltse, 10.00; J. Stoddard, 5 00; H. S. Hall, 3.00; John W. Gilbert, 5.00; Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr. 5.00; E. B. David, 3.00; Mr. Walthall, 1.00; P. H. Magnus, 1.00; John Lynch, 2.00; R. W. Jess, 10.00; Jacob Kohn, 1.00; James Palmer, 1.00; F. W. Brien, 1.00; J. S. Jet, 1.00; J. B. Greenbut, 1.00; R. H. Jeffrey, 50 c.; Wesley Milliken, 5.00; Silas Hesselgrave, 1.00; J. R. Busser, 1.00; A Friend, 5.00; Robert Ebell, 2.00; J. H. Barlow, 2.00; E. D. Stebbins, 2.00; Alwin Payne, 2.00; John S. Sherman, 2.00; J. B. Haines, 2.00; John D. Eager, 1.00; Oscar H. Steuer 50 c.; Herman Stauffer, 1.00; Hugo Schneeloch, 1.00; Alfred Rich, 1.00; M. V. B. Hill, 1.00; C. W. Corey, 1.00; A friend, 1.00; C. E. Howd, 1.00; Charles S. Doan, 1.00; Jeff. S. Law, 50 c.; George Scheun, 50 c.; H. A. Topliff, 1.00; S. Taylor, 50 c.; Wm. Cooney, 1.00; Morris Stemitz, 1.00; E. H. Bennett, 1.00; W. H. Young, 50 c.; J. Peck, 1.00; T. B. Johnson, 2.00; Peter Clark, 5.00; P. Hilke, 5.00; V. J. Borrette, 10.00; Daniel Mason, 2.00; Alfred Hiscock, Sr., 5.00; Alfred Hiscock, Jr., 2.00; E. J. Sleight, 3.00; Frank Bergenstein, 50 c.; W. R. Wilson, 3.00; Samuel Marshall, 1.15; W. S. Walter, 2.00; David Llewellyn, 1.00; Ed. Llewellyn, 1.00; John Jarvice, 5.00; Geo. Harris, 1.00; J. B. Meredith, 1.00; Ed. Hesselgrave, 1.00, Thos. Pontre, 1 000, Robert Davis, 25 00; Wm Dougall, 1 00, Mrs Lucy Wilso, 1 00, John Morse, 1 75; John Warr, 1 00; G G Briggs, 20 00, C R Powell, 5 00; D R Burt, 25 00; Wm Hart, 1.00; John M Stevens, 1.00; W M King, 1.00; G B Cole, 1 00; Thomas Freyer, 1 00; H A Tewksbury, 1 00; John Hollewood, 1 00; Louis Lange, 5 00; J Creighton, 1 00; J B Branstetter, 1 00; W W Powell, 100; Christopher Hill; Ed C Smith, 1 00; Oliver Rice, 1 00; H L Ryder, 50 cents; Thomas McGuire, 1 00; John Metter, 1 00; A Rose, 1 00; A Mabee, 1 00; J Staudenmaner, 1 00; H A Dames, 1 00; Hugo Apfield, 1 00; R O Olds, 2 00; Francis Johnson, 1 00; Albert Johnson, 1.00; Adam Frost, 1 00; Thos S Old, 1 00; Henry Ross, 1 00; Joseph Noyes, 1 00; Jason MacTurk, 1 00; Wm Smith, 20 00; A R Simmons, 1 00; The Wickedest Man on Long Island, 1 00; John C Hudson, 25 cts; Wm W Scholes, 50 cts; Wm Emmette Coleman, 2 50; Dr. E B Foote, 15 00; D W Fillebrown, 1 00, A D Longnecker, 1 00; R E Nye, 1 00; Junius Brown, 1 00; A Lohrey, 2 00; William H Reed, 5 00; John Grimsley, 1.00; E Robeson, 1.00; William Stevenson, 1.00; J M Roberts, 10.00; Geo E Hartley, 10.00; E S McComas, 5.00; W H Huffman, 2.50; L Remillard, 5.00; D T Chambers, 2,50; J B Eaton, Jr. 2.50; Seig. Baer, 5 00. Geo Starks, 2 00; E C Brainard, 5.00; Danl F Moore, 2.50' H J Geer, 2.00; W H Dorris, 5.00; James Hardinge, 14.00; D R Sparks, 4.00; Wesley Sparks, 1.00; Thos Nicholson; 10.00; R W Reber, 2.00; Dr J P Ball, 1.00; J E Ball, 1.00; L G Todd, 10.00; C T Pendleton, 3.00; Mrs R S Luce, 1.00, Philip Wootton, 5.00; Wm McLean, 2.00; Wm Temple; 1.00; Luther Myers, 1; Chas E Chase, 1; M Hayden, 1; G C Fink, 25; N J. Moore, 1; Geo E Nichols, 1; M R Rouse, 1; Almon Robinson, 1; W H Bishop, 50 cts; Peter Selde, 1; Wm Sisson, 2; Jno Wood, 2; Henry Lamb, 3; M Gifford, 3; Horace Lane, 2; Philip Willman 1; James Evans, 50 cts; Grasshopper Sufferer, 50 cts; Wm H Roach, 1; J G Crawford, 1.15; C M Miller, 1; Samos Parsons, 10; Henry Crane, 10; Dr J S Lyon, 1; Ed Payne, M.D., 2; E Cook, 1; John S Haslam, 1; Jacob Tausig, 2; E Edinger, 2; H W Dickey, 1; John Walker, 30 cts; John Kelley, 50 cts; Herman Boecklin, 5; D Higbee, M.D., 5; E L Sandford, 2; A F Benedict, 2; H C Comegys, 2.50; F C Schwarnhorst, 2.50; G H Kruschke, 1; Wilford Usherwood, 1; Joseph Brucksbaw, 1; H Gildemeister, 5; G Edmunds, Jr., 4; S O Bishop, 1; S B Morrill, 7; John W Babbitt, M.D., 1; J W Farr and Wife, 2; John Musgrave, 1; Wm Brown, 1; John Johnson, 1; Robt Legg, 1; Geogre; Frew, 50 cts; Henry Cardwell, 1; Schuyler LaTourette, 2; F X Wagner, 2; B J Boulton, 2; O Coolidge, 2; Joseph LeClere, 2; S H Preston, 2; J C Jones, 10; E K Hosford, 6; J Burrows, 5; Martha B Erwin, 1; Wm H Bush, 1; E L Wallace 2.

PLEDGES.—Henderson and Brown, $25.00; W. P. Slensby, $25.00; Crocker and Colyer. $25.00: George C. Cowart, $25.00; Dr. E. B. Foote, $15.00; H. J. Woodhouse, $10.00; John Flint. $5.00; Margaret Flint. $5.00; James Methven. $5.00; L. O. Bass, $5.00; A. H. Frank, $25.00; G. O. Fink, $50.00; Dr. D. Higbie, $5.00; Robt. Davis, $25.00; A. J. Culver, $10.00; Patrick Prandy, $5.00; Ex.Rev. Mr. Ellis, $2.00; Henry Crane, $25.00; Louis Lange, $5.00; A. V Coffin, $10.00; T. A. Capehart, $1.00; L. T. Wilcox, $10.00; August Buessing, $2.00: M. W. St. John, $10.00; George E. Hartley, $10 00; Henry V. Penney and wife, $10.00; Geo. Kispert, $5.00; P. H. Lobingier, $10.00; J. Levy, $1.00; J. S. Bedel, $5.00; F. H. Sherwood, $5.00; H. E. Sherwood, $2.00; D. H. Howell. $2.00; Dr. A. Sherman, $5.00; Mrs. L. F. Johnson, $10,00; Oliver Gardner, $10.00; A Friend, $5.00; Nelson Beal, $20.00; L. L. La France, $5.00; T. S. La France, $3.00; Israel Betz, M. D., $5 00; T. H. C. Sunshine, $5.00; Jacob Neihart, 2.00; J. Barrows, 5.00; Joseph Y. Crosby, 5.00; Peter Sarspair, 1.00; W. Parking, 5.00; Charles Wall, 5.00; Dr. J. S. Lyon, 1 00; F. J. Gage, 2 00. E. K. Hosford, 25 00; Geo. Cornett, 2 00; Dr. W. B. Rigler, 5 00; Thomas Crawford, 5 00; James S. McCool (conditionally), 100 00; Joseph Bradbury (conditionally), 100 00; Isaac A. Pool, 5.00; C. R. Fink, 5 50; J. J. Mondenaux, 2 50; Henry A. Stone, 10 00; L. Vanderburg, 5.00; Dr. T. R. Kinget, 5.00; A. T. Duthill, 5.00; C. D. Tuttle, 5.00; A. Leon Cervantes, 15.00; B. F. Burk Jr., 3.00; F. Killenkamp, 5.00; J. M. Pratt, 2.00; John Mellendy, 5.00; C. H. Newman, 1 00; Sullivan Treat, 5.00: A. R. Simmons, 5.00; F. L. Scott, 1.00; Mrs. F. L. Scott, 1.00; Mr. Scott, Jr., 1.00; A. S. Kinser, 5.00; George Parker, 10.00; S. B. Bulkeley, 10.00; J. Woollstenholm, 2.00; D. R. Burt, 25.00; A Lohry, 2.00; Henry W. Southworth, 5.00; E C Brainard, 50.00; E S McComas, 25.00; George Hendee, 5.00; Elizabeth Waters, 5.00; D C Tuttle and Friend, 5.00; W R Wilcox, 3.00; Isaac N Jones, 5.00; Jos. Coveny, 10.00; Schuyler LaTourette, 10.00; A J Curtis, 5.00: S E Farwell, 5.00; M. E. Billings (if Ingersoll is employed), 25.00; D M Crane, 2.00; Capt H H Brown, 5.00; Andrew Willard, 5.00; R. Thorpe, 2.00; N Spoor, 5 00; C Z Blair, 5.00, S Lydard, 10,00; John Hobbs, 10 00; Chas Leindecker and Friends, 25.00: Watson Kenerdine, 10.00; Geo W Vordier, 25.00, M R Rouse, 5.00; H K Parr, 5; Mark Hoag, 5; Lorenzo Dorning, 5; Fridtbjof Arntzen, 5; Gilbert Arnold, 1.

Kind friends, we fervently thank yon all.—ED. T. S.

LINESVILLE, PA., Jan. 1, 1878.

FRIEND BENNETT: A Happy New Year!

The Liberals of Linesville, Crawford Co., Penn., will celebrate the 141st anniversary of Thomas Paine's birthday on the 27th, 28th and 29th days of January, 1878. The speakers engaged for the occasion are H. L. Green, A. B. Brown, Dr. T. L. Brown, O. P. Kellogg, Judge R. S. McCormick, and Rev. S. W. Sample.

BY ORDER OF COMMITTEE.

The Artistic Point of View.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: I have just read the article in the Boston Index upon what is called the "Obscenity Legislation." I fear it may influence you to change your position in regard to the necessity of withdrawing that legislation. I venture to send you some suggestions why it should not, from an artist's point of view.

There is, in the first place, an acknowledged moral evil to be dealt with. All good men and women deplore the existence of real obscenity, and of a class of publications and venders of publications who seek to make gain of debauching the public imagination and morals, and especially of the young. The real remedy for this it is not my business to point out now. But so great is our abomination of this filthy and hateful thing, that it becomes infinitely easy to excite the public prejudice and hostility against anything whatever which can be ignorantly branded and confounded with the real offense. It is this blind severity of public opinion against one kind of thing, which constitutes the very danger of a persecuting and oppressive crusade against other and wholly different, even directly opposite things, which may be imagined from some superficial resemblance, to be part and parcel of it. In this lies the danger. There can in fact be no legal accurate distinction between these things—it depends upon the person and the point of view. There is no line so delicate, varying and difficult to be drawn as that between "a real vulgarity of expression," and that audacity of purity and genius, which, soaring above all thought of vulgarity, withdraws the veil of concealment worn by common-place decency, and lays bare the secrets of Nature and of truth for some great and sufficiently holy and artistic purpose. That purpose may be a moral rigor against the very sins in question, as in the Bible and other religious books; an inspired literary or artistic fidelity to Nature, as with all great poets and artists; an intellectual research into the hidden truth of things, for truth's sake, as with physiologists and other men of science; or, in fine, a fanatical zeal in behalf of purity itself, or other social benefits to be obtained, as in the case of social reformers, Malthusians and others.

If this subtle line must be drawn and established by law, under the severest penalties of imprisonment at hard labor, confiscations, immense and ruinous fines, search-warrants, an organized corps and system of paid Government spies, and all the paraphernalia of a milder kind of Inquisition, reëstablished in this modern and progressive age, and on American soil, and brought to bear mercilessly upon whosoever thoughtlessly, or for any insufficient or sufficial purpose, oversteps that subtle and impalpable line, then, in God's name, let us have some competent tribunal to fix cautiously and wisely the limits of religious, literary, artistic, scientific and reformatory freedom. Let not the very flower of the liberties we have achieved be surreptuously filched away from us by legislation upon a subject where any accurate definition is from the very nature of the case impossible and just as likely to bear hard upon the innocent as the guilty.

Better a thousand times, if all these impalpable questions of propriety of utterance are to become, in this freest age and freest country of the world, matters for some sort of criminal tribunals; better a thousand times reëstablish a modified censorship of the press to accompany and soften the horrors of the new Inquisition. We ought, at least, to have the protection of knowing beforehand whether what we have written and desire to publish will be tolerated, or whether it will incur the penalties of the law, and consign us to a dungeon. We ought, at least, to have the benefit of a series of warnings, such as the most despotic governments give to the publishers of obnoxious political matters. We should have, indeed, some sort of special tribunal, for the trial of such questions—if they must be tried, instead of intrusting them, as all civilized countries have hitherto done, to the good sense of the community—a tribunal most carefully constituted of the highest experts in literature, science, art, morals and reform. The very worst contrivance for the trial of such issues, will be the trial by jury. To submit the highest inspirations of genius, and the most daring investigations of science, and the boldest speculations and tentatives of social reform to the blundering average opinion, the real vulgarity, of common ignorance and prejudice would be the one thing needed to extinguish genius, to trammel scientific investigation, and clog the wheels of the progress of the world.

Several great questions are now agitating the minds of men: for example, whether moral results are best attained by legal repressions or by merely moral agencies—as in the temperance movement; whether devices of science and art for limiting the number of progeny are moral and expedient or immoral and inexpedient; whether more familiarity with the processes of nature, in respect to generation especially, debauches the young mind or purifies it, etc. Of all these and such questions, there is a progressive and a retrogressive side. Upon all these questions the Comstockian legislation has taken a snap judgment in behalf of the conservative and repressive side. Of course, that cannot be the end of it. Of course, a reaction will take place, on the side of progression, and the enlargement of liberty. The long lines of battles which were fought in past ages on the field of religious, and that of political freedom, are now to be renewed on the social and artistic fields. The new crusade for liberty will have its martyrs, and it is to be expected that some of those who should be its staunchest defenders will show a genius for getting themselves planted on the wrong side, as seems to me was unfortunately to be the case with our friends on the Index.

This great subject is not yet even plainly opened to the public. Artists, men of science, and reformers, are, as yet scarcely aware of the existence, much less of the reach, of the new legislation. It constitutes a real and formidable danger, for every one of them, or for some among them. There has been always, for example, a sharp conflict, literary and moralistic, over the question of The Nude in art. All bold art-instincts have been in favor of it. Real art is impossible without it. Puritanism is opposed to it. Forty years ago, when Power's Greek slave, and other similar works were first exhibited in this country, puritanism took the alarm, and made a staunch fight over the subject; and was, definitively, as it was supposed, defeated. The art-instinct triumphed. Since that time not a murmur has been heard of objection to the usages of high art. At the Centennial Exposition, at Philadelphia, nude nature was exhibited nearly as freely as it would have been in any capital of Europe, and not even an objecting comment was made in any quarter. But at that very time, Mr. Comstock had surreptitiously, that is to say, quietly and unobservedly, obtained at Washington, the passage of laws, nominally relating to obscenity, under which many of the artists and importers of works of art, at the great national exposition, could have been consigned to prison; for beyond question a vulgar-minded jury could have been readily found whose verdict would have declared many of the pictures and much of the statuary there to have been indecent!

When the full force and meaning of this legislation shall really burst on the public mind, not a scientist, an author, or an artist, but will feel himself transported backward into a new Dark Age, breathing the mephetic atmosphere of a new repressive persecution, the very ground of American ideas and freedom gone, slipped away, stolen from under our feet, leaving us in the perlius of a new Inquisition, and under a new Reign of Terror. There is probably not a full library or cabinet in the land, but contains plates and descriptions that a common jury, urged by a fanatical or malign prosecutor, might not deem indecent; and the law lodges with its chief spy ample powers to institute a search wherever any suspicion exists. I ask for that freedom in which only Art and the Artistic spirit can live, and therefore I pray you to stand by your Petition for the total repeal of a United States censorship at the Custom House and the Post-Office, established by the Laws to which it refers.

Yours with respect and gratitude, Artist.

Clandestine Publications.

[The following from the Index of the 27th inst., by Elizur Wright, pleases us vastly better than the five-column editorial of the same paper the week previous.]

There are many wrongs among mankind with which law cannot meddle without making them worse. I do not say that the production of a certain kind of books and pictures, which a decent person puts into the fire at sight, is one of these wrongs; but I do say it is only a symptom of a social disease which has baffled law hitherto, and which while the disease lasts will continue to baffle it. There is, in my opinion, no remedy but in a better gospel—a gospel of home education, which shall fortify the child against this species of filth before the age of going to school, so that one of these manufacturing scoundrels would no more dare to send one of his circulars to a young scholar than to the mother. This is not saying that there should be no law to punish such outrages upon decency. Till such nuisances cease they must be punished, though perhaps shooting would be better than boarding at the public expense.

But all that law can do, and it is precious little, can be done by State and municipal laws, if it can be done at all. In this opinion I am exceedingly sorry to differ from my excellent friend. the editor, with whose indignation against the authors and distributors of this clandestine literature and vile art I most fully sympathize. I think Congress has no occasion, and therefore no right, to legislate on the subject, except for the District of Columbia and the Territories. Moreover, I think its act touching the circulation of obscene publications through the mails is an outrageous violation of the Constitution, incapable of any modification which could make it either constitutional or safe. I wish to sign a petition for its total and immediate repeal, even at the risk of being classed with the vilest publicans and sinners, if anybody sees fit so to class me. Let men be punished for obscenity or treason, if they are guilty of either, but not for sending either through the mails. If it has come to that, that these two crimes, or any crimes, cannot be suppressed without invading the sacred privacy of the people's correspondence, we had better abolish the post-office.

If we are to admit as true the statements published in the Journal and quoted in the last Index—though they bear on their face signs of great exaggeration—it is very plain that the class of books and prints used to corrupt schools can be suppressed without meddling with the mails. Any manufactory turning them out by the "ton" cannot be hidden from a vigilant police anywhere. Thousands of citizens of all sects and parties are interested in having the police do its duty, and have the votes to enforce their will. The problem is simply to find the origin of the filth, burn it in the mass, and put the producers where they will produce no more, making as little noise about it as possible. Then will there be none of it going through the mails. The indiscretion of making so much noise and publishing such frightful statements is too palpable. It is a gratuitous advertisement that the scoundrelly wares can be had somewhere, and sets the viciously-inclined, the misbegotten, and parentally-neglected to looking for them. If the Society for the Suppression of Vice were acting with good faith and the requisite degree of common sense, they would go quietly to the proper authorities and insist on their doing their duty.

The distinction between the open and the clandestine book and print trade is sufficiently marked. The former is kept clean, not by law but by public opinion. A reputable bookseller no more thinks of selling one of those vile books which are the only subjects of legal prohibition than he does of walking in the street with nothing but a hat on. And he would not do that even if the law did not forbid it.

The simple truth is that the Society for the Suppression of Vice does not care a pin for the suppresssion of the clandestine and really vile book trade; but, taking advantage of the great elasticity of the adjective "obscene," they first make a raid upon the clandestine trade as a cover to their attack upon the science of human physiology, in the interest of their peculiar religion. Pretending and loudly bragging to have done the work of the police authorities better than they ever did or could do it themselves, they now come to their real work, which is to suppress science and cultivate ignorance and superstition among the people. The honest and self-sacrificing men and women who are laboring openly, earnestly, and intelligently to prevent social corruption and keep men and women out of a hell-upon-earth by instructing them in the laws of life and health, are pounced upon as if they were pimps and harlots! Do our orthodox friends think such strategy is going to succeed? Do they think ignorance is the best protection of innocence, and that those are safest from precipices who either know nothing about them or are instructed that they are delightful places to jump from? If they wish to save their cause from the greatest disgrace it has ever yet suffered, they will take care to turn the energies of Comstock and his crew out of their present channel.

E. W.

An Orthodox View of Theatricals and Other Entertainments.

"The Index of Oct. 4th published a remarkable article under the above title, by Charles K. Whipple. I wish The Truth Seeker could republish the whole article, but it is long, and the following extract, a fair sample of the whole, must suffice as a basis for some comments.

I have read with very great pleasure the article in The Index of Sept. 13, entitled "The Duty of Liberals," by J. L. Stodoard. In that article, the author's desire to make a candid, fair, and just statement of the Orthodox stand-point is no less aparent than his liberality.

The passages in Mr. Stoddard's article where, as I think, the Orthodox idea is inaccurately represented, are the following, just below the middle of second column. I italicize the phrases in which I consider the inaccuracy to lie:—

'Here, in enlightened, cultured Boston, there may be found thousands who deem it a sin to go to the theatre, there to be ennobled by the witnessing of Shakespeare's tragedies';—and,

'Is it not pitiable that intelligent men and women can still be so bound hand and foot by Puritan prejudices as neither to enjoy and profit by many inspiring pieces of acting, nor to recognize the great educating and ennobling influence which the drama is capable of exerting?'

There are tragedies and comedies of Shakespeare and other authors, the adequate representation of which would have, on the whole, a good moral influence. There are private dramatic representations which have a moral influence unexceptionably good. At the same time, there is probably not one theatre in the world, carried on upon a business basis, and designed to pay a fair profit to its managers, a full half of whose nightly performances do not exercise, on the whole, a bad moral influence.

The evening's entertainment in our theatres usually consists of three parts: a tragedy or comedy to begin with, which may be good, bad, or indifferent, in moral character; a farce to end with, which usually contains some objectionable features; and dancing in the interval between, the chief feature of which is its indecency. Ballet-dancing, which, either by itself, or as a feature of one of the dramatic pieces, is one of the things chiefly relied on to draw an audience to the theatre, is the intentional display of the female figure to an extent, and in a manner, which would not only seem, at the first view, impossible to a modest and decent woman, but which would subject any woman to arrest for "indecent exposure" who should practice it with equal publicity elsewhere. Most of the dancing of women on the stage would be accurately defined by calling it an elaborate system of indecent exposure, although long custom and the patronage of wealthy and fashionable people have thus far screened it from the operation of penal law".

In commenting on Mr. Whipple's defense of the prejudices of the Puritans against the theatre, I do not propose altogether to defend the theatre, but to look into the inherent moral principles of his article, and make a wider application of them.

The central gravamen of the orthodox distress, as represented by Mr. Whipple, is that sex furnishes the groundwork and staple for allusion, innuendo and display in the theatre, and hence is corrupting. The implication is that sex is bad per se; that sex is a sin and a shame, and plays the mischief everywhere; that the great creator, who deliberately went and pervaded all life with sex, ought to be ashamed of himself—in short, that sex is the grand mistake of the Universe.

Sex it is that corrupts, defiles, and brings "death into the world and all our woe." "Corruption," "vileness," "indecency," are the leading words in the indictment against all theatrical reference to sex. It is time that hysterics should begin to disappear, and reason prevail, in regard to this ever-present and innocent domain of animated nature.

As to the theatre of the past, with its bar and its "third tier," luckily it is past; and, therefore, with it and with the first part of the article under review I have no controversy, except to remind readers that all evil is relative and has a good side, and that good is constantly evolving out of evil, as the present theatre has out of the evil past, and as the future will out of the evil present. A few readers of the last three-quarters of the article will reflect, though unfortunately all will not, that the old orthodox puritanic morals are tarred with the same stick that their religions are. We have no more discovered what it is infallibly moral to do, than we have what it is absolutely religious to believe. The path of research runs quite as far into jungles to be explored in one realm as in the other. Our morals are now, and have been for centuries, as much dictated by the Christian Church as our religion has been. Questions of sex are especially assumed by the Church to be placed, by authority of the Great Jehovah, in her exclusive and most holy keeping; and she prescribes all the etiquette and all the propriety of its manners, and all the rites and ceremonies of its relations and functions. Is her assumption justified, and are her teachings and her rulings on sex questions any more likely to be scientifically correct than they are in the purely religious domain, where we know they are false and untenable? and if not so, are Liberals and Freethinkers going to dig about and uproot the old orthodox religious tree, but leave this branch relating to sex morals to flourish unquestioned and uninvestigated, as of old?

Let a close observer look about him and see what the practical every-day acted definition of morals is, in all Christian countries whose every creature has heard the gospel preached, and he will learn that that is moral which is customary, and that is immoral which is rare, or which prevails in minorities.

Marriage for life, though full of tyranny and revolt, disease and dead women's bones, and though productive of great hordes of unhandsome, deformed, and in many ways imperfect generations, is, nevertheless, moral, because it is in the majority. Marriage not for life is immoral, because it is in the minority—though every day it is undergoing its own evolution, involving better classes, and gaining on the moral style of marriage.

From these two great juxtaposed institutions of morality and immorality descend and shade away several minor morals and immoralities, that are just as mixed and questionable in their ground and logic as the major ones are. As instances, it is immoral for a woman, any fine morning that she chooses, to pack up her reticule and depart on a day's or a week's journey, as a man may, without notice or asking anybody's permission. It is immoral for a woman to ride astride, though her ease, convenience and safety require it. It is immoral for a woman to shorten her dress say the moderate width of four inches at the bottom, though it is highly moral to abbreviate it that immoderate width at the top. It is immoral for a woman, traveling alone, to apply for lodging at a hotel; and much suffering has been caused by the denial of this privilege. Up to say fifteen years ago, in this city full of dining saloons, it was immoral for a woman to step into one of these convenient places to quench her hunger and thirst. It is not long since it was immoral for a woman to be a physician; and it is now immoral for her to be a lawyer or a clergywoman, and clergy*men* are hauled over orthodox coals for admitting her to their pulpits. In short, it is generally immoral for a woman not to be more or less owned by some man, not to obey and do the bidding of some man, because it is his right to command, rather than a favor of hers to bestow.

In the rural districts it is universally immoral to do as your neighbors don't do—even in matters not pertaining to sex. I have known neighborhoods where it was highly immoral to subsoil or under-drain a farm. In the early days of pisciculture (1860) I was passing a season in the rather wild county of Delaware, N. Y., and indulged in some familiarities with male and female trout to improve their mere naturismal methods of propagation. The most convenient point for my experiments was at a spring by the roadside, where rustic marketmen and travelers passed daily, and I soon realized that I was committing the unpardonable immorality. I had to submit to so much questioning, comment and criticism, and got to feeling so mean about tampering with the connubial rights of those dear little finny people whom I desired to keep unspotted from the world, that I would dodge out into the bushes when I saw any one coming; and, by the time I had those trout eggs all nicely laid, by science and machinery, as it were, I never so painfully realized the great truth that I had been conceived in sin and brought forth in iniquity.

In cities, too, there are some, though not so many, of these minor immoralities. Even so late as 1856, I was offered a profitable partnership in business, provided I would shave off my full beard, the style of which had not quite yet become fashionable; and was refused because I said to my intolerant benefactor that I would see him in—well, there isn't any such place, and so I won't write it.

But to return to the theatre and sex—for in that domain theatrical immorality chiefly lies. The fact is, puritanism and orthodoxy have built up fences around this field altogether too high, and the just instincts of theh uman heart revolt at them. You cannot put a prohibitory tariff upon sex manifestations. It is utterly useless to try it. The only result of such a policy has ever and always been an increase in the race of smugglers. The frontiers of such a line of customs furnish a fair field for the enterprising, and they are breaking through all tariffs and butting against and overleaping all fences, however high and however threateningly mounted with the warning, "All persons forbidden to trespass on these grounds under penalty of the law." The theatre with its catapult of independence and protest has battered down one large gap. The ballroom has opened another. Art and literature, another; and seaside bathing has made the greatest breach of all. People will resent every attempt to relegate them up to any whimsical and baseless style of morals; and women people especially seize upon every fair excuse for that display of their charms which the orthodox denounce, though inherent purity approves. The great crowds of bathers at the seaside furnish opportunities on the largest scale for this display.

At Ostend, and other fashionable bathing resorts in Europe, the surf and shore exhibit one wide waste embarras de richesse of what Mr. W. quotes as "indecent exposure"; and bad, if it is bad, as the general bathing manners are, yet there are more retired portions of the beach where almost utter abandon is permitted. In this country the tendency is the same way.

Not long since, a writer, who styles himself "Merchant," went down to Long Branch just one day, returned, and poured forth his shocked sensibilities in a complaint to the Graphic. Also, a writer in the daily Times, last Summer, gave a long account of a woman of wealth and dazzling beauty and, what is inexcusable, "respectability," and of her enchanting ways and habits, and no habits, of bathing. He described her as appearing regularly every day, at 11 o'clock, accompanied by maids bearing a wealth of toiletry, and by a man carrying a little tent which he set up on the beach, wherein she would enter and pretty soon appear again in close-fitting gauze silk, and, on the whole, arrayed in all her glory like any lily of the valley. Then she would receive her friends, of the male persuasion or otherwise, a few moments at the door of her tent, and finally would plunge, a veritable "wasser maiden," into the waves. These elaborate preparations seemed designed on purpose to draw a galaxy of observing eyes, and the gay and festive outside world flocked around in crowds to catch bewildering glances and see her disport.

Now this is only an exaggeration of freedoms that are growing very general. The universal hush, on the subject of sex, is breaking away in spots and places. The pious sham is losing its force; and even the "unco guid" are compelled to admit that the unclothed human body is not essentially and necessarily a loathsome object which breathes pestilence and breeds corruption wherever it is seen.

Then there is the art world, which is crowded full of horrors, equal to any ever displayed at the theatre, if the nude human body is indecent. The great masters in color will paint beauty as she is; the artists in marble will chisel her forms as nature made them; and the high and mighty, and refined of the world will crowd the studios and the galleries to look at them. It is too late in the age of the world to make an indecency and a depravity of untrammeled art by theologic censure and cant. The regular and orderly evolution of the human passions, and of every one of them, will have its appointed way, spite of theories of total depravity, conception in sin, and birth in iniquity.

In literature not dramatic, there is the same growing assertion of independence, and there are pictures in words and realisms in verse just as warm and "corrupting," though conceived and expressed by the greatest masters, as anything delineated in the galleries, or spoken and acted at the theatre can be.

Now how does Mr. Whipple account for these facts, thus faintly shadowed forth showing that the most cultured, wealthy and beautiful classes; yes, and a large consenting, active or passive portion of the religious, do love, in their inmost souls, to see and be seen attired in this scanty, careless, negligent way, at parties, balls, theatres, picture galleries and the bath?

Is it a degraded nature in these classes? Is it conception in sin and birth in iniquity? In short, is it total depravity? Or may we not as well admit that sex is not a disastrous mistake, that it is not in its own nature indecent, corrupting and vile, that it has its uses and is enriched with charms, and that the human race may safely be credited with sufficient reason and common sense to use, and enjoy, and on the whole not abuse these among the best gifts of creative wisdom to woman and man? Might we not as well confess that the sex passion is at par with all the other passions of the human soul, that it has its laws, its necessities, its demands; and, if they are not gratified in regular normal ways, they will seek irregular and abnormal ones, and even carve out savage and destructive channels of their own? Some student in sex physiology has recently announced that hydrophobia in the canine race is the result of unrequited affection, and is unknown in countries where the males are not generally made widowers, and where the law of animal instinct is not thwarted. Is thy servant a dog, that he should be kenneled and confined to an environment such as the sexphobists would prescibe?

It is said that beauty unadorned is adorned the most. Every man who is a man knows that the sight of woman unadorned as Eve gives him delight. I suppose that the corresponding Adam pleases the feminine eye. What is the use of denying it? Who is to blame for it? and what are you going to do about it? Are we to curse God and die, because he has made woman so shamefully beautiful and man so shockingly handsome? Come down to the science of it, and, setting aside our orthodox puritanic education, will Mr. Whipple, or any other disciple of the skeleton school, tell me where is the indecency of exposure, where the vileness, where the corruption, arising from anything ever seen or heard at the theatre, shown in painting or sculpture, read in books, or exhibited at the bath? Point us out the ipsissimum punctum where corruption or indecency begins. There is much disease in sexual function, much weakness and breaking down of parts, mainly in commercial marriages and unloved unions. This, I should suppose, would be generally deemed corrupt, indecent, vile, and all the unhappy words which Mr. W. applies to the more veiled suggestions of sex.

The most that the "bears" in the sex market can prove, in all their depressing quotations, is that sex has its dangers, as fire and water have. Unfortunates may consume in the one and drown in the other. And so the misinformed in laws and functions of sex may commit excesses and rush to destruction. But the world was not made for them. It is the fittest only who survive. Because the weaklings get scorched in the dazzle of beauty, shall the judicious, the temperate and the able-bodied be abridged in their faculties, shut up to limited lives, and hampered by unreasonable social requirements? Let the unfinished creatures dissolve into their original elements and take a new start; but because they have proved unequal to the emergencies of existence, we need not forbid "cakes and ale" to the survivors. It seems a cruel law, but where is the creator who could have made a better?

When the science of sex shall be understood and its laws obeyed, when its etiquette and its proprieties are based on a code of morals not made of mere wind of doctrine, when its uses are respected and its delights not abused, then woman will be several degrees higher in the social scale than she now is, her name will be no longer "Frailty," and the theatre will readily conform to her decrees in all the stage manners, the literature of the drama and the acting thereof, which in any way infringes upon the subject or the relations of sex. What woman wills in that matter is preeminently God's will.

I conclude, then, that Mr. Stoddard, in his estimate of the theatre, is in accordance with the spirit of the age, the tendency of society, and the manners and customs that are growing and going to be—in fact, that partially now are—and he is practically right. Mr. Whipple, on the contrary, in his estimate of the theatre, has in view the morals based on total depravity and imposed on us by the same people who have imposed the current religions, and is upholding or at all events is excusing, these unscientifie morals; while, as I understand his other writings, he rejects their religions, and so he is practically wrong. At all events, the austere faith and works of the Puritans have been through the court of enlighted modern opinion, and judgment entered up. There it is better to let it rest. A reopening and rearguing of their case will not any the more commend it to modern acceptation.

THEROR C. LELAND.

New York, Dec. 26, 1877.

An Open Letter to Mrs. S nker.

DEAR MADAM: I know our Editor objects to annoying his readers and correspondents with two sides of some questions; but I think it is a slight mistake in judgment. I am sorry that such is the case, as he seeks the truth; and that cannot be found in that way, at least not more than half of it.

I admire you as a writer and teacher. You say a great many good things in a penetrating style. But when ladies take a public stand, I deem it not unkind to show up their errors as soon as I would those of the sterner sex. So I only ask our Editor for a little fair play, which if not granted some of us will feel disagreeable.

In your reply to Mrs. E., in this paper of May 26th, you cut your stuff without compass or gauge. I ask you to hold on a moment. You say, "Now, spirit is the absence of matter, and that, too, is nothing. Matter fills all space, and therefore we find no place for nothing—for spirits. Now, things are realities, hence they are not legitimately comparable with the ethereal sublimated essence of infinitesimal vacuity called spirit." You have evidently reckoned without your host. You seem to have absorbed N. Webster's philosophy of spirit, and yet one of our Methodist preachers quoted him the other day to prove immortality. Webster tells us that spirit is (1) Wind; air in motion; hence breath; (2) Animal excitement, or the effect of it; elevation or vehemence of mind; as, the troops attacked the enemy with great spirit; (6) An immaterial, intelligent substance."

Friend Slenker, you and Bro. Webster are both very inconsistent, whether you agree with him or not. How would it seem to say, "the troops attacked the enemy with great wind?" Once more: "The troops attacked the enemy with great nothing." I suspect the enemy would not mind it much; and you may smile just here and say neither would they if attacked by spirit.

You assume more than reason dictates, I think. Will you permit me to ask you a few questions?

Two friends of mine in this city, stopped at Dr. Slade's rooms in New York a few years ago, as they were returning home from the funeral of an uncle, who was, while he lived, one of your sort, who glibly say, "spirit is nothing." They were strangers to Dr. Slade, both the dead man and his friends. They—the live folks—sat down and a message was written without visible hands between a closed double slate by an invisible power, addressed to one of the party who had just come from their uncle's burial, and that message was first signed C. Forbes (the person they had just buried). My friends being of an inquiring mind asked the power to write the full name, and it was done. Here is a disembodied mind writing a communication to a relative, under circumstances which precluded all possibility of deception, guess-work, or collusion. These are veritable facts. Was it "nothing" that wrote on the slate? I know my statements of them is no evidence to you, and I do not ask you to so accept it; but it becomes our turn to laugh when such facts can be substantiated by five hundred credible witnesses. And before you assume to make such sweeping assertions as you do in regard to spirit, you must be prepared to use some reason, and consider those stubborn facts; because there are about four sides to this spirit matter. What say you?

These "things are realities" and are not "nothings," but I claim they are spirit realities; so is wind, so are many other invisible things realities of different characters. I say spirit is not the absence of matter. Spirit can have an organization just as easy as any other kind of matter. Spirit is material in its realm just as much as earth is material in its realm.

Come back, my dear friend of truth, as I believe you to be, and reconsider a little. S MARSHALL.

Letters from Friends.

CLEARFIELD, PA., Dec. 5, 1877.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: As I anticipated, you have fallen among thieves. That pious Christian bloodhound, St. Anthony Comstock, has scented obscenity(?) and the whole pack of Y. M. C. A., will soon be on your track in full cry. I trust the Freethinkers of the country will come to the rescue. As for myself, "silver and gold have I none, but such as I have give I unto thee"—the sympathy of a brother. Send me six petitions at once and I will put them where they will do the most good. Your friend in adversity, HARRY HOOVER.

ARLINGTON, MASS., DEC. 8, 1877.

D. M. BENNETT: I am disturbed somewhat to learn of your arrest for the conscientious discharge of a duty which has for its object the lasting benefit of mankind, but am very hopeful for good results. It seems you have been summoned as a law-breaker to appear before the ministers of justice to answer to the charges preferred by a willing and zealous tool of the Young Men's Christian Association of New York, which is the representative of the dominant orthodox religion of the country.

The disposition on the part of Protestant Christians to suppress the utterance of Freethought comes with an exceedingly ill-grace, it seems to me, from the descendants of the early Protestants. It shows them to be unworthy of their sires, and calls loudly for a new protest against this influential religious body, even as Luther and his contemporaries protested under somewhat similar circumstances in their time.

It is quite evident that narrow-minded Christians, of which unfortunately a prolific crop has been grown latterly, recognize you as the propagator of a new Reformation, and feel it necessary for their own salvation, to close the mouth and paralyze the hand which wields a pen so fruitful of discomfiture to their unhallowed religion. But let me comfort you, friend Bennett, if I may, with the assurance that no better method could be adopted to herald your cause and secure popularity for the great work to which your life is devoted. Am very sure we shall have occasion to rejoice that this diabolism of Comstock and the Christians who hound him on has been undertaken against the editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, as will be demonstrated by sympathy awakened amongst old and new friends, and a subscription list doubled in a short time.

We already get a foretaste of what is coming by reading the several pages of friendly communications and generous contributions and pledges in the last two or three numbers of your paper.

Although you may be made to suffer inconvenience and possibly imprisonment for a season, it will nevertheless result greatly to your advantage in a business point of view, and immeasurably great to the cause of the freedom of thought, the propagation of knowledge, which you have so much at heart, and the more speedy downfall of a religion which resorts to such measures for its perpetuation.

Let us not therefore wish to blot out of existence this man so willing to lend himself to the nefarious work of the Young Men's Christian Association, but rather recognize both him and the Association as servants for the promotion of Freethought and unwilling ministers for the propagation of Infidelity and the upbuilding of the cause to which you are devoted.

I shall have an eye continually to the progress of your case under the prosecution and hold myself ready to contribute my mite to the treasury when it is found necessary, although the calls upon my resources quite surpass the supply.

Your ob't servant, I. G. DODGE.

DUNLEITH, ILL., Dec. 27, 1877.

D. M. BENNETT, ESQ.: Blank petitions from your office received, but too late to be of use here. A petition had been circulated and signed by most of our citizens before the arrival of mine. So far I have contributed no money in your behalf. Without endorsing or condemning the course of THE TRUTH SEEKER, I will say that, should it become necessary to the proper defense of your case, you are, without further notice, at full and complete liberty to call upon me to the extent of the last dollar I have in the world. Should the tug of war come, rest assured that I shall be ready to pay in defense of your rights and liberty as I would in my own. Congress, through its "catspaw," Mr. Comstock, has the same right to injure me and destroy my business that it has to destroy you and yours.

Should they succeed with you, they might do me the honor to use me in illustrating the next moral (?) performance given by the Y. M. C. A. Truly yours, C. H. MERRY.

COVINGTON, IND., Dec. 29, 1877.

D. M. BENNETT: I received the petitions you sent me, and have been using what time I could spare in canvassing for signers. Every man I meet signs it, Christians and all, as soon as they understand it. I will return them to you as soon as I get around.

Enclosed find five dollars for the following named books, and if there is any left, add it to your Comstock defense fund, and you may call on me for ten dollars for the same purpose as soon as I sell my swine, or I will obligate myself to pay thirteen dollars per year for the big TRUTH SEEKER until that Comstock pimp is busted.

Your friend and well-wisher,
SCHUYLER LATOURETTE.

CHAMPAIGN, ILLS., NOV., 28, 1877.

D. M, BENNETT, Dear Sir:—Enclosed please find Draft for $3.90, for which send me Draper's "Intellectual Development of Europe" and two "Self-Contradictions of the Bible". I owe you for "Vindication of Thomas Paine," by Ingersoll. You may put down my name for $5.00 if you need it in your difficulty with that Comstock. If it comes to the pinch, I will give still more; I will do all I can; any way I am ready to take my gun for liberty although I am almost fifty years old. I hope you will secure R. Ingersoll to take your case. Don't back down one inch. I am very sorry it is so. I think this will be a test case. If we have got to go back to the rule of the church, let us sell our lives as dearly as possible. I am poor, yet I will do all I can for you.

A. SHERMAN.

MT., PLEASANT, PA., Dec., 26, 1877.

D. M. BENNETT: I forward my petition by mail to-day. I have four hundred and twenty signers. I send it early as your card of the 19th was received only yesterday, and don't want my names to be too late. I wrote to our congressman to-day, and I think he will be on our side. Awaiting results I remain Yours truly,

W. F. BARKLEY.

BINGHAMTON, N. Y., Dec., 21st, 1877.

BRO. BENNETT: From the moment I learned of your unjust arrest, I at once made up my mind to aid you when most in need. But you have made such a brave and honest fight, gaining so much over your accuser and prosecutor, in spite of his avarice, that I could not yet see where I would be your best reserve. Good for you and the important cause of mental freedom you so worthily represent. I pledge for $100.00 if any attempt is made to punish you for an offence you have not committed. Count on more after, if you need. I expect to call on you, in a few days, and learn more from you of the present duty of your friends.

Truly yours,
T. L. BROWN, M. D.

MADISON, OHIO, Dec., 29, 1877.

Be of good cheer, Brother. If you have to stand trial (which we hope you will not have to do), you may expect to hear from Madison again, as you have some warm friends here who will not see you fight the inquisition without lending you a helping hand. Yours for the Right,

S. G. MACK.

SERENA, ILL., Dec. 29, 1877.

BROTHER BENNETT: Your cause is our cause; and while we sincerely regret that you have to suffer for us in this case, we hope and fully believe that you will come out triumphant over Comstock and his Y. M. C. A. Should it, however, come to business with those parties, we hereby pledge ourselves to send you $20 as soon as such event becomes known to us through your paper.

H. K. PARR, LORENZO DOMING,
MARK HOAG, FRIDTHJOF ARNTZEN.

STERLING, IOWA, Dec. 8, 1877.

FRIEND BENNETT: I see that the Philistines are upon you, and that the camp is in a flutter and taken by surprise; "but steady, boys, steady," let reason and truth be the watch-word along the whole lines. It is not Comstock and Bennett that are arrayed against each other, but it is the whole Christian community headed by the Y. M. C. A., and Comstock is but their tool. The great defeats they have had in discussing the question have aroused the whole hive, and the mandate has gone forth that persecution and prosecution must be resorted to to stop the current of free thought and free speech. As for a free press, I doubt if there is one. But "To action!" seems to be the order of the day for our safety; and the first that is wanted is organization, and a committee to receive all donations to form a fund to defend any case that may hereafter arise; and, to my view, a considerable fund might be raised by the advance of our publication, say ten or fifteen cents yearly, and if that was judiciously passed into the fund, an amount of money might be accumulated that would be very useful at any time when needed, and but few subscribers would object to it, when they knew that their money was honestly handled. But I am afraid that it will go hard with you, for I have observed that public opinion or public clamor often supersede law and justice. It is but a few years since that Churches and Christians themselves denounced the Bible and appealed to a higher law. It is a fact that all the lowest rowdies wish to be on the popular side, and would shout "Hosannah," while the ministers and leaders would stand by with smiling faces, to see the destruction going forward. I have seen it done! It is said that "eternal vigilance is the price of liberty." I ask, where were our watchmen while Comstock was silently getting his fetters forged in Washington and Albany? Our liberal papers made no mention of it. What were they doing? Perhaps they were gazing through the clouds, trying to set the boundaries to space, or dividing the smallest atom of matter to see what was inside. But now Comstock shakes his shackles in your face! The Y. M. C. A., smile as they look on, and the deacons praise the Lord for his mercy which endureth forever. Had the donations of James Lick and others been appropriated to a defense of Paine's principles instead of a monument to his name, I very much doubt whether Comstock would have had the courage to attack you. But the end is not yet. Like every other nation we must have our holy wars. Perhaps these persecutions are but a pretext to get God into the Constitution. Every movement of the Christians should be scrutinized. Recollect that religious wars are the cruelest of all wars. Here is my mite—two dollars. Though late, it may be useful.

T. B. JOHNSON.

LOWELLVILLE, OHIO, Dec. 4, 1877.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I enclose herewith postal money order for eight dollars—two dollars to pay for the TRUTH SEEKER, which you will please send me—one dollar to pay for some tracts or pamphlets, and five dollars to help defend you against persecution. Protestants profess to be in favor of the rights of private judgment, liberty of conscience, and free speech; but it is only for themselves, as against Catholics and others who differ from them, and they are always ready to persecute to the extent of their power. I formerly thought that our Constitution and laws would protect us, but it seems not, and but few appreciate or understand the danger. So many hypocrites! So many—for sake of popularity, for sake of customers, and for sake of office, who give their influence and means to sustain a system of religion in which they do not believe—that I am sometimes really discouraged. Were it not for this hypocrisy, this lack of principle, common sense, and pluck, there would be no danger from the blind fury of the ignorant devotees of a false religion, who think that they are doing God service by trampling upon the most sacred rights of man. I most heartily sympathize with you.

Yours truly, WILLIAM WATSON.

WHITE ROCK, NEV., Dec. 1, 1877.

FRIEND BENNETT: Enclosed find ten dollars, promised in my last letter by Chas. Wall and myself, to help you through the Comstock persecution. After mailing my last letter, it appeared to me the best to send the money at once, as lawyers generally want to see a good coloring of gold dust before they take hold of a case. I hope to see the best talent in the country take an interest in your case. This prosecution is not only against you, but every Liberal in the country; therefore it is the duty of every man and woman friendly to the liberal cause to send along their contributions immediately, to the utmost of their capacity, and show the enemies of truth and progression that we are a power that cannot be stopped from our course of progression by all the combined religious associations of the world. I hereby make a call upon everybody that loves the truth and the well-being of a fellow-man, to send all the money he or she can spare to Brother Bennett at once, and they will be repaid tenfold in knowing their duty. I remain yours, for truth and justice, V. J. BORRETTE.

LACROSSE, ILLINOIS, Dec. 12, 1877.

MR. BENNETT, Dear Sir: You will find enclosed ten dollars to help you in your trial with old, peeping Tom, Comstock, and if you should not want it for that purpose, you can use it for your own benefit as you see fit.

Yours truly, THOMAS NICHOLSON.

FORT LEAVENWORTH, KS., Dec. 12, 1877.

BRO. BENNETT: I am glad to see that the TRUTH SEEKER will be enlarged next year. As prices are to be increased after Jan. 1st, I send $3 as my donation to the Bennett Defence Fund, which I am glad to see steadily increasing. Your cause in this fight is the cause of freedom, justice, equal rights, and upon its issue depend largely the preservation of the rights and liberties of all Freethinkers; and they should, one and all, respond acccording to their respective means, to uphold and sustain you in this great crisis. Truly yours,

W. E. COLEMAN.

GERVAIS, OREGON, Nov. 30, 1877.

BRO. BENNETT: "It has came at last," is the alarm sounded from the citadel of Liberalism. It comes none the less startling though long expected. The hell-hound Comstock, backed by Christian fanatics and bigots has dragged you before the American Inquisition. I know how to sympathize with you, having been dragged around four days, and bled to the tune of $49.60. I cannot respond to-day for the reason given by Friend Parker on the opposit epage. But should you be put through before the next TRUTH SEEKER reaches us, please notify by mail, and I will send the amount opposite my name. Yours fraternally,

A. S. KINSER.

GERVAIS, OREGON, Dec. 1, 1877.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I see by the TRUTH SEEKER of November 17, that you have been arrested by the Christian fanatics for publishing useful information to the public. I am a late convert to liberalism, but would consider myself unworthy of the name, if I refused to help our standard-bearer in time of dire need. I am distant from a postal order office, and cannot obtain currency, but subscribe for the sum opposite my name, upon notice that you are fined or imprisoned. Please notify me at Gervais, Marion County, Oregon.

GEORGE PARKER.

ALTON, Ill., Dec. 15, 1877.

MR. D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I see the tyrant's hand is upon you, and I am also overjoyed to see the kind responses of friends, and I herewith enclose $5, four dollars for myself, and one dollar for my son Wesley. If the TRUTH SEEKER is obscene, what are we to think of our Christian Bible? O consistency! thou art indeed a jewel! If Christianity still lacks anything in its history to sink it to the lowest depths of infamy, the action of this zealot, coward, Comstock, ought to be sufficient to finish the work. Very truly, your friend,

D. R. SPARKS.

DAVISVILLE, CA L., Dec. 4, 1877.

D. M. BENNETT, ESQ., Dear Sir: Enclosed find $20.00, to pay for THE TRUTH SEEKER one year and help you in your trial.

Hoping you may get justice, I am
Truly yours, G. G. BRIGGS.

VERSAILLES, IND., Dec. 26, 1877.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I enclose to you $5.00, and, as per your paper, I wish you to send me THE TRUTH SEEKER for 1878, and Lord Amberley's "Analysis of Religious Belief." THE TRUTH SEEKER is a very earnest laborer against orthodox theology and in favor of a pure morality. May "Heaven" bless you in your good work. The government cannot afford to imprison you in your old age. It cannot be that our government can be influenced by the clamor of priests and the low huzza of their slavish followers. However, should you need assistance, I will try and help you. Your prosecution has been a great eye-opener to the Liberals through here.

Very respectfully, ADAM STOCKINGER.

LUMBER CITY, PA., Dec. 27, 1877.

"Prefer prisons to infamy, and death to servitude."

FRIEND D. M. BENNETT: I am a casual reader of your paper, and through a mutual friend have been made the happy recipient of three volumes published by you—viz: "Sixteen Crucified Saviors," "The World's Sages, Infidels, and Thinkers," and "Collection of Forms, Hymns," etc. My sympathy is with you and the cause, but indigence forbids my aiding you financially.

By your arrest, innocence is outraged, truth is maligned, and purity is besmeared with the filth of the Gospel, which has been accumulating for nearly nineteen hundred years.

If you are brought to trial, for God's sake and for the sake of the liberty vouchsafed unto us by the shedding of human gore at Lexington, Long Island, Trenton, and elsewhere, get the Infidel Goliah, Col. Bob Ingersoll, to hold the reins, crack the whip and draw the break before the judicial bench. Truly yours, ECHO.

KAMPSVILLE, ILL., Dec. 4, 1877.

BRO. BENNETT: Men of age, looking back to our younger days, when a quiet confidence possessed us in regard to the perfect liberty and liberality of our country and its institutions inhering in the citizens—can it be the progress of scientific knowledge, the great factors of man's advancement, urging him out of and above the crude teachings of the One Book and the many absurd creeds formulated therefrom—is it this universal growth of liberal and educated thought that invites this malevolent spirit of the Church adherents in their attack upon Liberal thought? Comstock, the hypocritical persecutor, the representative of the vile in our land, intrigued with Jesuitical impudence for the passage of the act in regard to what may not go through the mails, without proper discrimination and guards in defining obscenity and blasphemy. Well, Bro. Bennett, this may be seemingly a success without any success. Perhaps you are the instrument, the person to unwind and straighten this damnable approach against the liberty of the citizen.

Go on; see them out and clear through. The Liberal public will and must see you through.

Please find enclosed $5.00, as my offering to you, and believe me sincerely

Your friend, W. H. REED.

FONBURG, Dec. 17, '77.

DEAR FRIEND BENNETT: It would be impossible for me to repress the indignation I feel toward your persecutors, and the contempt I entertain for a law that will give a bigot and a scoundrel the power to battle with truth, Freethought, and pure thought, which your personal writings present to me. I feel like doing something violent or desperate, and probably would only for the doctrines that Infidelity has instilled into me.

I know it will explain my illiberality in writing the above when I tell you that I read the Bible and believed it for some time, but as mean as my disposition got by treatment, I did not fail to discover the inconsistent, sneaking, dishonest and bigoted spirit, as evinced in the Christian's letter in your late issue, sticking out in many of their attempts to suppress stinging truths. For that and many other reasons I have discarded it all: and I assure you that my sympathies are with you. And as a slight token you will please accept the within $25.00 for the cause, and remember me as one ready to give twenty-five more if you need it. Do not be discouraged. The necessity of having THE TRUTH SEEKER lies in the fact that there are scoundrels and mail robbers. I am sorry for them, but willing to tolerate them so long as they do not take all the choice literature out, and rather than see your paper discontinued.

Yours most truly, G. C. FINK.

BUFFALO, N. Y.

Well, my dear Friend Bennett, they have put it to you at last; and now, you old sinner, you will have to fry and sizzle for your crowbar and blunderbuss warfare upon orthodoxy.

"A man is thought a knave or fool,
Or bigot, plotting crime,
Who, for the advancement of his kind,
Is wiser than his time.
For him the hemlock shall distil,
For him the axe be bared,
For him the gibbet shall be built,
For him the stake prepared.
Him shall the scorn and wrath of man
Pursue with deadly aim."

For a little pious notoriety, to gratify egotism and vanity, and a salary of four thousand dollars per year, Anthony Comstock gets down into the cess-pool of orthodoxy and does the dirt-throwing of that inquisitorial body, the Y. M. C. A.

I am dead set against real obscenity, or anything that will unnaturally excite the sexual passion in the young, but when religious bigots, narrow, contracted Christians, and brain-softened old fogies arrogate to themselves the authority to dictate to me what I shall or shall not read, then my manhood arises in all its vehemence to assert its inborn rights of life, LIBERTY, and the pursuit of happiness.

This damnable inquisitorial power is legalized by the laws of the United States, and I suppose there is no way but to submit for the time being, to the powers that be, until a change in the law or laws is brought about, either by a collapse of the whole thing by its own internal rottenness, or by an uprising of a free, independent and intelligent people.

In order to aid the cause I will pledge you five dollars, and whenever it is actually needed, draw on me for that amount.

SUNSHINE.

MOOREVILLE, TEXAS, Dec. 7, 1877.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I see in each issue of your paper, since your arrest by the tool of the Y. M. C. A., numerous letters of sympathy from nearly all of the Northern and Western States, but not one from Texas. Why this is thus the writer is unable to say. Is it because there are none here who sympathize with you in this your very trying situation? Most certainly not! for I know of a great many Liberals in this county who are in deep sympathy with you. There is no language that I am capable of using that will express the indignation I feel at the recent outrage perpetrated upon you by your foes, who are trying to strangle Freethought in this country. In this, however, I trust they may meet with an ignominious defeat. I might with propriety say the same concerning that inhuman and brutal outrage perpetrated upon the person of Dr. Russell, a few weeks ago, in the adjoining county of Bell, not fifty miles from this place. These outrages will, in my estimation, work out most gloriously in favor of Liberalism throughout the length and breadth of our country. Go on, then, thou bravest of the brave! "The harder the conflict, the more glorious the victory! What we obtain too cheap, we esteem too lightly; 'tis dearness only that gives everything its value," said the immortal Thomas Paine, in his "Crisis." Doubtless you will receive the grateful thanks of millions yet to come, for the labor you are performing now.

I am truly glad to see the friends of Freethought contributing their means liberally toward your relief. We are quite poor, but you may put one dollar down for me, one for my wife, and one for my oldest son—to be forwarded as soon as you need it. We like your paper; indeed, we could not do without it as long as we can pay for it, even though it were twice the price asked for it.

I am very truly yours, F. L. SCOTT.

EAST HIGHGATE, Dec. 1, 1877.

ESTEEMED FRIEND BENNETT:—It must afford you a rich consolation to receive so many warm sympathizing letters from all parts of the American continent, not excepting priest-ridden Canada, inasmuch as they proclaim great progress in a more correct education of the people and a more general adoption of your own liberal principles. We are strangers, but friends, and both seem to labor under the disadvantages incident to moderate means. But you shall have my last loose dollar before I will see you crushed, or the TRUTH SEEKER suppressed by the vice-regents of the fabulous God of superstition, as they send out their slimy Comstock; dirty jobbers from behind the strategic breast-works of law thrown up by the machinations of the churches, which practically exemplify the same despotism, differing only in degree, that has ever characterized them and stained their historic pathway with blood. The laws that now hold you in their cruel grasp were conceived in the rankling hatred and revengeful bosom of Christians, and enacted by the dupes of hypocrisy and popular ignorance. They are the weapons in the hands of modern Neros and apers of the murderous Constantine (their first great Christian Father), who are trying to suppress by tyrannical laws all truths contravening their fabulous theories, because they cannot produce at any of their sectarian armories logical guns of sufficient calibre to silence them. To-day, as ever in the past, they place their stultifying dogmatic superstitions square across every new path of progress, and woe to the philosopher, scientist, or discoverer who cannot relish the martyrdom of an untarnished reputation; yet dare to oppose truths to popular errors. But such is still their fate; and notwithstanding the world concedes us, as a nation, unparalleled religious liberty and freedom of thought, speech, and the press, it is all a sham and seeming. We are still a priest-ridden people, and liberal minds are ground beneath the tyrannizing Juggernaut of a popular religious despotism; nor will it be otherwise until the masses kick clear of the church harnesses and oblige the enormous horde of seventy thousand clerical paupers, who are now supported in hypocritical idleness upon the proceeds of honest toil, to return to the body politic a fair equivalent for what they consume. Did they contribute anything to the national welfare they would be more tolerable, but so long as they continue to blindly lead the blind as they do, just so long will the people be awed into subjection to priestly rule; and they will control just as long as they can gain the attention of their dupes on Constantine's Sunday, who listen to these blatherskites of orthodoxy as they slime over with their holy lies the fair fame and name of such towers of intelligence as Thomas Paine, Darwin, Huxley, Tyndall, and Ingersoll. To fortify themselves against such intellectual giants as these, whose scientific demonstrations threaten the annihilation of their fat salaries, these priestly and holy robbers of industry have secretly instigated laws that would disgrace the statutes of Algiers. These laws are the long, sharp teeth set in the jaws of the Comstock dogs that are barking on your track with the intention to hole you in the Tombs, and, if possible, to stop the thunderbolts you are hurling against their strongholds, shaking them to their foundations. Well, my esteemed friend, it will afford you but little help and me but little satisfaction to simply state I would take a part of your burden on my own shoulders if possible, and so with hosts of others—so here are two dollars. Continue the TRUTH SEEKER to my address six months more for one of them, and please accept the other as so much assistance in your coming trial. From one that loves you for your brave defense of eternal truths (and consequently my own dearest rights), your generous heart, and moral purity.

D. W. FILLEBROWN.

The Spiritualistic Papers.

FRIEND BENNETT:—In reading your able editorial of Dec. 22, I perceive that St. Anthony has roused you into first-class fighting trim. But my dear Brother, why strike your friends? Know you not that many of those who have sent you money are Spiritualists? I do long to see the time when Liberals, of all classes, will be liberal, and not because they do not believe alike about future life, or the questions of this, talk and write as if they were, or ought to be sectarian enemies. I do not write this to chide you for your expressed impatience with Spiritualists (although I must confess it so different from your usual urbane and philosophical manner), but to correct a mistake which, I think, you have fallen into. You say "even some of our Liberal papers, and especially those of the Spiritualistic persuasion, are troubled with the same fear and trembling, or else they are afflicted with an over amount of respectability. Although nearly six weeks have passed since we were arrested in a high-handed manner, they have not yet found courage enough to mention the fact in their columns, nor to denounce this outrage upon Freethought and the freedom of the press."

I am somewhat at a loss to see how you came to make so great a mistake as this.

The Banner of Light, in its issue Dec. 8, after approvingly printing an editorial from The Index concerning your arrest, says: "If the stake and the fagot, the Inquisition and the rack, are to be revived in this country of freedom; if the press is to be shackled—which God forbid—a bloodier revolution than the world has ever known will be the result. . . . Ecclesiastical tyranny in times past has deluged this fair earth with oceans of blood".

Is not that a denunciation of the outrage? Does that look as if the Banner trembled? Those words were published to the world the 8th of Dec., in your issue of the 22nd of Dec., (two weeks after), you say they had not the courage to mention the fact, nor to denounce the outrage. But the Banner of Light did both, and in strong, even warlike language. In its issue of Dec. 15, it quotes to commend Mr. Frothingham's brave words about injustice done you.

The Religio-Philosophical Journal devoted a half column in no uncertain sound, under the title "Freedom of the Press".

Every line rings with denunciation of the outrage upon your liberty; and, through yours, our own. It denounces Comstock as "Grand Inquisitor of the Protestant order of Jesuits" The article begins with expression of deep regret on account of your arrest, and closes with brotherly expression of sympathy for you personally in your hour of affliction. It also calls upon its subscribers to circulate petitions for the repeal of the infamous laws under which you were arrested. In its next number, it printed the petition to be cut out and circulated.

The Spiritual Offering is a monthly magazine, not adapted, therefore, to take prompt notice of current events, but its editors, Col. Fox and wife, would have noticed the matter had it not before their succeeding issue become widely known through dailies and weeklies. As soon as the Colonel heard of it, he wrote to me to prepare an article for the Spiritual Offering on your arrest. But news came before it could be ready for the January number, 1878, that you were likely to triumph, and so, instead, I wrote you.

I acknowledge, friend Bennett, that there are too many Spiritualists who have acquired the ancient habit of crying "peace, peace, when there is no peace," but this charge cannot be fairly brought against our leading Spiritualistic Journals. They ought not to be held responsible for the few Spiritualists of Christian proclivities, who never seem to tire in stroking the tiger of Christianity. Such do not understand the nature of the beast they are fondling.

Yours fraternally, and for justice,

W. F. JAMIESON.

172 and 174 Clark St., Chicago.

PLATFORM AND PRINCIPLES OF THE WORKINGMEN'S PARTY OF THE UNITED STATES.—The emancipation of the working classes must be achieved by the working classes themselves, independent of all political parties of the propertied class.

The struggle for the emancipation of the working classes means not a struggle for class privileges and monopolies, but for equal rights and the abolition of all class rule.

The economical subjection of the man of labor to the monopolizer of the means of labor, the sources of life, lies at the bottom of servitude in all its forms, of all social misery, mental degradation, and political dependence.

The economical emancipation of the working classes is therefore the great end, to which every political movement ought to be subordinate as a means.

All efforts aiming at that great end have hitherto failed from want of solidarity between the manifold divisions of labor in each country and from the absence of concerted action between the workingmen of all countries.

The emancipation of labor is neither a local nor a national, but a social problem, embracing all countries in which modern society exists, and depending for its solution upon the practical and theoretical concurrence and co-operation of the most advanced countries.

For these reasons, the Workingmen's Party of the United States has been founded.

It enters into proper relation and connection with the workingmen of other countries.

Whereas, political liberty without economical freedom is but an empty phrase; therefore, we will in the first place direct our efforts to the economical question. We repudiate entirely connection with all political parties of the propertied classes without regard to their name.

Matrimonial Department.

This department is for the convenience of patrons and friends recommended by them. It is expected all communications will be in good faith and with proper motives. Price for insertion ten cents per line.—ED.

A LIBERAL CHRISTIAN LADY, nearly an old maid, would correspond with a well-to-do gent, without incumbrance, with a view to a matrimonial or business partnership. She has a kind and considerate disposition, and business as well as domestic habits, and would do her share toward a living, and making a pleasant home.

Only those who have some means and a similar disposition need send photo, which will be returned in confidence, to J. C. M. this Office.

AN intelligent and refined lady, brunette, would correspond with a blonde gentleman, without incumbrance, with a view to a business or matrimonial partnership in some city on the Atlantic or Pacific Slope. The candidate must be honorable, healthy, and educated, possessed of enough means to make a pleasant abode, and to enable a couple to enjoy literature, art, and public entertainments, as well as the fireside. If tolerant in opinion, religion is not objectionable. References exchanged. Photos to be returned. A. B. C.

Care this Office.

A GENT of steady habits, under 30, would like a wife who is a Liberal Christian, sensible and affectionate, and willing to economize. Money no object or obstacle. Please state particulars. Photos returned if requested. Address

HENRY, Care TRUTH SEEKER.

A FREETHINKING INFIDEL would correspond with a young lady of liberal views, who knows how to make a happy home, and who is possessed of means and education.

Address T. J. H. TRUTH SEEKER Office.

SHE must be above the average height, of full figure and graceful as Juno, a little over two hundred pounds in weight, with gray eyes and light hair, of rare beauty, intelligence and virtue, and above all, a woman entirely free from superstition. None other need apply. Address S. P. HODGES, 36 West 33d st., New York

Useful Recipes.

ENGLISH PLUM PUDDING.—One pound raisins, when stemmed and stoned; one pound currants, when washed and dried: one pound suet, chopped to a powder; one-half pound citron, cut in thin slices; one-quarter pound candied orange, cut in thin slices; one-quarter pound candied lemon, cut in thin slices; one-half pound flour, when sifted; one-half pound bread crumbs; one-half pound brown sugar; one pint milk; one-half pint best brandy; six eggs well beaten; two nutmegs grated; one teaspoonful ground ginger; one teaspoonful ground cloves; one teaspoonful ground allspice; one-half teaspoonful ground mace; tie loosely in a well-floured bag, and boil steadily for six hours; this receipt was used by my mother for forty years without a failure.—MRS. M. A. S.

LIGHT SPONGY BREAD.—To make it, it is necessary to have good yeast. This is one way to make it: Take six good-sized potatoes; boil them in two quarts of water, with a small handful of hops; when done, take them out, sprinkle over them two tablespoonfuls of flour, mash them thoroughly, and mix with them enough hop-water to prevent lumping; return to the hop-water, add a half cupful of sugar, a tablespoonful of salt, and a tablespoonful of ginger; let the mixture boil two or three minutes; when nearly cool, add a small quantity of yeast; a yeast-cake such as can be bought in packages in any grocery store will do; let it stand in a warm place 24 hours to ferment; bottle tightly, and keep in a cool place; this will keep six weeks in Winter, not more than three in Summer. To make the bread, take six potatoes of medium size, boil them in about three pints of water; when done, take them out and put with them a tablespoonful each of sugar and lard; mash the potatoes, and pour over them the water in which they were boiled, still boiling hot; stir in flour enough to make a rather thick batter; this should be done at night, and the sponge left in a warm place: in the morning, sprinkle in a tablespoonful of salt, and flour enough to knead well; knead thoroughly; 20 minutes is not too much. If put in a very warm place this will rise in four or five hours, but must be allowed to become very light. When light, make into loaves and knead a few minutes; put in pans and let rise one hour; bake in a rather quick oven, from half to three-quarters of an hour according to the size of the loaves.

BREAKFAST-ROLLS WITHOUT SODA.—Two eggs, one cupful and a half of milk, a teaspoonful of salt, and flour enough to make a thick batter. These must be baked in an iron gem pan or they will be a complete failure. A quick oven is desirable.

CHAPPED OR ROUGH HANDS.—When making fires or sifting ashes have gloves on. Keep an old pair expressly for this purpose. When washing the hands use very little soap, and rinse it off well; dry thoroughly.—MOLLIE.

TO REMOVE FINGER-MARKS.—Sweet oil will remove finger-marks from varnished furniture, and kerosene from oiled furniture. Patient rubbing with chloroform will remove paint from black silk or any other goods, and will not hurt the most delicate color or fabric.—G. S. K.

PLANTS.—If the dirt is infested with insects and the plants dying, remove the plant from the pot, shake the dirt carefully from the roots, get good rich fresh earth and repot the plant.—MOLLIE.

TO FEED YOUNG BIRDS.—When canary birds are first hatched, and until they are able to leave the nest, they should have every day a hard-boiled egg chopped fine and mixed with a little cracker crumbs; about twice a week a piece of bakers' bread dipped in sweet milk, and twice a week a little stale sponge cake.—MOLLIE.

FOR CHILBLAINS.—Procure a chamois skin, (wash leather,) and make two pairs of socks, or legless stockings. The leather will cost you from 35 to 62 cents, according to quality, but must be free from holes. Have these socks made to fit snugly to the feet and come up to the ankle. Wear next to the feet, night and day, inside the stockings. Having two pairs will admit of their being changed and washed. Immediate relief will be experienced, and a full cure will be effected in from ten days to two weeks. If troubled again, use remedy again. It is sure.—G. F. T.

INFORMATION WANTED.

A receipt for quince jelly.

A method of sweetening pop-corn.

Should apples be dried quickly or slowly?

A receipt to prepare and bake smoked ham, such as we find on the hotel tables in the West, particularly in Chicago.

A remedy for the opium habit.

Will Mollie tell whether to use boiled or raw linseed oil in furniture polish?

Is the keeping of plants in one's sleeping-room injurious to health?

Arthur asks if there is any chemical that will remove every trace of his whiskers and moustache, so that he can take female parts without the necessity of shaving?

Belle M., Berlin, hopes "A Physician," or some one else will tell her the best regime and diet to impart strength without unnecessary flesh, while submitting to a systematic and severe course of lacing, such as prevails in Berlin, and which is absolutely necessary in order to obtain the necessary tenuity of figure required for presentation in good society there. It is useless to tell her to abandon the practice, and being compelled nolens volens to submit, hopes for a practical reply.

George Francis Train.

Mr. Train holds himself responsible for the utterances here made, and entirely exonerates the Editor from all responsibility therefor.

Train on Time Again!

LOOKING DOWN FROM THE HEIGHTS.

HE IS DELIGHTED WITH THAT OPEN LETTER TO COL. J. ISCARIOT'S PAL.—COMSTOCK MUST BE PRESERVED.—D. M. B. ABSORBING THE THUNDER OF NINETEEN CENTURIES IN THE TRUTH SEEKER.—G. F. T. SURRENDERS ALL HIS PSYCHOLOGIC POWER TO THE TRUTH SEEKER.

MADISON SQUARE, P. E. 48.

CITIZEN D. M. B.: Three cheers for D. M. B.! Nichols has just brought me here in the Park that open letter to the man who rode through Jerusalem on a jackass! while his servant, Pio Nono, has eight horses to take him through the Corso at Rome! And his humble follower sits on a throne X-mas Day in fine scarlet in a marble cathedral on Fifth Avenue made out of drops of blood and sweat wrung out of the starving poor of New York!

A BIG THING ON JERUSALEM!

By George! that letter of yours is immense. No wonder Comstock stood on his head! I see now why I have been writing these articles. It came through the air! It was Psychologic evolution. You are a trump! Yes; a whole hand of trumps! It beats my Beecher prayer! It discounts the Train Ligue! and not a word of obscenity!

Everybody should read that letter. 'Tis full of thunder and lightning! Why didn't I know you before? I had no idea you were so old and yet so young. You have more of Train in you than any other man I ever saw!

If I shook hands with any one, you would be the party! Why quote the old fossils of skepticism and Infidelity? One article like this Jesus Christ bombshell is a bigger thing than all the Infidels ever produced?

I TOLD YOU SO!

What did I say about the Liberal papers? You must paddle your own canoe! Rely on Bennett! Who cares for the Index? It was only put up to be knocked down!

Glad you put at the head of these articles that G. F. T. is responsible for G. F. T.! That allows me to talk as a Slavethinker. I take no stock in Freethinkers!

JUNIOR PARTNERS OF THE PROPAGANDA!

Dana! Ripley! Brook Farm! Emerson! Theodore Parker! Garrison! Phillips! Frothingham! Alger! Chapin! Owen! Elder Evans! Noyes of the Oneida Community! all commenced by skepticism! Infidelity! Atheism! and end as the chief props of the Church, that is, they all use Scriptural phrases. Abbot represents well this evolution in his five columns of unmitigated bosh.

Let him give a lecture before the Liberal Club on the God of the Bible and the God of the Universe, as you did, if he can!

He needs some of your leaven in his five-column lump of evangelical dough!

DON'T REPEAL THE BEECHER-COMSTOCK LAW.

I am with Abbot in not repealing the law, but for a different reason! We need that law. If we repeal it, who will arrest the Bible Society? Congress is in a trap! Christianity is caught! So to repeal the act is to let out all the rats! Nothing could be more fatal. By executing that law under Comstock and locking us all up in the Tombs they stamp the Bible as an Obscene publication by the act of the court! The Index don't see it in this light, nor does THE TRUTH SEEKER. Your magnificent editorials this week are loaded with points, but I am decidedly opposed to allowing the Y. M. C. A. and the Bible Society to escape from the Obscene law. Did they not stamp the Bible as Obscene in my case by refusing me a trial?

APOLOGY TO COMSTOCK!

That's right! Never dig up a fellow's ancestors! Although clear of the law of libel, why abuse a man who is doing so much to smash Christianity and the Church as Comstock? You have done the handsome thing in saying you do not approve of being personal! I love Comstock for his mother! Cleopatra never had such an Anthony! Why not call him "Tony" as an endearing epithet? Why don't Comstock arrest the Poet-Lawyer-Painter-Infidel-Sculptor, Storey, before he goes abroad, for writing se lines in his Anthony-Cleopatra poem:

"Come as you used to come
Before we were women and men,
When the tiger passions were in us.
And love as you loved me then"?

GEORGE ELIOT'S FEAR OF COMSTOCK.

Have I read Daniel Deronda? Yes; just finished it a year after publication! What do I think of it? 'Tis the most unnatural book ever written. Everybody making love on stilts! All talk through speaking-trumpets! The characters move like Madame Toussand's wax figures! Who ever saw such men and women in real life? In such an ocean of criticism, why did not some writer allude to this high-life style? This making love on a mental flying trapeze is simply ridiculous! Nobody can kiss each other naturally on horseback!

George Eliot has undoubted ability, but is fearfully overrated! Lewes writes up his wife and his wife writes up Lewes! 'Tis a $60,000 pool of mutual admiration advertising, organized on the you-puff-me-and-I-puff-you-Atlantic-Monthly system!

I had read so much about the book I ran through it and was disgusted. It opens with a cannon and ends with a popgun! always "On the Heights" and yet never higher than the valley!

A DANCE ON STILTS!

THE TRUTH SEELER should tap this George Eliot balloon before it petrifies into history! With all her assumed learning I could not find an epigrammatic thought, a forcible aphorism, or a single sentence of wisdom big enough to utilize in THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Such a stilted performance was never before in print. Gwendolen waltzes on stilts with Deronda! Grandcourt polkas on stilts with Gwendolen! Mordecai talks on stilts with everybody! Sir Hugo Mallinger lives on stilts with his wife! How absurd for Deronda to live to manhood without stopping to ask if he was legitimate? Deronda makes love on stilts to Mirah, only popping tke question the moment he discovers her father has stolen his diamond ring! Hans paints Bernice's and Rex Gascoigne's portraits on stilts! Old Lady Davilow weeps on stilts! 'Tis a high-flown party all round!

THE JEW FIRST AND THEN THE GENTILE!

The Eliots are on the make. Bulwer wrote for fame! Eliot writes for money. Did she make love to Lewes as Gwendolen did to Deronda? Who but J. G. Bennett could fight a duel out of a cab? Old Deronda, the grandfather, went to the synagogue on stilts! Joseph Keronymos tatked Judaism on stilts! Klesmer taught music and married the Arrowsmith heiress on stilts! There are no such people in real life! George Eliot has rigged the literary market to catch the Jews. Perhaps she intends to continue Deronda in Judea! Who ever saw such a maternal ancestor as the Princess, Daniel's unnatural mother?

Imagine a poor English girl losing a thousand dollars at the gambling table because Deronda was looking at her!

Imagine a youth living with Christians all his life, educated in Christian colleges, delighted to find out that he was a Jew.

G. F. T.

GEO. FRANCIS TRAIN'S FIRST EPISTLE TO THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS.—COMSTOCK THE AGENT OF THE JESUITS.—THE ROMAN CATHOLIC CONSPIRACY TO DESTROY PROTESTANTISM.—CONGRESS THE TOOL OF THE VATICAN THROUGH THE MODERN IGNATIUS LOYOLA.—MR. TRAIN DISCOVERS THE PLOT THROUGH PSYCHOLOGY.

CITIZEN D. M. B.:

To His Excellency, IMMANUEL J. CHRIST. otherwise called Prince of Peace, Sun of Righteousness. Lion of the Tribe of Judah. Wonderful, Counsellor, The Messiah, The Redeemer, The Savior, The Bridegroom, The Lamb of God, Captain of our Salvation, Son of God, Son of Man, etc., etc.

Jesus Christ! what a letter! The more I read it the more I am satisfied that it should be read in the public schools!

I intend to read all you have ever written. They say you are from Paris, Illinois. Don't you remember my lectures there many years ago, when I sat the town on fire? You must see my illustrated Bible expressly prepared for the Sunday-school for Christ's sake! You compliment me on my memory. Let me in return Macaulyeize a few texts which cost a thousand dollars to put on steel plates in order to "go unto all the world and preach the Gospel unto every creature."

Look out for my illustrated Bible in your next! You will see how diligently I have "searched the Scriptures." As these beautiful extracts from God's Holy Obscenity are printed by the American Bible Society in two hundred and fourteen languages, Comstock can have no objection to their appearing verbatim et literatim et punctuatim in THE TRUTH SEEKER. And yet Congress has deliberately, in the interest of the Roman Propaganda, passed an act to crush Protestantism in stamping the Bible as Obscene (in my arrest and refusal of all trial for quoting three columns of this Holy Book)!

G. F. T.

From the Advocate.

George Francis Train as a Prophet.

Probably there is no man living who seems to have the gift of prophecy more strongly developed than George Francis Train. In the year 1872, nearly two years before the panic, in a speech made, standing upon the steps of the Custom House in Wall street, he pointed to the banking houses of Jay Cook & Co., of Henry Clews & Co., and Duncan, Sherman & Co., and prophesied that in less than two years from that time these houses would fail. He also at that time foretold the death of Horace Greely, the great fires of Chicago and Boston, and the loss of the steamer Atlantic, all of which predictions have been singularly fulfilled. At the time they were made many persons thought him a wild fanatic, and only laughed at his supposed folly. Four years ago he said that the policy of specie resumption would be pursued, that the value of property would shrink to such an extent that all above the first mortgages would be wiped out, and a large majority of our business men would be forced into bankruptcy; and that finally stay laws would be passed to prevent the money lenders from absorbing all the property of the country. The bankruptcies have already taken place, most the mortgages are wiped out, and some of the Western States are now passing stay laws.

In a speech delivered in the Opera House at Newark, last April, he told the audience that in less than six months there would be a run on the savings banks of that city. This prediction has just been fulfilled by a run on all the savings banks in Newark. In scores of other instances, when he has foretold the death of certain parties with whom he was acquainted, a singular fatality seems to confirm his predictions. In Rochester, last Spring, he foretold the terrible riot that took place in Pittsburgh.

He now prophesies that if the resumption act is not repealed that it will cause a repudiation not only of the national debt, but of all State, city county and town debts, produce the failure of all banks, savings banks, life and fire insurance and trust companies, the cancelation of all mortgages on real estate, the wiping out of all private debts, the plundering of every bank and the hanging of every banker in Wall street by the internationals, social democrats and working men. All the daily newspapers established in the city will be burned, and their editors taken into Tompkins Square and shot, and that Hayes, Sherman and every member of Congress who have voted for the specie resumption act will have to fleethe country or lose their lives. After this a reorganization of society and a rebuilding of the waste places, through the aid of greenbacks, will take place.

The facts, figures and arguments presented on this currency question forces the dread upon us that these frightful disasters, that Mr. Train predicts, may come true. In fact, if the specie resumption act is enforced it is difficult to see how any other result can be reached.

A prompt action by Congress in repealing the resumption act would put a stop to all this at once. The adoption of Dr. Miller's financial scheme would change this flood tide of evil to an ocean of prosperity.

Will Congress, the press, and the Wall street syndicate, National Banks, be wise in time?

Let all true citizens pray that they may.

should be in the hands of those suffering from this LIFE-WASTING DISEASE. It is an external application, and has thoroughly and permanently cured over one thousand cases, and some of them were in a terribly shattered condition; had been in the insane asylums, many had falling-sickness-fits; others on the verge of consumption, while others again had become foolish and hardly able to take care of themselves. For further information, address, with stamp, Vineland, N. J., where DR. FELLOWS is permanently located, and obtain his private circular, with cures sworn to, which is unimpeachable testimony to the doctor's skill and reliability as a physician in treating this prevalent and most dangerous of all diseases, SPERMATORRHŒA. 1tf

☞ TERMS WITHIN THE REACH OF ALL. ☜

FOR MASTERLY CRITICISM READ EDGAR FAWCETT'S articles in THE EVOLUTION.

READER, that little cottage contains one of the choicest libraries in the country. I buy my books of J. FRANCIS RUGGLES, Bibliopole, Bronson, Mich. Rare O. P. works a specialty. Lists for stamp. 3m1

THE EVOLUTION. No. 16.

CONTENTS.

1. MERRIE ST. NICHOLAS. By Prof. A. Wilder.
2. THE BATTLE OF THE OATS.
3. HUMAN LIFE, ITS PHYSICAL SOLUTION. By T. P. Wilson, M.D.
4. MEDICAL ASSISTANCE, A SOCIAL FUNCTION. By Henry Edger.
5. THE LABORER IN POLITICS. By Prof. A. R. Grote.
6. CURRENTE CALAMO PAPERS. No. 2. By Edgar Fawcett.
7. COL. WARING AND HIS BOOKS.
8. TRAPS BAITED WITH ORPHANS.
9. JOSEPH COOK'S LECTURES. By Rev. George W. Cook.
10. COOK ON GOD AND EVOLUTION. By J. D. Bell.

Bookbuyers and those who wish to subscribe to periodicals should see The Evolution. No. 16.

Ask Newsdealers for it, or send 15 cents to The Evolution, 34 Dey street, New York.

NEW SUBSCRIBERS TO

THE EVOLUTION, at $1,50 per year in advance, have their choice of 100 excellent books, each published at $1,50. One fine volume containing the following works by Charles Dickens, each entire, and handsomely bound, viz.: Child's History of England, Edwin Drood, Master Humphrey's Clock, The Mudfrog Association, A Holiday Romance, and Geo. Silverman's Explanation, will be sent to every new subscriber who sends us $1,50, and The Evolution will be sent one year free. (If the book is sent by mail, 15 cents must be sent for postage). Address, ASA K. BUTTS, 34 Dey Street, New York.

The Priest in Absolution,

The first Number of the "HOLY CROSS SERIES," is from the abridged London edition of the same work, which created so much excitement in England. The original volume was issued by the "High Church" authorities as a guide to the clergy in the confessional, and was designed to be introduced into the English Church. Price 25 cents.

D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth St., New York.

☞ The other twenty-five numbers of the "Holy Cross Series" are being brought out as rapidly as possible.

The Career of Religious Ideas;

THEIR ULTIMATE,

The Religion of Science.

BY HUDSON TUTTLE.

An able examination of the Religions of the World—the subjects treated as follows: Chap. I.—Introductory; Chap. II.—What is Religion? Chap. III.—Fetishism; Chap. IV.—Polytheism; Chap. V.—Monotheism; Chap. VI.—Value of Ancient Bibles; Chap. VII.—Man's Moral Progress Dependent upon his Intellectual Growth; Chap. VIII.—Theological Problems; Chap. IX.—Man's Fall; Chap. X.—Free Will, Necessity, Responsibility; Chap. XI.—Duties and Obligations of Man to God; Chap. XII.—The Ultimate of Religious Ideas.

Price, in paper, 50 cents; in cloth, 75 cents. Postage prepaid. D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth St. N. Y.

COOKE UPON COOK.—Rev. GEORGE vs. REV. JOSEPH. An Exhaustive Review of the Sensation Lectures. See THE EVOLUTION. No. 16.

ANOTHER OF J. D. BELL'S GREAT Reviews.—Cook on God and Evolution in THE EVOLUTION, No. 16.

ATTENTION, LADIES!

THE BEST THING OUT.

An Excellent, non-Rusting, Durable Galvanized Iron Plater,

with directions for using the same, will be sent, post-paid, on receipt of $1.25, with order and address. E. D. BLAKEMAN,
Circleville, O.

The Evolution One Year Free

To any one ordering of me $5,00 worth of the works of A. B. Alcott, Louisa M. Alcott, Alger, Antoninus, Bagshot, Bain, Bartol, Bastian, C. T. Brooks, Buckle, Carpenter, W. E. Channing, E. D. Cheney, Clodd, Coulanges, Dall, Darwin, Emerson, Epictetus, Fish, Goethe, Gregg, Gibbon, Higginson, Howells, Huxley, International Scientific Series, S. Johnson, Lecky, Lessing, Lewes, Lubbock, Martineau, Mivart, Parton, Reade, Herbert Spencer, Tyndall, Weiss, and others. For further particulars, send 15 cents to THE EVOLUTION, 34 Dey street, New York.

BOOK BUYERS,

And all who wish to subscribe to periodicals should send 15 cents for No. 16 of The Evolution. Address THE EVOLUTION, 34 Dey Street, N. Y.

The Evolution for 1878 free

To any one sending me an order for $5 worth or more of any leading magazines (See Appleton's advertisement), or $10 worth of books.

The Evolution free two years to any one sending me an order for $10 worth or more of magazines, or $15 worth of books. All orders must be accompanied with the cash by registered letter, P. O. order, or draft on New York.

Send 15 cents for Evolution No. 16 and further particulars. Address, ASA K. BUTTS,
34 Dey Street, N. Y.

THE TRUTH SEEKER COLLECTION

OF

FORMS, HYMNS, AND RECITATIONS.

Forms for organizing Societies, Forms for Constitutions and By-laws, for Funeral Services, Marriage Services, Naming of Infants, Obituary Notices, Epitaphs, Wills, etc. Also, nearly 500 Liberal and Spiritualistic Hymns, original and selected; for Public Meetings, Funerals, Social Gatherings, etc., etc. The whole supplimented by a fine selection of Recitations, comprising many of the finest poetical gems in the language. Nearly 600 pages, at the extremely low price of 75 cents in cloth. The price is made low, so that every family can have a copy. Let none fail to have it. D. M. BENNETT.
141 Eighth St., New York.

Freethought Lectures.

BY W. S. BELL.

1.—My Reasons for Abandoning Christianity for Freethought.
2.—The Resurrection of Jesus a Myth.
3.—The Four Gospels Unhistorical.
4.—The Bible Story of Creation Reviewed.
5.—The Gods and their Claims.
6.—The Erroneous Teachings of Jesus.
7.—The Doctrine of Special Providence Examined.
8.—Moodyism and Common Sense.
9.—The Method of Science Contrasted with the Theological and Metaphysical Methods.
10.—The Conflict between Christianity and Civilization.
11.—The Theory of Evolution Stated.
12.—Darwinism Defined.
13.—The Genesis of Religion.
14.—Thomas Paine the Champion of Freethought.
15.—Copernicus, Bruno, and Galileo—three Morning Stars of Modern Science.
16.—Robert Burns, Scotland's Freethinking Bard.
17.—The Injustice of Maintaining Bible Readings in Common Schools.
18.—The Proposed Christian Amendment of the Constitution.
19.—The Responsibility of Society for its Criminals.
20.—Select Readings—An Evenings Entertainment.

For terms, etc., address
W. S. BELL, New Bedford, Mass.

Just Issued!
ANALYSIS OF RELIGIOUS BELIEF

BY VISCOUNT AMBERLEY.

Son of Lord John Russell, late Premier of England. A work of profound research, and just the thing for enquiring, thinking people. The lengthy and able article on

"JESUS CHRIST"

is worth four times the price of the work.

Republished, complete in one volume, from the London edition (2 vols., 8vo.), and at one-fifth the price. Cloth, $3 00; Leather, $4 00; Morocco, gilt edges, $4 50. Sent by mail at these prices.

D. M. BENNETT, Publisher,
141 Eighth st., New York.

Heathens of the Heath;

A ROMANCE, BY WM. McDONNELL,

AUTHOR OF "EXETER HALL," ETC.

This work is rich in romantic and pathetic incidents, and exhibits with an overwhelming array of facts the atrocities committed by the Church. It shows that the purest morality exists without the Bible, and that many of the heathen philosophers were lovers of virtue. The folly of Christian ministers is fully portrayed. Hypocrisy and bigotry are clearly exposed, and the road to virtue and true happiness plainly marked out. A most pleasing romance is woven into the work, in which much opportunity is afforded the author for fine descriptions and beautiful sentiments which he so well knows how to give utterance to. The characters in the tale are invested with much interest; the hero and heroine gain the love of every reader. "On the whole, it is the work of a master hand—a work of unaffected beauty and the deepest interest." "One of the most valuable features of the work is, its positions are all proven. . . Every thinking, enquiring mind should peruse it." 500 pp., 12mo. Price, in paper, $1.00; cloth, $1.50.

THE MAGNETIC TREATMENT.

Send 25 cents to DR. ANDREW STONE, Troy, N. Y., and obtain a large, highly-illustrated book on the system of Vitalizing Treatment. 1y36

YES YES WE WANT an agent in every town. Easy work at home. Write now and we will start you. $8 a day sure to all. SIMPSON & SMITH, 60 Cortlandt St., N. Y. 3t

RIFLES, SHOT-GUNS, REVOLVERS, sent C. O. D. for examination, all charges paid. No risk; no humbug. Write for catalogue. Address GREAT WESTERN GUN WORKS, Pittsburgh, Pa. 6mo27

$12 A DAY at home. Agents wanted. Outfit and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta Maine. 1y50

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. H. HALLELT & CO., Portland, Maine. 1y50

HISTORY OF THE CONFLICT BETWEEN RELIGION AND SCIENCE. Truly one of the most valuable works that have appeare within the last ten years. By PROF. DRAPER. Price, $1.75.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine. 11

PRO AND CON OF SUPERNATURAL RELIGION; or an answer to the question, Have we a Supernaturally-Revealed, Divinely-Inspired and Miraculously-Attested Religion in the World? By E. E. GUILD, ex-Universalist clergyman. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

Hell and Damnation

The Theories of Annihilation, Purgatory, and Universalism Disproved, and the Orthodox Doctrine Demonstrated,

BY THE

REV. G. H. HUMPHREY,

Formerly pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Birmingham, Pittsburg, Pa., and now pastor of the Thirteenth Street Welsh Presbyterian Church, New York.

It presents the beautiful doctrine of an endless hell in an able and attractive manner. Price 50 cents. Sent by mail by

D. M. BENNETT.

FULL DESCRIPTION OF OTHER LIBERAL WORKS FROM TIME TO TIME.

BOOKS FOR THINKERS,

PUBLISHED BY

CHARLES P. SOMERBY, No. 139 Eighth Street, New York,

(A few doors East of Broadway.)

The Martyrdom of Man.

By WINWOOD READE.

12mo, Extra Cloth, 543 pp. Postpaid, $3.

CONTENTS:

Under the head of "War," we have: Egypt, The Water Harvest, The Sources of the Nile, Philosophy of Leisure, Agricultural Monogamy, Inequality of Men, Famine the Mother of Astronomy, Cruelty the Nurse of Civilization, Trial of the Dead, the Painted Tomb, Children of the Desert, The Horse of War, The Terrible Sahara, Pharaoh Triumphant, Egyptian Country House, The Luxury Question, Theology Stops the Way, Empire of Ethiopia, The India Trade, The Persian Shepherds, The King's Harem, Origin of Greek Genius, Their Religion, The City of the Violet Crown, The University of Egypt, Seraglio Intrigue, Retreat of the Ten Thousand, Tyranny of Athens, Alexander at Babylon, Two Faces Under One Hat, A Greek Voltaire, The Purple Trade, Discovery of the Atlantic, Introduction of the "A, B, C," The Colonies of Carthage, The Gardens of the Hesperides, Home Rule of Rome, The House of Baal, Silver Spain, The Poor Hated Old Man, Roman Baden Baden, Cato's Little Farm, A Dissolute Prig, Africa's Place in History, Civilizing War.

Under the head of "Religion": Ghost Worship, Divine Hybrids, Idolatry and Dollatry, Who Made God? Nature in the Nude, The Sheik Abraham, Moses in Exile, The Delphi of the Hebrews, Pope Samuel, A God-intoxicated Man, A Pious Brigand, By the Waters of Babylon, Character of Jehovah, Character Improves, Origin of the Devil, A Monopolized Deity, Bright Side of the Character of Jesus, Dark Side, The Miracle Doctor, The Ghetto, Rome Sleeping, Heavenly Illusions, Episcopal Saliva, The Wonderful Well, The Truce of God, Achievements of Mahomet, Negro States, The African Hut, Dance Ordeal, School, Philosophy of Salt, Bagdad of the West, Negroes in Mecca, The Black Prophet, Turks in Africa.

Under the consideration of "Liberty," he shows us: The Ancient Germans, The Castle an Academy, The Serfs, The Monks, The Crusades, Venice, Arab Spain, The Hill of Tears, Orthodox Geography, India, Prester John, Lisbon Rejoices, Majestic Crime, Slavery in London, The Methodists, Giants and Pigmies, Thomas Paine, Cotton, Neck and Neck, W. L. Garrison, Rebellion of the North, The Lost Cause, Future of Africa, Future of the Earth, Origin of Man, Tailed Minds.

In the consideration of "Intellect" he introduces: The Children of the Sun, Origin of Life, History of the Cell, Dawn of Reason, Origin of Love, The Ghost Religion, Origin of Priests, Invention of Hell, Musical Conversation, The Why, The Utility of the Affections, Breeding Laws, Death of Sin, Origin of Chastity, Rome and China, The Buddhists, The Age of the Rosary, War in the Future, The Expedient of Religion, Fallacies of the Commune, American Prosperity, Inventions of the Future, Theory of the Soul, Duties of a Creator, The Theory Exploded, Should the Truth be Told? Christianity Exposed, The Catastrophes of Progress, Moral Value of Hell-Fire, True Sources of Morality, Spurious Virtues of Theology, The True Religion, The Last Sacrifice."

EXTRACT:

The good in this world predominates over the bad; the good is ever increasing, the bad is ever diminishing. But, if God is Love, why is there any bad at all? Is the world like a novel, in which the villains are put in to make it more dramatic, and in which virtue only triumphs in the third volume? It is certain that the feelings of the created have in no way been considered. If, indeed, there were a judgment-day, it would be for man to appear at the bar, not as a criminal, but as an accuser. What has he done that he should be subjected to a life of torture and temptation? God might have made us all happy, and he has made us miserable. Is that benevolence? God might have made us all pure, and he has made us all sinful. Is that the perfection of morality? If I believed in this man-created God, in this divine Nebuchadnezzar, I would say, You can make me live in your world, O Creator, but you cannot make me admire it; you can load me with chains, but you cannot make me flatter you; you can send me to hell-fire, but you cannot obtain my esteem. And if you condemn me, you condemn yourself. If I have committed sins, you invented them, which is worse. If the watch you have made does not go well, whose fault is that? Is it rational to damn the wheels and the springs?

PRESS NOTICES:

It is really a remarkable book, in which universal history is "boiled down" with surprising skill. . . The boldest, and, so far as historical argument goes, one of the ablest, assaults ever made upon Christianity.—[Literary World.

His history has a continuity, a rush, a carrying power, which remind us strikingly of Gibbon.—[New Haven Palladium.

The sketch of early Egyptian history, in the first chapter, is a masterpiece of historical writing. He has a style that reminds us of Macaulay.—[Penn Monthly.

You turn over his pages with a fascination similar to that experienced in reading Washington Irving.—[Inter-Ocean.

To readers who are attracted by the Darwinian literature, this book, with its quaint declaration that "Life is bottled sunshine," may also be recommended.—[Pittsburgh Eve. Chronicle.

Whoever would be jostled into attention, and led into unwonted channels of thought, will find this volume full of interest and often of delight. —[New Covenant.

Send 10 cents for Prometheus containing 28 pp. choice reading matter and a Full List of Liberal Publications; or for List only, Free.

CHARLES P. SOMERBY,

PUBLISHER, BOOKSELLER, IMPORTER AND PRINTER,

139 EIGHTH ST., Bet. Broadway and Fourth Ave., NEW YORK.

READ OUR ADVERTISEMENTS EVERY WEEK, AS FREQUENT CHANGES WILL BE MADE.

LIST OF PHOTOGRAPHS

For Sale at The Truth Seeker Office.

Thomas Paine.	F. E. Abbot.
Paine's Bust.	Frothingham.
Paine's Monument.	Wendell Phillips.
Voltaire.	Emerson.
Rousseau.	Garrison.
Humboldt.	Henry Bergh.
Goethe.	Peter Cooper.
Schiller.	D. R. Burt.
Aug. Comte.	S. P. Andrews.
Heine.	Walt Whitman.
Alex. Pope.	Froude.
John Milton.	Max Muller.
Goldsmith.	Warren Chase.
Shelley.	Jas. Parton.
Byron.	Wm. Denton.
Burns.	Dr. Slade.
Washington.	A. J. Davis.
Franklin.	Foster.
Jefferson.	J. M. Peebles.
John Adams.	Frances Wright.
J. Q. Adams.	E. V. Wilson.
Madison.	G. L. Henderson.
Jackson.	Prof. Fiske.
Lincoln.	Fred Douglas.
Lincoln's Monument.	N. P. Banks.
Gerrit Smith.	P. V. Nasby.
Henry C. Wright.	Beecher.
J. S. Mill.	Tilton.
Sumner.	Moulton.
Edgar A. Poe.	G. W. Curtis.
Greeley.	Th. Nast.
Castellar.	J. G. Bennett.
Tennyson.	Chas. A. Dana.
Darwin	Phoebe Carey.
Tyndall.	Alice Carey.
H. Spencer.	Elizabeth C. Stanton.
Huxley.	Susan B. Anthony.
Proctor.	Lucy Stone.
Draper.	Julia Ward Howe.
Bradlaugh.	Chas. Cheney.
Holyoake.	Paulina Davis.
Ingersoll.	Mary F. Davis.
Underwood.	Emma H. Britten.
Mendum.	Lizzie Fowler.
Seaver.	Mrs. Slenker.
L. Colby.	Susan H. Wixon.
Dr. Hare.	D. M. Bennett.
Judge J. W. Edwards.	W. S. Bell.
Lizzie Doten.	J. C. Bundy.
Mrs. J. Conant.	S. S. Jones.
Dr. Mary E. Walker (full figure).	Asa K. Butts.
	W. F. Jamieson.

and hundreds of others, including generals, statesmen, poets, actors, actresses, etc. at 15 cents each singly, or eight for one dollar.

Neat Albums, by mail, to hold 39 photos., 80 cts., to hold 50, $1.

D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St, New York.

THE WORLD'S

SAGES, INFIDELS & THINKERS:

BEING

Biographical Sketches

OF

278 DIFFERENT CHARACTERS

BEGINNING WITH MENU.

3000 before Christ, and coming down to the present time. Containing 1050 pages.

BY D. M. BENNETT,

Editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Sent by Mail at the following low prices:

CLOTH, good binding, - - -	$3.00
ARABESQUE, colored leather, red burnished edges, - - -	4.00
MOROCCO, gilt edges, worked head-band, - - - - - -	4.50

Address.

D M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth street, N. Y.

JUST ISSUED.

BEYOND THE VEIL.

A very neat and entertaining volume, giving beautiful descriptions of life, occupations, etc., in the Spirit World. Dictated by the spirit of Percy B. Randolph, through the mediumship of Mrs. Francis H. McDougal and Mrs. Luna Hutchinson of California. With a steel-plate engraving of Dr. Randolph.

Price $1.50, post-paid by mail.

D. M. BENNETT
141 Eighth St., N. Y.

Christianity and Infidelity

A JOINT DISCUSSION BETWEEN

REV. G. H. HUMPHREY, Presb't'n. Clergyman,

OF NEW YORK, AND

D. M. BENNETT, Editor of The Truth Seeker.

It was conducted in the columns of The Truth Seeker, a letter alternately from each contestant appearing each week, beginning April 7, 1877, and closing Sept. 29, 1877, thus continuing just six months, giving thirteen letters from Humphrey and thirteen replies by Bennett.

The subjects discussed were as follows:

PART I.—The relative services of Christianity and Infidelity to American Liberty.

PART II.—The relative services of Christianity and Infidelity to Learning and Science.

PART III.—Is there a stronger probability that the Bible is divine than that Infidelity is true?

The discussion has excited a large share of interest, both among believers and unbelievers: and as both sides are fairly presented, it is suited to readers of all shades of opinion.

The New York Advocate, a paper having a very extensive circulation, in speaking of the volume, says, "Perhaps a more able and exhaustive presentation of both sides of the great questions which have agitated the civilized world for centuries has never been made. At any rate, in this volume will be found a perfect magazine or storehouse of arguments, pro and con, which every intelligent man and woman should peruse with candor and with an earnest desire to arrive at sound conclusions on themes of the highest importance to all mankind. . . Light is what we need. Let the controversies proceed. Let the blows descend upon the error-dispelling anvil. Let the sparks fly in all directions from the heated steel. The truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, is what the people demand on all the great questions of the day, whether of Finance, Science, Politics, or Religion, and discussion will elicit it." Let every person who feels the slightest interest in theological questions, whether on one side or the other, read the Humphrey-Bennett Discussion.

A thick 12mo volume of 550 pages, well bound sent, post-paid, to any address, for the low price of one dollar.

Address D. M. BENNETT, Publisher

Works of Thomas Paine.

COMMON SENSE. His first and most important political work. Clear type. Paper, 15 cts.

THE CRISIS. Containing Nos. I. to XVI., inclusive. Written in the "times that tried men's souls" during the American Revolution. 12mo. Full, clear type. Paper, 50 cents; cloth 80 cts.

THE RIGHTS OF MAN. Written in defense of his fellow man. A work almost without a peer in the world. On full, bold type. 12mo. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

THE AGE OF REASON. On large, clear type. Paper, 25 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

THE AGE OF REASON AND AN EXAMINATION OF THE PROPHECIES. Full, bold type. 12mo. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

PAINE'S POLITICAL WORKS. Complete in one volume, on full, bold type. Containing "Common Sense," "The Crisis" (sixteen numbers), and "The Rights of Man," with a fine steel portrait. Cloth, $1.50.

PAINE'S THEOLOGICAL WORKS. Complete. 12mo. Composed of the "Age of Reason," "Examination of the Prophecies," "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," "Letter to Mr. Erskine," "Letter to Camille Jordan," "An Essay on Dreams," "Of the Religion of Deism," etc., etc., with a life and fine steel portrait of Paine. Cloth, $1.50.

THOMAS PAINE'S GREAT WORKS. Complete. New edition. The cheapest and best ever sold. Containing a Life of Paine, his POLITICAL WRITINGS—"Common Sense," "The Crisis," "Rights of Man"—his THEOLOGICAL WRITINGS—"Age of Reason," "Examination of the Prophecies," "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," "Letter to Mr. Erskine," "An Essay on Dreams," "Letter to Camile Jordan," "Of the Religion of Deism"—all in one large volume, crown-octavo, of THE TRUTH SEEKER LIBRARY, with a fine steel portrait of Paine. Cloth, $3.00; colored leather, red burnished edges, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

LIFE OF THOMAS PAINE. By Calvin Blanchard. 12mo. Large, clear type, with a fine steel portrait of Paine. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents. Published by

D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth st., New York.

ASTROLOGY.

PROF. LISTER, Astrologer, 505 W. 23d st., New York. 44 years' practice, 27 in Boston. Can be consulted by letter. Send for Circular. Address all letters 505 West 23d st., New York City.

THE OUTCAST.

By WINWOOD READE author of "Martyrdom of Man."

This is his last work. Mr. Reade was unquestionably one of the ablest writers of the present century. His "Martyrdom of Man" attracted extraordinary attention in Europe and in this country, for its ability, brilliancy and boldness. This last work is regarded with equal favor. The English edition was published at two dollars. We give it entire for

THIRTY CENTS IN PAPER.

Eating for Strength.

A NEW HEALTH COOKERY BOOK.

BY M. L. HOLBROOK, M.D.

Which should be in the hands of every person who would eat to retain and regain health, strength and beauty. It contains, besides the science of eating and one hundred answers to questions which most people are anxious to know, nearly one hundred pages devoted to the best healthful recipes for foods and drinks, how to feed one's self, feeble babes and delicate children so as to get the best bodily development. Mothers who do not nurse their children will find full directions for feeding them, and so will mothers who have delicate children, and invalids who wish to know the best foods.

Price, $1, postage free.

Six Lectures on Astronomy.

By PROF. RICHARD A. PROCTOR.

Five of them were delivered at Steinway Hall this city, in the winter of 1875-6, and were reported phonographically expressly for THE TRUTH SEEKER by Miss M. S. Gontcharoff. This is the most popular course of Lectures ever delivered by Professor Proctor, and ought to be in the possession of every person.

The titles of the Lectures are:

I. Growth of Worlds.
II. Life and Death of Worlds.
III. Other Worlds than Ours.
IV. Other Suns than Ours.
V. The Great Mysteries of the Universe.
VI. Religion and Astronomy.

ALL FOR TWENTY CENTS.

SCIENCE OF THE BIBLE.

An Analysis of the Hebrew Mythology, wherein it is shown that the Holy Scriptures treat of Natural Phenomena, only. Illustrated. By MILTON WOOLLEY, M.D. 613 pp, 8 vo. Price $4.60. Address D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth St., N. Y.

The Career of Jesus Christ,

An Exposition of the true meaning of this character as described in the New Testament Treated in the same manner and by the same author as above. A pamphlet, at 30 cents. Sold

Gems of Thought.

TRUE glory takes root, and even spreads; all false pretenses, like flowers, fall to the ground; nor can any counterfeit last long.—Cicero.

GOOD-BREEDING is the art of showing men, by external signs, the internal regard we have for them. It arises from good sense, improved by conversing with good company.—Cato.

HAVE some aim in life aside from merely existing and obtaining the means to do so. It is a noble thing to live and work for some great good, and to feel that you are of use to the world, and not a mere nonentity and drone in the hive.—Elmina D. Slenker.

RISING glory occasions the greatest envy, as kindling fires the greatest smoke. Envy is the reverse of charity; and as that is the supreme source of pleasure, so this is of pain. Envy has under its banner, hatred, calumny, treachery, with the meagerness of famine, the venom of pestilence, and the rage of war.—Spenser.

GOOD-NATURE is that benevolent and amiable temper of mind which disposes us to feel the misfortunes and enjoy the happiness of others, and, consequently, pushes us on to promote the latter and prevent the former: and that without any abstract contemplation on the beauty of virtue, and without the allurements or terrors of religion.—Fielding.

WOOD burns because it has the proper stuff for that purpose in it; and a man becomes renowned because he has the necessary stuff in him. Renown is not to be sought, and all pursuit of it is vain. A person may, indeed, by skillful conduct, and various artificial means, make a sort of name for himself: but if the inner jewel is wanting, all is vanity, and will not last a day.—Goethe.

THE liberal religionists say we recognize these rare exceptions among womankind—the George Sands and Harriet Martineaus—but the masses of the sex are in such absolute bondage to the church that their votes would swamp any republic. So would the votes of unthinking men when the above mentioned questions come up for general consideration. The remedy is the same in both cases, education, freedom to think.—E. Cady Stanton.

THE waters deluge man with rain, oppress him with hail, and drown him with inundations; the air rushes in storms, prepares the tempests, or lights up the volcano; but the earth, gentle and indulgent, ever subservient to the wants of man, spreads his walks with flowers and his table with plenty; returns with interest every good committed to her care; and though she produces the poison, she still supplies the antidote; though constantly teased more to furnish the luxuries of man than his necessities, yet, even to the last, she continues her kind indulgence, and when life is over, she kindly covers his remains in her bosom.—Pliny.

THERE is no more fatal proverb by which to round out our lives than "anything for peace." Justice, liberty and equality first; then, and then only will come that blessed peace that passeth all understanding. Thoughtful minds recognize and deplore the fact that the morals of our people to-day do not keep pace with our material and intellectual achievements. Who can estimate the progress in science and invention in the last century! But in the æsthetic, the moral, the spiritual realm, woman's legitimate sphere, alas! how little progress can we herald. Verily, civilization is at a dead lock until woman is educated, elevated, enfranchised; until the feminine element exerts its legitimate controlling power in the higher departments of thought.—E. Cady Stanton.

THERE never was a first cause, nor can there ever be a last cause; but all that is, is the legitimate result of all past causes that have been before it, and no one thing could have been other than it was, unless that whole part had been changed. Storm and flood, famine and pestilence, come and go regardless of petitions or anathemas, let them come from saint or sinner. Gods could not hinder, nor devils assist, for the result was an inevitable consequence of what had been before it. The sun shines alike upon the just and the unjust. The good man is as often felled by the lightning's stroke as is the bad man. Riches and honor do not always fall to the lot of the virtuous and the worthy, nor want and woe to the vicious and vile. But all that is, results from natural, unchangeable, and unvariable laws.—Elmina D. Slenker.

OH THE desolation of a childless home! A childless home wherein are never heard the sounds of little feet pattering upon the floor or stairs, or springing over the threshold with elastic step and glee, never heard the inimitable melodies of sinless laughter and song—wherein are never seen the only angel forms, and never felt the only angelic loves of this world. Precious boons with which to beguile life's inevitable weariness, and sadness, and sorrow! And when the eventful years are nearly all spent, and old age totters around the hearthstone with trembling hand and faltering steps, and thoughts which reach backward, rather than forward in time, none there are to spring to its side with strong arms and firm tread, and tender jealous care, to comfort and sustain, or to suggest to its thoughts the beguiling memories of the "long ago;" and when the debt of nature has all been paid, and the "old arm-chair" stands at last vacant, there are no sighs to bless it, no tears to embalm it, for there is none left to unselfishly inherit and honor the home, and no one to bear and represent the household name, or hand down to coming time the unerring germ-type of what it might have been.—Dr. Sara B. Chase.

Odds and Ends.

A FUNERAL SERMON.—The following is from a foreign magazine, and is as inimitable in its way as was the famous Hardshell Baptist sermon. It is entitled:

"A Sermon occasioned by the Death of the Rev. Mr. Prockter, Minister of Gissing. By the Rev. Mr. More, Minister of Burston, Norfolk. 1 Tim., vi. and 12.

"Beloved, we are met to solemnize the funeral of Mr. Prockter; his father's name was Thomas Prockter of the second family; his brother's name was also Thomas Prockter; he lived some time at Buxton Hall in Norfolk, and was high Constable of Disthursed; this man's name was Robt. Prockter, and his wife was Mrs. Buxton, late Wife of Mr. Matthew Buxton; she came from Helsdon Hall beyond Norwich.

"He was a good Husband, and she a good Housewife, and they two gat money; she brought a thousand pounds to her portion. But now, Beloved, I shall make it clear by demonstrative Arguments:

"First, He was a good Man and that in several respects; he was a loving man to his neighbors; a charitable man to the poor, a favorable man in his Tythes, and a good Landlord to his Tenants; there sits Mr. Spurgeon can tell what a great sum he forgave him on his Death Bed; it was four score Pounds. Now, Beloved, was not this a good Man and a Man of God, think you, and his Wife a good Woman, and she came from Helsdon Hall beyond Norwich. This is the first Argument.

"Secondly, to prove this man to be a good Man and a Man of God, in the time of his Sickness, which was very long and tedious, he sent for Mr. Cole, Minister of Shimpling, to pray for him; he was not a self-ended man. No, Beloved, he desired him to pray for, not only himself, but for all his Relations and acquaintance, for Mr. Buxton's Worship, and all Mr. Buxton's Children against it should please God to send him any, and to Mr. Cole's prayers he devoutly said, Amen, Amen, Amen. Was not this a good Man, and a Man of God, think you, and his Wife a good Woman, and she came from Helsdon Hall beyond Norwich.

"Then he sent for Mr. Gibbs to pray for him, when he came and prayed for him, and all his Friends, and Relations, and Acquaintance, for Mr. Buxton's Worship, and for Mrs. Buxton's Worship, and for all Mr. Buxton's Children against it should please God to send him any, and to Mr. Gibbs's prayers he devoutly said, Amen, Amen, Amen. Was not this a good Man and a Man of God, think you, and his Wife a good Woman, and she came from Helsdon Hall beyond Norwich.

"Then he sent for me and I came and prayed for this good Man Mr. Prockter, for all his Friends, Relations, and Acquaintance, for Mr. Buxton's Worship, and for Mrs. Buxton's Worship, and for all Mr. Buxton's Children against it should please God to send him any, and to my prayer he devoutly said, Amen, Amen, Amen. Was not this a good Man and a Man of God, think you, and his Wife a good Woman, and she came from Helsdon Hall beyond Norwich.

"Thirdly and lastly, Beloved, I come to a demonstrative Argument to prove this Man to be a good Man, and a Man of God, and that is this: There was one Thomas, a very poor Beggar Boy; he came out of Scotland over the Tweed upon the back of a dun Cow; it was not a Black Cow, nor a Brindled Cow, nor a Brown Cow; no, Beloved, it was a Dun Cow. Well, Beloved, this poor boy came to this good Man's door, to this Man of God's Door; he did not do as some would have done, give him alms, and send him away, or chide him, and make him a pass, and send him to his own Country. No, Beloved, he took him into his own House, and bound him Apprentice to a Gunsmith in Norwich. After his time was out he took him home again, and married him to a Kinswoman of his Wife's, one Mrs. Christian Robertson here present—there she sits; she was a very good fortune, and to her this good man gave a considerable jointure. By her he had three Daughters, this good Man took home the eldest, brought her up to Woman's Estate, married her to a very Honorable Gentleman, Mr. Buxton, here present, there he sits, gave him a vast portion with her, and the remainder of his estate he gave to his other two Daughters; now was not this a good Man and a Man of God, think you, and his Wife a good Woman, and she came from Helsdon Hall beyond Norwich.

"Beloved, you may remember some time since I preached at the funeral of Mrs. Prockter, at which time I troubled you with many of her transcendent virtues, but your memories perhaps may fail you, and therefore I shall remind you of one or two of them.

"The first is, she was as good a Knitter as any in the County of Norfolk; when her Husband and family were in Bed and asleep she would get a Cushion and clap herself down by the Fire and sit and knit, but, Beloved, she was no prodigal Woman, for to spare Candle she would stir up the fire with her knitting pins, and by that light she would sit and knit, and make as good work as many women do by daylight. Beloved, I have a pair of stockings upon my Legs that were knit in the same manner, and they are the best stockings that ever I wore in my Life. Secondly, she was the best maker of Toast in Drink that I ever eat in my Life, and they were Brown Toasts too, for when I used to go in a Morning she would ask me to have a Toast, which I was very willing to do because she had an artificial way of toasting it, no ways slack or burning it, besides she had such a pretty way of grating nutmeg, of dipping it in the Beer, and such a piece of rare cheese that I must needs say they were the best Toasts that ever I eat in my life.

"Well, Beloved, the days are short, and many of you have a great way home, and therefore I hasten to a conclusion. I think I sufficiently proved this Man to be a good Man and his Wife a good Woman, but fearing your memories should fail you, I shall repeat the particulars, viz:

1. His Love to his Neighbors;
2. His Charity to the Poor;
3. His Goodness to his Tenants;
4. His Devotion in his Prayers,

In saying Amen to the prayers of Mr. Cole, Gibbs, and myself. But especially for that transcendent Act of Charity in entertaining the Beggar Boy, in Binding him Apprentice to a Gunsmith, and afterward marrying him to a Kinswoman of his Wife, and bringing up his eldest daughter to Woman's Estate, and marrying her to that Honorable Gentleman Mr. Buxton, and giving him a vast portion with her, and giving the remainder of his estate to his other Daughters; was not this a good Man and a Man of God, think you, and his Wife a good Woman, and she came from Helsdon Hall beyond Norwich.

"Well, Beloved, he has done his work on earth Courageously, Valiantly, and Manfully in fighting under the world's banner of good Husbandry in getting money; he is now at rest, and so we leave him."—Harper's Magazine.

Truth Seeker Tracts.

No.	(REVISED LIST.)	Cts.
1.	Discussion on Prayer. D. M. Bennett and two Clergymen.	3
2.	Oration on the Gods. Ingersoll.	10
3.	Thomas Paine. "	5
4.	Arraignment of the Church. Ingersoll.	5
5.	Heretics and Heresies. "	5
5.	Humboldt. "	5
7.	The Story of Creation. Bennett.	5
8.	The Old Snake Story. "	2
9.	The Story of the Flood. "	5
10.	The Plagues of Egypt. "	2
11.	Korah, Datham, and Abiram. Bennett.	2
12.	Balaam and his Ass. "	2
13.	Arraignment of Priestcraft. "	8
14.	Old Abe and Little Ike. Syphers.	3
15.	Come to Dinner.	2
16.	Fog Horn Documents. "	2
17.	The Devil Still Ahead. "	2
18.	Slipped Up Again. "
19.	Joshua Stopping the Sun and Moon. D. M. Bennett.	2
20.	Samson and his Exploits. Bennett.	2
21.	The Great Wrestling Match. "	2
22.	Discussion with Elder Shelton. "	10
23.	Reply to Elder Shelton's Fourth Letter. D. M. Bennett.	3
24.	Christians at Work. Wm. McDonnell.	5
25.	Discussion with Geo. Snode. Bennett.	5
26.	Underwood's Prayer.	1
27.	Honest Questions and Honest Answers. D. M. Bennett.	5
28.	Alessandro di Cagliostro. C. Sotheran.	10
29.	Paine Hall Dedication Address. B. F. Underwood.	2
30.	Woman's Rights & Man's Wrongs. Syphers.	2
31.	Gods and God-houses. "	2
32.	The God's of Superstition and the God of the Universe. D. M. Bennett.	8
33.	What has Christianity Done? Preston.	3
34.	Tribute to Thomas Paine. "	2
35.	Moving the Ark. D. M. Bennett.	1
36.	Bennett's Prayer to the Devil.	2
37.	Short Sermon. Rev. Theologicus, D.D.	1
38.	Christianity not a Moral System. X. Y. Z.	3
39.	The True Saint. S. P. Putnam.	3
40.	Bible of Nature vs. The Bible of Men. J. Syphers.	3
41.	Our Ecclesiastical Gentry. Bennett.	2
42.	Elijah the Tishbite. "	3
43.	Christianity a Borrowed System. "	3
44.	Design Argument Refuted. Underwood.	2
45.	Elisha the Prophet. Bennett.	3
46.	Did Jesus Really Exist?	3
47.	Cruelty and Credulity of the Human Race. Dr. Daniel Arter.	5
48.	Freethought in the West. G. L. Henderson.	5
49.	Sensible Conclusions. E. E. Guild.	3
50.	Jonah and the Big Fish. D. M. Bennett.	1
51.	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 1.	5
52.	Marples-Underwood Debate, Underwood.	3
53.	Questions for Bible Worshipers. B. F. Underwood.	2
54.	An Open Letter to Jesus Christ. Bennett.	5
55.	The Bible God Disproved by Nature. W. E. Coleman.	3
56.	Bible Contradictions.	1
57.	Jesus Not a Perfect Character. Underwood.	2
58.	Prophecies.	2
59.	Bible Prophecies Concerning Babylon. B. F. Underwood.	2
60.	Ezekiel's Prophecies Concerning Tyre. B. F. Underwood.	2
61.	History of the Devil. Isaac Paden.	5
62.	The Jews and their God. "	10
63.	The Devils Due-Bills. John Syphers.	3
64.	The Ills we Endure—their Cause and Cure. D. M. Bennett.	2
65.	Short Sermon No. 2. Rev. Theologicus, D.D.	5
66.	God Idea in History. H. B. Brown.	5
67.	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets No. 2.	5
68.	Ruth's Idea of Heaven and Mine. Susan H. Wixon.	2
69.	Missionaries. Mrs. E. D. Slenker.	2
70.	Vicarious Atonement. J. S. Lyon.	3
71.	Paine's Anniversary. C. A. Codman.	3
72.	Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego. D. M. Bennett.	2
73.	Foundations. John Syphers.	3
74.	Daniel in the Lion's Den. Bennett.	2
75.	An Hour with the Devil. "	10
76.	Reply to Erastus F. Brown. D. M. Bennett.	3
77.	The Fear of Death. D. M. Bennett.	5
78.	Christmas and Christianity. D.M.Bennett.	5
79.	The Relationship of Jesus, Jehovah, and the Virgin Mary. W. E. Coleman.	2
80.	Address on Paine's 139th Birthday. Bennett.	5
81.	Hereafter, or the Half-way House. John Syphers.	1
82.	Christian Courtesy. Bennett.	2
83.	Revivalism Examined. Dr. A. G. Humphrey.	5
84.	Moody's Sermon on Hell. Rev. J. P. Hopps, London.	2
85.	Matter, Motion, Life and Mind. Bennett.	10
86.	An Enquiry about God's Sons. "	2
87.	Freethought Judged by its Fruits. B. F. Underwood.	1
88.	David, God's Peculiar Favorite. Mrs. E. D. Slenker.	3
89.	Logic of Prayer. Charles Stephenson.	3
90.	Biblo-Mania. Otter Cordates.	2
91.	Our Ideas of God. B. F. Underwood.	1
92.	The Bible; is it Divinely Inspired? Dr. D. Arter.	5
93.	Obtaining Pardon for Sins. Hudson Tuttle.	1
94.	The New Raven. Will Cooper.	5
95.	Jesus Christ. D. M. Bennett.	10
96.	Ichabod Crane Papers.	10
97.	Special Providences' W. S. Bell.	2
98.	Snakes. Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker.	2
99.	Do the Works of Nature prove a Creator? Sciota.	5
100.	The Old and the New. R. G. Ingersoll.	5
101.	110th Anniversary of Thomas Paine's Birthday. Bennett et als.	5
102.	The Old Religion and the New. W. S. Bell.	1
103.	Does the Bible Teach us all we Know. Bennet.	2
104.	Evolution of Israel's God. A. L. Rawson.	10
105.	Decadence of Christianity. Capphro.	2
106.	Franklin, Washington and Jefferson Unbelievers. Bennett.	2
107.	The Safe Side. H. B. Brown.	5
108.	The Holy Bible a Historical Humbug. S. H. Preston.	1
109.	Ghosts. Ingersoll, 4 pp.	1
110.	Materialistic Prayer. Bennett, 4 pp.	1
111.	Reply to Scientific American. Bennett.	1
112.	Sensible Sermon. Savage, 8 pp.	2
113.	Come to Jesus. Bennett, 8 pp.	2

SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

1.	Hereditary Transmission. Prof. Louis Elsberg, M.D.	5
2.	Evolution; from the Homogeneous to the Heterogeneous. B. F. Underwood.	3
3.	Darwinism. B. F. Underwood.	3
4.	Literature of the Insane. F. R. Marvin.	5
5.	Responsibility of Sex. Mrs. Chase, M.D.	3
6.	Graduated Atmospheres. J. McCarroll.	2
7.	Death. Frederic R. Marvin, M.D.	5
8.	How do Marsupial Animals Propagate their kind? A. B. Bradford.	5
9.	The Unseen World. Prof. John Fiske.	10
10.	The Evolution Theory — Huxley's Three Lectures.	10
11.	Is America the New World? L. L. Dawson.	10

Discount on one dollar's worth 10 per ct. off; on two dollars' worth 20 off; on five dollars' worth 40 off; on ten dollars' worth 50 off.

As few or as many of any given kind may be ordered as desired.

RADICAL BOOKS.

SENT POST PAID AT THE PRICES ANNEXED.

By D. M. BENNETT.

Age of Reason. Paine. Paper covers.	25
" " " Cloth "	50
" " and Ex. of Proph. Paper 50; cl.	75
A Few Days in Athens. Frances Wright.	75
Apocryphal New Testament.	1 25
An Eye Opener. Paper, 50; cloth,	75
Antiquity of Christianity. Alberger.	25
Analysis of Religious Belief. Viscount Amberly. $3.00, 4.00, and	4 50
Apples of Gold. Susan H. Wixon.	1 50
Anti-Theological Lectures. Rev. R. Taylor.	2 00
Antiquity and Duration of the World.	25
Astronomy and Worship of the Ancients.	25
A. J. Davis' Entire Works,	27,00
Adventures of Elder Triptolemus Tub.	15
Bible in India. Jacolliot.	2 00
Buckle's History of Civilization. 2 Vols., 8vo.	4 00
Burgess-Underwood Debate. 50 and	80
Bible in the Balance. Fish.	1 00
Bacon's Novum Organum.	2 00
Bhagvad-Gita, or Dialogues of Christna and Arjuna.	1 75
Buechner's Man, Present and Future.	4 00
Christianity before Christ. Craven.	25
Chapters from the Bibles of the Ages.	1 50
Criticism on the Theoligical Idea of Deity.	1 00
Childhood of Religion. Clodd.	1 25
Childhood of the World. Clodd, 40 and	60
Christianity and Materialism. Underwood.	15
Cause of Religious Ideas. Tuttle,	1 00
Conway's Sacred Anthology.	4 00
Colenso on the Pentateuch. Abstract of.	25
Devil's Pulpit, Rev. Robt. Taylor,	2 00
Diegesis "	2 00
Denton's Irreconcilable Records.	50
" Our Planet, Past, Present, and Future,	1 50
" Radical Rhymes.	1 25
" Who are Christians. Deluge,
Denton's Common Sense Thoughts, Be Thyself, What is Right? Man's True Saviors, Sermon from Snakspere's Text, God Proposed, Spiritualism True, Orthodoxy False, 10 cents each.
Draper's Conflict between Religion and Science,	1 75
" Intellectual Development of Europe, 2 vols.,	3 00
Darwin's Origin of Species,	2 00
" Descent of Man, (Impr'd Ed.)	3 00
Descent and Darwinism, Schmidt,	1 50
Einstein's Origin of Religious Ideas,	1 00
Exeter Hall, Wm. McDonnell,	60 & 80
Errors of the Bible, Wright,	35 & 60
Essence of Religion. Fuerbach. 40 and	80
Eight Scientific Tracts.	20
Frothingham's Religion of Humanity,	1 50
" Child's Book of Religion.	1 00
" Stories of the Patriarchs,	1 00
" Safest Creed,	1 50
" Transcendentalism in New England,	2 50
Faraday's Various Forces of Nature.	2 00
Fiske's Myths and Myth-Makers,	2 00
God Idea in History. Tuttle.	1 25
Good Sense. D'Holbach,	1 00
Gould's Curious Myths of the Middle Ages.	2 50
" Lost and Hostile Gospels.	3 25
Graves' Sixteen Crucified Saviors.	2 00
" Biography of Satan.	60
Grey's Enigmas of Life.	2 00
" Creeds of Christendom. 2 Vols.	7 50
Heroines of Freethought, Mrs. Underwood,	1 75
Heathens of the Heath, McDonnell.	1 00 & 150
Hume's Essays and Treatises,	1 50
Huxley's Lay Sermons,	1 75
" Man's Place in Nature,	1 25
" Critiques and Addresses,	1 50
History of all Religions Sects. Evans.	1 00
Haeckel's History of Creation. 2 Vols.	5 00
Hollick's Nerves and the Nervous.	1 00
Humboldt's Works.
Ingersoll's Gods and other Lectures. 30 and	50
" " etc., Large Edition.	1 25
Influence of Christianity on Civilization.	25
Infidels' Text Book, Cooper.	1 00
Jehovah Unveiled.	35
Jamieson's Clergy a Source of Danger.	1 00
Josephus' Complete Works.	2 50
Johnson's Oriental Religions. 8vo.	5 00
John's Way.	15
Kneeland's Review.	1 00
" Hymns.	35
Koran, with Notes and Life of Mahomet.	2 75
Lecky's Rationalism in Europe. 2 Vols.	4 00
" History of European Morals.	6 00
Life of Thomas Paine. Blanchard. p 50; cl	75
Lewes' Biographical History of Philosophy.	3 50
" Problems of Life and Mind.	3 00
Lizzie Doten's Poems of Progress, and Inner Life, each	150
Lubbock's Origin of Civilization.	2 00
" Pre-Historic Times Illustrated,	6 00
Lyell's Elements of Geology, 770 cuts,	3 40
" Principles " 2 vols. and maps,	8 00
Monks and Popes. Alberger.	1 00
Morley's Life of Voltaire,	2 00
Martyrdom of Man. Winwood Reade.	3 00
Peeble's All Around the World.	2 50
" Seers of the Ages,	2 50
Plato's Divine and Moral Works,	2 20
Pro and Con of Supernatural Religion,	30 & 50
Physical Man, Tuttle.	1 50
Paine's Common Sense.	12
" Crisis. Paper, 50; cloth	80
" Rights of Man. Paper, 50; cloth	80
" Theological Works, with portrait	1 50
" " " paper,	1 00
" Political Works, cloth,	1 50
" Great Works Complete. Crown octavo, with life and portrait.	3 00
" Political Works, steel portrait.	1 50
" Life, by Calvin Blanchard with portrait Paper, 50; cloth	75
Parturition without Pain,	1 00
Plain Home Talk and Medical Common Sense. E. B. Foote, M.D.,	1 50
Proctor's Six Lectures on Astronomy,	20
Reason, the only Oracle of Man. Ethan Allen	60
Syntagma, Taylor.	1 00
System of Nature, D'Holbach,	2 00
Self-Contradictions of the Bible.	25
Studying the Bible, Mrs. Slenker.	75
Spencer's (Herbert) Entire Work,
Strauss' Old Faith and New,	2 00
" New Life of Jesus, 2 vols.,	12 00
Supernatural Religion, 2 Vols., 8vo.,	8 00
Sexual Physiology, Trall,	2 00
Talleyrand's Letter to Pope Pius vii,	25
Tyndall' (Prof. John) Entire Works,
The Christ of Paul,	2 00
The Case against the Church,	75
The Relations of the Sexes. Mrs. Duffey,	2 00
The Voices, Warren Sumner Barlow,	1 25
The World's Sages, Infidels, and Thinkers. Bennett. $3 00, $4 00, and	4 50
The Champions of the Church. Bennett, $3 00, $4 00, and	4 50
Thirty Discussions, Bible Stories, etc., 75 &	1 00
Truth Seeker Tracts, Vols. I, II, III, and IV., by the lot, 50 &	75
The Truth Seeker Collection of Forms, Hymns, and Recitations,	75
The Outcast. Winwood Reade,	80
Talks with Mr. Patients. Mrs. Gleason, M.D.,	1 50
Underwood-Marples Debate.	35 & 60
Underwood's Twelve Tracts.	20
Vestiges of Creation.	75
Volney's Ruins,	1 00
Volney's New Researches in Ancient History,	1 50
Voltaire's Philosophical Dictionary,	5 00

THE TRUTHSEEKER

DEVOTED TO SCIENCE, MORALS

FREETHOUGHT AND HUMAN HAPPINESS

Vol. 5. No. 2. {PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY D. M. BENNETT.} New York, Saturday, January 12, 1878. {SCIENCE HALL, 141 8th St., NEAR BROADWAY.} $3 per Year.

Notes and Clippings.

Moody is sick and Sankey is moody.

The Turk's contribution to the church is Allah money.

The Herald asks if the highway robbers in North Carolina are not Dick Turpin-tine sort of fellows.

A cockney, speaking of the death of an octogenarian, remarked that he was born at Hayti and died at heighty-two.

The Bridgeport Standard asks if it is not rather curious when Noah was laying in his preserves he put up nothing but pairs.

Long John Wentworth, of Chicago, a man of great worldly experience, says no bank is solid that has anything to do with religion, politics, or real estate.

Arnold, the London ink man, it is said, lives in a white house and drives white horses. He is bluff, jolly, sixty-four, has a big inkome and not a blot to mar his happiness.

The Rev. Matthew Hale Smith says: "The Bible is chuck full of wit from Genesis to Revelation." If that is so, why would it not be a good plan to utilize it in getting up comic almanacs?

If the good die young and the wicked do not live out half their days, a golden mean between the two extremes would seem a wise sanitary measure. There are some people mean enough to live a thousand years.

A Massachusetts clergyman who recently prayed for the present Congress, offered, among other petitions, the following: "O Lord, give them common sense." That preacher is evidently one who does not believe that the day of miracles is past.

Eggs are said to be successfully hatched by electricity. This method may be very expeditious and all that, but the warm, beaming smile of Schuyler Colfax is a safe agent, if the temperature of the chickens produced are to be taken into consideration.

Many clergymen are not yet sure where their winter overcoats are to come from, but numbers of them are morally certain they received not less than seventeen pairs of worked slippers from the young, single, and married sisters of the congregation.

The coldest storm wave of the season is said to have occurred in the north part of the State the other night when a young man in bidding his girl good night, was discovered by her father in the act of placing his moustaches where they would do her the most good.

Adirondack Murray and Joseph Cook were fellow-students at Yale, where they stood low in scholarship. They were long-winded speakers, and not at all methodical in their arrangement of subjects, and Cook, in particular, was utterly unable to demonstrate the simplest proposition in Euclid.

One of our leading religious papers announces in large type, "The Place Where the Savior Mounted the Ass Discovered." Our devil thinks that there should be a semicolon or dash after the word "mounted." He thinks also that further search will result in the discovery of the mud-puddle where Christ was thrown from the ass, and perhaps one or two of the ass' kicks.

An extraordinary religious movement is taking place in Sweden, where a petition signed by nearly 25,000 persons has been presented to the King, praying that "the use of the Holy Communion may be free, like the use of God's Word," or, in other words, that the celebration of the communion may take place also out of the churches, and that the celebrants may be other than persons in holy orders. The Ecclesiastical Court at the Cathedral Chapter of Upsala, to whom the petition has been referred, has reported against such an innovation, which, in their opinion, "would eventually destroy the Church." The government will probably refuse the prayer of the petitioners, and the consequence will be a serious split in the Swedish Church. Until very lately there was no religious liberty in Sweden, Roman Catholics and Jews, for instance, being unable to exercise their religion publicly—the consequence being that even at present the total number of Jews in Sweden barely amounts to 1,000 persons out of a population of nearly 4,000,000 inhabitants.

The assertion that simple and effective tests will expose all of the so-called physical phenomena is denied by the Springfield Republican, which says: "An unbelieving person has produced his own slates, not merely hinged and locked, but actually screwed together; has placed them on a table in his own house, at some distance from the medium; has sat holding both the medium's hands beneath his own, and heard, as it seemed, the writing going on beneath the slate; he takes away the slates unopened, and removes the screws in the absence of the medium, to find the inside written full on both sides with what seemed to him words characteristic of one whom he knew to be dead.

A remarkable change of fortune, both good and bad, is reported from Cologne, Germany. In 1852 two young communists, Becker and Burgers, after a trial in which all Germany was interested, were sentenced to six years' imprisonment, and served out their time. The three chief witnesses against them were a police inspector, a constable, and a lieutenant in the army—Comstocks of those times. The lieutenant afterward abused a trust, ran away and finally shot himself; the police inspector also committed suicide; and the constable, though still living, is broken down in health and poor. Of the two criminals, Becker is now Mayor of Cologne and a member of the Prussian House of Peers, and Burgers is a member of the Lower House and is highly esteemed.

The question of the existence of hell was again opened by our divines on last Sunday, some insisting that there really is a hell, and describing its terrors, while others were as positive that it existed only in the imagination. Rev. Wm. C. Corbit, Methodist, said it was necessary to bring before sinners hell with all its horrors, its fiery lake with its flames and the groans of the damned ascending from it forever and ever. He said there was no mirth in hell, no wine cup, no happy new year, no glee. All sensuous delights were lost. All luxuries of body and mind were swept away by the first glance of the eye of God, etc. A religious paper of last Sunday had the torments of hell illustrated by two large woodcuts on the first page with two men represented in hell with the fiery flames shooting up around them, and fiery serpents darting their forked tongues at them. Their countenances indicated intense suffering; and one is left to wonder how a good God and his beatified saints in heaven can be happy while placidly looking down upon the poor wretches writhing and suffering for endless millions of years. The Reverends Pullman, Sweetser, and McCarthy were positive that hell is a myth, and that no such place or condition exists. What is the Christian world going to do if their darling idea of an endless hell is taken away from them and there is no longer any place of torment for their friends and neighbors? It is to be feared they can never be happy if nine-tenths of the human race are not hopelessly and wretchedly damned.

Hell and a Revenging God.—Prof. David Swing, of the Central Church, preached a notable sermon on Sunday, January 6, in McVicker's Theatre, on the subject of a merciful God and endless punishment. In the course of his remarks he said: "The Philadelphia clergy are said to have convened last week and to have passed unanimously a resolution of entire confidence in the endlessness of future punishments, but their meeting and their action show that they confess to a powerful disturbance of the theological air, and feel that the time has come for the champions of the old idea to march around the town in full arms and uniform, that temerity may check itself or know at least what to expect. All this sensibility of the older school of theologians shows that the mountain on whose sides we have lived peacefully so long is at last moved within, and may not on the morrow be such an emblem of repose. To let the old definition of God and hell stand untouched is as absurd as to leave untouched the old definition of plow, or king, or beauty. The Word of God does not signify now what it signified when David prayed for curses upon his enemies, or when Cæsar mentioned that name in his war journals in his bloody career. As the beautiful in civilized lands is not modeled after the beautiful of Africa or Fiji, but after their own deeper and purer ideals, so the theological forms of new ages may not be slavish patterns of old outlines, but must be the forms of the last and best reflection. The new and bold words spoken in the past year by many Scotch Presbyterians, and re-echoed at last by Mr. Beecher and by an English clergyman of eminent learning and piety, are a part of those inevitable words which must come when society is groping along toward better portraitures of God and heaven and hell and of self. As to the picture of a former era, which was so unfortunate as to paint its Heavenly Father as being a person who owned a bottomless lake of fire, and as being a person who, for his own good pleasure, regardless of sin aforeseen, foreordained millions to spend endless years in that lake of fire, it is not so much a wonder that the Scotch Calvinists, and all Calvinists, are rising up against such an idea of God, as that the idea ever could have lived for a week, or for a moment in the human heart. Born out of the public cruelty, the definition of God must needs soon enjoy the modifying influence of a deeper public education and of growing justice and kindness. Arminianism, Unitarianism, Quakerism, Universalism, Methodism were some of the forms assumed by the softened thought and feeling of the seventeenth century, while in the Roman Catholic Church the school of Fenelon came along, showing a parallel mitigation of the nature of hell and of the hitherto measureless malice of God. The recent utterances of several Scotch Presbyterians and of Canon Farrar, and of Mr. Beecher, are the latest and boldest words in a dissent which has been a muttering thunder for a half hundred years. Those last words are only the sharp thunder, showing that the storm has come—that it is overhead—that our houses and fields will soon receive the good or the ill of the enraged elements. What of the night watchman? No exact words ever come to us from the future, but from all appearances it seems that the storm will not be at all terrific, and that the old definition of the Heavenly Father will soon be fully dead, and we shall see all Christians join in the regret that they should have cherished so long a picture so empty of Divine features. The old theology is dying peacefully and will evidently soon cease to exist; and, as when a King dies, they combine the shouts, "The King is dead! Long live the King!" so in the death chamber of the old theology, the Christian world will mingle memory and hope in one sentence: "The creed is dead! Long live the creed!" A new faith will have disentangled itself from the old, and a grander religion will sit down upon a throne which has been gathering domain and subjects for eighteen centuries. The objection one might make to the violent language, even the solemn oaths of Mr. Beecher, is that why did or could he become so aroused over an idea of God which is already so hopelessly empty of practical power. Such intense feeling were worthy of some honor when the liberty of a State or of a race were in peril. Perhaps, on the other hand, there are Christians yet living who do hold to the old letter, and upon whose heavy ears only the crashing and pounding at Plymouth desk could make any impression. If such worshipers of a revengeful God still remain here and there in the Church, then let the Plymouth eloquence and anathemas roll on, for it is high time that the kind Father who made man and who loves man were worshiped, not as a monster, but as a friend. Will this overturning of the old belief regarding future torments affect badly the future of Christianity, or of public morals? We are not left to conjecture for a reply. The majority of Christians have not for a half century realized that there was any such hell as that pictured by the Church. The words have been repeated, as of old, to some degree, but with Catholic and Protestant the old significance has fallen away, and has left behind only the general truth that God will punish sin and reward virtue. From this debate, which now shakes the old doctrines, no harm can come, for the ideas which most influence the human mind are moving onward without change."

Events of the Week.

The Mexican war cloud seems to be vanishing.

The postal business in the Southern States is materially increasing.

Fifty thousand people skated on the ice in Central Park last Tuesday.

The Sultan has made a direct request for a cessation of hostilities. England was not able to effect it.

Some of our patent paints are said to be found spontaneously combustible. Look out for patent paint.

Many of the Pennsylvania Coal Companies have suspended operations, throwing 40,000 persons out of employment.

Secretary W. M. Evarts was elected President of the Bar Association in this city. He ought to be a good Bar-tender.

The veteran, Thurlow Weed, fell in a bakery on Broadway by catching his foot in the carpeting or matting. His shoulder was injured; but on the same day he dictated twenty pages of an article on the Silver question.

London pays $1,200 per mile for street cleaning, and New York pays over $4,000 per mile and the streets not as well cleaned at that. It makes a good deal of difference with dirt and filth on which side of the Atlantic it is.

Congress, after having a fine time at home eating turkey, Christmas pies, New Year's roasts, etc., etc., reassembled on the 10th, ready for business. There is a little piece of legislation we are anxious for them to attend to after a little.

The present has been a week of prayer. If matters have not gone on better this week than usual, we cannot see what the use is for so much time being spent in prayer. If the effects are inappreciable, who shall be able to decide its value?

The annual sales of the pews at Plymouth church has taken place. The hard times and shrinkage in other commodities doubtless had something to do with their declension, but Plymouth theology is not quite as much in demand as formerly.

The Lord and his bride have been attracting no small share of attention in this city. In this instance the Lord was an old man over eighty, while the bride was a much younger person. The Lord was rich and silly, the bride sharp and practical.

Anthony Comstock has caused the arrest of another unfortunate victim on the stereotyped crime of sending obscene matter through the mail. The victim lives in this city, and his name is Baxter. Comstock is supposed to be determined to give him Baxter's (Saints') Rest.

We have had considerably colder weather since our last, the mercury falling here to within five or ten degrees of zero. No snow with us yet, but in the country within fifty miles of us snow has fallen to the depth of four inches. In Montreal and other parts of Canada it snowed fifteen hours and to the depth of over a foot.

Victor Emanuel, of Italy, died at 2 o'clock P. M., on the 9th inst., and the news reached this country before 1, or apparently an hour before the death occurred; but as it is 2 o'clock in Rome fully two hours before it is here, that accounts for the seeming discrepancy in time. Victor was a brave, patriotic, gallant, grand old fellow, but the Pope outlived him at last.

E. W. Jones, of Ashland, Mass., whom Comstock caused to be arrested for sending obscene matter through the mail, had his trial before Judge Lowell in the U. S. District Court, Boston. According to the advice of his attorney, Mr. Jones pleaded guilty, with a request for a light sentence. After the plea was entered, the Judge made some very pertinent remarks. He held that "Clark's Marriage Guide"—the book for which the indictment was gotten up—was a book of merit, and such a one as he would be glad to see in every family. Had not Mr. Jones pleaded guilty, he would not have been fined at all. As it was, the lowest fine was imposed—$125 each on two counts.

Radical Romance.

The Darwins.

BY MRS. ELMINA D. SLENKER.

CHAPTER II.

The day after Edith May had made her call on the new neighbors, she sent for Jennie and Sue to come and spend the afternoon with her, and as soon as they were all seated at the pleasant open grate, with the cheerful fire shining on their fresh young faces, Edith said: "Well, girls, I presume you are wanting to hear about my call, are you not?"

"Yes, indeed, we are," replied Sue. "We were really out of patience with you last night for not stopping as you went home."

"It was too late to call," said Edith, "and mother was alone, so I hurried right on, knowing my news would keep over and lose nothing by the delay, as your appetites would only be whetted up the sharper by anticipation, which is said to be better than reality. I found Myra all eagerness to go along, and we had such a lovely walk. We went through a bit of woods on the left; you know I never go along a bare road when I have fields and woods to choose from. We gathered ferns, mosses, mountain tea, Indian arrow-heads and other curiosities, till we had our baskets brim full and running over. Oh! how enjoyable are the mild, warm, sunny February days, coming as they do, right in the edge of spring, as the wind-up of Old Winter's reign! They seem like oases in a desert, brightening up the waste and giving all nature a joyous, cheerful hue. When we got in sight of the heretofore dilapidated Forks, lo! what a change! The old buildings had been repaired and painted, the fences fixed, and everything was neat, clean, and in good order. We passed up the walk to the front porch and rapped at the door, which was opened by a pleasant, intelligent-looking girl, who seemed about seventeen years of age. She greeted us politely, invited us to come in, and led the way to a nice, cosy little sitting-room, plainly but tastefully furnished, and looking very homelike and comfortable. Its only occupant was a lady about fifty-five years of age, who sat upon a low rocking-chair sewing carpet-rags. She arose and welcomed us cordially, shaking hands as warmly as if we were old friends. I introduced Myra and myself, and said I presumed I was addressing Mrs. Darwin.

"'Yes,' said she, 'that is my name, if you please, and,'—turning to the girl who had admitted us, 'this is my daughter Minnie.'

"She then asked us to remove our wraps and be seated by the stove, and then, as she resumed her sewing, she chatted away cheerfully about the various things which usually form the topic of conversation between strangers and new comers—the weather, how they like the country, the neighbors, etc. I never before saw a woman whom I admired at first sight as I did Mrs. Darwin. She was so motherly and kind, so genial, fresh, and charming, and so cordial, that in a few moments we felt as if we had known her a lifetime. She said we were her first callers from town, but that she had made the acquaintance of several of the neighbors around the Forks and found them kind, friendly, and sociable. 'Indeed,' she continued, 'I am sure we shall have plenty of nice associates here, for I have never lived in any place yet where there were not kind, good, interesting, and friendly people.' And I thought, as she spoke, that it was no marvel that one like her found friends everywhere, for it did not seem possible for any one to know and not love her. The heart was drawn out in spite of one's self by her earnest, sympathizing, kindly manner.

"'Have you been up town yet?' I asked.

"'No,' she replied, 'We have been so busy, and we have no acquaintances there to draw us, so we have delayed going, but if the weather continues nice, and nothing prevents, we shall take a walk up there next Sunday.'

"'If you do, you must call and see mother and me,' said I, telling her where we lived and how to find the house. She said she should enjoy calling on us if she could get Mr. Darwin to come in, as, like most men, he was shy about entering strangers' houses.

"Then Myra, in her blunt way, spoke up and said, 'Why haven't you been over to church, Mrs. Darwin? We have two churches, Methodist and Campbellite, so you can have your choice, or, maybe you don't believe in either of them.' Mrs. Darwin smiled, and said that she had been brought up a Quaker, and of course she had a partiality for that plain, quiet, steady, sober people, though she thought there were good men and good women in all sects, and outside of them too.

"'And so you are a Quaker, then,' said Myra. 'Oh! I do adore Quakers. I think they are the best people in all the world, though I never saw one before,' and she looked at Mrs. Darwin as if she was a natural curiosity of some sort, 'but,' she added, 'you don't say thee and thou, nor do you wear a kerchief folded across your breast, or drab-colored clothes.'

"'Oh! no,' said Mrs. Darwin, laughing, 'I don't pretend to be a real Quaker, though I love many of the dear old ways and thoughts. I never was one of the precise, straight-laced kind. I have a way of my own, you see, and do what I think is right and proper without following church fashions, or any other fashions, farther than it is convenient or desirable. I like individuality and independence as long as they do not interfere with the rights of others, or make one's self disagreeable or offensive.'

"'That's precisely my way of thinking, I do hate this running after style, and straining every nerve to dress like other folks, which makes a company of men and women resemble a set of puppets in a show or a pile of candles made in one mould. I am glad to find we think so much alike, and that you are not really such a horrid, wicked Infidel as we heard you were, but that you talk and act just like other folks,' said Myra, in her blunt, explosive way, though I trod on her toes to give her a hint not to be so impolite. But Mrs. Darwin just smiled and said in her motherly, pleasant manner, 'I trust, my dear young lady, that you, and all others of our neighbors, will judge us by what we do and say, and not by what strangers, who know nothing of us, tell about us. Let our lives speak for us. The tree is known by its fruits, and men should be known by their deeds.' 'Yes, that's fair and candid,' said Myra, 'and I know we shall all like you ever so much. I am sure I do already.'

"Just then the door opened, and a tall, queenly-looking girl of twenty years of age entered the room, and, as she came gracefully forward, Mrs. Darwin introduced her as her oldest daughter, Rose. Bowing, and smiling with her mother's cordial smile, she shook hands with us, and we were soon chatting together like old acquaintances. In a sunny window were a few pot-plants in full bloom—begonias, roses, verbenas, hyacinths, eraniums, fuchsias, and the old-fashioned hydrangea. As we got up to look at them more particularly, Rose said, apologetically, 'We have but few small plants this season, as we could not move many of them so far, but we carefully tend what we have so as to make them do their very best. I inherit my mother's passionate admiration of flowers, and feel lost if I do not have a few about me all the time.'

"'Oh, yes,' said Minnie, 'Rose is almost crazy on the subject of flowers. Just wait till we have been here a year or two, and you will see them in every corner of the yard, and I should not wonder if she had some growing about the factory too.' Then she passed into an adjoining room and soon returned with a large portfolio, saying, 'Now, girls, if you are done looking at the real flowers I will show you some painted ones,' and taking out a pile of the most beautiful little sketches, she spread them before us. There were wild flowers of every shade and hue, and often a bit of the natural landscape surrounding them just as they grew in their native homes. Garden and hot-house flowers too, in all their gorgeous beauty, massed in groups and alone, each with the name beneath in beautifully illuminated script, and the place where found, together with the day and date and sometimes a few lines descriptive of the occasion. I could have looked at them all day; I am so fond of paintings, especially of flowers, you know. Seeing how I admired them, Minnie insisted upon my acceptance of a little group of forget-me-nots as a token of friendship.

"See! here it is," and she took from the mantelshelf a small picture in a rustic frame and handed it to the girls to look at. A little spring at the foot of a tall, gray old oak sent out a merry, laughing stream of bubbling, silvery water, and along its margin grew the tiny flowers, blue as the purest azure, and all around them the grass was just as green as grass could be, while halfway up the rock in a deep crevice grew a clump of birch bushes, and on the tip of one of the tallest twigs of the birch sat a robin apparently singing at the top of its voice. It was truly a gem, and joy and gladness beamed all over it.

"And is it a natural scene, Edith?" asked Sue.

"Oh, yes," replied Edith, "Minnie told me it grew within half a mile of their old home, and said she had sat by that spring many and many a time with some chosen friend or a book for a companion."

"I wonder she was willing to part with it, and to a stranger, too," said Jennie.

"She had several sketches of the same spot, or I presume she would not, nor would I have been willing to accept it had it been the only souvenir," said Edith; "but I'll go on with my story. We had just looked at the last picture when we heard the silvery tinkle of a little bell, and Rose got up and invited us to walk out to supper. We were surprised to find it was so late, and insisted we ought to start for home, but Rose said her mother would feel hurt unless we stayed, now that she had it all ready for us, so we followed her to the large, pleasant dining-room, where we found a nice meal had been prepared for us by Mrs. Darwin, who had slipped out quietly while we were all admiring the flowers and pictures. Our walk had given us a good appetite and we enjoyed our supper very much, enlivened as it was by the cheerful talk of Mrs. Darwin and the girls. By the time we had eaten it was growing dark, so we hastily took our leave, inviting them to be sure and return our call at the earliest opportunity."

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Discussion.

The Bennett-Teed Discussion.

I.—JESUS CHRIST IS NOT ONLY DIVINE, BUT IS THE LORD GOD, CREATOR OF HEAVEN AND EARTH.

MORAVIA, Jan. 1st, 1877.

MR. D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: In my last I promised to present some proofs of my positions, that you are pleased to term, "mere speculations," "assumptions," &c. But before doing so, as you have asked me how I know that my statements are facts, if it will not be discourteous I will reply, Yankee-like, by asking you how you know that the Universe "is infinite, boundless, endless in every direction, having no limits or circumference, can also have no center"? for you say, "It would rather seem consistent to me that a Universe which is infinite," &c. Friend B., how do you know? Who was so wise as to be able to inform you that an existence, which you assert has form, is boundless, limitless, &c.? If you define form, you make boundaries, limitations, centres, and circumferences, properties of form. If you can define form without admitting the above factors or properties, I will be pleased to see your definition. It would be at least as novel and as singular as my thoughts seem to you. There can be no form without limitations, boundaries, &c. Show me one thing that comes within the ken of your perception that has form, without the properties of form, including boundaries, and limitations, or that approximates it, and I will accede to your "mere speculation," and "assumption," that the Universe, which you declare has form, is such an entity. The testimony is all in my favor. Inasmuch as all the presentations that have come within the scope of your and my perception are compassed with limits, it is logical for me to conclude—law being uniform—if there is anything I do not comprehend I may safely submit it to the same rule.

You make the declaration that you do not embrace the Universe in your comprehension; still you assume to know that it is boundless. It is illogical for you to say a thing is indefinable because, as you assert, you have not the mental calibre to embrace or grasp it, and define its boundaries.

am well aware that in the demonstration that Jesus Christ is Lord God, creator of heaven and earth, &c., very much is involved, even all the "whirligig" of creation itself. The fact that Jesus is Lord cannot be known, except on faith, till a positive knowledge is acquired of the structure of the physical and the spiritual Universe. The Universe has a physical form which is absolute, definite and understandable.

My peculiar relation to what is termed Liberalism, and to the modern church, renders my position somewhat incomprehensible to those who make no distinction between primitive Christianity, the religion of Jesus, and the spurious kind that goes commonly for the "true and undefiled," for the scourging of which that which you represent is made a whip of small cords. I oppose modern science, the continent of modern Atheism. I am also opposed to modern Christianity, a system of adulterous religion compounded of the ethics of Jesus—the involved germ of all prior ages—and the paganism projected from the past into Imperial Rome, and still further into Ecclesiastical Rome, thence into their product, the Protestant churches, the prostituted daughters of a harlot mother. My religion is that of Jesus Christ, which is founded upon an exact knowledge of physical creation, positively known by Jesus, and revealed again to-day through the operation of an illumined intellect.

Before presenting the proofs that I purpose to adduce, I would call the attention of yourself and your readers to the fact that in the book you despise it is recorded that in the end of the dispensation which began with Jesus, a power would arise that would attempt to destroy the truth, the genuine religion of Jesus Christ, and that by this power the old church, which would then have become a prostitute, would be overcome. This power is called in the book, anti-Christ (opposed to Christ). You, with the power you represent, and by which you are sustained in your effort, declare your purpose and ability to accomplish this object. You thus fulfill the prediction (if sufficient to the task you have undertaken) and establish the accuracy of the prophecy beyond a question. It matters not when the prediction was made, even if, as you assert, there is no proof that it was written prior to two hundred years subsequent to the reputed birth of Jesus. This power was not to be manifest till there should be a falling away; not till the church, in its externals, had completely prostituted the truths and goods of religion. When this is effected, the power is to come forth, having two horns like a lamb—Church and State—and speaking as a dragon—disintegrating Church and State—which is to cause a divorce or separation of two principles, without the absolute union of which there can be no perpetual continuity. This power is now manifest in Spiritualism and Materialism, between which there is an incompatible union sufficiently binding to fulfill the prediction, after which, according to the continuance of the prophecy it must also fall, for it contains the elements of its own destruction.

You declare your intention of destroying the power of Christianity, and like G. F. T., I suppose you consider yourself "booked for the war," and though my "whirligig" makes your head swim, and the "amusement" is becoming "Teedious," I trust you will not get discouraged in the contest till you are convinced of the anthropomorphic character of God, and that it is not only possible that all that is highest and best to be incarnated in human form, through the never-failing processes of immutable law, is a necessity as well; or till you are doubly confirmed in the atheism you teach, and till through your efforts you have effected the solidarity of all atheistic power in the definite purpose to unitedly contend for the destruction of Christian principles.

My Lord cannot come in the resurrection except through methods. One essential to his perfect manifestations to his people who look for his appearing, is the mobilization of the anti-Christian power. I am therefore not only willing that your paper, with all others of similar character, should have a large circulation; but I am anxious to increase the circulation of THE TRUTH SEEKER, that the truth, and the doctrines it advocates should stand conspicuously side by side. Not that I claim that my arguments will appeal to the reason of all, but that the incision may be made which shall bisect the Divine Jew from the Babylonian power that now holds him in captivity, and thus complete the separation of the two powers for the coming conflict.

The conclusions that I have reached, some of which were presented in my last communication, are invested by the truths of physical science which constitute their foundation and continent. You and our readers are familiar with the fact that physical substances vary in weight according to their kind and quality. Platinum is heavier than gold, gold is heavier than mercury, mercury is heavier than silver, &c. I trust this is sufficiently material for the comprehension of yourself and our readers. You are also aware that the classical name given to designate the law of this property of matter, which Newton did not discover, is gravitation, from gravus, another word for heavy. Specific gravity is the relative weights of substances as calculated from a given substance the weight of which is denominated zero, or nothing, because constituting the medium between the heavier and lighter substances.

Let atmosphere be taken as our zero. We readily define its outlines and location, and the relative or specific gravity of water, and consequently the specific or normal relation of water in nature to atmosphere. We find them, according to this law, in contiguity; common air resting upon water as its base or foundation. By penetrating water from the level of the sea to a given distance, a point is reached below which air will not naturally penetrate or settle. We thus reach its lower confines or boundary. If we take the relative weights of common air and water as the mean ratio of our calculations, we designate a specific set or series of substances, including platinum, gold, mercury, &c., that will present a regular ratio of increase of weight. In applying the same principle to the substances whose levitation is greater than our zero, as the more rarefied atmosphere, we are able to define the normal positions in nature of the rarer or less dense substances, and locate them with the same absolute precision. All substances may be found beyond or without (outside) their normal spheres. We will not now stop to inquire into the causes of their dislocations. The law of gravity fixes definitely their normal relative positions, and from this datum we may begin the study of universal physical form, and determine the specific outlines of every substance in its normal sphere, in the physical Universe. This is not "assumption" but the knowledge of a fact—or law revealed through the rational mind. Of course, in presenting to our readers a view of the internal and external structure of the little world we inhabit, I antagonize no well-defined "scientific" thought. The wild idea of a state of igneous fusion has occupied a prominent place in the scientific mind, but is becoming every day less tenable, and is not clung to with any marked degree of tenacity.

The world has a definite form; this you will not deny, and you will concede that the so-called learned are very ignorant of its structure, beyond a superficial (surface) knowledge. A "learned" man who does not know the nature of the structural arrangement of his own physical habitation I consider ignorant indeed.

From the above estimate of the relations of substances in their normal spheres, they would be found in strata, or layers, contiguous to and upon one another—the solid substances comprising a comparatively thin crust or shell, which would constitute the investment of whatsoever it contained. In future I shall present the rules for calculating the depth of each substance and its precise distance from our point of physical observation, the earth's surface, and also the laws for determining what is contained in the shell.

In the application of the principle we find pure hydrogen to occupy a position resting upon our atmosphere and forming a stratum immediately above it. To make this point still more clear, I will present you with the known fact that common air, placed in a light receptacle, such as a bladder, and sunk below the surface of water, will rise to the top of the water. It simply obeys the law of gravitation, or levitation, as you please; it seeks its level and its affinity. If hydrogen is placed in the bladder and left to the operation of the same law, it obeys the tendency and seeks its level and affinity. If the receptacle could be made impervious to endosmosis and exosmosis, the bladder containing the hydrogen would rise till it reached the confines of our atmosphere, and would there float, as air would float on water in the bladder. It seeks and finds its kind, and floats in its own rarefied ether. The above conclusion is the rusult of absolutely correct reasoning, and needs only a liberal circulation to gain a liberal endorsement.

You and our readers may inquire, What has this to do with the proposition? The proposition declares Jesus Christ to be the Creator of heaven and earth. The structure of the earth and the heavens must be known before we can determine the precise relation of humanity to the physical structure he inhabits, and which, as singular as it may appear, he also created.

In presenting the fact to the world of the existence of a stratum of hydrogen above (and in contiguity to) our atmosphere, I necessarily involve the "scientific" mind in inextricable confusion, for it deranges the pet theories regarding all stellar and solar phenomena, and presents the physical Universe to the mind in an entirely new phase. I have arrived at the above conclusions by the application of a divinely illumined reason to the observation of physical facts, entirely independent of the teachings of the Bible, but I am most happy to be able to inform you that they are confirmed by the great and wise men who have before made the same observations and recorded them in the book you condemn and seek to destroy. The confirmation may be found in the following: "And God said, Let there be a firmament in the midst of the waters: and let it divide the waters from the waters. And God made the firmament, and divided the waters which were under the firmament from the waters which were above the firmament, and it was so. And God called the firmament Heaven" (Gen. i, 6-8). The word hydrogen is a compound of two Greek words—hudor, water, and gennao, to produce. Hydrogen is the water-producer, according to the application of the term employed to designate it, and it is simply water in its positive or male form, and its normal location is where the wise man discovered it to be, above the atmosphere, constituting a stratum, beneath which is the atmosphere or firmament he denominated heaven. Under this firmament is the water in its negative condition, which is gathered together continually into the sea. I claim that this is but the physical or material application of this scripture. Its higher applications relate to the structure of the regenerated humanity, evolved through the physical Universe, and corresponding to it in his celestial, spiritual, mental and physical organization.

In submitting the above, I will not be so ungrateful as to forget to thank you for the concession you made in your last letter, yielding the point regarding the existence of mind as coexistent with, and as perpetual as matter. As you have yielded to the first, I may hope you may accede to the second step in our discussion.

Permit me to call attention to a typographical error in the sentence, "He did this through the law of mutation, completion, or fulfilling," etc. It should read "completing or fulfilling." Yours with respect,

CYRUS ROMULUS R. TEED.

Scientific Department.

Tyndall on Man's Soul.

THE PHILOSOPHER'S RECENT ADDRESS AT BIRMINGHAM.

THE FREEDOM OF THE WILL.

Is the will of man, in other words, free, or are it and nature equally "bound fast in fate?" From this latter conclusion, after he had established it to the entire satisfaction of his understanding, the great German thinker Fichte recoiled. You will find the record of this struggle between head and heart in his book, entitled "Die Bessimmung des Menschen"—"The Vocation of Man." Fichte was determined at all hazards to maintain his freedom, but the price he paid for it, indicates the difficulty of the task. To escape from the iron necessity seen everywhere reigning in physical nature, he turned defiantly round upon nature and law, and affirmed both of them to be the products of his own mind. He was not going to be the slave of a thing which he had himself created. There is a good deal to be said in favor of this view, but few of us probably would be able to bring into play the solvent transcendentalism whereby Fichte melted his chains. Why do some of us regard this notion of necessity with terror, while others do not fear it at all? Has not Carlyle somewhere said that a belief in destiny is the bias of all earnest minds? "It is not nature," says Fichte, "it is freedom itself by which the greatest and most terrible disorders incident to our race are produced. Man is the cruelest enemy of man." But the question of moral responsibility here emerges, and it is the possible loosening of this responsibility that so many of us dread. The notion of necessity certainly failed to frighten Bishop Butler. He thought it untrue, but he did not fear its practical consequences. He showed, on the contrary, in the "Analogy," that as far as human conduct is concerned, the two theories of free will and necessity come to the same in the end. What is meant by free will? Does it imply the power of producing events without antecedents—of starting, as it were, upon a creative tour of occurrences, without any impulse from within or from without? Let us consider the point. If there is absolutely or relatively no reason why a tree should fall, it will not fall; and if there be absolutely or relatively no reason why a man should act, he will not act. It is true that the united voice of this assembly could not persuade me that I have not, at this moment, the power to lift my arm if I wished to do so. Within this range the conscious freedom of my will cannot be questioned. But what about the origin of the "wish"? Are we, or are we not, complete masters of the circumstances which create our wishes, motives, and tendencies to action? Adequate reflection, will, I think, prove that we are not. What, for example, have I to do with the generation and development of that which some will consider my total being, and others a most potent factor of my total being—the living, speaking organism which now addresses you? As stated at the beginning of this discourse, my physical and intellectual textures were woven for me, not by me. Processes, in the conduct or regulation of which I had no share, have made me what I am. Here, surely, if anywhere, we are as clay in the hands of the potter.

THE WHITE PAPER THEORY.

It is the greatest of delusions to suppose that we come into this world as sheets of white paper, on which the age can write anything it likes, making us good or bad, noble or mean, as the age pleases. The age can stunt, promote, or pervert preëxisting capacities, but it cannot create them. The worthy Robert Owen, who saw in external circumstances the great moulders of human character, was obliged to supplement his doctrine, by making the man himself one of the circumstances. It is as fatal as it is cowardly to blink facts because they are not to our taste. How many disorders, ghostly and bodily, are transmitted to us by inheritance? In our courts of law, whenever it is a question whether a crime has been committed under the influence of insanity, the best guidance the judge and jury can have is derived from the parental antecedents of the accused. If among these insanity be exhibited in any marked degree, the presumption in the prisoner's favor is enormously enhanced, because the experience of life has taught both judge and jury that insanity is frequently transmitted from parent to child.

SHOULD CRIMINALS BE DROWNED?

I met, some years ago, in a railway carriage, the governor of one of our largest prisons. He was evidently an observant and reflective man, possessed of wide experience gathered in various parts of the world, and a thorough student of the duties of his vocation. He told me that the prisoners in his charge might be divided into three distinct classes. The first class consisted of persons who ought never to have been in prison. External accident, and not internal taint had brought them within the grasp of the law, and what had happened to them might happen to most of us. They were essentially men of sound moral stamina though wearing the prison garb. Then came the largest class, formed of individuals, possessing no strong bias, moral or immoral, plastic to the touch of circumstances which would mould them into either good or evil members of society. Thirdly came a class—happily not a large one—whom no kindness could conciliate and no discipline tame. They were sent into this world labelled "incorrigible," wickedness being stamped, as it were, upon their organizations. It was an unpleasant truth, but as a truth it ought to be faced. For such criminals the prison over which he ruled was certainly not the proper place. If confined at all, their prison should be on a desert island, where the deadly contagion of their example could not taint the moral air. But the sea itself he was disposed to regard as a cheap and appropriate substitute for the island. It seemed to him evident that the State would benefit if prisoners of the first class were liberated, prisoners of the second class educated, and prisoners of the third class put compendiously under water.

FREE WILL AND PUNISHMENT.

It is not, however, from the observation of individuals that the argument against "free will," as commonly understood, derives its principal force. It is, as already hinted, indefinitely strengthened when extended to the race. Most of you have been forced to listen to the outcries and denunciations which rang discordant through the land for some years after the publication of Mr. Darwin's "Origin of Species." Well, the world—even the clerical world—has for the most part settled down in the belief that Mr. Darwin's book simply reflects the truth of nature; that we who are now "foremost in the files of time" have come to the front through almost endless stages of promotion from lower to higher forms of life. If to any one of us were given the privilege of looking back through the eons across which life has crept toward its present outcome, his vision would ultimately reach a point when the progenitors of this assembly could not be called human. From that humble society, through the interaction of its members and the storing up of their best qualities, a better one emerged; from this again a better still, until at length, by the integration of infinitesimals through ages of amelioration, we came to be what we are to-day. We of this generation had no conscious share in the production of this grand and benefi cent result. Any and every generation which preceded us had just a little share. The favored organisms whose garnered excellence constitutes our present store owed their advantage, first, to what we in our ignorance are obliged to call "accidental variation," and, secondly, to a law of heredity in the passing of which our suffrages were not collected. With characteristic felicity and precision, Mr. Matthew Arnold lifts this question into the free air of poetry, but not out of the atmosphere of truth, when he ascribes the process of amelioration to "a power not ourselves which makes for righteousness." If, then, our organisms, with all their tendencies and capacities, are given to us without our being consulted, and if, while capable of acting within certain limits in accordance with our wishes, we are not masters of the circumstances in which motives and wishes originate; if, finally, our motives and wishes determine our actions, in what sense can these actions be said to be the result of free will? Here again we are confronted with the question of moral responsibility, which it is desirable to meet in its rudest form and in the most uncompromising way. "If," says the robber, the ravisher, or the murderer, "I act because I must act, what right have you to hold me responsible for my deeds?" The reply is, "The right of society to protect itself against aggressive and injurious forces, whether they be bond or free, forces of nature or forces of man." "Then," retorts the criminal, "you punish me for what I cannot help." "Granted," says society, "but had you known that the treadmill or the gallows was certainly in store for you, you might have helped.' Let us reason the matter fully and frankly out. We entertain no malice or hatred against you, but simply, with a view to our own safety and purification, we are determined that you and such as you shall not enjoy liberty of evil action in our midst. You, who have behaved as a wild beast, we claim the right to cage or ki as we should a wild beast. The public safety is a matter of more importance than the very limited chance of your moral renovation, while the knowledge that you have been hanged by the neck may furnish to others about to do as you have done the precise motive which will hold them back. If your act be such as to invoke a minor penalty, then not only others, but yourself, may profit by the punishment which we inflict. On the homely principle that 'a burnt child dreads the fire,' it will make you think twice before venturing on a repetition of your crime. Observe, finally, the consistency of our conduct. You offend because you cannot help offending, to the public detriment. We punish, because we cannot help punishing, for the public good. Practically, then, as Bishop Butler predicted, we act as the world acted when it supposed the evil deeds of its criminals to be the products of free will."

[CONCLUDED NEXT WEEK.]

A Trinity of Inventions.

Science in all its departments has its romance—in Mechanics and Acoustics, for instance, no less than in Microscopy, Astronomy, and even Anthropology. We wish to call the attention of our readers this week to three little chapters in the later "Arabian Nights' Entertainments" of machine-writing, automatic reporting, and dispatching speech and music along the telegraph wire!

I. A few years ago a practical WRITING MACHINE, since termed TYPE WRITER, was invented by a Western genius. This very "handy" instrument has since been duplicated by the thousand, which are now in daily use all over the country, in newspaper, real estate, lawyers', commercial and other offices, as well as by a host of authors, writers for the press, and letter-writers generally. The Type-Writer is now in such general use that we need not offer any detailed description of it here. Suffice it to say that it makes quite a handsome piece of furniture, is purely mechanical in its operations, is worked or rather played piano-fashion, only that it has four rows of keys, each of which represents a letter of the alphabet, or a punctuation mark, or an inter-verbal space. Several handlers of this machine have easily succeeded in "writing" with it (and a most beautiful and legible writing it is) at the rate of from sixty to ninety words per minute, and quite a number of experts finger off from one hundred to one hundred and twenty, whereas the ordinary speed of handwriting is from twenty to thirty words per minute. At least twenty fair, legible "manifolds" can also be taken at once while writing with this machine, thus entirely dispensing with the need of copying apparatus, as well as with all the paraphernalia of ordinary writing, to wit, pencil, pen, holder, fluid ink, inkstand, blotter, and pen-wiper.

Of course this machine will gradually do away with the services of the pen and pencil in several departments in which they have hitherto reigned supreme; though, most probably, in caligraphy, book-keeping, note-taking and "jotting," the old instruments will still hold their wonted sway, just as horses and wagons do, in their proper places, concurrently with steam-engines and railway-cars.

We must not omit to mention that partially successful attempts to construct a practical writing-machine had often been made during the last half century, but that it was reserved for our Western genius to master the task, almost simultaneously with another genius in Europe, who has immortalized himself and Copenhagen by his famous "Writing-Ball," which is also played piano-fashion, but is constructed on a very different principle (electro-mechanical) from that of the "Type-writer," is still more effective and lasting, and is now in general use in the principal cities of Europe. Photography was simultaneously invented by Talbot and Daguerre. Neptune was simultaneously discovered by Adams and Leverrier. Why should not writing-machines be perpetrated at one and the same time by a Chicago eccentric and a Copenhagen clergyman?

II. Concerts lately held in New York and Brooklyn, have demonstrated that music—not the best to be sure, but still music, and ever improving—could be sent by the player in Philadelphia under three rivers and through the down-town office of the telegraph company, so strong in volume as to be distinctly heard in Steinway Hall in this city, notwithstanding the storm raging the same evening. The same experiment has also been successfully tried in several other cities and even villages. This is done by means of the wonderful TELEPHONE, a thing, as it were, of yesterday.

On that very hot Sunday, July 2, 1876, eminent scientists and others met the Judges of Award in the Main Building of the Centennial International Exhibition at Philadelphia, to examine some striking novelties of a mechanical and scientific nature. A small group of gentlemen entered the great edifice (it was on a Sunday, remember, when the gates were open only to a choice few), and stationed themselves in the gallery at the east end. "The party divided, and half went to each end of the gallery. The great organ was between, and neither party could hear or see the other. Then Prof. A. Graham Bell [son of the famous inventor of "Visible Speech"] brought out his telephone. Wires for telegraphing were laid along the gallery; a battery was set at work, and a continuous current was sent along the line. The stations on this line were only two; one at each end of the gallery. At each station there was a little ordinary electro-magnet, such as people see usually on the table in a small telegraph office, and are in general familiar with. Beside the magnet there was nothing except a few funnels. These were of different shapes, but they agreed in each having one end covered with stretched parchment, like a drum-head. On the center of each of these drum-heads, outside, a small piece of metal was cemented fast. . . . . In the earlier stages of the invention the funnel was used for receiving as well as for sending sound. The instructions for use were very simple. The sender of a message was to talk into one funnel, the receiver was to apply the other funnel to his ear. Each was to hold his funnel so that the parchment would be opposite the poles of the electro-magnet, and very close to them; just so that the little piece of metal mounted on the parchment should not quite touch the poles." Among the telephone talkers of that successful occasion were the Emperor of Brazil, Dr. Draper, Sir William Thompson, and Professors Hilgard, Watson, Morton, and Barnard. From that memorable cosmopolitan palaver and pow-wow grew our wonderful telephonic concerts, successfully overcoming time, tide, space, and seeming fate.

Elisha Gray, of Chicago, also exhibited a "tuning-fork telephone" of his own invention at the Centennial Exhibition. It was a greater success than Bell's in sending music by electricity. In Gray's as in Bell's, a continuous current from a main battery is required. But "by using in the sending apparatus, in addition to the main current, a current from smaller, special batteries, one for each note, Mr. Gray has achieved a further improvement. By this the intensity of a musical note is given, as well as the note itself. Chords of two or three notes can also be transmitted." But still "the Gray telephone can only transmit two of the three characteristics of musical sound; i. e. pitch and intensity, but no quality. . . . On the other hand, no matter what may be the height, length, or frequency of the sound waves that strike the stretched membrane in the Bell telephone, their exact counterpart in vibration can be reproduced at the other end of the line," though "essentially feeble."

But a greater telephonic good than either of the above has lately come to us from that Nazareth of the United States—New Jersey. Mr. Thomas A. Edison, the renowned electrician of that State, has lately perfected his speaking and singing telephone, so as to leave nothing more to be desired as to pitch, intensity, quality, and precise articulation, in the last of which both the other instruments were often quite ludicrously and lamentably defective. We have no room to attempt a description of Mr. Edison's very wonderful and still very simple invention.

III. But still a far greater good than all these comes from the American Nazareth! Mr. Edison has at last verily performed a miracle, fully worthy of the nineteenth century! "In the course of a series of extended experiments in the production of his speaking telephone," he "conceived the highly bold and original idea of recording the human voice upon a strip of paper, from which, at any subsequent time it might be automatically re-delivered with all the vocal characteristics of the original speaker accurately reproduced. A speech delivered into the mouthpiece of this apparatus may fifty years hence—long after the original speaker is dead—be reproduced audibly to an audience with sufficient fidelity to make the voice easily recognized by those who were familiar with the original." Mr. Edison has already applied the principle of his speaking telephone to this most wonderful new invention of his—very appropriately called the PHONOGRAPH—and "will undoubtedly be able to transmit a speech made upon the floor of the Senate, from Washington to New York, record the same in New York automatically, and by means of speaking telephones re-deliver it in the editorial ear of every newspaper in New York." Nay, more. "The orator in Boston speaks, the indented strip of paper is the tangible result; but this travels under a second machine which may connect with the telephone. Not only is the speaker heard now in San Francisco, for example, but by passing the strip again under the reproducer he may be heard to-morrow, or next year, or next century. His speech in the first instance is recorded and transmitted simultaneously, and indefinite repetition is possible. . . . Will letter-writing be a thing of the past? Why not, if by simply talking into a mouthpiece our speech is rendered on paper, and our correspondent can by the same paper hear us speak? Are we to have a new kind of books? There is no reason why the orations of our modern Ciceros should not be recorded and detachably bound so that we can run the indented slips through the machine, and in the quiet of our own apartments listen again, and as often as we will, to the eloquent words. Nor are we restricted to spoken words. Music may be crystallized as well. Imagine an opera or an oratorio, sung by the greatest living vocalists, thus recorded, and capable of being repeated as we desire."

No wonder that two of our most cautious metropolitan papers have broken out as follows in contemplation of this little machine and its immense possibilities: "It has been said that science is never sensational; that it is intellectual, not emotional. But certainly nothing that can be conceived would be more likely to create the profoundest of sensations, to arouse the liveliest of human emotions, than once more to hear the familiar voices of the dead. Yet Science now announces that this is possible, and can be done. That the voices of those who departed before the invention of this wonderful apparatus are forever stilled is too obvious a truth; but whoever has spoken or whoever may speak into the mouthpiece of the Phonograph, and whose words are recorded by it, has the assurance that his speech may be reproduced audibly in his own tones long after he himself has turned to dust. The possibility is simply startling. A strip of indented paper travels through a little machine, and our great-grandchildren or posterity centuries hence hear us as plainly as if we were present. Speech has become, as it were, immortal."

Since penning the above we learn that Mr. Edison has still further improved his Phonograph. The Sun, one day last week, thus reported progress:—"Mr. Edison had his improved machine on private exhibition in the Western Union Telegraph office on Monday, and President Orton and a number of other gentlemen connected with the company tested its extraordinary powers of repeating spoken words. On one occasion three gentlemen spoke in succession—the first in English, the second in Spanish, and the third in Hungarian—and the machine repeated the words so as to be heard distinctly by a dozen persons standing around the apparatus. 'Old Uncle Ned' and a verse of a Spanish love song were next sung, and reproduced to the satisfaction of all. . . So accurately are the words repeated that a gentleman who was present at the exhibition yesterday would not believe that the sounds were made by it. He insisted that it was a ventriloquial performance, and would not be convinced until Mr. Edison retired into another room while the instrument was worked by some one else." And the last Scientific American commences an exhaustive illustrated article on "The Talking Phonograph" in this simple but wonderfully suggestive wise: "Mr. Thomas A. Edison recently came into this office, placed a little machine on our desk, turned a crank, and the machine inquired as to our health, asked how we liked the Phonograph, informed us that it was very well, and bid us a cordial good-night. These remarks were not only perfectly audible to onrselves, but to a dozen or more persons gathered around, and they were produced by the aid of no other mechanism than the simple little contrivance explained and illustrated below." After giving a running description of the machine (which we shall have the pleasure of presenting to our readers in our next issue), the article goes on to say: "This is a part of the sentences, 'How do you do?' and 'How do you like the Phonograph?' It is a little curious that the machine pronounces its own name with especial clearness. The crank handle shown in our perspective illustration of the device does not necessarily belong to it, and was attached by Mr. Edison, in order to faciliate its exhibition to us. . . . No matter how familiar a person may be with modern machinery and its wonderful performances, or how clear in his mind the principle underlying this device may be, it is impossible to listen to its mechanical speech without his experiencing the idea that his senses are deceiving him. . . But here is a little affair of a few pieces of metal, set up roughly on an iron stand about a foot square, that talks in such a way that . . there can be no doubt but that the inflections are those of nothing else than the human voice.

"We have already pointed out the startling possibility of the voices of the dead being re-heard through this device, and there is no doubt but that its capabilities are fully equal to other results just as astonishing, When it becomes possible, as it doubtless will, to magnify the sound, the voices of such singers as Parepa and Titiens will not die with them, but will remain as long as the metal in which they may be embodied will last. The witness in court will find his own testimony repeated by machines confronting him on cross-examination—the testator will repeat his last will and testament into the machine so that it will be reproduced in a way that will leave no question as to his devising capacity or sanity. It is already possible by ingenious optical contrivances to throw stereoscopic photographs of people on screens in full view of an audience. Add the talking photograph to counterfeit their voices, and it would be difficult to carry the illusion of real presence much further."

As the Type-Writer is destined to materially interfere with the pen, and the Telephone with ordinary telegraphy, so the Phonograph will drive Short-hand (both phonetic and non-phonetic) almost entirely out of the market in several important departments of its use. The great question now is, What will supersede the Phonograph?

In one of our next numbers we shall have something to say about another trinity of much-needed inventions, and their revolutionary relations to the great presiding trinity of human comfort—food, shelter, and clothing.

CAENIBUS.

Correspondence Extraordinary.

Letters from the Devil.—No. II.

My Dear Readers: I am glad to address you again and to see that you greet me with evident marks of pleasure and approbation. As we become better acquainted I trust you will find that I am not so bad as I have been painted, but rather, that I am a genial, social, harmless, good sort of fellow. I know I shall take pleasure in conversing with you and imparting knowledge and instruction to your minds, and it will give me more pleasure than anything else to find you interested and attentive to what I have to say. I assure you it will afford me more joy than almost anything in existence to illuminate your minds with the truth, and to drive old errors and superstitions from your thoughts and memories.

I suppose before I engage in other historic details about what has gone on in the life of this planet, it will be very proper to tell you something about my own origin. It has for many centuries been a very puzzling question how I ever came into existence. Pious people have insisted that my Big Brother, whom ths Jews called Jehovah and several other names, got up everything and everybody that has an existence, and that he also made me.

Thousands have wondered, too, how a god so good as my Big Brother has had the credit of being could ever find it in his heart to get up a devil with such horribly bad characteristics as my enemies have persisted in holding that I possess. Why God ever made the Devil has been one of the most difficult conundrums to solve that poor human nature has ever had to grapple with. How perfect goodness could bring into existence perfect badness, how a good and benevolent God who had only the good of his creatures in view could make such a woful blunder as to create a being who would be evil enough and powerful enough to not only work against and circumvent his creator in his every enterprise, but to succeed also in securing the destruction and misery, not only in this life, but through the countless ages of a never-ending eternity, of innumerable millions of innocent, helpless and unfortunate human beings created by the same God, has been a problem and a puzzle that all the divines and wise men of the world have been unable to explain.

It must be evident to the commonest comprehension that if such a creation ever did take place it was done purposely, with malice aforethought, or that it was a mistake,—a result that was not originally intended. If the first is true, the Creator must have been as evil as the vile being he created, and is worthy of more hatred and detestation than the creature he had simply brought into existence. If the second alternative is true, that making so bad a being as myself was a mistake or an unforeseen result, it makes the Creator unequal to the work he wished to perform and unable to carry out what he had undertaken—an imperfect being of limited power, but who was capable of creating a being able to defeat his Maker, to destroy all his plans and to frustrate all his grand calculations. This view of the matter limits the power of the Creator to that of a finite being, and makes the thing created more powerful than the Creator.

Now, my friends, this view of the matter, known as the theological view is all wrong—containing no more of truth than does the old silly story that the moon is made of green cheese. The fact is, my Brother did not create me, nor is he superior to me, only in malice, revenge, and hard-hearted cruelty. He is no older than I am, as I said in my first letter. If there is any priority as to age it is in my favor, as I will show you after awhile. We were of the same origin, as were also the numerous others of my brothers and sisters, brothers, more especially, who have been worshiped as gods and devils for thouands of years back in the dawn of the present race of humanity on the earth.

Before giving you the real source whence proceeded myself and my numerous relatives, I will review some of the theories that have been entertained upon the subject.

The first shall be the extra-wise and metaphysical view. According to that theory my Brother—he that is called "Jehovah"—and myself, have existed for a very, very long time; that we were before anything else in existence, that we lived long before there was a sun, a moon, an earth, stars or worlds or matter in any shape; long before there was anything or any place to put it. According to this theory, about one hundred and seventy-nine million years ago the first day of last April, my Brother and I one pleasant morning just stepped into existence without any regard to previous condition of servitude, that is, that on that momentous occasion we sprang unceremoniously into life and came forth a full fledged god and a full fledged devil, armed and equipped as the law directs.

It has been claimed by some that Time was our father and Space our mother, but as neither of them existed before our birth you see how erroneous the supposition is that they were our parents. Parents, you know, must be older than their children, though in the instance of the Christian Trinity you will remember the Father and Son are held to be of the same age. With respect to my distinguished Brother and myself, our parents must have been Nothing and Nowhere, one our father, the other our mother. How such intangible, unsubstantial, inconceivable, unapproachable, impossible nonentities could woo and wed and bring forth two such extraordinary personages as my illustrious Brother and my illustrious self, and how we became so powerful as to be able to manufacture countless millions of worlds, suns and systems from nothing and how we got up the space in which to locate them, and how we placed them hundreds and thousands of millions of miles apart, setting them whirling and revolving and inter-revolving, system within system, constellation within constellation, are greater marvels than was or ever can be clearly explained.

For you must know, my friends, when this little business was performed—when space was created, when time was begun, before which point there was no time; when matter, in its endless infinity to fill this equally endless infinity of expanse without limit or end, was first gotten up; when the thousands of forms, combinations and modifications of matter were devised and set into existence; when the subtle forces inherent in matter and ever attendant upon it—such as attraction, repulsion, adhesion, cohesion, chemical affinity, gravitation, electricity, magnetism, light, heat, gases, fluids, liquids, solids, etc., etc.,—were devised, planned and gotten up, that I was there as much as anybody. My imperious Brother had no more to do with it than I had. In fact, I have been on hand with him in every enterprise, undertaking and speculation that he has undertaken. He has never gone into any grand experiment, nor launched into any stupendous piece of manufacture or creation but that I had just as much to do with it as he did. If there has been any difference I have always been the quickest and sharpest in seeing the nature of cause and effect, the inharmonies and infelicities constantly arising when unnatural conditions were attempted; and though I say it myself, my advice and foresight have saved his making many egregious blunders. I will just tell you in confidence, right here, that my haughty and consequential Brother, with all the claims he has set up, and all the dignity and majesty he still tries to maintain, is not a little thick-headed and obtuse, and has undertaken some of the wildest and most impracticable schemes that a god ever rushed into. I have saved him thousands of times from many a disastrous mistake, when he was willing to listen to my suggestions; but it is so natural for him to be headstrong, self-sufficient, imperious, and overbearing, that he was unwilling to listen to my good advice; and many a time has he had to "repent" of his rashness and of his ignorance of the forces of Nature and of cause and effect, etc.

How such a remarkable pair of boys as my Brother and myself were begotten by such parents as we had, how our mother carried us through that immense period of gestation—for you must know that nine months would never have answered to have perfected in the fœtal state such notables. Nine thousand years would be more like the time necessary to complete such babes as we were. All this would be curious information for you if I could fully impart it to your comprehension. But you see my mother never told me all about just how it was and with all my ability you can hardly expect that I could know much of what was taking place before I was born. But when I was born I was there and knew all about it. It is, in fact, the first thing I can remember. Prior to that time my existence had not amounted to the dignity of a dream. I think I was in a semi-comatose state, and I know that Brother of mine was as stupid as an unborn marsupial.

You may be curious to know whether we were twins. Well, I'll tell you. We were partly twins and partly not twins. We were conceived at about the same time, but I being naturally the smartest and most active child, I very easily performed the process of gestation in about one hundred and nineteen and a half months less time than my brother required. That little circumstance gave me an immense advantage over him, and had I not possessed such an amiable, unaspiring and yielding disposition, I could easily have been God Almighty myself, and left him to be the despised devil which I have been for all these thousands of years. I have often thought that it was the greatest mistake in my entire existence that I did not in my early career maintain my rights more persistently, and hold the authority and prerogatives that were so justly mine. But, you see I was always too easy and too good-natured for my own good. I was very affectionate and fond of my young Brother, and I petted him and made a great deal of him, but he being of a grasping, imperious, haughty turn of mind, he very easily fell into the way of thinking that he was better than I, that he must be the Chief Ruler in the Universe, and that I must be his lackey and take a mean and subordinate position.

I w anot selfish nor proud. I thought my Brother was a good-looking little fellow, and it used to amuse me to see him strut around and put on airs when he was hardly three years old. He said he was born to command, and that every body and every thing had got to go just as he said. He was the most ambitious, haughty little fellow ever seen, and I have laughed many a time to watch him exhibiting majestic airs, and to hear him give his commands to imaginary attendants. He soon got so that he thought I was his servant, and that it was my duty to obey his orders and to run to attend to every whim and caprice that might possess his mind. He was the most remarkable child for crotchets and notions that ever was born, and it kept me busy even during the days of his infancy and childhood to attend to all his wants.

I suppose I was the sweetest dispositioned person in my youthful days that ever had a disposition. It afforded me more pleasure to gratify the notions and desires of my younger Brother than anything else I knew of. He was full of his whims and he gave more orders than a young Duke. You ought to have seen me flying around like a smart squire to execute his commands. Many a time have I lost my dinner just to please him, in running of errands, and going for this and that and the other. I am afraid I nearly spoilt him; aud if he has within the last three or four thousand years manifested a good many unamiable traits of character, I have frequently asked myself if I was not in part to blame by humoring him during his childhood and youth in every whim and fancy that seized him. Had he been like me, the humoring would have done him no harm; but he was so selfish, the back of his head ran up so high, he was so hasty and impetuous, and was so fond of everything going just as he said, and I was so good-natured and self-sacrificing that I indulged him altogether too much; and the people on your little globe have had to suffer for it since. Yes, if I had to do it all over again I would take a different course. I would hold the command in my own hands, and curb his extravagant notions.—I would be God and let him be the Devil. But, after all, I am sure I have made a better Devil than he would have made; for in that capacity he would have treated the human race far worse than I have done; and with all the goodness that has been attributed to him, and with all the excellencies that he ought to possess by virtue of the position he has attempted to fill, I still insist that I have been more of a friend to the race of mankind than he has, and they may still look for more sympathy and more kindness of heart from me than from him.

This letter is getting about as long as our editor prescribed for me, and I shall have to leave the description of the early occupation and enterprises of my Brother aud myself till my next letter. We performed some pretty extensive exploits and filled some enormous contracts, as you will see as we jog along together.

I hope you will all be as happy as you can this cold weather, and that you will preserve an equable, placid and peaceful state of mind is my earnest desire. I am your most obedient servant,

Lucifer,
Vulgarly called "Splitfoot."

Answers to Inquirers.

W. E. A.—Is it true that those who subsist wholly on vegetable diet are liable to lose their mental power and vigor in old age? Ans.—We do not think there is a very good foundation for such a belief. We should be inclined to inquire whether there were not a likelier cause, antedating, perhaps, the change in diet, which does not always overcome the effect, especially when the cause is not removed.

H. Brooks.—Is it a fact, as alleged, that one Judge Paige from Iowa and a Catholic priest from Dublin have challenged R. G. Ingersoll to debate and he declined? If so, why? Ans.—A challenge, purporting to come from a Catholic priest in Ireland, was published by Judge Paige; but it was such a jumble of metaphysics and religious insanity that Col. Ingersoll wrote a semi-humorous, semi-sarcastic reply and dismissed it as being unworthy of serious attention. Life is too short and time too valuable to be wasted on every religious monomaniac who wants to prove by the Bible that the Bible is divine.

G. Hover.—If St. Anthony intercepts letters addressed to Mr. J. Christ without a warrant, or order from him, will not the said Anthony be guilty of robbing the mail? Ans.—Yes. And if he should intercept letters addressed to Mary, the mother of God, or to Mrs. St. Anna, God's grandmother, he would be guilty of robbing both mail and female.

X. Y. Z.—Can you tell me of a reliable remedy for Diphtheria and throat diseases? Ans.—Old Dr. Field's remedy, which we see is being generally adopted, is this: Put a teaspoonful of the flour of brimstone into a wine-glass of water, and mix well. Use this as a gargle. "It kills every species of fungus in man or beast." We would recommend swallowing the gargle—it can do no harm. In extreme cases the sulphur may be blown gradually into the throat through a quill, or the fumes may be inhaled from a shovel or coal if care is used. Fumigate your rooms.

The Radical Pulpit.

The Departed Years.

SERMON BY O. B. FROTHINGHAM, DELIVERED SUNDAY, DECEMBER 30, 1877.

It is natural for men to make a distinction in points of time, and, standing in the midst of the rushing year, to look back upon the past and forward to the future. Nature observes no such distinction; the years flow on with uninterrupted speed, they are all welded closely together, each opens and closes a turn of life. We speak of the flow of years. It is a flow bearing the human race on. No thoughtful person, looking back over the departed years, can fail to see the progress in human affairs, with the human race advancing, with the universe maturing, with things becoming better and not worse. The first principle with all those who reason on human affairs, let it be an open question in regard to the methods, whether it goes in circles, whether on a continuous stright line, whether by the action of ebb and flood, now setting back, now pushing forth, at all events whatever the method, the movement onward is undoubted. Looking far back over the centuries of time the fact stands out in the most conspicuous manner. Looking even a very little back, looking back a few years, anybody who scrutinizes the past cannot fail to see that mistakes have been corrected, that blunders have been rectified, that thought has been enlarged, that superstition has been weakened, that credulity has been lessened, that the power of dogmatism has been diminished. We do go on, though we scarcely, perhaps, can tell in what way we do it. New England's greatest orator, Wendell Phillips, in that brilliant lecture of his which has been delivered all over the country, says that the chief difference between the past and the times in which we live consists in the fact that good things are now distributed, whereas, formerly they were held in the possession of a few. It is not that we now know so much more, but that so many more people know. It is not that we have more beautiful art, but that all people have the blessing of it. It is not that we have discovered so many precious things, but that the benefit of the discoveries went to the whole. Formerly, what men found they were in danger of losing because so few held it, now, nothing can be lost, for it is the property of the race. In these words, are not the super-eminences of the present over the past most powerfully described? What if there be no more wealth, if it is more universally distributed? What if there be no more splendor, if the splendor touches the hut, and no longer clings to the palace? That fact alone would show an immeasurable distance between the years that have gone and the years that are here and with us. Let an individual look back over his own life and he cannot fail to see that if he has lived at all, that if he has done anything but simply float on the surface of the river tide, he has grown, his mind is stronger, and the end that he has in view is more clear and and honorable. You may ask, as in all parts of the world, in all ages of the world, men have placed their Eden, their paradise, far back in the beginning, how is it that the garden of beauty and glory and peace precedes civilization in the imagination of mankind? This is one of those optical illusions to which we are all subject. Living in a world of care, toil, suffering, sorrow, disappointment, wrong, straining ourselves day after day in our struggles for existence, tormented by responsibility, having problems flung down before us which we must solve or die, confronted with questions which we cannot decline, at least, to attempt to answer, we look back to the past and fancy that there was a time when life was less shadowed, the experience less galling. So there was, for if we go back we can imagine there was a time when men knew nothing at all, and consequently never grieved that they had no knowledge; when they had no sentiment of beauty, and consequently never fell down in the dust before some ideal lord; when conscience was unborn, and consequently they had no remorse; when they had nothing to lose, and therefore never regretted the loss of any good thing. Those times were necessary, to our times it is unnecessary. Looking back upon them, we fancy that because they did not want any more they had all they needed. Then there was no need of cultivating the ground because it brought forth the fruits, no need of building houses because there were the flowery arbors to receive them; there were no storms in the dusty air, the wind was still, the wild beasts were tame, there was no care or trouble, no toil, but an undisturbable serenity and joy; no agitation, no speculation, no doubt, no fear. It all disappeared as soon as man awakened. The moment man becomes divided, differs, the whole universe falls in two. The moment that he becomes dissatisfied with himself, angry, cross, disappointed, then the universe seems angry with him, then the beasts gnash their teeth and the winds howl.

They are not worse, they are only wiser; they are not worse, they might be better; better in all that we call good. The better we are, the worse the world looks; the finer the edge, the sharper the point. To man the moral world seems burdened with wrong. It is only to the ignorant, and the simple minded, and the thoughtless that all seems easygoing. To the rest life is a battle, and a battle with garments drenched in blood. Men, as they look back to their childhood, all imagine that it must have been so beautiful and hopeful; then such sweet sleep, no anxiety, for the morning, no anxiety for earning bread, no care, no responsibility, everything freely given and appointed, sweet mother waited upon us, laborious father going out every morning and only returning in the evening, and spending the toilsome hours, that we might have what we wanted. It is all an illusion. We forget how many things we wanted that we did not have, we forget that there was no responsibility, that things that were desired were refused; we forget the tears and the hurt, and the heartbreaking, and the clenching of the impotent fist, and the dashing of the little foot against the ground, all that is forgotten; the limitations, the uneasiness, the time that never brought its importunities, all that is gone, and there remains simply the sweet, irresponsible childhood, "Heaven lying about it in its infancy, and the angels waking upon us."

The same loss haunts the conservative, the blind conservative—all conservatism is not blind, there is the rational conservatism, that takes things as they are, or what they are, that dreads a change that is not for the better, that resents all wild, idle innovations; but the blind conservative, and the man who shuts his eyes against the evil that there is in the past, and seeks that in the present, is blind; we see his name all the time, nothing goes right to-day; ah, the good old days, the dear old times, when all men were noble, and all women were pure, and manners were lovely, and there was no fraud or deception, but always the steady industry, the well-ordered homes, the diligent business-man, the successful traffic, the loving kindness that bubbled over, ran, trickled in brooklets in the waste places of life—it is all gone now, it is all a desert, everybody fighting with his neighbor, each striving to get the bread from his neighbor's mouth, the poor getting poorer, the rich becoming richer, the heartless becoming more heartless, the stubborn more stubborn, the golden age gone, the silver age going, and the age of brass flinging open its gates and bidding us all come in. If they would open their blind eyes they would see that there were some things wrong in the past, that were some things right in the present.

Is the Radical right in abusing the past? He labors under an illusion; to abuse the past, to say that the departed years are loaded with mistakes, barrenness and blunders. Here is a man who is perpetually denouncing the past; it is all wrong, all its speculations, its philosophy, its so-called triumphs. To-day is the only day that is worth man's ideas. The man forgets that he would not be alive to-day if it had not been for the past, that he would not be able to lift a hand, to think a mere thought. Strike away this century past, and we would have no science; strike away the next, and we would have no philosophy; strike away the next, and we would have no art; strike away the next, and traffic would begin to decline, we would have no means of transportation across land and sea; cut down nearer the root, he is a savage, he is wandering in waste places; cut down nearer the quick still, and he is digging roots with his fingers in the earth, and feeding on what swine, to-day, would not eat; go back farther still, and find him without a vestige of humanity. Well, my friend, you think that this is better! Would you abolish Venice, Genoa, and Rome, and Paris, and London? Would you wipe out all that the race achieved in these cities? Would you put an end to religion, to worship, to philosophy? Would you put back to the primeval start the cultivated and trained mind of this generation; the thrilling, throbbing human heart which is to-day righting wrongs? Would you take away its capacity, its very wish to do anything? Are you willing to go back to the beginning? Ah! my friends, the past has given all you have; be careful how you abuse it. Did you ever succeed in separating the old from the new, or any new thing from the old? Did you ever succeed in drawing a line between to-day and yesterday, between yesterday and the day before? Can you tell at what point a thing ceases to be old and then begins to be new? Everything is welded together; one thing is part and parcel of the other. The leaves of autumn drop into the ground; presently from their light structures rise in massive columns the expanse of verdure between mankind and the burning sun.

Was Shakspere new? But for the dramatists that preceded Shakspere and that discovered everything up to a single inch, we never should have had Shakspere. We burrow down the layers of intellectual life that preceded the year in which he saw the light, and there are poems, dramas, stories, layer upon layer, all of which were his inheritance. He came into the inheritance, and added what no one knows; the mysterious eloquence, the drop of genius, the touch of incense, which at once spread a bloom over what was a waste surface.

You speak of Newton—talk of Sir Isaac Newton as if his discoveries were a fresh revelation of the universe. How many had observed, studied and calculated, and pointed the telescope before Sir Isaac Newton! Tycho Brahe, Copernicus, and great observers whose names have been lost. Newton came with his mathematical genius, one of the most extraordinary mathematical geniuses in the world. He saw one little thing that they had not seen; made the calculations which they came within an ace of making.

We speak of the Protestant Reformation, as if it inaugurated a new enterprising era in the history of thought. Were there no reformers before Luther? Had not Huss and Jerome of Prague been compelled—had they not to mount the skies in their chariots of flame? The time was ripe for Luther; and when he came there was no stake for him, no headman's axe, no gallows. All Europe was at once aglow; the printers of Germany laid back everything that they might print Luther's books; crowds hung upon his lips; the Thirty Years' War followed to uphold his principles. Did he do it? The ages that went before him did it; theirs was the work; theirs the deed; it was they that struck the blow; every thing, every man with an earnest purpose, every man with a resolute will, every man willing to lay down a consecrated life nerved the arm of the German reformer and made it possible for him to live. Nay, if you come to Jesus, there is the same fact confronting us. This ancient people of Israel had been working, striving, hoping, aspiring for several hundred years. There was not a thought in his mind, that had not its root in the minds that went before him. Not an inspiration lightened in his soul that had not touched the soul of some one in the days that had gone before him. He took up the line of tradition just at that point where it was possible for the present to meet the past. There was nothing in him that there was not in his generation. He brought no revelation. Read the Old Testament. He quoted it. His words of wisdom were taken from the books of his people. The consciousness of his race enriched his consciousness. What then? He infused the drop of elixir, he fulfilled the prophecy; that was all. He did not make or bequeath the fruits of a life; the intelleetual part, the sentimental part, the moral part, were all furnished him, and it is impossible now for the most accurate and searching scholar to trace back the dividing line between the past reaching up to the point of the maturity of Jesus, and Jesus himself. It is impossible, I say, to distinguish between the new and the old.

We look back on the past; all the creative forces are there—of thought, society, knowledge. We speak of blunders, mistakes, things gone wrong. Yes. Do we forget all the tremendous life running through all these ages, correcting blunders, making mistakes harmless, and compelling things to go right? We speak of the river tide bearing things away from us; it is the flood tide that bears things toward us. To me nothing is so impressive as to see what a mass of life, above ground and under ground, always pushing, striving, to advance the line of human achievement; there is not a tool, there is not an implement which has not cost tears. This is an impressive fact, that the world goes on; that the departed years are not departed but present, so that every one of these moments that lapse so quick now is charged with all the efforts of the past.

The past is the region of necessity; it is the region of fact. Fact is finite; the thing spoken; the thing done; past and gone; past and fulfilled; the word spoken is spoken; it cannot be recalled; the deed performed is there—unchangeably it stands; every thought that has been entertained can never be recalled. It is necessity; the solemn, awful, beautiful necessity which men call fate.

With what different moods will not men look back! Some in the mood of regret; it is the irremediable past, that cannot be mended. How many blunders—how many errors—how many things are started up, none of which can be altered! Some men lapse into despondency and remorse, moan and sigh, sit in sack-cloth and cover themselves with ashes, and say it is vain to hope for anything, it is all idle illusion. Go into a convent; pray; tell your beads, and make your peace with God.

There is the mood of the reformer, who tries to reform everything in revolutionary haste. These stubborn wrongs, these institutions, these ancient superstitions, this absolute tyranny, imperious conservatism, and dogmatism—it is idle to push against that; it breaks us down. The reformer reminds one of the god Thor in the old Scandinavian mythology, who undertook to pick up a cat; the cat would not leave the ground; it was beyond his reach; the cat was no cat, the tail was the earth, the four legs the pillars of the Universe, the curved back was the all-covering skies. So with the reformer who takes up a wrong, an institution, and thinks that he can take it up and fling it away. What a hopeless task! It has its roots in the past.

How much sweeter and more wholesome is the mood of quiet and tranquil satisfaction, that things cannot be torn up by the roots; that man's tether is very short indeed; that we are bound to the rock of ages! Men wonder, rant away, and look about, and then must substantiate that we cannot tear the world to pieces if we try; that the old world is weighted with a thousand centuries, that the present moment cannot put them away. To me there is a province of satisfaction in feeling that the revolution of the world never revolutionizes. In the mid-summer day the storm comes up from the South; the skies are clouded, the winds blow, the tempest rages across the landscape—it seems as if the strongest trees would be prostrated and rooted out; the farmers flee to their shelter; the cows flock beneath their shed; there is no sun; a gloom settles upon the scene. In an hour it is all over; a few dogs are scampering about on the avenue; a few more leaves on the grass; a weak sapling here and there has been overthrown; the wheat harvest is prostrated for two or three days; the long blades of grass bend their heads to right themselves again; the tempest has not hurt nature, it only helped it.

Look back upon the history of the French Revolution. There was one of those terrific convulsions that seemed likely to reform the world. No more dogmatism, no more superstition, no more church, no more state; people did not believe in hell; they had disposed of their devils; they set up the Goddess of Reason; they even went so far as to pronounce Christianity a failure, and voted it out of existence; it really seemed as if a new era of change was to be brought in, in a year. Five years had not passed before everything was restored as it was before; there were the old church; there was the old state; there were the old devils; there was the old credulity a little less stubborn, but the change was almost inappreciable. Something had been done, but not much. There had been a residue of power which remained to make that age a little better than the ages that went before it—a little better—very little better.

There are people here in America who seem to think that American civilization is doomed, put under a ban, unless it can show results absolutely incomparable with those that characterize Europe; we have new chances, a new privilege, a new opportunity. Yes, but we are old-fashioned sort of people after all; humanity is not new: are there not a thousand years of time and growth and experience developed between the present America and the past of Europe? Europe lives to-day as much as we do. There are minds in England; there are hearts in France; there are consciences in Germany; there are science, and philosophy, and improvement, and energy all over the civilized world, and we only have our share. There is more work for us to-day, but we have the same old tools to work them with. There are new questions to answer, new problems flung down before us; but we have the same old minds to answer them. The wheels of human achievement are the same everywhere. Is not this a consolation? Is not this a source of endurable tranquillity? We have made mistakes; how many! how bitter! Some of us have made mistakes which have changed the whole current of our lives. If but at a certain moment we had done thus and not thus—if we had turned to the right instead of to the left—if we had taken this steamer or that train—if we had married differently—if we had begun some different profession—taken up some different line of business, how much better everything would have become! Well, we did our best; we acted under the circumstances; there was nothing else that we could do; we did it; we were obliged to do it. May we hope that all men do their best. We have done what we could, and we could do no better. No life is wasted; no deed is lost. You never thought a thought; you never spoke a word; you never felt a feeling, that did not communicate itself to somebody, and made itself a part of the intellectual life of the race. Not the great, not the exalted, but the simple, unnoticed people, who in their place and in their day, do what is given them to do, as well as they can—these are the makers, these are the characters, these are the regenerators, and the saving providences; they are answering the question, they are solving the problem, they are meeting difficulties, they are righting wrongs.

The leaves of Autumn are in number millions; the girl goes into the field, and picks the fairest for her album; the rest drop upon the soil. Those that the girl preserved do nothing. Those that no one observes, fate takes care of; bare, lifeless, discolored, the torn and rugged things drop lightly upon the soil; the cold, shrill winds of Autumn spread them about; the dripping, pattering rain soaks them into the ground; they will create in Spring a more glorious vegetation. Which leaf is it that made the soil? Every leaf. Whose life has made the world? Every life.

The double-shotted charge of "obscenity" and "blasphemy' against D. M. Bennett still hangs fire, and the gun may kick and kill at the breach instead of at the muzzle. A clear-headed and courageous Dist. Attorney, Stewart L. Woodford, stands between him and Benedict's Christian bear-garden, where Lant, Foote, and other fellow martyrs were slaughtered; and the pious knaves and numbskulls, who there sit as judge and jury, are subject to the will of one official who, having a mind of his own, has also conscience not for sale to the highest bidder. Mr. Bennett is fighting grandly; friends pour in money to aid him; and the repeal of the Comstock law voice protestant wrath which "scandal"-begetting religionists and spoil-seeking "statesmen" must respect. The "suppressed" tracts are in great demand, and the "ruined" TRUTH SEEKER, doubling its size this new year, will continue to shower burning words into the strongholds of Unreason.—The Word.

Communications.

A Grand Council of the Court of Heaven.

BY SPIRITUAL TELEPHONE AND CLAIRVOYANCE.

It came to pass in those days that there was a grand council of the sons of God assembled in the Court of Heaven; and Satan came also among them.

And the Lord said unto Satan, "Whence comest thou?"

Then Satan answered and said, "From going to and fro in the earth, and from walking up and down in it."

And Satan said unto the Lord, "Hast thou considered my servant Bennett, that there are few like him in the earth, a good and upright man; one that feareth not God, but regardeth man in his ignorance and low estate, and is laboring hard to enlighten and free his mind from the slavery of superstition and priestcraft?"

Then the Lord answered Satan and said, "Doth he serve his fellow-man for nought? Hast thou not put all this devilment into his head? and does he not serve thee? and hast thou not put a hedge about him and his house and all that he hath? and have not his prayers to thee* come up to me as a stench in my nostrils?—for I am a jealous God." And is not he in thy employ to tear down my kingdom in the earth? Now, just give him into my hands, as I of old gave my servant Job into thy hands, and I will teach him that there is a God as well as a Devil in the earth. My anger shall wax hot against him, and I will stir up my zealous servants against him, who shall strip him of all that he hath and flay him alive. Have I not convened this council to devise mischief and evil against him?"

Then said Satan to the Lord, "That was a shabby and ill-advised trick I played upon Job, thy servant, when thou gavest him into my hand, for which I hide my face in shame and confusion to this day; and I can not and will not be so mean as thou wast and deliver my servant into thy hand; for have I not seen how thou hast treated thousands of thine own servants, incarcerating them in dungeons, throwing them to wild beasts, torturing them upon the rack, and burning them at the stake, continually turning a deaf ear to their prayers; and all this just because I had put a few advanced thoughts into their minds. And if thou hast treated thine own servants thus, thinkest thou I would turn my servant Bennett over into thy hands? Nay, verily; I would see thee as a scavenger in hell first."

At this juncture my spiritual vision was opened and I beheld a great commotion in Heaven. The fierce anger of the Lord was terrible. Out of his nostrils issued smoke as from a furnace; and out of his mouth streamed hail-stones and coals of fire. 'Twas hell before him, and heaven followed after. I also beheld Satan as lightning descending to earth to guard his servants against the fierce anger of the Lord.

Now, when Satan was departed, I looked again toward Heaven and saw the Lord seated on his throne, and all the hosts of Heaven standing on his right hand and on his left.

And the Lord said, in his anger, "Who will cause the utter ruin and overthrow of this d——m Bennett in the earth?"

And one said on this manner and another said on that manner.

And there came forth a spirit and stood before the Lord and said, "I will cause his ruin."

And the Lord said unto him, "Wherewith?"

And he said, "I will go forth and be a mean, hypocritical, intriguing, avaricious, cruel, lying spirit in the mouth of thy servant Anthony, whose surname is Comstock. Behold! is he not chief among the young Jesuits for the Suppression of Vice? But I will use him for the suppression of Freethought and the utter overthrow of Bennett and all the powers of Satan. To this end I will give Anthony favor in the eyes of the law-makers and the courts of the nation. I will cause blindness to the leaders of the people that they shall not see my purposes, and they shall do all my will. And Anthony shall be like thy servant David, a man after thine own heart. And as David danced before the Ark of the Lord in his nakedness, to the joy of his God and the disgust of his wife, so shall Anthony revel in his obscenity, to the joy of his Lord and the disgust of the Devil and his servants in the earth."

And the Lord and all the host of Heaven said, "Amen and Amen. Go forth and do so; and may you succeed in drawing Bennett into Anthony's trap, and give him hell when you catch him."

Then I beheld this mean, hypocritical, intriguing, avaricious, cruel, and lying spirit wrap the mantle of his Lord about him and, following in the track of Satan, descend to earth and take up his abode in the sanctum sanctorum of Anthony. But ere the vision had faded from my view, I saw Satan, surrounded by his trusty few, encircle the tree of knowledge and swear by the omnipotence of mind that its roots should grow deeper and the trunk thereof stronger till the height thereof shall reach to heaven and the sight thereof to the end of all the earth. The leaves thereof shall be fair and the fruit thereof much, and it shall be meat for all; the beasts of the field shall find shadow under it, and the fowls of heaven shall dwell in the boughs thereof, and all flesh shall be fed of it. And I heard the hosts of Satan's kingdom shout "Amen and Amen," till the reverberations thereof broke my telephone, and the vision faded from my sight.

REV. THEOLOGICUS, D. D.

Edinburgh, Ind.

*See Bennett's "Prayer to the Devil."

Thoughts on Finance.

I.

MR. EDITOR: Silver and gold are subjects of daily comment; and a few thoughts upon them will aid many to come to a correct conclusion, if I shall be able to make my views understood. I will be as plain as possible, but in so small a space as you will allot me, I cannot do more than make statements of conclusions which evidence has forced me to. I would be glad to give the evidence but, it is voluminous.

Our Government at Washington promised us in 1875 that we should have gold for our paper money; in other words, the banks and the nation shall resume specie payment on Jan., 1879. That period is now about thirteen months ahead. When the Act was passed we had about one hundred and forty millions of specie; and now it is much below that sum, and no signs of any considerable increase.

Then the question is, how can we resume? This question stares the republicans in the face like a ghost that they can't put down. And so Treasurer Sherman tries to worm out of the responsibility by saying, "We never meant by resumption that we would pay a dollar in gold for a dollar of paper; we only meant we will make a dollar in paper worth a dollar in gold." Mr. Sherman, what do you mean? Do you mean to befool the people of this country by such bosh as that? How can you make a paper dollar equal to a gold dollar except you can exchange them even? There is not specie enough in the world for its currency, and it is a pressing necessity to have some other form of currency with which to do the business of the country.

And now the people have no money to do business with, because thirteen hundred and eighty millions of the currency of this nation has been destroyed, and United States bonds issued in its place, for which the people have to pay interest, and that largely to foreigners. This thirteen hundred and eighty millions were in constant circulation from 1868 to 1867; and that enabled the people with what is still in the country, to carry on business largely, and pay good wages, and pay cash all the time. Thus all the labor of the country was employed, and the workers were earning a good living for themselves, and three per cent. per annum for their employers.

Those were the days of Lincoln and greenbacks. Oh may the sense of the people soon demand a return of such days! But what a fearful contrast between those days and the present 1878! We have nearly fourteen hundred millions more to pay interest for now, and it is the very money which made business good in 1865. It was then our capital; it is now our debt. To illustrate, suppose I am in the shoe business with $2,100 capital, and that hardly gets me along; I have to borrow from the bank frequently to make ends meet.

Now something happens which deprives me of $1,400 of my capital, don't you see I am forced to either borrow continually, which is vexatious and ruinous, or I must reduce my business, and all that is connected with me two thirds. If I do not I am soon sold out.

Now, Mr. Editor, I have made a clear statement of the condition of our distracted country. We had in 1865 $2,100, 000,000, circulating capital on which the business of the nation was being done for cash. Everybody agrees we never had better times.

By four most infamous Acts of Congress, viz: April, 12, 1866, March 2, 1867, January 23, 1868, and July 25, 1868, nearly or quite $1,400,000,000 of that capital was taken out of the business of the country, and bonds given for it. By that the present prostration was produced. The are but $700,000,000 now to do business with; and everything like business is reduced in the same proportion. Labor was forced to eat up its small accumulations of years, and those who had saved nothing were driven to beggary and crime. People are blinded by the fact that some millions of money are idle in the banks, and have been offered at 2½ per cent. on call. This is not because there is an abundance of money, but because the business of the country has been stopped, by not having the use of enough to run business with.

This may be illustrated by a mill-dam in dry weather. A mill-dam covers thirty acres of flat land. The race leading to the mill has an elevation of eighteen inches above the bottom of the dam, and unless there are twenty-four inches of water in the dam the mill can't run. The mill is full of grist waiting to be ground, but it is not running, though there are eighteen inches of water covering thirty acres of mill-dam, and the people who are starving for their grist, wonder and wonder why the mill don't run when they see thirty acres of water there. They ask, with honest indignation, why the miller don't run the mill and give them their grists. He shows them that his mill cannot run until there are at least twenty-one inches of water in the dam. They see it and go home and wait, beg or starve until the water rises high enough to start the mill. Now, we don't have to wait for it to rain to increase this water power called money, for Congress can issue it just when they please, and let the business of the country go on, by repealing the infamous and ruinous acts, and putting out the money again, and taking in the bonds. And the people of the country ought to make them do it by petition, or by ballot for new members.

WANT GRIST.

The Truth Seeker.

D. M. BENNETT, Editor.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

The largest and cheapest Radical Journal published in Europe or America, containing nearly seven hundred square inches more of Reading Matter than any other Journal of its class.

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, JAN. 12, 1878.

The Dismissal of Our Case.

On Saturday, the 5th inst., we repaired to the office of our attorney to learn what was to be our fate in the District Court of the United States for the great crime of uttering our honest convictions and asking a few simple questions of one to whom hundreds of thousands are daily, and almost hourly, making requests of every imaginable character. Our attorney, Mr. Abram Wakeman, put in an appearance before the Commissioner of the U. S. Court, and soon bore us the following order or discharge:

THE UNITED STATES }
vs.
D. M. BENNETT. }

On motion of Assistant District Attorney Herrick, the proceedings before me in the above case were this day dismissed. JOHN A. SHIELDS,
U. S. Commissioner.

New York, Jan. 5, 1878.

Thus, so far as our arrest by the authorities of the United States, at the instance of Anthony Comstock and the Y. M. C. A. and the S. F. S. V., is concerned, we are again a free man; and our many friends will heartily rejoice with us that this is the case.

It is doubtless a great escape from the plots of cruel and designing enemies. It was the conclusion of our arch-enemy and the societies to which he belongs that we were becoming dangerous to their pet iustitutions; that we were exposing too plainly to the comprehension of thousands the fallacy and fraudulency of their grand system of faith and of keeping up a showy and expensive scheme of supporting, by the laboring classes, sixty-five thousand priests in this country, and nearly as many churches, at an annual expense ranging from one thousand dollars to two hundred and fifty thousand dollars each, including the expenses of all the attaches thereunto belonging. We have made it clear to many that the system of Christianity is wholly made up of the fables and dogmas borrowed from paganism, and that it does not contain one original dogma, rite, or sacrament; that It has no more claims to divinity than have the religions of heathendom of which it is composed; that there is no special characteristic to distinguish it from the other religions of the world save that it has been more sanguinary and cruel; that it has taken a thousand times more lives in its name; that it has caused the earth to be striped with rivers of blood to a far greater extent than all the other religions of the world combined.

We have shown this up fearlessly and clearly, for it is as susceptible of proof as the simplest problem in Euclid. The religion called the religion of Jesus, though embraced by less than one-tenth of the inhabitants of the globe, has been more severe upon the lives and liberties of the people than any other rule the world has known, whether religious or political. It has been despotic in the extreme, and has shown very little respect for the rights of individuals or for the liberties belonging to the people. It has built more prisons, set up more beheading blocks, more burning-stakes, more dungeons, more infernal implements of torture, more arbitrary and unjust courts, and has pursued a more relentless and merciless course of persecution and ostracism than all the other religions of the world added together. It has placed heavier burthens upon the backs of the people and has retarded the progress of the nations, keeping them chained in ignorance and darkness and superstition, more than all other religions. Its God has been more merciless and vindictive, its Devil has been more malicious and spiteful, its Hell has been hotter and fiercer than any of the patterns from which they were copied. Its devotees claim that it is the parent of all the morality in the world, and that virtue and good behavior exist only in consequence of its rule, but this claim is as false as everything else it claims. It has not been conducive in the past to morality more than other religions, and Christian countries to-day have more crime, more theft, more murders, more lying, and more villainy of all kinds than heathen or Mohammedan countries. In our own land we have abundance of proof that the professors of Christianity are no more honest, no more upright, no more charitable, no more trustworthy than those who make no profession of it.

The priesthood in Christian countries are more corrupt, more depraved, more haughty, more aristocratic, more exacting, and more oppressive than the clergy of any other religion. If this is disputed, we think we can establish its truth.

The most distinguishable feature about this system is that it is a grand plan for keeping up a pious, heavenly aristocracy of clerical saints, who live upon the fat of the land and are able to dress in broadcloth and fine linen at the expense of the willing masses, who are taught to think they are doing God service by supporting this uproductive and privileged aristocracy. The system, too, furnishes a fine basis for respectable, fashionable persons, like Mrs. Grundy, the Rev. Cream Cheese, and the opulent Mr. Moneybags, to meet upon and to build up "good Society," into which the common class, the poor and the vulgar, will not be admitted.

We have shown up these things, and have simply told the truth about them, and by this means have rendered ourselves obnoxious. For this reason the hand of persecution has been placed upon us. Anthony Comstock, as he himself states, was instructed by the officers of the societies to which he belongs to place the heavy hand of the law upon us, and to bring us before the stern authorities for having the audacity to speak the truth about the priestly dignitaries and their coadjutors.

Our case was canvassed, our offenses were scrutinized as with a magnifying glass; the legal board connected with the Protestant Society of Jesus passed upon our utterances, and they instructed St. Anthony to go ahead and bring us to the severest justice. The necessary steps were taken, and we were summarily arraigned for obscenity, immorality, indecency, and blasphemy. We were held by the United States Commissioner, the Grand Jury readily found a bill against us upon the ex-parte testimony which it is usual to place before that inquisitorial body, and, as we have observed in a previous article, had not a District Attorney of rare good sense, good judgment, and kindness of heart—who could not see that there were just grounds in what we had done for depriving us of our liberty, seizing our property, and immuring us within the walls of a gloomy, noisome prison—taken the responsibility of acting as his judgment dictated, we would undoubtedly have been brought before that terrible bar, presided over by the austere and unmerciful Judge Benedict, whose severe rulings and equally severe sentences have brought down many sorrowing hearts in agony to prisons and to the grave. Yes; had not District Attorney Woodford acted the part of a lover of real justice, and called off the dogs of war, our escape from the toils of Comstockism, of Benedictism, and Y, M. C. A.-ism would have been next to impossible.

Comstock is reported as being very much incensed at our escape, and he swears the direst vengeance against us. He says his Society pronounces us the head and front of everything vile in this great city, and that it is determined that our business shall be stopped. He is already upon our track, and is busily engaged in stirring up a third party to institute legal proceedings against us upon a matter connected with our arrest. By repeated interviews and solicitations as representative of two religious societies he has obtained the consent of a certain wealthy drug firm in this city to let his attorney take charge of a case wherein said drug firm feel agrieved because we made use of their name attached to a circular touching unconstitutional laws, and in which they expressed themselves fully in unison with us. Comstock is giving his special attention to the case, and is working it up with his accustomed venom and zeal.

He makes no secret of his determination to pursue us, and with the characteristics of a bloodhound he is upon our track. He is more than indignant because we still dare to send through the mails our "Open Letter to Jesus Christ" and the "Marsupial" tract after he has pronounced them obscene.

We undoubtedly have made some mistakes—there are few persons who have not—but our aim has been to act as near right as the dictates of our judgment would allow. We have endeavored to discharge our duty, and we shall continue on in this course though prisons yawn for us and the tools of Christian tyranny and oppression persecute us and seek our overthrow. There are thousands of good men and women who entertain views similar to our own, and we shall continue to give expression to those sentiments until we are compelled to desist by a power we cannot withstand. We only ask for the rights guaranteed to every American citizen, and these we shall contend for till death closes our career, though enemies beset us upon the right hand and upon the left.

One very satisfactory result has grown out of this attempt at persecution visited upon us: It has aroused the friends of liberty in all parts of the country; it has shown us the number and value of the friends we possess, and has placed us under lasting obligations to many whom we never have seen, and in all probability never will see. They have evinced a degree of sympathy and friendship, a devotion to the principles which we are endeavoring to represent, that we cannot forget so long as reason occupies her seat. It has served to unite Liberals in the various parts of the country, and has had the effect to show us that Christian enemies are still upon our path and are ready to inflict wrong upon us whenever opportunities are presented.

Let us, then, learn this lesson; let us closely unite; coöperate so far as possible in all that we do. In voting for congressmen and other officials, let us see that the candidates to whom we give our suffrages are those who will uphold the rights and liberties of every American citizen regardless of creeds or churches.

On one occasion we spoke words of censure directed to the Spiritualistic papers of the country which were not deserved to the extent that we supposed them to be. Both the Religio-Philosophical Journal and the Banner of Light have spoken out in bold and clear terms touching the attack upon the freedom of the press and the freedom of speech in our arrest, but we had not seen those remarks at the time our comments were made. If we have done wrong to anyone, we are sorry indeed. We well know we have many warm friends in the Spiritualistic ranks, and numbers of them have given good evidence of their friendship by sending us sums of money in varying amounts to meet the expenses of our defense. We return our hearty thanks to every one who has thus stood by us in the hour of need. We extend to each and every one our sincerest thanks. We have aimed to use the donations with discretion in providing for our defense and in working for the repeal or modification of the laws which are regarded as unconstitutional.

Those Petitions.

Let friends holding the Congressional petitions for the repeal or modification of those unconstitutional laws, known as "Comstock Laws," hurry up and get as many signatures as possible within the next few days, so as to be able to send them in by the 15th inst. It is desirable to have them all go together to Washington between the 15th and the 20th of January.

Many are already being sent us, and, in general, they are very well signed. We cannot help thinking that they must have an important bearing upon Congress, aided as they will be by the weighty influence which will be brought to bear upon our Representatives and Senators. It is certainly not unreasonable to hope that some judicious action will be taken by the nation's law-makers upon this important subject.

A number of persons have written us of the difficulty they have experienced in obtaining the names of their neighbors to the reasonable petition presented. In several instances where petitions have been left in public places for signatures, and when well filled with names, they have been stolen by some pious Christian. Thus it may be seen at every turn that some member of the Church stands ready to thwart the efforts in behalf of mental and personal freedom. Let us not however be discouraged. The cause of truth is growing steadily all over the land and ultimately truth must triumph over every form of error and superstition.

ATTENTION is called to the advertisement of our neighbor, Charles P. Somerby. The books he advertises are of excellent character. Let those needing such books send their orders to him.

THE POPES AND THEIR DOINGS.—We are just now running through the press a fine volume of 272 pages, 12mo, giving rich and racy accounts of over one hundred and fifty of the most infamous popes that in centuries past disgraced the papal chair in Rome. It is No. 3 of the "Holy Cross Series," and is a most entertaining volume. Price, in paper, 50 cents, and in cloth, 75 cents, postpaid. Very cheap indeed. The additional twenty-five numbers of the same series are being brought out as rapidly as possible. We are now getting up "Auricular Confession and Popish Nunneries," by Wm. Hogan. It will be out in two or three weeks.

"BEYOND THE VEIL."—This beautiful Spiritualistic work which purports to be dictated by the spirit of P. B. Randolph, through the mediumship of Mrs. Frances H. McDougall and Mrs. Luna Hutchinson, both of California, has been some time in preparation, but is at length completed. The work consists of descriptions of existence in the spirit world, and it is written in a pleasant, flowery style. It will doubtless highly interest our Spiritualistic readers. Price, $1.50, post-paid. Address this office.

Donations to Defense Fund Not Acknowledged in our Last.

Jarvis Royal, $2.00; Mr. Hansen, $1; B. W. Graves, $3 00; M. W. St. John, $10.00; J. N. Lindsay, $2.00; Isaac Paden, $3.00; A. Burgess, $1.00; Mr. Fraser, $1.00; P. H. Lobingier, $10.00; Philip Wootton, $2.00; Pulaski Carter, $2.00; J. W. Alexander, $1.00; J. P. Richardson, $2.00.

PLEDGES.

M. R. Nichols, $8.00; C. Corbett, $5.00; G. W. Donaldson, $5.00; M. C. Putnam, $5.00; A. G. Parker, $10.00; J. W. Hammill, $2.00.

We feel proud of the friends who thus so nobly and generously come to our aid in our time of trouble. We are deeply grateful for their kindness, and hope we may ever be worthy of their confidence and esteem. We have endeavored to make good use of the funds that have been sent us, and for the purpose intended.

Communications.

The Labor Problem.

Many questions force themselves upon public attention from time to time which are agitated, discussed, and pondered over, until other questions, in their turn, supplant them in the public mind. They are then dropped for a time, but only to be again brought to the surface by some turn in the tide of time. Many of those problems were solved and settled dogmatically and, as was supposed, definitively by the Bible and the Church centuries ago; and any attempt at a solution other than that so given was summarily punished by the powers that were.

But as time rolled on and knowledge spread, those dogmatic solutions were found entirely inadequate. When a so-called solution is found to be so incorrect that it will not stand the tests of time and experience, the ever-restless human mind, spurred on by stern necessity, busies itself by seeking for the true solution. And it is one of the peculiarities of human nature that any attempted repression of free thought and investigation only stimulates to further exercise of the mental powers.

The questions of astronomy were settled and disposed of for all time by a few sentences in Genesis; and while the Church had power to enforce the decisions of the Bible, man was compelled to accept its disposition of the case as final. But the Church lost its grip on the human mind, and the case would not stay settled. Man would not believe the word of God when it treated of astronomy. So, after a prolonged struggle between the astronomers—representatives of progressive humanity—and the Church—ever-changing representative of an unchangeable, fossilized God—the dogmatic astronomical teachings of the Bible were modified to suit the changed circumstances of an advanced civilization. As a result of this change, in our religious schools and colleges are taught at this day doctrines concerning the phenomena of the heavens that would have consigned the teachers to the stake or the rack but a few centuries ago.

Many other questions have gone through the same process of evolution and solution, and many questions still remain to be solved in the future. Even now the question as to the necessity for the existence of the Church is being discussed. The Great Judge is himself on trial before the bar of Science, and the decision will be final.

Science is slowly but surely solving many problems which theologians had considered definitively settled by the infallible dictum of an unknowable God. And the solutions given by science are so utterly at variance with the God-given solutions that learned Doctors of Divinity find ample work for all their time in endeavoring to reconcile science and religion—that is, in so twisting the meaning of the Bible that an apparent harmony will exist between its dogmatic teachings, so distorted, and the demonstrable truths of science. The clergyman of the present day is like old Dame Partington, who undertook to stay the progress of a flood on the English coast by sweeping back the waters with a broom. And after working as vigorously as did the good old lady for a time, they follow her example and retire to some spot where the waters of progress have not yet penetrated. Many who had taken up an apparently secure position behind the battlements of their beloved hell are fleeing in dismay as they find the flood of truth putting out its fires one after another.

Astronomy, geography, physiology, medicine, and many other branches of knowledge have been wholly given over to science; but theology still claims to be supreme arbiter in all questions of morals and, to a certain extent, social science and political economy; and with what effect, our crowded prisons, penitentiaries, asylums, foundling-hospitals, and alms-houses, and our numerous and well-patronized houses of prostitution give evidence.

Science and theology represent the two extremes of civilization; science the head, theology the tail. For many centuries the tail has been wagging the body to suit its whims and caprices; but gradually the body is assuming its true position, and, under the guidance of an intelligent head, wags the tail as an index of its changing moods. Already it has wagged much of the old superstition out of it, and, judging by the sermons of many of its leading clergymen, it is wagging hell out of it at present; and hell is the fire that has kept the parsons' pot boiling.

Theology is the opposite of science, as an examination of the word will show. Theology is the science of God. Science is what we know. God, according to the Bible, is unknowable, so, of course, nothing is known about him. Therefore, the word "theology," correctly translated, means, "what we know about what we know nothing about." Truly, an excellent authority in matters of vital importance to the human race.

One question that has ever and anon forced itself upon the minds of thinkers at intervals since the beginning of history is what is commonly termed the "labor question," which is one of the many branches of the population question. The population problem was very little studied until within the last hundred years; and even now it is not discussed as it should be, it being considered indecent and obscene by the ultra-nice people who condescend to teach morality and save souls at so much per head. Even such men as Malthus, Mill, and Ricardo, who devoted much time and thought to the subject, were condemned by conservative public opinion when they dared to make public the results of their studies. Had these men proclaimed that the Bible command to increase and multiply was a good doctrine for the poverty-stricken wretches who are the chief support of the Church to live up to, the clergy would have given them entirely different treatment. But because it was demonstrated by them that the old semi-Biblical saying that "where God sends mouths he sends food" was only a snare to the poor and improvident, they were fiercely assailed and denounced by the clergy and the press. Even at the present day Malthus is only mentioned by the ordinary newspaper to be slandered or misrepresented.

Thinkers are gradually coming to the conclusion that vice, ignorance, and destitution are but different symptoms of one common disease. These symptoms have been too long mistaken for separate and independent diseases, and have always been treated as such by the self-appointed doctors who have endeavored to effect a cure by Biblical methods for the glory of God—and a pecuniary consideration. But such treatment has been in vain, and of necessity must be so. There is as much vice, crime, and misery in the world to-day, after nearly two thousand years of Christian physicking, blood-letting, blistering, and cauterizing, as there was before the Christian school of moral pathology was founded. And the worst feature of the disease is that it has always attacked the reverend physicians with the greatest violence and most terrible results.

Not until the disease is treated scientifically will humanity be permanently benefited; and not until all theological blinders are removed from our eyes and all religious gags withdrawn from our mouths and all clerical censorship taken from the press can science discover the real moral disease of society and apply the remedy where alone it can effect a cure, at the root of the disease.

But the time has almost passed for the suppression of free discussion upon any subject. Nothing is too sacred or too profane, too high or too low, for the investigations of modern thought. Consequently, more and more attention is being directed to the population question and its many ramifications. But a short time ago several prizes were offered by a public-spirited and noble-minded lady for essays upon the labor question. Though money expended in this laudable manner is far better used than in endowing churches and theological seminaries, still the method is entirely indequate to the production of the desired results. A far better method would be to have a thorough discussion of the subject through the columns of an impartial journal.

This question has been discussed more or less for the past year by nearly every paper in the country; but as politics has been of chief importance to those journals, the labor question has been superficially considered, and only in its bearing upon political questions at issue. When the political storm was calmed, the labor question was dropped, there being no more political capital to be made from it.

But the question will soon come to the front again, and next time it will be a question by itself; or, if it deals with politics at all, it will be as a principal in the field.

There are many deep thinkers who have considered this subject long and attentively, and the results of their studies seem to indicate that the labor question, at root, is a purely sexual question. As sexual questions are tabooed at present in the ordinary journals, the only place for their thorough discussion is in those papers that have thrown off all traditional restraints of prudery aud false modesty—the Liberal and Reform journals. And among all these there is none which offers a fairer field than THE TRUTH SEEKER.

The most effectual way of reaching a man's convictions is through his pocket; and, to a poor man, through the pocket means through the stomach. If men can be convinced that their pockets are directly interested in reform, they will be apt to consider the question, to give it at least a thought; and when men once begin to think on a subject, and have their thoughts directed in the proper channels by master-minds, there will be a chance for reform.

It will not do to merely tell men dogmatically that a certain course will lead them to prosperity, particularly if that course is directly opposite to the one they have been pursuing for a life-time, one that all the traditions of the past warrant them in following The average man, when he commences to think for himself, must have facts, figures, and reasons to convince him. For this reason, one good discussion through the columns of a newspaper, where able minds discuss the question from different points of view, is worth a dozen treatises on the subjects.

In the books, pamphlets, and magazine articles heretofore published upon this labor or population question the writers have reasoned out the problem for themselves, and give to the public the results and sometimes the whole train of reasoning. But this is not satisfactory. It is too much like a sermon from an othodox pulpit—you are compelled to accept what is offered you without knowing what may be said upon the other side. But in a discussion—particularly if several writers take part in it—all that can be said on both sides will be brought forward, all that is weak will be battered down, and nothing will be left but the truth. For this reason the Humphrey-Bennett discussion in the columns of this paper was far more satisfactory to the readers than ten times the amount of matter written on both sides of the subject but in independent articles. It is conducted upon the court system; that is, all the evidence on both sides is brought forward, and the case is left to the public as a jury. Each reader must use his own judgment as to what evidence is worthy of credence, what is doubtful, and what is totally unworthy of acceptance.

The ball was boldly opened in last week's number by a very radical article from the pen of a rising young writer who represents—judging from the sentiments therein expressed—the extreme radical wing of the labor reformers. He gave utterance to many truths—very bitter truths, but none the less true for that. What is to be said on the other side, or sides, for there are many sides to this question, no doubt will be presented in due time. H. J. THOMAS.

DR. FOOTE'S HEALTH MONTHLY, is one of the most instructive and interesting Journals on our list. A little in advance of the age, it is mainly original, and selects only items of first importance to complete its aim and end. It is issued on the first of each month by the Murray Hill Publishing Co., 129 East Twenty-eighth street, New York City, at the very low price of 50 cents per year.

THE ILLUSTRATED ANNUAL OF PHRENOLOGY AND HEALTH ALMANAC.—With calendar and astronomical notes for 1878 has general suggestions, medical notes, portrait and sketch of John L. Motley, historian, Rutherford B. Hayes and Dr. R. T. Trall, receipts and hints for the family, principles of phrenology, faces and their influence, &c. Price ten cents. S. R. Wells & Co., publishers, 707 Broadway, N. Y.

Communications.

Moody Religion.

The zealot is narrow in thought and life. He imagines that his earnestness and conscientiousness, if you please, are evidence of the correctness of his faith. "Evidences" are at the mercy of his feelings, intention's and inspirations. Knowledge he decries as "vain philosophy." The problems which stagger the minds of the profoundest thinkers are settled by the fanatic in the twinkling of an eye. Such questions as Immortality, God, &c., are disposed of by a scrap or two from some Hebrew legend. He never doubts, never inquires. The old truths (fables) are all-sufficient; he listens to tradition, to the voice of a God who was but no longer is. His eyes are closed to the revelations of science and humanity. And he must reject all new revelations, because the older revelation admits of no new revelations; hence he wages war against progress, improvement, and the elevation of the human race. His blind devotion to the old-time stories prevents him from cherishing the love of truth. He cannot inquire, because there is no new truth to acquire. The mind of the zealot deals mostly in imaginary things; the worship of an imaginary God, an imaginary Savior, an imaginary Ghost, dwelling in an imaginary heaven; or he dreads the torment of an imaginary Devil, having imaginary horns, hoofs, and forked tail; all these are spun out into ten thousand forms, by which the mind of man may be engaged to the exclusion of useful thought and employment. How paganish (may the pagans forgive me!) to see men and women dressing in finery on Sunday and going into some building called a church, sanctuary or temple to sing and howl about this imaginary heaven and imaginary hell, when the world so much needs practical aid. Within a stone's throw of many of our city churches there are the poor and destitute, whom humanity should save, but whom the exclusive saints, singing of the sweet by and by, deem it unnecessary to succor. They, precious and elect souls, dare not "cast their pearls before swine." And so when a begger dies they hurriedly

> "Rattle his bones over the stones,
> He's only a pauper whom nobody owns."

How sickly is this sort of Christian sentiment! I had almost said that all Christain sentiment is diseased. How tender the sentiment of Christian love, charity, benevolence, &c., as is preached, but how miserably practiced. The eloquent minister, with honeyed words and silvery voice, touches upon the most tender themes and sacred ties, until his hearers are melted to tears, and they go away to shut their hearts against justice, truth and mercy. They see in this sympathetic eloquence something for their consolation even though fitted for their reproval. A notorious miser having heard a very eloquent charity sermon, exclaimed: "This sermon strongly proves the necessity of alms. I have almost a mind to turn beggar."

Mr. Moody artfully dramatizes the little stories he tells and recites them with some effect upon the youth and feeble-minded portions of his audiences. He rings a great many changes upon the word "mother," and the aim after effect is so thin that the most obtuse observer cannot but detect it. It is "that sainted mother," or a "mother's prayers," or a "mother's tears," or "the last words of your dying mother," and so on ad nauseam.

In keeping with this sniffling business he has a great many stories to tell of wonderful conversions, and death-bed scenes. He goes the rounds speaking of the "dear father," or "sainted mother," or "beloved companion," or "angelic child," and as he goes through this catalogue, he is sure to affect very many people. The vice of it consists in his telling them that this emotion is "the work of the spirit of God." At the fireside, when sufferings are narrated, the same persons never once think that it is the spirit of God that stirs their hearts. Or if they should read dime novels, and find themselves in tears, they would never dream that it was an operation of the Holy Spirit. But if one sheds a tear in church, it is through the powerful influence of the Spirit of God.

Mr Moody hunts for soft spots in the human heart that he may draw blood. He never undertakes to tone up the courage and manliness of his hearer, but always seeks to throw his patient into a religious fit, i. e., to get him on his knees, and then cures him. He reminds one of a gad fly which lives on the sores of some poor animal, and, if the animal have no sores, the gad-fly can bite and make a sore and then live upon it.

Mr. Moody disparages morality—it is worthless; self-reliance a delusion and snare; and as for working out one's salvation, the thought is madness.

> "Doing is a deadly thing,
> Doing ends in death"

In his sermon upon the thief upon the cross he said: "I don't care how black your life has been, or who, or what you are; just cry, Lord remember me, and he will answer you and save you. . . . There are no works about it." "There he was lost and ruined, and hell-deserving, and yet Christ saved him. 'To-day shalt thou be with me in Paradise.'" We need a word or two of explanation about this salvation before we can fully understand it.

On the very day on which Jesus and the thief died, they went to Paradise, that is heaven; but how could this have occured when Jesus did not arise from the grave, until the third day! How could this have taken place if Jesus was in hell from the day of his crucifixion until the third day? The Apostles' Creed declares that he "suffered under Pontius Pilate, was crucified, dead and buried. He descended into hell. The third day he rose again from the dead."

Again, the inspired (?) writer says he "was seen of them forty days" before he ascended to the Paradise above. If the Apostles' Creed is to be any guide in spiritual matters, the thief went with Jesus to hell, and there is no account of his deliverance. This is a rather questionable sort, as are all other sorts, of salvation. We are not surprised that the world is full of men and women who decline to be saved after this fashion. Such people charge this kind of religion with demoralizing society, and assert that:

1. It demoralizes society by its intolerant spirit. "Come with us, and do not fight against God any longer." That is, "if you do not do as we command, you are as good as lost already." The animating spirit of all religions is "Believe or be damned."

2. This sort of teaching demoralizes society by despising morality. It is a common thing for preachers to say that the best moral men in society were doing the most harm. What base slander—what infidelity to mankind! Moral men do much to show the uselessness of church mummeries.

3. This religion puts a premium upon vice, by making faith the noblest and most virtuous attitude of thought and life.

> "Nothing either great or small,
> Nothing, sinner, no!
> Jesus did it, did it all, &c.

4. It demoralizes society by declaring that the sinner (who is he?) may be saved in the dying hour. Every murderer that is hanged dies peacefully and serenely because he has faith that he is saved and will go to heaven. As the Chicago Times phrases it, "they are jerked to Jesus."

5. It demoralizes society because it fails to awaken Free thought. Every man who arises to the height of new discovery in the realm of thought is immediately tried and expelled for "betraying Christ," or something of the kind. He might be guilty of almost any crime, yet he could maintain his pulpit, but to accept new thought he must move on. Thus this spirit not only fails negatively to awaken investigation but it positively prohibits it. It denies man his personal freedom, the freedon of speech and of the press.

6. This discussion of old legends as the rule of man's life, in these days of advanced knowledge and increased experience, is demoralizing in the extreme, especially when the grain of morality that remains in these antiquated superstitions is emphasized by such selfish motives as the love of an imaginary heaven or the fears of a painted devil.

W. S. Bell.

New Bedford, Mass.

"The Clergy a Source of Danger to the American Republic!"

Spiritualists, and even some few freethinking Infidels, said to me seven years ago, "O! friend Jamieson, that is too radical."

"But don't you think it is true?" I asked.

"Why, y-e-s, it is true, but—well, can't you see it will kill the sale of your book?"

"As to that," I told them, "I knew that beforehand." Still, three editions are nearly gone.,

My opponent, Elder D. R. Lucas, with whom I closed my debate a few days ago, said the reason why the clergy do not like me is on account of that book. I think he was sorry he made the admission.

In the same debate I charged the Bible and Christianity with intolerance. "Friend Lucas," said I, "your Bible contains the warrant for all the bloody persecutions that have deluged our green earth with human gore. Why, sir, it declares that a man or woman who tries even to convert, or entice a brother or sister to worship some other god than the Jewish Jehovah shall be killed. [Elder Lucas shook his head.] Yes, Elder, it is there; nay, worse, if a man's own wife tries to lead him away from the worship of such a 'bloody-mouthed God,' as Beecher calls Calvin's deity, she shall be put to death. [Elder Lucas shakes his head negatively.] But there it is in your own Bible. More, you are not to pity, nor spare, nor conceal, but kill that wife or that friend dear as your own soul."

When I produced the passages, my clerical friend defended the very thing which he at first denied could be found in his Bible. He said God was their ruler, and for the subjects to entice to the worship of other gods was rebellion against Jehovah, treason to God's government, which ought to be punished with death, and for his part, he thanked God that it was so.

When I cited your arrest, Bro. Bennett, as the dastardly act of the Young Men's Christian Assassination Society to throttle to death free speech and free press, he thanked God again, although he said he did not know much about your arrest. He seemed to conclude, however, in advance, that whatever these nice, oily young Protestant Jesuits do is all right and for the glory of Jesus. It is enough to make one's revolutionary blood boil to see how like natural born idiots these modern "fools for Christ's sake" can act. Are we in the nineteenth century, or the ninth? We who are in the lecture field hear the mutterings of religious hate all around us. I care less for Christian spleen than Liberal indifference among the masses; among Liberals, I mean, who ought to be posted, and who say a few of us are too plainspoken.

Hopeful am I that such papers as The Truth Seeker, Boston Investigator, Common Sense, Banner of Light, Religio-Philosophical Journal, Age of Reason, Spiritual Offering, Index, Word and Crucible will continue to float until the Liberals all over these States will be thoroughly aroused to the dangers which threaten our lives and liberties. Whatever the differing views of Liberals may be about a future life, we ought to stand shoulder to shoulder in a compact organization to secure complete liberty to man, woman and child in this world.

Were I making money, I would send you some. The little family at home need every spare dollar. With yourself, I am fighting the wolf of poverty with one hand, and the tiger of superstition with the other. While there are too many wealthy Liberals who look on exclaiming, "Good! I'll bet on the one that whips!" there are a few who are financially, as well as mentally, liberal. Bless those souls who are so illuminated that they know there is no good cause that can be made successful without money to move it!

Liberal ladies can do as much for our cause, proportionately, as Christian ladies can for the "dear pastor" and "our church." I had a pleasant proof of that in Osceola, Iowa. Two ladies circulated a subscription paper and raised more money for the writer one afternoon than he received in three debates. Missouri Valley, Iowa, was another case of successful "Woman's Missionary" enterprise. Women are now taking hold of the Liberal movement in earnest. With their help it will succeed. It is women who carry the Church. It is women who beautify it, it is women who inspire it with music. Liberalize those women, and the higher devotion to nature will take the place of their present enthusiasm for myth.

W. F. Jamieson.

December 12, 1877.

The Great Religions of the World.---Continued.

A LECTURE DELIVERED AT WOLCOTT, AUG. 18, AND AT NEW HAVEN, SEPT. 23, 1877.

Judaism very naturally follows after Egypt. The legends of the Bible have it that in its incipiency the Jewish nation dwelt four hundred years in Egypt. Whether or not this was so is, however, a matter of some doubt. It is very questionable whether the Hebrew nation truthfully dates its origin as a nation from so remote a period. It is now believed by many who have paid much attention to the subject that many claims were made by the Hebrews relative to their early history that were perversions of the truth. There is no reason to suppose that any portion of the Old Testament was written at a date so ancient as the time of Moses. It is not pretended that it was in the possession of the priests before Hilkiah claimed to have found it in the temple; and as all the sacred writings of the Jews were lost while they were in captivity, when they returned to their own land they were under the necessity of re-writing their Scriptures, and for this purpose Ezra and his many scribes went to work and wrote up the sacred books to order. As Ezra was doubtless a smart man, if his scribes were equally smart, it is very probable that they were equal to producing anything the Bible contains.

Every man, of course, has the right to believe as strongly as he pleases that Ezra and his scribes could correctly reproduce the history, the law of the Lord, the account of the creation, the flood, and all the rest of it, and restore it as it was originally written. Suppose, for a moment, that all the public documents of this country were to be burned or lost, including all the deeds and records describing the bounds and lines of every man's property, is it to be supposed that Ezra and his seventy scribes could go to work and bring them all out correctly? Could they reproduce every man's name who owned a foot of property in the county, and give the precise quantity and locality? Would the public be likely to accept their guess-work and be satisfied with such a reproduction of the county records? As imperfect as such an effort might be, it would probably be as likely to be correct as was the reproduction of the law attributed to Moses, the cosmogony of creation, and the books which purported to be the history of the wars of the Jews.

The more probable state of things is that the Jews never had a written law, never had an account of God's making the world from nothing, until after their return from their captivity. Previous to that time they had been a wild nomadic race of shepherds or semi-barbarians, without literature or a written history. It is thought that when they returned from their captivity, when they had learned much of the legends of creation, etc., it occurred to them that it was time for them to set up as a nation for themselves and get up an early history of their career and name their great prophets, priests, and kings. This compilation was not gotten up until about five hundred years before the Christian era. Some good judges of the matter insist that those books were not written till the time of the Maccabees, some two hundred and fifty years before Christ. Whichever theory may be the true one, much of what is contained in the old books must be relegated to the domain of myth. Under this view of the case, Adam and Eve, Cain and Abel, Noah, Shem, Ham, and Japhet, Methuselah, Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, Moses and Aaron, Samson, Saul, David, Solomon, and all those old patriarchs, heroes, and kings must be regarded as myths, having had as little existence as did Sinbad the Sailor, Robinson Crusoe, or the wonderful Baron Munchausen.

There are no proofs in the world that the Jews, previous to the time of the Maccabees, were ever a populous, highly-civilized nation, skilled in the arts and sciences. In Egypt, as we have seen, are remaining to this day temples, obelisks, pyramids, sphynxes, statuary, etc., etc., which are positive proofs that thousands of years ago a highly-civilized people occupied that country. The same kind of proofs are found in Greece, Cyprus, Phœnicia, and many other countries, which ruins of stupendous edifices give unmistakable evidences of the existence there in olden times of nations, wealthy, powerful, and civilized. In Palestine it is not so. There is not in that country a piece of ruins, a stone, a temple, an inscription, nor any thing of the kind that can be traced to the Jews. There are some ruins to be found that are Grecian, Roman, and Arabic; but not a thing to show that the Jews were highly civilized or highly populous. Palestine is but a small country, containing less than twelve thousand square miles, about the size of the State of New Hampshire. Much of its territory is cut up into ravines and covered with lakes and mountains. One half of its surface is not susceptible of cultivation. It never was capable of producing food enough to sustain a population necessary to produce an army of two or three millions of men. It would very naturally require an army of three or four millions to sustain a loss of five hundred thousand men in twenty-four hours, as the Bible tells us were killed in a single day. It is very unlikely that a race of shepherds and rude agriculturists, who had not been consolidated into a nation, who were not rich in the precious metals, could, during the reign of one king like David, so increase in population and wealth as to be able to erect such a temple as Solomon is said to have built, his father having accumulated gold enough, it is estimated, to construct ten such temples of solid gold. No nation has ever increased in wealth and population with such rapidity. The story is too improbable to deserve credence.

If, however, the Bible narratives are to be taken as true, there is much in Jewish story and in Jewish theology most repulsive to the finer feelings of human nature. Like the gods gotten up by other nations, the God of the Jews partook of the characteristics of the people he ruled over. They were warlike and bloodthirsty, and their God partook of the same disposition. They were petulent, irrascible, vindictive, and cruel, and their God resembled them in these particulars. He delighted in the burning and roasting of bullocks, rams, and he-goats, if the letter of the Jewish Bible can be credited. He possessed many traits of character that would be regarded as despicable in an ordinary human being. He was just such a God as his makers had devised and formed. In foudness for the blood of slain animals and the blood of slain men, women, and children, Jehovah surpasses all the other gods men have invented.

Judaism had a very dim conception of a state of future existence. The laws and injunctions and their rewards and punishments all pertained to this life. Their theology was not spiritual nor calculated to elevate its devotees into the realm of ideality and sublimity. It was eminently monotheistic. Most of the contemporaneous nations were polytheistic. They worshiped many gods while the Hebrews had but one.

The doctrines of Judaism are so well understood we will not dwell louger upon it. Its most distinguishing feature is its supernaturalism. It is founded on the assumption that the laws of nature are often suspended and a power above or outside of the Universe sets up independent action. Its whole system rests upon a series of impossible miracles. The creation, making worlds, suns, and stars of nothing was a miracle. The creation of every plant and everey animal was a miracle. The formation of man from the dust of the ground and of woman from one of his ribs were miracles. The drowning of the world and all in it save one family was a huge miracle. The escape of Israel from Egypt and getting through the Red Sea were effected by wonderful miracles. The journeying of the Israelites through the wilderness, being sustained by daily showers of manna from heaven, was a continuous miracle of forty years duration. Their entry into the promised land by the parting of the river Jordan was a miracle. The fabled stopping of the sun and moon for nearly a day was an immense miracle. So of the wars and carnage which he Joshua prosecuted during his lifetime. The successes of Gideon, Jephthah, Samson, and nearly all the warrior chiefs who successively arose were the results of miracles. Unless the god of battles was with them and fought on their side, they were usually defeated. The killing of Goliah by the stripling David and his sling was a miracle. His afterwards becoming king was effected by divine agency. His God helped him in his brigandage and his piratical excursions against neighboring nations and in the preparations for building a grand temple, such as the world has never known, all the specifications of size, material and construction were given by the God of heaven, The same through all the subsequent wars of the Jews, God was with them to aid and abet. All the Jewish prophets from Moses to Malachi were mere instruments in the divine hand. Miracle and supernaturalism were the grand factors in accomplishing all that was effected. But with all this divine aid. with all this partiality of heaven for this one obscure and contentious people, neither their nation nor their religion amounted to very much. They were almost constantly in hot water. Quarrels, contentions and wars were the rule and almost of constant occurrence.

Despite the great promises that had hundreds of times been made of the greatness which Jehovah's people should attain, and the everlastingness of their kingdom, they were many times subdued and enslaved, and finally dispersed and scattered over the world, to be abused and despised by all nations. If the direction, glory and success of the Jews are a sample of what can be accomplished by divine aid—a grand system of supernaturalism and miracle—it will be very difficult for men to entertain very exalted opinions of the system or the experiment. In point of success, in comparison with the Brahmins, the Buddhists, and the Mohammedans, the Jews accomplished very little. Their numbers were never large, their influence was never great, and they never gave any marked proofs of having a supernal power to aid them. If Judaism and the Jewish people were the best that Jehovah was able to accompliah, it must be confessed that his power was by no means superior to other gods who were not so conspicuous for boasting. The truth is, the Jewish theology was a man-made affair, and an indifferent piece of mechanism at that.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Laws of Life and Health.

Dietetic Cure for Intemperance.

It seems that, many years ago, Liebig, the great chemist, said that people could take wine with animal food, but not with farinaceous or amylaceous nutriment. On the strength of this statement Mr. Charles Napier has been making some very interesting and instructive experiments. He has prevailed upon old topers to give up the use of animal food and resort to vegetable. At the outset the change was not agreeable to them, because it seemed to destroy all their taste for their accustomed "toddy." But gradually they became more attached to their vegetable diet, and outgrew their taste for liquors. An old military officer, of Scottish family, over sixty years of age, who had contracted the habit of pouring down whiskey while in military service in India, found some difficulty in adopting the diet recommended by Napier, until a panic occurred among the flesh-eaters of England in consequence of the cattle plague. He suddenly found himself compelled to change from his roast-beef to a vegetable regimen. He grumbled a good deal, felt rather dissatisfied, but his taste for whisky steadily decreased, and in some sixty days after he became a vegetarian he entirely relinquished alcoholic stimulants, since which time he has returned to neither flesh nor alcohol. Many other remarkable instances are related by Napier. Among the articles of food which this scientist regards as specially antagonistic to alcohol are dried peas, haricot beans, maccaroni and lentils, all of which should be well boiled and flavored with plenty of butter or olive oil. Highly glutinous bread, such as that made from the new process flour, is of utility, but it must not be sour. Fermented, sour, and salted foods will increase the appetite for alcoholic stimulants. Spicy condiments are, according to Napier, apt to be coupled with a fondness for alcoholic liquors. The Sun, from which we gather these facts, remarks that the "carbonaceous starch contained in maccaroni, beans or oleaginous elements appears to render unnecessary, and therefore repulsive, carbon in alcoholic form. Liebig affirms distinctly," adds the Sun, "that alcohol and fat oil mutually impede the secretion of each other through the skin and lungs, and says that nations living on a diet composed largely of starch, such as the rice-feeding population of the Tropical East, are less given to drunkenness than are meat-eating communities."

Mr. Napier's experiments are well calculated to support a hint thrown out in some previous number of our Health Monthly regarding the value of vegetable food in overcoming the appetite for drink. If the proposition as originally propounded by Liebig, as accidentally discovered by various dietetic reformers, from time to time, and as now seems to be sustained by a series of experiments made by Napier, proves, after further investigation and trial, to be correct, the wife who is compelled to support not only a little family but a worthless, intemperate husband, has within her reach a ready and effective weapon for combating her husband's unfortunate habit. In most instances, she is the provider; she supplies the table. The reckless man spends every penny he can obtain for rum. The wife purchases and prepares the food. She has therefore only to abolish meats and substitute suitable vegetable food to reclaim her dissipated companion. Parents who are annoyed beyond measure by a dissolute son have it greatly within their power to overcome his unfortunate appetite through his food. As a trial of this remedy is cheap, not particularly inconvenient, and in every respect harmless, we would commend it to those who wish to reclaim dissolute friends, and to those resolute individuals who are disposed to make an effort themselves to overcome intemperate habits. —Health Monthly.

The Shakers, besides avoiding the use of stimulating drinks, including alcohols, tea and coffee, have for thirty years rejected swine's flesh, and believe that they are on this account less subject to fevers and consumptive diseases.

Cold Feet.

People generally regard cold feet as a symptom of little consequence. If a person were to speak as playfully of having a bad cough as some do of having cold feet, no little surprise would be manifested. Nevertheless, cold feet indicate a condition quite as threatening to the system as a sudden attack of cold and cough. There is one difference, however, and that is, the results are less rapid in their development. Cold feet and cold extremities indicate defective circulation. When the circulation is defective, if there is a normal supply of blood in the system, some portions of the body must be congested at the expense of the extremities. Sometimes vital parts are the seat of this congestion; sometimes the head; sometimes the heart; perhaps the liver; somewhere, at least, there is an undue pressure of blood, while the feet are insufficiently supplied.

The remedy usually sought is worse than the disease. Thoughtless young women living in houses having furnaces stand over the register; the older ones sit down and put their feet over it; those having fire-places and stoves draw up a chair and "toast their feet;" and there are those who resort to hot water. It is a fact that ought to be generally understood that all heat produced by the combustion of fuel relaxes the capillaries. This relaxation of the capillaries renders the circulation still more sluggish. The more sluggish the circulation the colder the extremities. If any one wishes to produce a condition of chronic cold feet, no better means can be used than subjecting the feet to frequent warmings at registers, stoves, fire-places, and in warm water.

In our Plain Home Talk we have suggested proper methods of warming the feet. We will repeat those and also suggest one other. Pressing the palm of the hand closely over the instep and toe while the boots are on will restore circulation. The hands of another person are better than one's own hands; but the latter will answer. Putting the right leg across the left knee and firmly grasping the instep and toe of the shoe or boot with the left hand will in a little while induce a warmth in the right foot; then put the left foot across the right knee and grasp that with the right hand and hold it until it becomes quite warm.

Putting thin-soled slippers on the feet and sliding them rapidly over a woolen carpet—a Brussels, a velvet, a Wilton, or an Axminster preferable—is another effective plan. This exercise continued for a few moments will make the feet "burning hot," to use a common expression. Another method which we have frequently recommended in our practice, but have not presented in our publications, is this: When a gentleman is reading his newspaper in the morning, or a lady is doing her fancy needlework or sewing, take such a position before a window as to let the sun's rays fall directly upon the shoes or boots. The ladies, as a matter of course, will have to raise their dresses sufficiently to allow the feet to be exposed to the warm sunshine.

In the dressing of the feet, those who are troubled with excessive moisture will probably find cotton stockings or hose preferable to woolen; but when there is no more moisture than the ordinary insensible perspiration common to all parts of the body, woolen goods are peferable to cotton. As stated in our last issue, rubber shoes should be avoided if possible. A rubber sandal simply covering the sole of the boot or shoe is admissable, but anything of the kind enveloping the whole foot is calculated to cause a confinement of the moisture or perspiration and the gradual development of chronic cold feet. The extremities should be protected by just as warm material as that which is used to protect the chest or any portion of the trunk of the body, but the fabric should not be such as to prevent the radiation of the insensible perspiration.—Foote's Health Monthly.

Rev. O. B. Frothingham is a stirpiculturist. In a sermon on "The Unbelief of the Believers," he said: "If there is one thing that the men and women of this generation need to feel in every part of the civilized world, it is the sanctity—THE SANCTITY, I repeat, of the natural conditions by which the human race is enabled to perpetuate itself on the earth. We are perishing because these natural laws are violated and insulted. For this reason our society rots; from this cause men and women are losing their sense of responsibility, and playing fast and loose with the most solemn and invisible relations of life."—Health Monthly.

LINESVILLE, PA., Jan. 1, 1878.

FRIEND BENNETT: A Happy New Year!

The Liberals of Linesville, Crawford Co., Penn., will celebrate the 141st anniversary of Thomas Paine's birthday on the 27th, 28th and 29th days of January, 1878. The speakers engaged for the occasion are H. L. Green, A. B. Brown, Dr. T. L. Brown, O. P. Kellogg, Judge R. S. Mc Cormick, and Rev. S. W. Sample. A grand ball will be conducted on the night of the 29th, and the leaders of the League of Linesville will serve supper in the Universalist Church, opposite the Opera Hall where the celebration will be held. A cordial invitation is extended to all the world. The lectures will all be free.

BY ORDER OF COMMITTEE.

Absolute Freedom of Press.

Jan. 5, 1878.

Editor of Index: Heartily as I was pleased with your leader "Obscene Literature," in Index, Dec. 6, I was equally surprised at your handling of the same subject in issue of 20th inst.

With great sensitiveness you seem to strain at a diminutive gnat you imagine to have discovered in the Bennett petition, yet conclude by swallowing in their almost entirety these camels of enormity, the flagrantly unconstitutional Congressional enactments.

I think you do great injustice to the animus of the proposed petition. Because "it recommends leaving all legislation to the separate States and Territories" is not "equivalent to recommending that there be no such legislation at all." Suppose the States cannot meddle with the mails. I don't see this would prevent the execution of these laws against the sale of "obscene literature," for the police could arrest the unscrupulous dealers, whether they filled orders through the post or over the counter. The people's common carrier, the mail, should not be tampered with, and the government should no more think of allowing employees to ransack packages of merchandise than to invade the sanctity of private correspondence. The circulation of "obscene literature" is rather a vice than a crime, and its vendors should be classed as abettors and panderers to the vice of its readers. Mr. Comstock's Society is appropriately labeled "for the suppression of vice," not crime, although in his action he seems to make no distinction between the two terms. Governments are organized for the protection of the community against crimes, and have no jurisdiction over the personal vices of the people; these, although to be deplored, are not fit subjects for statutory prohibition, and can only be permanently eradicated by proper education of the individual.

The uses of liquor, tobacco, opium and hundreds of other articles are no doubt injuries, and as such are vices; still, no government in Christendom should be allowed to trample under foot the dearest rights of the citizen and order their suppression. All such revolts against the inherent nature of things have reacted on the reformatory cause they were instigated to forward, for no government can legislate out of existence people's appetites, and all essays in this direction have but ended in inglorious failure.

I resent with contempt the assumed right of any government, man, or faction, to choose for me my literature. They have no better right to directly or indirectly stipulate what we shall or shall not read than they have to select our victuals for us. The same right I assert for myself I cheerfully recognize as belonging to even the meanest fellow-being.

If we are going to claim freedom for the press, let us have it undiluted, and if only a restricted press, then have the mandates of tyranny clearly defined. Prepare the list of interdicted publications at once, and let every bookseller be furnished with the new Index Expurgatorius.

Personally, I am in favor of absolute freedom of expression, without concealment, without compromise! Yet, I am not rash enough to think the world has ever enjoyed such a perfect state of independence. In our own lauded land of liberty, reformers have always been more or less proscribed; the Abolitionists were mobbed, their newspapers suppressed by Southern postmasters, and when the anti-slavery party itself gained power it but intensified the examples of its frenzied predecessors, and went to work to suppress the journals of the opposition, employed military puppets to arrest their editors, snatched mourners from funeral processions, dragged clergymen from their pulpits, and hurled judges bleeding from their courts to be immured for months in indescribably wretched government Bastiles.

Good, easy souls think their fealty to freedom declared when they give utterance to the old sophism about favoring "liberty, but not license." The Czar of Russia could subscribe to this sentiment with unction, for > "License" is only Liberty, not yet in fashion.

> "Liberty" merely License become the ruling passion."

There is no sense in endeavoring to invent two kinds of obscenity; one to exculpate the Bible and the classics, and the other to inculpate living writers and publishers. The genus obscene should include occasional sentences as well as whole volumes of the article, and the law that prohibits the sale of "Rose D' Amour" should equally place an embargo on the writings of Shakspere, Byron and Burns. The vulgar fraction of humanity, reduced to its lowest terms, whose literary taste demands it, has just as strong a natural right to feast on the former as has the cultured scholar to regale his appetite with the latter.

True, the philosopher, when viewing the unsavory character of certain clandestine publications, as well as other human vices, chief among which are intemperance, and the imprudence of the large pauper families, instinctively experiences a momentary temptation to banish for the time being all scruples for liberty and favors some legal restraint on such idiotic social conditions.

Still, I am strong in the conviction that in the long run we shall find in absolute freedom the surest safeguard for purity. Parents and guardians can protect children from the dreaded contamination without special legislation.

If that quoted speech of Comstock's contained only the unexaggerated truth, it would present a very sad commentary on the boasted culture and civilization of the American people. I frankly confess I do not believe his assertions in detail. Six thousand dealers engaged in the obscene traffic! Who can credit it? I have been concerned in the book trade for several years and have many facilities for observation. I haven't seen a copy of an old-fashioned genuine obscene book in fifteen years, and but one or two in a lifetime. I have traveled a great deal and met most all classes of American society, and from questioning learn that many have seen such works years ago, while hundreds never heard of them till within a recent period. I candidly think that Comstock's plan of operating has done more to advertise them than any other agency ever employed, for I have within the past year or two had a perfect flood of inquiries for them from one end of the land to the other. People have tried flattery, coaxing, begging, bribery, abuse, and almost every other device to induce me to yield to their requests to commit the "unpardonable sin" and supply them with the forbidden fruit.

Some letters have been received that are curiosities in their way. One R. R. official fairly entreats me to send him the vile stuff; my firm answer in the negative does not satisfy him, so he writes again giving twenty-two references as to his character, (?) among them the Governor of the State, bankers and other prominent business men: to all of which I could only reply that the signatures of the President of the United States and all his cabinet could not induce me to enter into the undertaking. I am glad to be able to state that such inquiries usually come from other than readers of the Freethought papers, as Liberals are rarely if ever, found wanting such abominable trash. After all, who can define abstract morality in literature? What seems proper to one person is highly offensive to another. How often do we hear it remarked that "some of the statuary at the Centennial Exhibition was indecent and should have been refused admittance because it tended to arouse the passions of observers!" Yet, every one disclaims it had any such effect on himself: it's always "some one else" that's to be awfully shocked and ruined by unfamiliar sights and doctrines. Who ever saw a genuine case of immorality produced by such means? Stand him up and let's see how he looks! Have psychological experts bring their powers of examination to bear on his brain, and see if they can determine the exact momentum of the deplorable effects produced thereon; then search out some ingenious inventor to conjure up a way to suppress the works of Nature and art in toto, to please and satisfy our sighing dilettanti. It is not to be denied that society has dregs, but the question arises, Have such beings ever possessed any morals to be corrupted or purloined?

To class medical works in the category of "indecent publications" is monstrous in the extreme. What language can express the superlative infamy that says to the poverty-stricken head of a family "You shall have no knowledge that has for its object the harmless regulation of population; ignorant you are, and in ignorance and misery you shall continue to banquet." The murderous pages of "Police Gazettes," highwaymen novels, adventures in outlawry, and other romances of crime stare at us from every news depot, yet the time has arrived when no one is safe in mailing a treatise on sexual physiology, or scientific works of the character before mentioned. They come under the ban of the present law, and if for no other reason every lover of justice should demand in clarion tones the unconditional repeal of the unconstitutional statutes.

About once in every twenty-five years the vanguard of freedom is called upon to fight anew the old battle for a free press, and to struggle manfully for the right to have a hearing—for liberty of speech and unlicensed printing. The vocabulary of despotism has been filled with trumped-up excuses for a denial of the self-evident rights. "blasphemy" has been a standing charge of the enemy from time immemorial. "Treason" also was long a staple article. "Witchcraft" once was all powerful. "Sedition" had its day. "Immorality" answered for a season; and now the "Obscenity" dodge, and even the stale "Blasphemy" ghost are being used in the interests of the prevailing though evanishing superstition, to terrorize and crucify the world's reformers and benefactors. The Christian Jesuits know that if they can disarm the growing opposition to their villainous law they are safe. All they have to do to persecute and ruin their opponents is to indict for "obscenity," and drag their victim away from home and friends to a strange United States Court where unfeeling Judges and juries pile upon him the horrors of fines and prisons. To lull the community and entrap the faltering, they have simply to cry out, "Are you not in favor of enforcing a law against obscenity?" And alas! We hear Mr. Abbot, in the wilderness of conflicting emotions, deserting freedom's brave champions, and ramblingly shouting "Amen!" It seems difficult to arouse representative Liberals from their apathy until their own firesides are invaded by the mailed hand of the usurper. As long as they themseves feel secure, others are left to fight their contests as best they can. Union gives practical strength, and by united efforts only can we expect to successfully resist the encroachments of tyranny. Every Liberal should stand up as one man in opposing the infamous Inquisition. Least of all should the Index give forth an uncertain sound. On the contrary the land should be made to ring with the determined cry for freedom, which you so well know how to demand.

The same autocratic power that seeks to fell Messrs. Bennett, Heywood and others now, may reach for others in due time. It has the same right to say you shall not publish the Index because of its tendency to demoralize that indefinite article the "People's religious convictions" as it has to suppress other publications on the score of their corrupting that sublime abstract—the "Public Morals." Then what stronger sympathy could you expect from the great outside world that knows nothing of your career or motives, and is so easily deceived by the "obscenity" or "blasphemy" cry, than has been accorded the present victims?

Unless Mr. Comstock is checked in his career, the time is not far distant when the works of Paine, Ingersoll, Darwin, Tyndall and other master minds in the realms of polemics will be dubbed "contraband" literature, and their suppression attempted.

Dr. Bennett, notwithstanding his few faults of style, is proving himself one of the greatest heroes American Freethought has ever produced. His books, filled with blunt logic and sturdy thought, and dropping from the press thick as the leaves of the forest, together with his valiant TRUTH SEEKER, are rapidly wending their way into every habitation where the joyous gospel of Rationalism has found welcome. In the present agitation he is clearly right, and you are surely wrong. I am confident no lover of liberty will have his regard for purity in the least compromised by signing the petition for the immediate repeal or modification of the existing detestable statutes.

RADICAL FREE LANCE.

Letters from Friends.

LEROY, MINN. Jan. 1st, 1878.

FRIEND BENNETT: I send you P. O. order for $3, to begin the new year, with the enlargement of THE TRUTH SEEKER. My year don't run out till June. You can keep the balance to help you along. If the time comes that you must have money to keep yourself above Comstock & Co's filth, I will pay $25. I will do more; my life and all may go for the liberty of mankind. A true friend.

D. NETTLETON.

CORNLAND, ILL., Jan. 3, 1878.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I have just been to the baker's for bread, and he gave me (not exactly the bread of life) a packet of bread, and around it he wrapped a copy of your interesting paper of the date of Feb. 6, 1876. I did not know there was such a paper in existence, until I came across the stray half sheet through the stinginess of the Dutch baker, as he should have used commercial wrapping paper; I suppose the piously inclined would see the hand of the Deity in this, if your paper happened to be some Christian Advocate or Review, Watchman, etc., etc.

But as it is not that kind, I suppose the Devil has a hoof or horn in it. Please send me a few copies, as I think I can get up a club for you of two or three names besides my own.

Respectfully yours, J. G. HAMILTON.

GREENSBORO, IND., Jan. 3, 1878.

FRIEND BENNETT: Enclosed please find eighteen dollars, for which you will send the TRUTH SEEKER to the following six subscribers one year. THE TRUTH SEEKER must live and be read by all thinking, truth-loving people. I send you a list of ninety-one names of voters who enter their solemn protest against Comstock and his iniquitous band. Your friend, JANE REAGAN.

RANTOUL, ILL., Jan. 2, 1878.

DEAR BROTHER BENNETT: Find enclosed a postal money order for three dollars to apply on subscription to TRUTH SEEKER. I have been a constant reader of your honest and fearless paper for the past year, and while I have sometimes thought you were rather too severe in your criticisms of a matter which to hundreds of thousands of perfectly sincere people is the most vital and sacred concern in existence, I have yet never once noticed a single line or word from your busy pen which has led me to believe that you desired, in the slightest degree, to debauch the morals of our country by the publication or circulation of obscene literature.

Your arrest on such a charge was an outrage against every man and woman within the borders of this Republic, and one which should be resented in so emphatic a manner as thoroughly to convince our national legislators that they can not tamper with the dearest heritage we possess with impunity. The writer has four children, and he thinks he can say, truthfully, that there is not gold enough in the coffers and mines of this planet, or of the sidereal universe as to that, to induce him to advocate a policy which he thought calculated to overthrow their chastity.

At the same time he asks no assistance in this direction from the general government. He feels sure that all matters of morality can be much more effectively managed by parents, and teachers, and guardians, then by the best government on earth, and that, too, without incurring the risk of wholly subverting the grand fabric our forefathers erected for the protection of our natural rights and civil liberties. He is in hearty accord with yourself as to the impracticability of the "Comstock laws" and the gross injustice, oppression, and persecution almost sure to result from their enforcement, and has accordingly spent considerable time in circulating one of your petitions to Congress, which, at the time of this writing, has been signed by over forty of our best and most influential citizens.

Yours for the campaign.

EDWIN J. UDELL.

WELLESLEY, MASS., Jan. 1st, 1877.

MR. D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I see by the papers that you have prepared a form of petition for the repeal of that law calculated to strangle all freedom of thought and expression. You will please send me a copy, and also a copy of those particular publications for issuing which you are made only another victim of intolerance. That the long, black catalogue of Christianity's crimes against humanity should be indefinately extended to-day is not strange when we consider its nature and its infamous methods during the past ages of its triumph. But that a Boston Court of Justice should lend itself to the kidnapping of a "free citizen" of the Commonwealth, guilty of no crime but that of seeking to obtain and disseminate information on one of the most important questions of human concern, as in the case of Mr. Heywood; that a like Court, in New York should arraign you and others for a like offense against ignorance and crime is a matter for the thoughtful consideration of every one who has at heart the interests of the race, or the integrity of a Free Government.

Whether this nation is sufficiently intelligent to discern its danger from the merciless tyranny of a blinding superstition, it is, perhaps, impossible to say.

Certain it is, however, that by passive acquiescence in such outrages as have of late years so frequently disgraced our courts, we are ourselves guilty of treachery to the very first principles upon which this government is professedly based. Every unheeded appeal for justice is a sanction of tyranny. And they who think it injustice to the vilest criminal, whether the outrage is committed by the mob, or by the highest authorities in the land, and in the name of "Law and Order, and the good of Society" give their influence on the side of oppression. The Sunday Dispatch of Providence, R. I., strikes the right note, when it says: "The arrest of Mr. Heywood was an outrage so gross and aggravating that the officers consummating it should be degraded, and forever rendered incompetent to hold any office in a free government." That is the true method. Meanwhile let us not forget that once again in this country, "Silence is Crime".

I should enclose money for the publications ordered, but do not know the price. Can you not send them C. O. D.?

Fraternally yours,

ELIZABETH M. F. DENTON.

SHAKERS, N. Y., Jan. 2, 1877.

D. M. BENNETT My Friend: Conscious of the grave, unjust charges resting upon your honorable character to-day, we nevertheless, but everthemore, wish you a happy New Year.

That you are an iconoclast, breaking nearly all the images that have been created for us to worship, causing us theologians a heap of trouble, to reconcile with any longer duration of image-making, or the worshiping of such imaginations as are very pleasant to dwell upon, yet none can justly call you wickedly designing, blasphemous nor obscene.

'Tis true, you deal with one Jesus as roughly as you please; dealing with him as a myth, and think his an impossible character. We demur at this, believing him to have been a very good Jew; perhaps the best as an exemplar that ever lived: but as a God, or having any more power to save others, than any other man or woman, as good as he was, he was not, he had not. This we know, according to the churchal inquisition that attempts to rob you of your God-given rights, is blasphemy. And when we deny the divinity of Jesus, other than being the divinity of humanity, of whose possession all are, or may be capable, we are worthy of being honored with the cell adjoining yours, or at least a scorching from the fagots burning to consume your testimony. Of a truth, the Shakers have borne a testimony against carnal lusts and sexual impurities and abuses, dwelling plainly and pointedly upon these as the roots of all the world's troubles, and if you are to be crucified for plainness, they ought first to crucify every prominent Shaker head downwards, for if there are infidels to general churchal theologies greater than the Shakers, we do not know who they are. We deny the Atonement, Resurrection of the body, the heaven and the hell of so-called orthodoxy. We deny the christianity of marriage; we declare there never was a child conceived nor born under christian auspices, and charge the christianity of the churches, outside of that which lives as Jesus did—virgin celibate, communist, peaceman, unworldly in every feature—with being very inferior to Judaism. Should we not be persecuted, tried, condemned and crucified? Fear not, my dear Bennett, times have changed, and iron will not weld now, as in days gone by, to form chains to bind the martyrs who are willing to die for freedom of conscience; iron feels the force of progress. Yours, G. A. Lomas.

Providence, Pa., Jan. 6th, 1878.

D. M. Bennett, Esq., Dear Sir: I have been watching the movements of your persecutors lately, as reported through the Investigator, and as it is not so much yourself as the principles you represent that is menaced, I thought best to hand you a couple of dollars to help you and the cause. I hope the friends will rally to your rescue, and give such material aid as will convince the Christian bigots of their utter powerlessness for evil. I remember well the closing sentence of Robert Cooper's defense in England for blasphemy, uttered about forty years ago. I quote from memory: "But what good will your power to punish accomplish? Will it conquer the glorious cause to which I am the martyr? No. Will it conquer me? No. The consciousness of deserving well of society will obtund the anguish that Christian malice would inflict. The last perception of my existence shall be the joy of an approving conscience, and the last sigh that heaves this beating heart, shall breathe a curse on Christianity!" Hoping you will establish the freedom of the press and religious liberty, I remain truly yours, Pulaski Carter.

Randolph Center, Ohio, Dec. 17, 1877

D. M. Bennett Esq, Dear Sir: The Truth Seeker is mailed to me regularly at Kipton, Ohio, but being absent from there almost constantly I only get packages of them occasionally. But now I have those that post me all up on the arrest and the good cheer sent you from the noble Liberals throughout the country promptly in the time of your crucifixion. It is your pen touched with fire from off the altar of truth these pious frauds would quench. They had rather release forty Barabbases than you. They must strangle free thought and stop the live little Truth Seeker. But they can't quench your influence, it's too late. Your debates, interrogatories to the Jewish Jehovah, &c., &c., have already reached the people and they won't let you go down under the heel of the bigoted Comstock and his crew. For in so much as they do it unto you, they do it unto us all! and the time has come for us to stand true to a man, ah! and woman too, in our strength. For the theological schools are turning out so many preachers every year that have to live by the art, it comes to burden every part of the country, and their numbers and teachings are deeply endangering our true liberties. Every little hamlet has to support three or four churches and hungry preachers with their families. Pauper leeches, that must chase down every child, and browbeat every parent until their children are in their power in the Sunday-schools.

The people wrangle politically, and charge the hard times to political mismanagement, but forget the immense sums that are wrung out of the people continually by every kind of device to build churches and support the craft with no revenue or return. The time of the young and old is usurped three or four nights a week with sensual oyster suppers for the young, mite societies, festivals, &c. The young people's prayer meeting is also a nice sensual institution that is an important feature, and while all the corrupt, festering vices are nicely covered up in the church, Comstock is left loose to hunt down the works of science which are of real benefit to the people. I herewith enclose money for one more subscription for The Truth Seeker from this place, and there will be more sent from here, and if trouble thickens my purse strings shall be loosened to you as completely as consistent in common with the men of soul—the true liberals of the land. I also enclose a clip from the Cleveland Leader of the 15th inst., to advise you that the crafty Anthony is in conclave with the Y. M. C. A. in the cities of the west, making a stalking-horse of "pernicious and obscene literature." I find Dr. Trall's scientific work on Sexual Science which is essentially a treatise on the determining how to raise a given sex in stock, &c., much tested in this part of the state in stock raising.

Yours, &c., Dr. T. S. Andrews.

P. S.—If this hurried communication is legible and you wish to publish it, do so. And in this connection, in case you do publish it, I wish to suggest to the Liberals that they do not fall into line with the common slanderers of the Hon. Col. Ingersoll and write him down "Bob," nor the great Thomas Paine, who was the essential father of our American liberties, as "Tom" Paine, as in doing so you but fasten the stigma in which they take delight, while we must preface the "Rev." to the name of every upstart of an ignoramus preacher throughout the country. T. S. A.

Woodhull, Ill., Dec. 24, 1877.

Editor Truth Seeker: The United States Law against obscene literature passing through the mails is now agitated throughout our country, caused by the late unjust arrests of publishers. There are but few who will not admit that much obscene literature passes through the mails that should not only be suppressed but destroyed, and the publishers and senders made amenable to the injured parties. As for the present law, the line of distinction—what is and what is not obscene—is hard to determine. If words and the meaning of words constitute obscenity regardless of the purpose and intentions of the writers and publishers, there is much valuable literature that would be condemned under the letter of this law. That which has a tendency to injure the moral condition of society should be suppressed. But to make the distinction is rather a nice point. This fact places the decision under the present law more or less under the control of personal interest and prejudice. Our historical experience warrants us in saying that religious prejudice is one of the most powerful known to man; and it is charged as being the cause of some of these late arrests. But be this as it may, if such a law is needed to protect the youth and rising generation, the execution of it should be placed in the hands of the people. Let parents be the judge what their children shall read. Confine the law to cases of obscenity when found in the office or in the hands of children under age without the consent of their parents or guardians, give the right to them to prosecute publishers and senders who may send or cause to be sent obscene literature through the mail or by any other conveyance. Then the execution of the law will be out from under the power of any influence whatever, and who may consider themselves injured by its violation can have their remedy. As it now is, the injured parties have no redress; the country may be flooded with obscenity through other means than the mail. Fines and imprisonments may now be inflicted wholly to gratify personal and religious feelings to fill the pockets of the prosecuting agent. Restpectfully, Isaac Paden.

Edinburg, Ind., Dec. 5, 1877.

D. M. Bennett: Enclosed find $2.00 to renew my subscription from Jan. 1, 1878. I have had lots of thoughts in the last two weeks. I first thought I would ask his Satanic Majesty to bless Brother Comstock, but I didn't know as that was fair. I next thought I would ask Jesus Christ to bless you, but concluded that Brother Comstock would be mad if I did. Then I thought I would bless Comstock myself, but couldn't a bit. Finally I thought I would bless you, so when you need it for your defense, draw on me at sight for $25.00.

Your friend, E. K. Hosford.

Berlin, N. J.

Friend Bennett: I have just read the two tracts for the circulation of which Comstock had you arrested. The one on marsupial animals is to me a very interesting scientific article, and I should as soon have thought of prosecuting a farmer for keeping his domestic animals anywhere except in a dark cellar where his children could not see them, as of persecuting you for bringing that article to the light. "To the pure all things are pure." It is only the ignorance and filthiness of Comstock and others like him that make them so squeamish when they look at or read of the marsupial contrivances of nature and their uses.

J. Hacker.

St. John's, Mich., Dec. 23, 1877.

Friend Bennett: Jesus offered himself to suffer for the sins of others. Christians believe in the doctrine. I therefore offer myself as a substitute for your sins. I offer myself freely, and Christian Comstock cannot refuse my offer without going back on the great grand principle on which Christianity is founded.

Christians in the name of God have in the past perpetrated the most damnable acts; are they doing so now? Let Bell County, Texas, and St. Comstock answer. I care not how repulsive Comstock may be to you and other honest men. As for me I love him. Not on account of his intrinsic value, but for the reason that his hellish acts have shown up the Y. M. C. A. in its true colors, and that his acts will tend to break the chain of superstition and set men free. The fact is, Mr. Bennett, it is not your language that so troubles the Y. M. C. A., but it is your ideas. Your arguments are knocking loose the props of the platform on which they stand. Should my offer be accepted, it will not be necessary for Comstock to send decoy letters to get me. I am ready at a moment's notice. I have yet but a few years left, and if the Y. M. C. A. think they can use me I am ready. M. Babcock.

Dear Bro. (In Grand Mother Nature:) Please put me down for $15 00, and if I can, I will send you more, and you needn't thank me for it. I have seven children living, and I consider myself obliged for the sake of my children to sustain your cause, which is mine and my children's. I wish I could send you a thousand dollars. Brotherly as ever, A. Leon Cervantes.

Washington, D. C., Jan. 8, 1878.

Citizen D. M. Bennett, My Dear Sir: Your "good news and good tidings" are before me, and I rejoice as much over your victory as though it were my own, and nothing gives me more joy than to learn of the triumphs of my friends in the ranks of secular human liberty and progress.

The crawling, creeping, cringing sycophants of inquisitorial churchianity are reading their inevitable fate in the intellectual development and scientific researches of the nineteenth century, and the beating, throbbing, surging pulsation of a long-enslaved and suffering humanity is reading upon the pages of the book of the brains of the world its resuscitated and rejuvenated mental freedom from the clanking manacles of a blood-bedewed and blood-bespattered system of ecclesiastical fiendishness.

Sectarian devils and theological gods created by and enthroned upon the diseased and superstitious imagination of bigots and fanatics will ere long be phantoms of the past, and Reason will and shall be "enthroned upon the Brain of the world as King of kings and God of gods."

Victory must, shall, and will be inscribed upon our banners, and the Duke of Alva, Torquemada, and Anthony Comstock will be mentioned in history only because of their infamous deeds and inhumanity to man for opinion's sake. Yours truly,

Ethyl Esparto.

South St. Louis, Dec. 5, 1877.

Friend Bennett: I am glad to see so many Liberals coming to your rescue. I think this Comstock persecution will open the eyes of the people, and create an excitement that will bring about the abrogation of this odious law. The best way to show up the character of a law, is to enforce it, and show its workings. This is what the villain Comstock is doing, and should receive the thanks of all Infidels. The idea of calling your physiological consideration of "how do possums generate their kind" an obscene article is, in my opinion, one of the weakest charges ever heard of, and shows "on what a slender thread hangs all gospel things." Would it not be well to consider now how gods are generated? Matthew says: a "Holy Ghost" generates gods. Luke says: "An angel went in unto her." Here you see is a distinction and a difference. Thus you see, the generation of gods and marsupials is still an open question, and it would be well to have it settled. The Church ought to hold a plenary convention to settle this question.

I intend to send you some help as soon as I get my taxes paid. Our former Constitution taxed church property, but the present one allows church property to go untaxed. So you see Christians have succeeded in making a law to rob me, and force a support of their "holy houses" whether I am willing or not; they would soon die out if the civil law did not support them: they know this, hence their persecution. L. T. Wells.

Mr. D. M. Bennett: Will you give notice through your paper that the next Quarterly meeting of the Spiritualists of Western New York, will be held at Good Templars' Hall, Lockport, N. Y., the first Saturday and Sunday in February, 1878. Good speakers from abroad are expected.

By Order Of The Committee.

Liberal Leagues.

Allow me to advise those who organize local Liberal Leagues to hand a notice of the organization to the nearest Agent of the Associated Press, and request that it be telegraphed over the country.

H. L. Green,
Chairman Ex. Com. N. L. L.

B. F. Underwood lectures at Maryville, Mo., Jan. 2, 3, 4, 5; Brighton, Iowa, 7, 8, 9, 10; Oglesby and Peru, Ill., 11, 12, 13; Streator, Ill., 14, 15, 16; Toronto, Ont., 20, 22 23; Meaford, Ont., 24, 25, 26.

The Conflict Between Church and State.

LECTURES BY E. C. WALKER.

1. The National Reform; or, God in the Constitution.
2. The State Secularization Movement.
3. Taxation, Republican and the Opposite.
4. Religion in the School.
5. The State and the Sabbath.
6. National Protection for National Citizens.
7. Education and the State.
8. Who Shall Vote?
9. The Duties of Liberals.
10. The Liberal League and Politics.
11. The Modern Inquisition.
12. The Final Authority in Morals.

Will lecture in the West until the 1st of April for actual expenses. Especially desirous to assist in the organization of Liberal Leagues

Address E. C. Walker, Forence, Iowa. Lock Box B.

Wanted.—By a Liberal lady, correspondence with Liberal bachelors and widowers, all the way from forty to fifty years of age. Farmers with some surplus means preferred. My object is to dispose of a half interest in the most beautiful farm in the West, with a pleasant companion to assist in agricultural pursuits thrown in. For further particulars, address M. M. Dunleath, Cawker City, Mitchell Co. Kan. Photos exchanged.

Useful Recipes.

Dishwashing made easy.—Clean the grease, crumbs, &c. from plates, and stack them in the order of their size in a large pan, and pour hot water over them, in which thinly sliced soap has been dissolved. Wind the dishcloth over the tines of a fork or stick, and save your hands as much as possible. The rinsing water will generally do for cups and glass. Always have plenty of hot water on hand, and wash out and dry both wiper and dishcloth at least once a day, and you can always have clean and polished dishes, which when placed on a sweet and tidy table, will enhance the pleasure of every meal, however humble.

An Excellent Furniture Polish.—Put into a bottle one pint of linseed oil, half a quartern of spirits of wine, half a quartern of vinegar, and one ounce of butter of antimony. Mix all together, and shake the bottle well before using it.

Rust in Tin.—To prevent rusting of tin rub fresh lard over every part of the dish, and then put it in a hot oven and heat it thoroughly. Thus treated, any tinware may be used in water constantly and remain bright and free from rust indefinitely.

For Cleaning White Marble.—Half a pound of pearl-ash, one pound of whitening, half a pound of soft soap; all to be boiled together until quite thick, and put on the marble when nearly cold. It must remain on for twenty-four hours, then be washed of with soft water, and afterwards polished well with linen cloths. Spirits of turpentine for black marble.

Canary Birds.—To keep insects off of birds, put the least bit of kerosene oil under each wing—say as much as remains on your little finger after you have let the drop fall off. Do this every ten days until all are removed. Clean the cage well every day; scour it in hot water; use borax and but little soap. Mate the birds during the last of February or first of March.

To Cleanse a Kitchen Sink.—Every morning after the dishes have been washed, give the sink a thorough scalding out; then sprinkle plenty of pulverized borax in and around the sink, under it and the boiler; let the borax remain, as it is a disinfectant. It will also absorb the grease; drive off the bugs or ants, and will not in anyway interfere with the cooking or dish-washing.

Turtle Soup, (Callipash).—Three or four green onions, a bunch of seasoning herbs, a sprig of basil, Cayenne pepper and salt, one quart very strong veal broth, one pound of butter, flour, lemon juice, and Madeira wine; cut up the entrails, and let the bones and other parts intended for the soup stew six hours with the onions and seasoning, chopped small; pepper, salt and Cayenne (not too hot) to taste, and water enough. The liquor in which the fins are boiled tender can go in too; add the liquor to the veal broth, put in the butter, rubbed down with as much flour as will sufficiently thicken the soup; stir it over the fire for 10 minutes, and add lemon-juice and Madeira according to quantity. The coarse white parts will require cooking two hours. The green fat should be cut into pieces an inch and a half square, and simmered in the soup one hour. Force-meat balls and the eggs are to be served in the soup: make these of the vealy part of the turtle minced with one-half a beaten anchovy, a piece of celery boiled tender, the yolk of a hard-boiled egg, mix them well up with two tablespoonfuls of bread crumbs, season with Cayenne pepper, mace, salt, and white pepper, moistened with a little oyster liquor, a lump of bulter warmed, and a well-beaten egg; roll them into balls and fry in butter. In case there are no eggs in the turtle, take three yolks of hard-boiled eggs, make them into paste with the yolk of an uncooked egg, and throw them into boiling water for a few minutes to harden.

Spanish Cream.—Sift three tablespoonfuls of ground rice; add to it two of powdered sugar, and mix it smooth with two of orange flower water; then stir in gradually a pint of cream, and stir the whole over a clear fire till of a proper thickness; then pour into a glass dish.

To Remove Black Spots from the Ear.—Take a large-sized watch key, place the stem directly over the black spot, and press firmly on it.

Oil Out of Woolen.—You can get a bottle or a barrel of oil off any carpet or woolen stuff, by applying dry buckwheat plentifully and faithfully. Never put water to such a grease spot or liquid of any kind.

Fruit Stains.—To remove fruit stains, let the spotted part of the cloth imbibe a little water without dipping it, and hold the part over two or three lighted brimstone matches at a proper distance.

Furniture Polish.—Boiled linseed-oil is the best for furniture polish.

INFORMATION WANTED.

How to bake cake (other than fruit cake) without the currants and citron settling to the bottom. I have tried rolling the fruit in flour without success.

Are preparations for the skin containing bismuth injurious?

A receipt to keep the feet warm printed in The Times, was to "wear a pair of cotton and a pair of woolen stockings." Which material must be worn next to the feet?

What is the best food for sky-larks?

A sure way for getting rid of bird-lice.

What will remove from the backs of hands small warts and brown spots like freckles?

George Francis Train.

Mr. Train holds himself responsible for the utterances here made, and entirely exonerates the Editor from all responsibility therefor.

"Fast" Train still on the "Rail."

GEO. FRANCIS TRAIN FIRING BOMB-SHELLS ALL ALONG THE LINE!

COMSTOCK-ISM FOREVER!

ELDER EVANS! ELIZUR WRIGHT! DR. FOOTE! PARKER PILLSBURY! SENATOR HOAR! ALL STIRRED UP WITH A POLE!—CALIFORNIA CHEERING FOR THE TRUTH SEEKER!—MR. TRAIN AGAINST THE REPEAL OF THE OBSCENITY LAW AND THE BLASPHEMY ACT!—TWEED-ISM! GRANT-ISM! BEECHER-ISM! TILDEN-ISM, and HAYES-ISM—ALL OVERTHROWN THROUGH THE SUCCESS OF COMSTOCK-ISM!

MADISON SQUARE, P. E. 48.

CITIZEN D. M. B.! What! are you not a-going to publish those "Elegant Extracts" from the Sacred Classics? Do you mean to say that the pulpit alone can monopolize this mass of "obscenity" which makes the Bible unfit for the parlor, the school, or the library of any pure-minded girl or boy?

Do you really mean to repeal the law, which will prevent you from arresting every Priest! every Christian! every Postmaster who circulates this Obscene Book through the mails? Can't you see that we have got all their noses on the grindstone?

SAINT ANTHONY THE ICONOCLAST.

How should we ever have got at the Beecher-Rabbit performance! the Tilton-Hen-hatching business! but for Comstock pouncing on Woodhull, who was only acting on my Psychology, when Blood wrote that Nov. 2, '72 article, which Woodhull claimed as her own composition!

Thanks to Comstock! He made the law stamp the "Holy Bible" Obscene in my case! Thanks to Comstock! he follows up his noble work in destroying Christianity in Lant's, Foote's, Heywood's, and your arrest!

A FEEBLE VOICE FROM MASSACHUSETTS.

Geo. F. Hoar, U. S. Senator, writes Mr Heywood:

"The line of distinction between honest argument intended to convince the people that their opinions, laws, or social and domestic arrangements are wrong, however mistaken or even injurious in their results such arguments may be, and writings designed to inflame evil purposes and minister to gross and depraved tastes, is a line which I think our Massachusetts jurors would be pretty sure to see and to keep."

This is too thin! This Jesuitical talk don't meet either Heywood's or Bennett's case. Hoar was in Congress when the bill was passed. He feebly protested, and the mails have been daily outraged ever since! He knew the act was unconstitutional! Now he pipes like a cuckoo, when the time has arrived for eagles to scream! A man who says his prayers and goes to church cannot express opinions on your arrest. The Bible is an "Obscene" book! Sixty thousand priests preach from its "Obscene" pages!

DR. FOOTE ON THE COMSTOCK TAIL.

"If a woman can be arrested for sending an alleged obscene letter through the mails to another woman (which has been done), and if physiological literature is condemned as obscene, then how easily may a physician who writes a plain letter giving advice on sexual subjects to his patient be decoyed into writing such a letter to some one who is drawing him out for the purpose of making him a victim to the existing law? . . With, therefore, the medical Pharisees of the old school forming a part of this grand combination, how long will it be possible for new schools—Eclectic, Homœopathic, and Hydropathic—to issue and send through the United States Mails their journals and printed transactions, or even for the members of these schools to write letters to their patients?"

The Doctor just handed me his points on The American Torquemada! He sees it at last. The Hammond! Clymer! Jackson! Peter's experts are behind all these persecutions! The Priest! The Lawyer! and the Doctor are the crutches on which mankind hobble to destruction. The one seizes your body! the other your pocket! the third your soul! 'Tis the Trail of the Serpent! Their object is to crush out all such independent thinkers as Dr. Foote! But don't be discouraged, Doctor; that fine shall be paid back with Lamp-Post interest!

ELIZUR WRIGHT IN THE INDEX!

"I think Congress has no occasion, and therefore no right, to legislate on the subject, except for the District of Columbia and the Territories. Moreover, I think its act touching the circulation of obscene publications through the mails is an outrageous violation of the Constitution, incapable of any modification which could make it either constitutional or safe. I wish to sign a petition for its total and immediate repeal, even at the risk of being classed with the vilest publicans and sinners, if anybody sees fit so to class me. Let men be punished for obscenity or treason, if they are guilty of either, but not for sending either through the mails. If it has come to that, that these two crimes, or any crimes, cannot be suppressed without invading the sacred privacy of the people's correspondence, we had better abolish the post-office."

Glad you are hit, Mr. Wright! But how happens it I never heard from you when forty million Dead Beats left me to die like a dog in the Tombs for quoting the Bible? You talk bravely; but why don't you arrest the Bible Society for publishing the book the law stamped "Obscene" in my case? You dare not speak out! You dare not read Bennett's Open Letter to Major General J. C., King of the Cut-off Crowd! I say No to Repeal! We have got the "kusses" where Tony had the wedge!

THREE CHEERS FOR BLASPHEMY!

Why not blaspheme? Whose business is it, anyway? Blasphemy is the biggest thing out except Comstock-ism!

Says the Sun:

"Elder Evans, the head of the New Lebanon Shakers, publishes a protest against anybody being prosecuted for blasphemy. 'I was under the impression,' he says, 'that this was not a Christian, but an American nation, where the Mohammedan, the Hindoo, the Jew, and Quaker had equal right to their opinion. The recent earthquakes do not more surely indicate the existence of hidden forces in the earth that we cannot control than the arrest of one of our revered citizens for blasphemy betokens the fact that the Church has already the control of the United States Government.'"

"God Almighty"! don't the Shakers know that there is a law in the State in which they live pronouncing profane swearing blasphemy? "Jesus Christ"! what stupidity in our old friend in not knowing that a dozen States have laws to hang witches in Salem! "Hell and Damnation"! what ignorance for our apple-sauce and sweet-cider acquaintances not to know that all good Christians say "God Damn You"!

CALIFORNIA SENDS GREETINGS TO BENNETT.

STOCKTON, CAL. Dec. 23, 1877.

G. F. T., MADISON SQUARE: I know you, but I regret to say you do not know me. I heard you explode your Psychologic bomb-shells in San Francisco.

I have often said to my friends that you are among the great speakers of the day. I feel that I would have missed a great deal had I missed your San Francisco lectu[re].

I am so glad to see your double-edged tongue and pen charging into that sneak, Comstock, in behalf of Bennett of THE TRUTH SEEKER. That conclave of "fools for Christ's sake" dropped you as they would drop a torpedo at the time of your imprisonment in the Tombs.

A shaft of lightning only throws a person down, or may-be kills him; but the dagger-thrusts of your pen lays him prostrate with gashes added.

There is a story of a man in New York who, in a fit of anger, threw liquid vitriol into the eyes of his apprentice, a boy thirteen years of age, making him blind for life. The report says that, after the offender had changed worlds, he confessed from spirit life that he had not slept a minute for a period of thirteen months from remorse for his wicked act!

While Comstock and his friends are more or less pachydermatic and pachycephalic, yet I believe your pen will make them wince and impair their sleep! Comstock is imitating the zeal of Torquemada. He is treading in the footprints of the Spanish Inquisitors.

Will you send me your photograph?

A. S. HUDSON, M. D.

MR. TRAIN'S REPLY.

MADISON SQUARE. P. E. 48.

A. S. H.: Glad you get THE TRUTH SEEKER! Stir up the Californians to send in their shekels to Bennett! The old fellow is head and shoulders over Paine! Voltaire! Hume! Gibbon! Feuerbach! Franklin! Ingersoll! and the Spiritualists! They talk; he fights! THE TRUTH SEEKER has more manliness than the Index, Investigator, Banner of Light, and all the Infidel, Atheistic, and skeptical journals ever published. Send in your dollars! When a newspaper is big enough to take in this deponent brains are at a premium. Bennett says I am egotistic, yet I always ask him to put me in agate or nonpareil—I feel so small! No! to photo! Have not sat for many years, and never shall again! Nichols has negatives taken in 1870, G. F. T.

PARKER PILLSBURY SEES THE INDIVIDUAL IN THE FENCE!

"You and Bennett and Lant and Dr. Foote may do for an opening course, under feigned or forced allegations of 'obscenity.' But depend upon it, the vulture's eye is on other and larger prey. Yours, still from the watch-tower."

This great wheel-horse of abolition has more brains and independence than all the Phillipses, Garrisons, and Beechers in the land! What have these "Old Lights" had to say of your case? Pillsbury sees the truth under the ink. Comstock is only a tool of Ignatius Loyola! The Jesuits are desperate! The bill was passed through the Protestant branch of the Roman Propaganda, the Y. M. C. A! A thousand million defalcation is back of it. It covers Tweedism, Grantism, and Beecherism! The law must not be repealed till the Bible publishers are in jail!

THE IMMACULATE CONCEPTIONISTS AT ONEIDA AND THE TRUTH SEEKERS!

Prssident Noyes sends me the American Socialist, bubbling all over with good things; but he does not come out against Comstock-ism as squarely as the Socrates of Mount Lebanon!

F. Wayland Smith came to see me in Madison Square and assures me that the Socialist is a fixed fact. I told him that the trouble with Oneida was they were too rich! too respectable! too strong, for Comstock to touch, or their publications would have been stopped long ago! So would Dr. Jackson's, of Danville! Your Jesus Christ letter and Marsupial Lingam is nothing to the organized Immaculate Conceptionists!

But President Noyes is right as a non-resistant! He says: "The way to put down the false thing is to bring out the true thing. That is our understanding of the policy of Christ and Paul. 'Fight! fight! fight!' is the cry of the times, and the churches are shouting it louder than anybody. And they fight not only with the word but with the sword. They have put down slavery by war; and what has come of it? They have sent armies and armed judges against the Mormons; and what has come of it? They have put down the workingman's riots by bloodshed; and what has come of it? They are fighting obscenity, blasphemy, and intemperance by law; and 'the law worketh wrath and causeth the offense to abound.'"

THE SHAKERS SHAKING COMSTOCKISM!

Our old friend, Elder Evans, always strikes square from the shoulder! A man who is thirty odd years ahead of me on the meat question is a power in the land! But the trouble is with this Solon of the celibates, he lives in the Anno Domini chronology! uses pentecostal words! worn-out Biblical phrases, and wants "a New Heaven and a New Earth."

This is all wrong. The old elements are all right. 'Tis the ancient dogmas, creeds, formulas, hobgoblins, ghosts, that are out of joint.

Adopt the Psychologic Era, and stand by the old sun, air, earth, water, which are always changing!

THE GATES OF GAZA.

Thunder and lightning!! Can't you Freethinkers all see that Comstock is the Sampson that razes the pillars of the Temple to destroy the Beecher Colfax-Tweed-Grant-Case–Plume–Swan-Winslow-Hayes–Tilden-Sweeney–Woodward–Jessup-Dodge-Moody-Lambert-Broadwell Philistines?

Reverse your engine before it is too late! Don't repeal that bill! Go into jail if you can. You are game to fight this battle of the Ages! Everybody else has crawled but you!

COMSTOCKISM FOREVER!

Instead of firing Krupp-Parrott-Rodman-Armstrong-Whitworth guns into President, Cabinet, Congress, and Supreme Court, who endorse the executive, judicial, and legislative act that gives Comstock the power to read our private letters in the mails, all your correspondents are pitching into this lovely young evangel, whose pure and spotless actions have already converted him into a saint.

What a terrible mistake you are all making in hounding him into Gehenna! Hades! Tartarus! Purgatory! and the defunct hell of Beecher!

Comstock is knocking his brains out against a stone wall! You don't want Ingersoll to defend you! Resist not evil! Don't defend yourself; but be plaintiff! Arrest the Bible Society! I will lecture for the funds! Those "Kusses" are afraid of me! When I let the tigers loose, their prayers will not save them! Comstock, I say, forever! He will make the fortune of THE TRUTH SEEKER! G. F. T.

BOB INGERSOLL ON THE BIBLE.—A Post reporter dropped in on Colonel Bob Ingersoll yesterday, with the request that he would shed a little light on the great question of life and death. The Colonel, though quite busy, consented to be interrupted, and wheeling his chair round said: "Fire away with your questions." As an opening shot the reporter asked:

"Colonel, are your views of religion based upon the Bible?"

"I regard the Bible, especially the Old Testament, the same as I do most other ancient books, in which there is some truth, a great deal of error, considerable barbarism and a most plentiful lack of good sense."

"Have you found any other work, sacred or profane, which you regard as more reliable?"

"I know of no book less so, in my judgment."

"You have studied the Bible attentively, have you not?"

"I have read the Bible, I have heard it talked about a good deal, and am sufficiently well acquainted with it to justify my own mind in utterly rejecting all claims made for its divine origin."

"What do you base your views upon?"

"On reason, observation, experience, upon the discoveries in science, upon observed facts, and the analogies properly growing out of such facts. I have no confidence in anything pretending to be outside, or independent of, or in any manner above nature."

"According to your views, what disposition is made of man after death?"

"Upon that subject I know nothing. It is no more wonderful that man should live again than that he now lives; upon that question I know of no evidence. The doctrine of immortality rests upon human affection. We love, therefore we wish to live."

"Then you would not undertake to say what becomes of man after death?"

"If I told or pretended to know what becomes of man after death, I would be as dogmatic as are theologians upon this question. The difference between them and me is, I am honest. I admit that I do not know."

"Judging by your criticisms of mankind Colonel, in your recent lecture, you have not found his condition very satisfactory?"

"Nature, outside of man, so far as I know, is neither cruel nor merciful. I am not satisfied with the present condition of the human race nor with the condition of man during any period of which we have any knowledge. I believe, however, the condition of man is improved, and this improvement is due to his own exertions. I do not make nature a being. I do not ascribe to nature intention."

"Is your theory, Colonel, the result of investigation of this subject?"

"No one can control his own opinion nor his own belief. My belief was forced upon me by my surroundings. I am the product of all circumstances that have in any way touched me. I believe in this world. I have no confidence in any religion promising joys in another world at the expense of liberty and happiness in this. At the same time, I wish to give to others all the rights I claim for myself."

"If asked for proofs of your theory, what would you furnish?"

"The experience of every man who is honest with himself, every fact that has been discovered in nature. In addition to these, the utter and total failure of all religionists in all countries to produce one particle of evidence showing the existence of any supernatural power whatever, and the further fact that the people are not satisfied with their religion. They are continually asking for evidence. They are asking it in every imaginable way. The sects are continually dividing. There is no real religious serenity in the world. All religions are opponents of intellectual liberty. I believe in absolute mental freedom. Real religion with me is a thing not of the head, but of the heart; not a theory, not a catechism, not a creed, but a life."

"What punishment, then, is inflicted upon man for crimes and wrongs committed in this life?"

"There is no such thing as an intellectual crime. No man can commit a mental crime. To become a crime it must go beyond thought."

"What punishment is there for physical crime?"

"Such punishment as is necessary to protect society and for the reformation of the criminal."

"If there is only punishment in this world, will not some escape punishment?"

"I admit that all do not seem to be punished as they deserve. I also admit that all do not seem to be rewarded as they deserve; and there is in this world, apparently, as great a failure in the matter of reward as in the matter of punishment. If there is another life, a man will be happier there for having acted according to his highest ideal in this. But I do not discern in nature any effort to do justice."

"Are you generally received as flatteringly in your lecturing tours as you were here last Wednesday evening?"

"Yes. At the same time, I was greatly flattered by my reception here."

"Then your views are not so unpopular as might be supposed from the abuse you receive."

"It is my popularity they abuse. If my views were not popular they, of course, would care nothing about what I say. I have no quarrel with the clergy. I am perfectly willing they should preach their opinions. All I ask is the privilege to do my own thinking and to express my own thoughts."

"Do you care to make converts to your theory?"

"Yes, I would like to see everybody of my opinion in this: I would like to see everybody perfectly willing to give the same liberty to all others which they claim for themselves.

"I wish everybody believed (as I do) that free labors gives us wealth and free thought will give us truth."—Washington Post.

THE COUNCIL FIRE.

Furnished with fuel by both White Men and Red. A paper of intense interest—History, Legend, Tradition, Indian Policies, Causes of Wars, Massacres, etc. Only paper of the kind. Hon. A. B. Meacham, ex-Supt. Indian Affairs, Editor. Monthly, 16 pages; $1.00 per year. Samples 10 cents. Address Council Fire, Box 1949, Philadelphia, Pa. 3t2

Radical Lectures,

BY

JAMES W. STILLMAN.

1. The Unknown God.
2. Woman Suffrage,
3. Herbert Spencer.
4. Reform in Education.

For terms, address

JAMES W. STILLMAN,

3t2 128 Broadway, New York.

WILL BE READY IN A FEW DAYS,

The Popes and Their Doings.

NO. 3 OF THE "HOLY CROSS SERIES."

Being brief stories of fully one hundred and fifty of the conspicuous and sinful Popes—the Vicars of Christ and Vicegerents of God—who filled the chair of the Holy See in Rome during several centuries. The cheapest and most popular history of the Popes ever written. A friend styles it "rich, rare and racy." 273 pp., 12mo. Sent by mail at the very low price of 50 cents in paper; 75 cents in cloth.

Address D. M. BENNETT.
141 Eighth St., N. Y.

THE TRUTH SEEKER COLLECTION

OF

FORMS, HYMNS, AND RECITATIONS.

Forms for organizing Societies, Forms for Constitutions and By-laws, for Funeral Services, Marriage Services, Naming of Infants, Obituary Notices, Epitaphs, Wills, etc. Also, nearly 500 Liberal and Spiritualistic Hymns, original and selected; for Public Meetings, Funerals, Social Gatherings, etc., etc. The whole supplemented by a fine selection of Recitations, comprising many of the finest poetical gems in the language. Nearly 600 pages, at the extremely low price of 75 cents in cloth. The price is made low, so that every family can have a copy. Let none fail to have it. D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth St., New York.

THE MAGNETIC TREATMENT.

Send 25 cents to DR. ANDREW STONE, Troy, N. Y., and obtain a large, highly-illustrated book on the system of Vitalizing Treatment. 1y36

YES YES WE WANT an agent in every town. Easy work at home. Write now and we will start you. $8 a day sure to all. SIMPSON & SMITH, 60 Cortlandt St., N. Y. 3t

RIFLES, SHOT-GUNS, REVOLVERS, sent C. O. D. for examination, all charges paid. No risk; no humbug. Write for catalogue. Address GREAT WESTERN GUN WORKS, Pittsburgh, Pa. 6mo27

$12 A DAY at home. Agents wanted. Outfit and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta Maine. 1y50

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. H. HALLELT & CO., Portland, Maine. 1y50

HISTORY OF THE CONFLICT BETWEEN RELIGION AND SCIENCE. Truly one of the most valuable works that have appeare within the last ten years. By PROF. DRAPER. Price, $1.75.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine. 1t

PRO AND CON OF SUPERNATURAL RELIGION; or an answer to the question, Have we a Supernaturally-Revealed, Divinely-Inspired and Miraculously-Attested Religion in the World? By E. E. GUILD, ex-Universalist clergyman. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

SPERMATORRHŒA

should be in the hands of those suffering from this LIFE-WASTING DISEASE. It is an external application, and has thoroughly and permanently cured over one thousand cases, and some of them were in a terribly shattered condition; had been in the insane asylums, many had falling-sickness-fits; others on the verge of consumption, while others again had become foolish and hardly able to take care of themselves. For further information, address, with stamp, Vineland, N. J., where DR. FELLOWS is permanently located, and obtain his private circular, with cures sworn to, which is unimpeachable testimony to the doctor's skill and reliability as a physician in treating this prevalent and most dangerous of all diseases, SPERMATORRHŒA. tf

☞ TERMS WITHIN THE REACH OF ALL. ☜

FULL DESCRIPTION OF OTHER LIBERAL WORKS FROM TIME TO TIME.

BOOKS FOR THINKERS,

PUBLISHED BY

CHARLES P. SOMERBY, No. 139 Eighth Street, New York,

(A few doors East of Broadway.)

The Martyrdom of Man.

By WINWOOD READE.

12mo, Extra Cloth, 543 pp. Postpaid, $3.

CONTENTS:

Under the head of "War," we have: Egypt, The Water Harvest, The Sources of the Nile, Philosophy of Leisure, Agricultural Monogamy, Inequality of Men, Famine the Mother of Astronomy, Cruelty the Nurse of Civilization, Trial of the Dead, the Painted Tomb, Children of the Desert, The Horse of War, The Terrible Sahara, Pharaoh Triumphant, Egyptian Country House, The Luxury Question, Theology Stops the Way, Empire of Ethiopia, The India Trade, The Persian Shepherds, The King's Harem, Origin of Greek Genius, Their Religion, The City of the Violet Crown, The University of Egypt, Seraglio Intrigue, Retreat of the Ten Thousand, Tyranny of Athens, Alexander at Babylon, Two Faces Under One Hat, A Greek Voltaire, The Purple Trade, Discovery of the Atlantic, Introduction of the "A, B, C," The Colonies of Carthage, The Gardens of the Hesperides, Home Rule of Rome, The House of Baal, Silver Spain, The Poor Hated Old Man, Roman Baden Baden, Cato's Little Farm, A Dissolute Prig, Africa's Place in History, Civilizing War.

Under the head of "Religion": Ghost Worship, Divine Hybrids, Idolatry and Dollatry, Who Made God? Nature in the Nude, The Sheik Abraham, Moses in Exile, The Delphi of the Hebrews, Pope Samuel, A God-intoxicated Man, A Pious Brigand, By the Waters of Babylon, Character of Jehovah, Character Improves, Origin of the Devil, A Monopolized Deity, Bright Side of the Character of Jesus, Dark Side, The Miracle Doctor, The Ghetto, Rome Sleeping, Heavenly Illusions, Episcopal Saliva, The Wonderful Well, The Truce of God, Achievements of Mahomet, Negro States, The African Hut, Dance Ordeal, School, Philosophy of Salt, Bagdad of the West, Negroes in Mecca, The Black Prophet, Turks in Africa.

Under the consideration of "Liberty," he shows us: The Ancient Germans, The Castle an Academy, The Serfs, The Monks, The Crusades, Venice, Arab Spain, The Hill of Tears, Orthodox Geography, India, Prester John, Lisbon Rejoices, Majestic Crime, Slavery in London, The Methodists, Giants and Pigmies, Thomas Paine, Cotton, Neck and Neck, W. L. Garrison, Rebellion of the North, The Lost Cause, Future of Africa, Future of the Earth, Origin of Man, Tailed Minds.

In the consideration of "Intellect" he introduces: The Children of the Sun, Origin of Life, History of the Cell, Dawn of Reason, Origin of Love, The Ghost Religion, Origin of Priests, Invention of Hell, Musical Conversation, The Why, The Utility of the Affections, Breeding Laws, Death of Sin, Origin of Chastity, Rome and China, The Buddhists, The Age of the Rosary, War in the Future, The Expedient of Religion, Fallacies of the Commune, American Prosperity, Inventions of the Future, Theory of the Soul, Duties of a Creator, The Theory Exploded, Should the Truth be Told? Christianity Exposed, The Catastrophes of Progress, Moral Value of Hell-Fire, True Sources of Morality, Spurious Virtues of Theology, The True Religion, The Last Sacrifice."

EXTRACT:

The good in this world predominates over the bad; the good is ever increasing, the bad is ever diminishing. But, if God is Love, why is there any bad at all? Is the world like a novel, in which the villains are put in to make it more dramatic, and in which virtue only triumphs in the third volume? It is certain that the feelings of the created have in no way been considered. If, indeed, there were a judgment-day, it would be for man to appear at the bar, not as a criminal, but as an accuser. What has he done that he should be subjected to a life of torture and temptation? God might have made us all happy, and he has made us miserable. Is that benevolence? God might have made us all pure, and he has made us all sinful. Is that the perfection of morality? If I believed in this man-created God, in this divine Nebuchadnezzar, I would say, You can make me live in your world, O Creator, but you cannot make me admire it; you can load me with chains, but you cannot make me flatter you; you can send me to hell-fire, but you cannot obtain my esteem. And if you condemn me, you condemn yourself. If I have committed sins, you invented them, which is worse. If the watch you have made does not go well, whose fault is that? Is it rational to damn the wheels and the springs?

PRESS NOTICES:

It is really a remarkable book, in which universal history is "boiled down" with surprising skill. . . The boldest, and, so far as historical argument goes, one of the ablest, assaults ever made upon Christianity.—[Literary World.

His history has a continuity, a rush, a carrying power, which remind us strikingly of Gibbon.—[New Haven Palladium.

The sketch of early Egyptian history, in the first chapter, is a masterpiece of historical writing. He has a style that reminds us of Macaulay.—[Penn Monthly.

You turn over his pages with a fascination similar to that experienced in reading Washington Irving.—[Inter-Ocean.

To readers who are attracted by the Darwinian literature, this book, with its quaint declaration that "Life is bottled sunshine," may also be recommended.—[Pittsburgh Eve. Chronicle.

Whoever would be jostled into attention, and led into unwonted channels of thought, will find this volume full of interest and often of delight. —[New Covenant.

Send 10 cents for Prometheus containing 28 pp. choice reading matter and a Full List of Liberal Publications; or for List only, Free.

CHARLES P. SOMERBY,

PUBLISHER, BOOKSELLER, IMPORTER AND PRINTER,

139 EIGHTH ST., Bet. Broadway and Fourth Ave., NEW YORK.

READ OUR ADVERTISEMENTS EVERY WEEK, AS FREQENT CHANGES WILL BE MADE.

JUST ISSUED.

BEYOND THE VEIL.

A very neat and entertaining volume, giving beautiful descriptions of life, occupations, etc., in the Spirit World. Dictated by the spirit of Percy B. Randolph, through the mediumship of Mrs. Francis H. McDougal and Mrs. Luna Hutchinson of California. With a steel-plate engraving of Dr. Randolph.

Price $1.50, post-paid by mail.

D. M. BENNETT
141 Eighth St., N. Y.

Christianity and Infidelity

A JOINT DISCUSSION BETWEEN

REV. G. H. HUMPHREY, Presb't'n. Clergyman,

OF NEW YORK, AND

D. M. BENNETT, Editor of The Truth Seeker.

It was conducted in the columns of The Truth Seeker, a letter alternately from each contestant appearing each week, beginning April 7, 1877, and closing Sept. 29, 1877, thus continuing just six months, giving thirteen letters from Humphrey and thirteen replies by Bennett.

The subjects discussed were as follows:

PART I.—The relative services of Christianity and Infidelity to American Liberty.

PART II.—The relative services of Christianity and Infidelity to Learning and Science.

PART III.—Is there a stronger probability that the Bible is divine than that Infidelity is true?

The discussion has excited a large share of interest, both among believers and unbelievers; and as both sides are fairly presented, it is suited to readers of all shades of opinion.

The New York Advocate, a paper having a very extensive circulation, in speaking of the volume, says, "Perhaps a more able and exhaustive presentation of both sides of the great questions which have agitated the civilized world for centuries has never been made. At any rate, in this volume will be found a perfect magazine or storehouse of arguments, pro and con, which every intelligent man and woman should peruse with candor and with an earnest desire to arrive at sound conclusions on themes of the highest importance to all mankind. . . Light is what we need. Let the controversies proceed. Let the blows descend upon the error-dispelling anvil. Let the sparks fly in all directions from the heated steel. The truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, is what the people demand on all the great questions of the day, whether of Finance, Science, Politics, or Religion, and discussion will elicit it." Let every person who feels the slightest interest in theological questions, whether on one side or the other, read the Humphrey-Bennett Discussion.

A thick 12mo volume of 580 pages, well bound sent, post-paid, to any address, for the low price of one dollar.

Address D. M. BENNETT, Publisher
141 Eighth St., New York.

Works of Thomas Paine.

COMMON SENSE. His first and most important political work. Clear type. Paper, 15 cts.

THE CRISIS. Containing Nos. I. to XVI., inclusive. Written in the "times that tried men's souls" during the American Revolution. 12mo. Full, clear type. Paper, 50 cents; cloth 80 cts.

THE RIGHTS OF MAN. Written in defense of his fellow man. A work almost without a peer in the world. On full, bold type. 12mo. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

THE AGE OF REASON. On large, clear type. Paper, 25 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

THE AGE OF REASON AND AN EXAMINATION OF THE PROPHECIES. Full, bold type. 12mo. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

PAINE'S POLITICAL WORKS. Complete in one volume, on full, bold type. Containing "Common Sense," "The Crisis" (sixteen numbers), and "The Rights of Man," with a fine steel portrait. Cloth, $1.50.

PAINE'S THEOLOGICAL WORKS. Complete. 12mo. Composed of the "Age of Reason," "Examination of the Prophecies," "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," "Letter to Mr. Erskine," "Letter to Camille Jordan," "An Essay on Dreams," "Of the Religion of Deism," etc., etc., with a life and fine steel portrait of Paine. Cloth, $1.50.

THOMAS PAINE'S GREAT WORKS. Complete. New edition. The cheapest and best ever sold. Containing a Life of Paine, his POLITICAL WRITINGS—"Common Sense," "The Crisis," "Rights of Man"—his THEOLOGICAL WRITINGS—"Age of Reason," "Examination of the Prophecies," "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," "Letter to Mr. Erskine," "An Essay on Dreams," "Letter to Camille Jordan," "Of the Religion of Deism"—all in one large volume, crown-octavo, of THE TRUTH SEEKER LIBRARY, with a fine steel portrait of Paine. Cloth, $3.00; colored leather, red burnished edges, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

LIFE OF THOMAS PAINE. By Calvin Blanchard. 12mo. Large, clear type, with a fine steel portrait of Paine. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents. Published by

D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth st., New York.

ASTROLOGY.

PROF. LISTER, Astrologer, 505 W. 23d st., New York. 44 years' practice, 27 in Boston. Can be consulted by letter. Send for Circular. Address all letters 505 West 23d st., New York City.

THE OUTCAST.

By WINWOOD READE author of "Martyrdom of Man."

This is his last work. Mr. Reade was unquestionably one of the ablest writers of the present century. His "Martyrdom of Man" attracted extraordinary attention in Europe and in this country, for its ability, brilliancy and boldness. This last work is regarded with equal favor. The English edition was published at two dollars. We give it entire for

THIRTY CENTS IN PAPER.

READER, that little cottage contains one of the choicest libraries in the country. I buy my books of J. FRANCIS RUGGLES, Bibliopole, Bronson, Mich. Rare O. P. works a specialty. Lists for stamp. 3m1

THE EVOLUTION. No. 16.

CONTENTS.

1. MERRIE ST. NICHOLAS. By Prof. A. Wilder.
2. THE BATTLE OF THE CATS.
3. HUMAN LIFE, ITS PHYSICAL SOLUTION. By T. P. Wilson, M.D.
4. MEDICAL ASSISTANCE, A SOCIAL FUNCTION. By Henry Edger.
5. THE LABORER IN POLITICS. By Prof. A. R. Grote.
6. CURRENTE CALAMO PAPERS. No. 2. By Edgar Fawcett.
7. COL. WARING AND HIS BOOKS.
8. TRAPS BAITED WITH ORPHANS.
9. JOSEPH COOK'S LECTURES. By Rev. George W. Cooke.
10. COOK ON GOD AND EVOLUTION. By J. D. Bell.

Bookbuyers and those who wish to subscribe to periodicals should see The Evolution, No. 16.

Ask Newsdealers for it, or send 15 cents to The Evolution, 34 Dey street, New York.

NEW SUBSCRIBERS TO

THE EVOLUTION, at $1.50 per year in advance, have their choice of 100 excellent books, each published at $1.50. One fine volume containing the following works by Charles Dickens, each entire, and handsomely bound, viz.: Child's History of England, Edwin Drood, Master Humphrey's Clock, The Mudfrog Association, A Holiday Romance, and Geo. Silverman's Explanation, will be sent to every new subscriber who sends us $1.50, and The Evolution will be sent one year free. (If the book is sent by mail, 15 cents must be sent for postage). Address,

ASA K. BUTTS, 34 Dey Street, New York.

The Priest in Absolution,

The first Number of the "HOLY CROSS SERIES," is from the abridged London edition of the same work, which created so much excitement in England. The original volume was issued by the "High Church" authorities as a guide to the clergy in the confessional, and was designed to be introduced into the English Church. Price 25 cents.

D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth St., New York.

☞ The other twenty-five numbers of the "Holy Cross Series" are being brought out as rapidly as possible.

The Career of Religious Ideas;

THEIR ULTIMATE,

The Religion of Science.

BY HUDSON TUTTLE.

An able examination of the Religions of the World—the subjects treated as follows: Chap. I.—Introductory; Chap. II.—What is Religion? Chap. III.—Fetishism; Chap. IV.—Polytheism; Chap. V.—Monotheism; Chap. VI.—Value of Ancient Bibles; Chap. VII.—Man's Moral Progress Dependent upon his Intellectual Growth; Chap. VIII.—Theological Problems; Chap. IX.—Man's Fall; Chap. X.—Free Will, Necessity, Responsibility; Chap. XI.—Duties and Obligations of Man to God; Chap. XII.—The Ultimate of Religious Ideas.

Price, in paper, 50 cents; in cloth, 75 cents. Postage prepaid. D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth St. N. Y.

COOKE UPON COOK.—Rev. GEORGE vs. REV. JOSEPH. An Exhaustive Review of the Sensation Lectures. See THE EVOLUTION. No. 16.

ANOTHER OF J. D. BELL'S GREAT Reviews.—Cook on God and Evolution in THE EVOLUTION. No. 16.

ATTENTION, LADIES!

THE BEST THING OUT.

An Excellent, non-Rusting, Durable Galvanized Iron Plater,

with directions for using the same, will be sent, post-paid, on receipt of $1.25, with order and address. E. D. BLAKEMAN,
Circleville, O.

The Evolution One Year Free

To any one ordering of me $5.00 worth of the works of A. B. Alcott, Louisa M. Alcott, Alger, Antoninus, Bagshot, Bain, Bartol, Bastian, C. T. Brooks, Buckle, Carpenter, W. E. Channing, E. D. Cheney, Clodd, Coulanges, Dall, Darwin, Emerson, Epictetus, Fish, Goethe, Gregg, Gibbon, Higginson, Howells, Huxley, International Scientific Series, S. Johnson, Lecky, Lessing, Lewes, Lubbock, Martineau, Mivart, Parton, Reade, Herbert Spencer, Tyndall, Weiss, and others. For further particulars, send 15 cents to

THE EVOLUTION, 34 Dey street, New York.

BOOK BUYERS,

And all who wish to subscribe to periodicals should send 15 cents for No. 16 of The Evolution. Address

THE EVOLUTION, 34 Dey Street, N. Y.

The Evolution for 1878 free

To any one sending me an order for $5 worth or more of any leading magazines (See Appleton's advertisement), or $10 worth of books.

The Evolution free two years to any one sending me an order for $10 worth or more of magazines, or $15 worth of books. All orders must be accompanied with the cash by registered letter, P. O. order, or draft on New York.

Send 15 cents for Evolution No. 16 and further particulars. Address, ASA K. BUTTS,
34 Dey Street.

FOR MASTERLY CRITICISM READ EDGAR FAWCETT'S articles in THE EVOLUTION.

Gems of Thought.

NOISELESS falls the foot of time that only treads on flowers.—Spenser.

IT is only great souls that know how much glory there is in being good.—Sophocles.

How far that little candle throws his beams!
So shines a good deed in a naughty world.
—Shakspere.

GREAT grief makes sacred those upon whom its hand is laid. Joy may elevate, ambitions glorify, but sorrow alone can consecrate.—Horace Greeley.

No standing armies are needed where intelligence prevails, and where the press is free to disseminate the principles of truth, morality, and virtue among the people.—The Advocate.

LET no man think lightly of good, saying in his heart, it will not benefit me. Even by the falling of water-drops a water pot is filled; the wise man becomes full of good even if he gather it little by little.—Buddha.

VICIOUS habits are so great a stain to human nature, and so odious in themselves that every person actuated by right reason would avoid them, though he were sure they would be always concealed both from God and man.—Cicero.

THE greatest man is he who chooses right with the most invincible resolution; who resists the sorest temptation from within and without; who bears the heaviest burdens cheerfully; who is calmest in storms and most fearless under menaces and frowns; whose reliance on truth and on virtue is most unfaltering.—Seneca.

GOODNESS does not more certainly make men happy than happiness makes them good. We must distinguish between felicity and prosperity; for prosperity leads often to ambition, and ambition to disappointment; the course is then over, the wheel turns round but once; while the reaction of goodness and happiness is perpetual.—Landor.

No mockery in this world ever sounds to me so hollow as that of being told to cultivate happiness. Happiness is not a potato, to be planted in a mold and tilled with manure. Happiness is a glory shining far down upon us from heaven. She is a divine dew which the soul feels dropping upon it from the amaranth bloom and golden fruitage of paradise. —Charlotte Bronte.

LIVE for something. Do good, and leave behind you a monument of virtue that the storm of time can never destroy. Write your name in kindness, love, and mercy on the hearts of the thousands you come in contact with year by year; you will never be forgotten. No, your name, your deeds, will be as legible on the hearts you leave behind as the stars on the brow of evening. Good deeds will shine as the stars of heaven.—Chalmers.

MANY a child goes astray, not because there is a want of prayer or virtue at home, but simply because home lacks sunshine. A child needs smiles as much as flowers need sunbeams. Children look little beyond the present moment. If a thing pleases, they are apt to seek it; if it displeases, they are apt to avoid it. If home is the place where faces are sour, and words harsh, and fault-finding is ever on the ascendant, they will spend as many hours as possible elsewhere.—Anon.

ALWAYS the idea of unbroken quiet broods around the grave. It is a port where the storms of life never beat, and the forms that have been tossed on its chafing waves lie quiet forevermore. There the child nestles as peacefully as ever it lay in its mother's arms, and the workman's hands lie still by his side, and the thinker's brain is pillowed in silent mystery, and the poor girl's broken heart is steeped in a balm that extracts its secret woe, and is in the keeping of a charity that covers all blame.—Chapin.

LEARN from your earliest days to endure your principles against the perils of ridicule; you can no more exercise your reason if you live in constant dread of laughter than you can enjoy your life if you are in constant terror of death. If you think it right to differ from the times, and to make a point of morals, do it; however rustic, however antiquated, however pedantic it may appear, do it, not for insolence, but seriously and grandly—as a man who wore a soul of his own in his bosom and did not wait till it was breathed into him by the breath of fashion.—Sidney Smith.

TELL me not that gold is king, or that cotton is king. Labor is king of this earth, with its brawny arms and giant face bronzed and marked with toil and care. I trust that the hour will come when he will be crowned in triumph, and I am hopeful that through this organization of labor the time will come—not in your day, perhaps not in mine, but in the future not distant—when organized, intelligent labor shall be able to own and control all the tools and machinery necessary for production, and shall have a full and undivided share in all the blessings it creates.—Senator Booth.

THERE are two ways of being happy—we may either diminish our wants or augment our means—either will do, the result is the same; and it is for each man to decide for himself, and do that which happens to be the easiest. If you are idle or sick or poor, however hard it may be to diminish your wants, it will be harder to augment your means. If you are active and prosperous, or young, or in good health, it may be easier for you to augment your means than to diminish your wants. But if you are wise, you will do both at the same time, young or old, rich or poor, sick or well; and if you are very wise, you will do both in such a way as to augment the general happiness of society.—Franklin.

Odds and Ends.

"A place for everything, and everything in its place," as the old woman said when she stowed the broom, bellows, ball of yarn, two babies, curry-comb, three cats and a gridiron into an old oven.

MICHIGAN saloon keepers attempt to defeat the law by making the (so-called) pretty waiter girls their partners in the business, and then asking why they cannot sell their own beer to their customers.

A CALIFORNIA man tied one end of a rope around his waist, and lassoed a cow with the other. He thought he had the cow, but at the end of the first half mile he began to suspect that the cow had him.

"PA, has the world got a tail?" asked an urchin of his father. "No, child. How could it have one when it is round?" "Well, persisted the heir, "why do the papers say 'So wags the world' if it ain't got a tail to wag about?"

WEBSTER'S dictionary contains over fifty thousand words. Mr. Jones says that when he came home late the other night, in the space of fifteen minutes his wife applied them all to him, including some extra ones and the fire-shovel.

A YOUNG bride who had been fashionably educated, was asked by her fond husband to attend to the ordering of the dinner, as he shouldn't have time to go to market. It is a fact that she blandly requested the butcher to send home a leg of tongue, seventeen pounds of steak, and two halibuts."

A FAIR and buxom New York widow, who had buried three husbands, recently went with a gentleman who, in his younger days, had paid her marked attentions, to visit the graves of her dear departed. After contemplating them in mournful silence, she murmured to her companion: "Ah, James, you might have been in that row now if you had only been a little more courageous."

A TALL Western girl, named Short, long loved a certain big Mr. Little; while Little, little thinking of Short, loved a little lass named Long. To make a long story short, Little proposed to Long, and Short longed to be even with Little's *short*comings. So Short, meeting Long, threatened to marry Little before long, which caused Little, in a short time to marry Long. Query.—Did tall Short love big Little less because Little loved Long?

THERE is a story of a traveler who, wishing to reach Barnet, had somehow got turned round, and was trotting along very composedly in the opposite direction from the right one to that town. Meeting a farmer on the road, he drew up, and asked, "How far is it to Barnet, if I keep straight on?" "Well," said the farmer, with a twinkle in his intelligent eye, "if ye keep straight on, it's about twenty-five thousand miles; but if ye turn right round, and go 'tother way, it's about half a mile."

A YANKEE gentleman said that Naugatuck horses were celebrated for their general worthlessness, imbecility, and marvelous slowness. He said a citizen sold one to a cavalry officer during the civil war, and warranted him to be a good war-horse. The soldier came back afterwards in a towering passion, and said he had been swindled. "As how?" said the Nantucketer. "Why, there's not a bit of go in him, and yet you warranted him as a good war-horse." "Yes, I did; and he is a good war-horse; he'd sooner die than run!"

CHAPTER ON MISSES.

The dear little Misses we meet with in life,
What hopes and what fears they awaken;
And when a man's taking a Miss for his wife,
He is Miss-led as well as Miss-taken.
When I courted Miss Kidd, and obtained the kiss,
I thought, in the warmth of my passion,
That I'd made a great hit in thus gaining a Miss,
But 'twas only a Miss-calculation.

For so many Misses surrounded Miss Kidd,
With me and my love interfering;
A jealous Miss-trust put into her head
That she ought not to give me a hearing.
There's a certain Miss-chance that I met with one day,
Almost sent my hopes to destruction;
And she felt a suspicion of all I might say,
And all owing to one Miss-construction.

Deceived by a Miss-information, I wrote
The cause of her anger demanding;
Miss-direction prevented her getting the note,
And introduced Miss-understanding.
When to make her my wife I exultingly swore,
Miss-belief made her doubt my intention.
And I nearly got wed to Miss-fortune before
I could wean her from Miss-apprehension.

But when she no longer would yield to Miss-doubt,
Nor be led by Miss-apprehension.
She had with Miss-like a most serious fall out,
And to wed felt no more hesitation.
But when to the church to be married we went,
Miss-take made the parson to linger,
And I got so annoyed by an awkward Miss-fit,
I could not get the ring on her finger.

Having been Miss-used, I now kept a strict watch,
Though I still lived in fear of Miss-carriage,
And I found, when too late, an unlucky Miss-match
Interfered with the joys of my marriage.
Miss-rule in my dwelling put everything wrong,
Miss-management then took her station,
Till my cash, like the time I take singing my song,
Was all wasted by Miss-application.

Truth Seeker Tracts.

No.	(REVISED LIST.)	Cts.
1.	Discussion on Prayer. D. M. Bennett and two Clergymen.	3
2.	Oration on the Gods. Ingersoll.	10
3.	Thomas Paine. "	5
4.	Arraignment of the Church. Ingersoll.	5
5.	Heretics and Heresies. "	5
6.	Humboldt, "	5
7.	The Story of Creation. Bennett.	5
8.	The Old Snake Story. "	2
9.	The Story of the Flood. "	5
10.	The Plagues of Egypt. "	2
11.	Korah, Dathan, and Abiram. " nnett.	2
12.	Balaam and his Ass. "	2
13.	Arraignment of Priestcraft. "	8
14.	Old Abe and Little Ike. Syphers.	3
15.	Come to Dinner. "	2
16.	Fog Horn Documents. "	2
17.	The Devil Still Ahead. "
18.	Slipped Up Again. "
19.	Joshua Stopping the Sun and Moon. D. M. Bennett.	2
20.	Samson and his Exploits. Bennett.	2
21.	The Great Wrestling Match. "	2
22.	Discussion with Elder Shelton. "	10
23.	Reply to Elder Shelton's Fourth Letter. D. M. Bennett.	3
24.	Christians at Work. Wm. McDonnell.	5
25.	Discussion with Geo. Snode. Bennett.	5
26.	Underwood's Prayer.	1
27.	Honest Questions and Honest Answers. D. M. Bennett.	5
28.	Alessandro di Cagliostro. C. Sotheran.	10
29.	Paine Hall Dedication Address. B. F. Underwood.	2
30.	Woman's Rights & Man's Wrongs. Syphers.	2
31.	Gods and God-houses. "	2
32.	The God's of Superstition and the God of the Universe. D. M. Bennett.	3
33.	What has Christianity Done? Preston.	3
34.	Tribute to Thomas Paine.	2
35.	Moving the Ark. D. M. Bennett.	1
36.	Bennett's Prayer to the Devil.	2
37.	Short Sermon. Rev. Theologicus. D.D.	1
38.	Christianity not a Moral System. X. Y. Z.	3
39.	The True Saint. S. P. Putnam.	3
40.	Bible of Nature vs. The Bible of Men. J. Syphers.	3
41.	Our Ecclesiastical Gentry, Bennett.	2
42.	Elijah the Tishbite. "	3
43.	Christianity a Borrowed System. "	3
44.	Design Argument Refuted. Underwood.	2
45.	Elisha the Prophet. Bennett.	3
46.	Did Jesus Really Exist? "	3
47.	Cruelty and Credulity of the Human Race. Dr. Daniel Arter.	5
48.	Freethought in the West. G. L. Henderson.	5
49.	Sensible Conclusions. E. E. Guild.	3
50.	Jonah and the Big Fish. D. M. Bennett.	1
51.	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 1.	5
52.	Marples-Underwood Debate, Underwood.	3
53.	Questions for Bible Worshipers. B. F. Underwood.	2
54.	An Open Letter to Jesus Christ. Bennett.	5
55.	The Bible God Disproved by Nature. W. E. Coleman.	3
56.	Bible Contradictions.	1
57.	Jesus Not a Perfect Character. Underwood.	2
58.	Prophecies.	2
59.	Bible Prophecies Concerning Babylon. B. F. Underwood.	2
60.	Ezekiel's Prophecies Concerning Tyre. B. F. Underwood.	2
61.	History of the Devil. Isaac Paden.	5
62.	The Jews and their God. "	10
63.	The Devils Due-Bills. John Syphers.	3
64.	The Ills we Endure—their Cause and Cure. D. M. Bennett.	2
65.	Short Sermon No. 2. Rev. Theologicus. D.D.	5
66.	God Idea in History. H. B. Brown.	5
67.	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets No. 2.	5
68.	Ruth's Idea of Heaven and Mine. Susan H. Wixon.	2
69.	Missionaries. Mrs. E. D. Slenker.	2
70.	Vicarious Atonement. J. S. Lyon.	3
71.	Paine's Anniversary. C. A. Codman.	3
72.	Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego. D. M. Bennett.	2
73.	Foundations. John Syphers.	3
74.	Daniel in the Lion's Den. Bennett.	2
75.	An Hour with the Devil. "	10
76.	Reply to Erastus F. Brown. D. M. Bennett.	3
77.	The Fear of Death. D. M. Bennett.	5
78.	Christmas and Christianity. D.M.Bennett.	5
79.	The Relationship of Jesus, Jehovah, and the Virgin Mary. W. E. Coleman.	2
80.	Address on Paine's 139th Birthday. Bennett.	5
81.	Hereafter, or the Half-way House. John Syphers.	1
82.	Christian Courtesy. Bennett.	2
83.	Revivalism Examined. Dr. A. G. Humphrey.	5
84.	Moody's Sermon on Hell. Rev. J. P. Hopps, London.	2
85.	Matter, Motion, Life and Mind. Bennett.	10
86.	An Enquiry about God's Sons. "	2
87.	Freethought Judged by its Fruits. B. F. Underwood.	1
88.	David, God's Peculiar Favorite. Mrs. E. D. Slenker.	3
89.	Logic of Prayer. Charles Stephenson.	3
90.	Bible-Mania. Otter Cordates.	2
91.	Our Ideas of God. B. F. Underwood.	1
92.	The Bible; is it Divinely Inspired? Dr. D. Arter.	5
93.	Obtaining Pardon for Sins. Hudson Tuttle.	1
94.	The New Raven. Will Cooper.	5
95.	Jesus Christ. D. M. Bennett.	10
96.	Ichabod Crane Papers.	10
97.	Special Providences. W. S. Bell.	2
98.	Snakes. Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker.	2
99.	Do the Works of Nature prove a Creator? Sciota.	5
100.	The Old and the New. R. G. Ingersoll.	5
101.	110th Anniversary of Thomas Paine's Birthday. Bennett et als.	5
102.	The Old Religion and the New. W. S. Bell.	1
103.	Does the Bible Teach us all we Know. Bennet.	2
104.	Evolution of Israel's God. A. L. Rawson.	10
105.	Decadence of Christianity. Capphro.	2
106.	Franklin, Washington and Jefferson Unbelievers. Bennett.	2
107.	The Safe Side. H. B. Brown.	5
108.	The Holy Bible a Historical Humbug. S. H. Preston.	1
109.	Ghosts. Ingersoll, 4 pp.	1
110.	Materialistic Prayer. Bennett, 4 pp.	1
111.	Reply to Scientific American. Bennett.	1
112.	Sensible Sermon. Savage, 8 pp.	2
113.	Come to Jesus. Bennett, 8 pp.	2

SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

1.	Hereditary Transmission. Prof. Louis Elsberg, M.D.	5
2.	Evolution; from the Homogeneous to the Heterogeneous. B. F. Underwood.	3
3.	Darwinism. B. F. Underwood.	3
4.	Literature of the Insane. F. R. Marvin.	5
5.	Responsibility of Sex. Mrs. Chase, M.D.	3
6.	Graduated Atmospheres. J. McCarroll.	2
7.	Death. Frederic R. Marvin, M.D.	5
8.	How do Marsupial Animals Propagate their kind? A. B. Bradford.	5
9.	The Unseen World. Prof. John Fiske.	10
10.	The Evolution Theory — Huxley's Three Lectures.	10
11.	Is America the New World? L. L. Dawson.	10

Discount on one dollar's worth 10 per ct. off; on two dollars' worth 20 off; on five dollars' worth 40 off; on ten dollars' worth 50 off.

As few or as many of any given kind may be ordered as desired.

RADICAL BOOKS.

SENT POST PAID AT THE PRICES ANNEXED.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

Age of Reason. Paine. Paper covers.	25
" " " Cloth "	50
" " and Ex. of Proph. Paper 50; cl.	75
A Few Days in Athens. Frances Wright.	75
Apocryphal New Testament.	1 25
An Eye Opener. Paper, 50; cloth,	75
Antiquity of Christianity. Alberger.	25
Analysis of Religious Belief. Viscount Amberly. $3.00, 4.00, and	4 50
Apples of Gold. Susan H. Wixon.	1 50
Anti-Theological Lectures. Rev. R. Taylor.	2 00
Antiquity and Duration of the World.	25
Astronomy and Worship of the Ancients.	25
A. J. Davis' Entire Works.	27.00
Adventures of Elder Triptolemus Tub.	15
Bible in India. Jacolliot.	2 00
Buckle's History of Civilization. 2 Vols., 8vo.	4 00
Burgess-Underwood Debate. 50 and	80
Bible in the Balance. Fish.	1 00
Bacon's Novum Organum.	2 00
Bhagvad-Gita, or Dialogues of Christna and Arjuna.	1 75
Buechner's Man, Present and Future.	4 00
Christianity before Christ. Craven.	25
Chapters from the Bibles of the Ages.	1 50
Criticism on the Theoligical Idea of Deity.	1 00
Childhood of Religion. Clodd.	1 25
Childhood of the World. Clodd, 40 and	60
Christianity and Materialism. Underwood.	15
Cause of Religious Ideas. Tuttle.	1 00
Conway's Sacred Anthology.	4 00
Colenso on the Pentateuch, Abstract of.	25
Devil's Pulpit. Rev. Robt. Taylor.	2 00
Diegesis "	2 00
Denton's Irreconcilable Records,	50
" Our Planet, Past, Present, and Future,	1 50
" Radical Rhymes.	1 25
" Who are Christians. Deluge.
Denton's Common Sense Thoughts, Be Thyself, What is Right? Man's True Saviors, Sermon from Snakspere's Text, God Proposed, Spiritualism True, Orthodoxy False, 10 cents each.
Draper's Conflict between Religion and Science,	1 75
" Intellectual Development of Europe, 2 vols.,	3 00
Darwin's Origin of Species,	2 00
" Descent of Man, (Impr'd Ed.)	3 00
Descent and Darwinism, Schmidt.	1 50
Einstein's Origin of Religious Ideas.	1 00
Exeter Hall, Wm. McDonnell.	60 & 80
Errors of the Bible, Wright.	35 & 60
Essence of Religion. Fuerbach. 40 and	80
Eight Scientific Tracts.	20
Frothingham's Religion of Humanity,	1 50
" Child's Book of Religion.	1 00
" Stories of the Patriarchs,	1 00
" Safest Creed.	1 50
" Transcendentalism in New England,	2 50
Faraday's Various Forces of Nature.	2 00
Fiske's Myths and Myth-Makers.	2 00
God Idea in History, Tuttle.	1 25
Good Sense, D'Holbach,	1 00
Gould's Curious Myths of the Middle Ages.	2 50
" Lost and Hostile Gospels.	3 25
Graves' Sixteen Crucified Saviors.	2 00
" Biography of Satan.	60
Grey's Enigmas of Life.	2 00
" Creeds of Christendom. 2 Vols.	7 50
Heroines of Freethought, Mrs. Underwood,	1 75
Heathens of the Heath, McDonnell.	1 00 & 150
Hume's Essays and Treatises.	1 50
Huxley's Lay Sermons.	1 75
" Man's Place in Nature,	1 25
" Critiques and Addresses,	1 50
History of all Religions Sects. Evans.	1 00
Haeckel's History of Creation. 2 Vols.	5 00
Hollick's Nerves and the Nervous.	1 00
Humboldt's Works.
Ingersoll's Gods and other Lectures. 30 and	50
" etc., Large Edition.	1 25
Influence of Christianity on Civilization.	25
Infidels' Text Book. Cooper.	1 00
Jehovah Unveiled.	35
Jamieson's Clergy a Source of Danger.	1 00
Josephus' Complete Works.	2 50
Johnson's Oriental Religions. 8vo.	5 00
John's Way.	15
Kneeland's Review.	1 00
" Hymns.	35
Koran, with Notes and Life of Mahomet.	2 75
Lecky's Rationalism in Europe. 2 Vols.	4 00
" History of European Morals.	6 00
Life of Thomas Paine. Blanchard. p 50; cl	75
Lewes' Biographical History of Philosophy.	3 50
" Problems of Life and Mind.	3 00
Lizzie Doten's Poems of Progress, and Inner Life, each	150
Lubbock's Origin of Civilization,	2 00
" Pre-Historic Times Illustrated.	6 00
Lyell's Elements of Geology, 770 cuts,	3 40
" Principles " 2 vols. and maps,	8 00
Monks and Popes. Alberger.	1 00
Morley's Life of Voltaire,	2 00
Martyrdom of Man. Winwood Reade.	3 00
Peeble's All Around the World,	2 50
" Seers of the Ages,	2 50
Plato's Divine and Moral Works,	2 20
Pro and Con of Supernatural Religion,	30 & 50
Physical Man, Tuttle.	1 50
Paine's Common Sense.	12
" Crisis. Paper, 50; cloth	80
" Rights of Man. Paper, 50; cloth	80
" Theological Works, with portrait	1 50
" " " paper,	1 00
" Political Works, cloth,	1 50
" Great Works Complete. Crown octavo, with life and portrait.	3 00
" Political Works, steel portrait.	1 50
" Life, by Calvin Blanchard with portrait Paper, 50; cloth	75
Parturition without Pain,	1 00
Plain Home Talk and Medical Common Sense, E. B. Foote, M.D.,	1 50
Proctor's Six Lectures on Astronomy,	20
Reason, the only Oracle of Man, Ethan Allen	60
Syntagma, Taylor,	1 00
System of Nature, D'Holbach,	2 00
Self-Contradictions of the Bible,	25
Studying the Bible, Mrs. Slenker,	75
Spencer's (Herbert) Entire Work,
Strauss' Old Faith and New,	2 00
" New Life of Jesus, 2 vols.,	12 00
Supernatural Religion, 2 Vols., 8vo.,	8 00
Sexual Physiology, Trall,	2 00
Talleyrand's Letter to Pope Pius vii.	25
Tyndall' (Prof. John) Entire Works,
The Christ of Paul,	2 00
The Case against the Church,	75
The Relations of the Sexes. Mrs. Duffey,	2 00
The Voices, Warren Sumner Barlow,	1 25
The World's Sages, Infidels, and Thinkers, Bennett, $3 00, $4 00, and	4 50
The Champions of the Church, Bennett, $3 00, $4 00, and	4 50
Thirty Discussions, Bible Stories, etc.,	75 & 1 00
Truth Seeker Tracts, Vols. I, II, III, and IV., by the lot, 50 &	75
The Truth Seeker Collection of Forms, Hymns, and Recitations,	75
The Outcast, Winwood Reade,	30
Talks with My Patients, Mrs. Gleason, M.D.,	1 50
Underwood-Marples Debate;	35 & 60
Underwood's Twelve Tracts.	20
Vestiges of Creation.	75
Volney's Ruins,	1 00
Volney's New Researches in Ancient History,	1 50
Voltaire's Philosophical Dictionary.	5 00

THE TRUTHSEEKER

DEVOTED TO SCIENCE, MORALS, FREE THOUGHT AND HUMAN HAPPINESS

Vol. 5. No. 3. {PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY D. M. BENNETT.} New York, Saturday, January 19, 1878. {SCIENCE HALL, 141 8th St., NEAR BROADWAY.} $3 per Year.

Hasty and Ill-Advised Legislation.

Since the formation of our Government, many acts have been passed by Congress and the various legislatures that were not called for by public necessity, were not wanted by a majority of the people, and were not calculated to promote the peace and welfare of the country.

This ill-advised legislation has often been induced by personal and local interests, by mercenary motives, and often by hasty and inconsiderate action on the part of legislatures, who should not give their votes in favor of any bill until they thoroughly understand it, and are fully convinced that the welfare of the people will be promoted by its enactment.

It is a problem not yet entirely settled, Which is the greater evil, too much law or too little. Suffice it to say that hundreds of thousands think that too much law has the preponderancy in point of evil. Thousands of congressional and legislative acts have from time to time been added to the statute books of the country which have been far worse than nothing, and the people of the country would have been much better off had they never been passed.

There is no doubt that for the last half century the country has had far too much legislation, far too many changes and modifications of the laws of the land. This interminable legislation, making hasty laws and unmaking them, with what has grown out of the same, has cost the nation incomputable sums of money.

As the nation advances in population, civilization, and intelligence, this tendency to improper and ill-considered legislation should be lessened, and fewer necessities ought to exist for unmaking the the laws that have been enacted.

When, however, it is found that haste and undue influences have been employed in the passage of any given statutes, and their action and effects are more productive of evil than of good, that by them the condition of the masses and of individuals is rendered worse instead of better, the only honest course for legislative bodies to pursue is to repeal the obnoxious laws as soon as possible.

The 37th and 42d Congresses.

The thirty-seventh Congress performed noble deeds which entitled it to the veneration of the people of America. It provided means for conducting the war for the suppression of the Rebellion, for paying the soldiers, for providing hospitals for the sick and wounded of our army, and many other acts highly commendable and praiseworthy. That session was an honor to our country, and should long be remembered by every friend of American liberty, and of the unity and permanence of our government.

The forty-second Congress, from Dec. 1872 to March 3, 1873, was of a different character. It was noted for the passage of laws for "back pay," the increase of salary from the President down to Congressmen and officers of inferior grade, but, worse than all the rest, a series of statutes known as "the Comstock laws," under which many worthy and exemplary people have been made to suffer most grievous wrongs. Nothing has been done by Congress since the foundation of our Government more unconstitutional, more subversive of the hignest principles of personal liberty, than the passage of those laws. If any session of Congress since the formation of our Government can be styled infamous, it must have been the forty-second.

As a sample of the enactments alluded to, a single quotation (Sec. 3893, Title xlvi, U. S. Revised Statutes) will be given:

"No obscene, lewd, or lascivious book, pamphlet, picture, paper, print, or other publication of an indecent character, or any article or thing intended for the prevention of conception or procuring of abortion, nor any article or thing intended or adapted for any indecent or immoral use or nature, nor any written or printed card, circular, book, pamphlet, advertisement. or notice of any kind giving information, directly or indirectly, where or how, or of whom, or by what means either of the things before mentioned may be obtained or made, nor any letter upon the envelope of which, or postal card upon which indecent or scurrilous epithets may be written or printed, shall be carried in the mail; and any person who shall knowingly deposit or cause to be deposited, for mailing or delivery, any of the herein before-mentioned articles or things, or any notice or paper containing any advertisement relating to the aforesaid articles or things, and any person who, in pursuance of any plan or scheme for disposing of any of the herein before-mentioned articles or things, shall take or cause to be taken, from the mail any such letter or package, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, for every offense, be fined not less than one hundred dollars, nor more than five thousand dollars, or imprisoned at hard labor not less than one year nor more than ten years, or both."

So far as real obscene books and prints which are calculated to inflame the passions are concerned, their circulation should be prohibited, by mail and all other modes of transportation, but the main provisions of the section are far too sweeping and indefinite. By its provisions a person may be imprisoned ten years and be fined five thousand dollars for sending a newspaper containing an advertisement of a remedy however simple, that would enable a mother to control the number of children she would bear; A druggist may receive the same terrible punishment for sending two ounces of alum or sulphate of zinc through the mail. Has any despotic country in the world a more terrible law than this? Does the Constitution confer the power upon Congress to enact any such law? No, No!

How the Law was Passed.

During the session of the forty-second Congress, up to the last day, some two hundred and nine acts, public and private, were passed, while upon that last day, and even within the few closing hours, mid the direst din and confusion ever witnessed in a madhouse, over two hundred and fifty acts were passed, and among these are included the "back pay," the salary grab, increased pay, the doubling of the President's salary, and, alas, the infamous Comstock laws. In the uproar and tumult that prevailed it was utterly impossible for one member in ten to know anything of the nature of the bills he was voting for. There was no time for a moment's examination or discussion. The way they were rushed through and signed by the President without even reading the titles, as fast as a clerk could hand them to him, up to the last hours of his first term was a disgrace to American legislation. Even the member who introduced the bill in the Senate afterwards admitted that he had never read it. It was enough for him and hundreds of others who voted for it, to know that its passage was desired by Anthony Comstock and his New York Societies. Shall laws thus disgracefully enacted, and so destructive to the rights and liberties of the people be suffered to remain on the Statutes of our country? Liberty and justice forbid!

What Should Have Been Done.

If the Forty-second Congress deemed it right and proper to assume to point out what the people should send through the mails; what morals they should support; that they should be heavily punished when guilty of obscenity and indecency and all that, they should have gone a step farther and have defined in language plain and clear just what constitutes obscenity, indecency, and immorality, so that every citizen might know when he was violating the law. It is only due to every person in the country that if constructive crimes are punishable with imprisonment at hard labor for ten years and fines of five thousand dollars, they should be definitely enlightened as to what the crimes are for which such heavy penalties are to be inflicted.

This is done with all other crimes. Pages in the law books are used to minutely define what is meant by murder, manslaughter, justifiable homicide, arson, forgery, perjury, etc. etc. There is no doubt left as to what these crimes consist of, but in the Congressional crimes of obscenity, indecency and immorality the makers of the law do not deign to point out in what these terrible crimes consist, but leave them to the very uncertain and defective interpretation and construction of judges, jurors, prosecutors, informers and spies. The terms are too vague and too much of the nature of gum elastic to thus remain undefined among the laws of the country. What is indecent to one man may be perfectly decent to another; what is immoral to one individual may be morality itself to another, and what is low and obscene to Mr. A., may be purity and divinity to Mr. B. It is not the province of Congress to make these capital offenses, but if they inflict such terrible punishments they should not have disposed of them in that slip-shod manner. Will Congress please tell us what immorality is, what indecency is, what obscenity is, or decline to have anything to say or do about them?

What is the Province of the General Government?

According to the Constitution under which we have existed as a nation for nearly a century, the duty of Congress or the General Government consists in defining and punishing piracies and felonies committed on the high seas and against the laws of nations, to provide for the punishment of counterfeiting; to make rules for the government and regulation of land and naval forces, and to exercise exclusive legislation in all cases in reference to forts, dock-yards, etc. In reference to postal matters the only rights delegated to it are embraced in the words, "To establish post-offices and post-roads." The word post-office is nowhere else mentioned in the instrument. Among the guarantees of the Constitution which have ever been prized by the American people, and which they will cherish with the utmost jealousy, are religious freedom, freedom of speech, liberty of the press, right of petition for the redress of grievances, etc.

The duties imposed upon Congress by the Constitution do not include the control of religious views and opinions, nor the practice of any particular code of morals, any creeds or dogmas, nor the observation of any special school of precepts and injunctions. It is not the duty of the general government to see that the citizens of the nation attend church regularly or pay their pew rents promptly or send their children duly to Sunday-school. In short, the morals of the people form no part of the cares resting upon Congress, and when they so far step aside from the line of work laid out for them by the Constitution their labors are entirely superfluous and are not entitled to the respect and observance of their constituents and creators. If the morals of the people are to be subjects of legislation at all it comes within the province of the several States and forms no part of Congressional duties.

The one mention made of post-offices hardly justifies Congress in passing the most onerous and inquisitorial laws, for instance subjecting citizens to imprisonment for ten years and a fine of ten thousand dollars for daring to send by mail a circular or a newspaper giving the slightest information as to where a remedy can be procured or intelligence can be found that will safely and scientifically prevent an undue increase of the families of the poor and laboring classes. Such laws have been passed and disgrace the statute books of our country to-day. If Congress cannot find better employment than the passage of such laws it is suggested that they adjourn and return to their respective homes where they ought to remain without taxing the people to pay for services worse than useless.

The Radical Pulpit.

Life as a Test of Creed.

SERMON BY O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

I take a text this morning from "Pope's Essay on Man:"

"For modes of faith let graceless zealots fight;
His can't be wrong, whose life is in the right."

The poem from which these lines are taken was written to give expression to the system of Lord Bolingbroke, one of the brightest wits, the most conspicuous statesman, and the most determined Infidel during the reign of Queen Anne of England. His system was a system of natural religion as opposed to revealed religion. He did not go so far as to say that no revelation from Deity was possible, but he did go so far as to say that no revelation could be proved to be actual. His criticism on the Bible, upon the Christian Church, upon the institutions of religion, as formed in his day, was very searching and very specious, and he lavished a great deal of very extraordinary sarcasm on the religious usages of his generation. His belief was in natural law, and the root of his system was that the will of the Deity expressed itself in the laws of the Universe; and that a faithful worship of the Deity consisted not in rites or prayers, or priestly observances, but in a faithful observation of the laws of the Universe so far as they were understood. Practically, the sentiment expressed in these lines I have quoted from Alexander Pope is of immense importance. To say that a true worship is a life and not a creed, that the conflict over forms and modes is useless, vain, and contemptible, and then the test of a noble observation of the divine laws as a faithful character strikes at the root of all religious institutions and beliefs—to say this, is to call off the attention that has heretofore been given to matters that concern only the super-sensual world. It is to call once more, yet for the first time in Christendom, to the honor, respect, and service for ordinary things; it is to recall the thoughts, desires, and purposes of mankind from things entirely out of their vision and beyond their reach to the things that be immediately above them, that concern them in their daily walk and conversation, and to decide for them whether their lives in this world shall be good for something or good for nothing. The spread of a principle like this would work nothing less than a complete revolution in all religious thought, feeling, and observation.

Thus far, therefore, in its general scope, the principle enunciated by Pope is of immeasurable value; but when we take it up, and criticise it point by point, it is weakened.

"His can't be wrong whose life is in the right"; but whose is in the right? Does not the principle assume that somebody lives a righteous life? Perhaps yours as well as anybody's is the standard; and who is to be allowed to set up his life, or even his conception of what life should be, as the standard by which creeds are to be judged. The looseness of the lines is something extraordinary. It seems to be imagined that it is an easier thing to say what righteousness, rectitude, equity, justness and goodness are, than to say what truth is; that it is an easier thing to say what conduct is under any particular circumstances, than to say what we should think about the ordering of the world.

The search for truth is exceedingly long and difficult; ay, the ultimate of truth is more than this generation will ever attain, or many generations to come. Indeed, it is beyond our quest entirely; but it is possible to strike upon certain leading principles, and it is possible to get certain grand ideas, if not the key which may open some chambers.

But who shall say what goodness is? what the ultimate form of character under any conceivable circumstances? Is it so easy to know what one should do, how one should conduct himself, how one should show himself to this person or to that person? The moment we come upon the kind of character, the moment we touch upon the rule of conduct, that moment we are lost in perplexity.

It is not easier to find out what is good than it is to find out what is true. When the Apostle Paul says "Prove all things, hold fast unto that which is good," we imagine he says a very simple thing. He says an extremely difficult thing; in fact, to hold fast to that which is good is the most difficult thing to do. Furthermore, how many lives are entitled to be called righteous—I mean extremely righteous—that consistently hold fast to that which is good? How many lives are more than fragments? We live, morally, from hand to mouth; we are blown about by every wind of doctrine; to-day we feel thus, to-morrow we may feel otherwise. Our purposes are haughty, our intentions faint, our very ideas are not the same from month to month.

How few people plow a straight furrow! A wind strikes our little vessel and the creed goes down; and sorrow, and disappointment, and striking calamity find us entirely unprepared. We thought we knew something; we thought we sat upon a basis. It was a dream, a notion; something that we had heard on Sunday. It was a voice that ran, like an iron thread, all through our feeling, desire, and purpose, to one ultimate object.

To reason from life back to creed is an exceedingly delicate thing. Whose life will you take? Alexander Pope's, the man who wrote these lines? Pope is said to have had some good qualities—he loved his mother, he was faithful to her in her old age, took care of her when she was poor, he is known to have told the truth several times—but he was envious and revengeful. Say a word about his verses, and he would put you on the pillory of his satire, hold you up to the laughing people. He could hate with a tenacity, a bitterness and rancor which is said to be unexampled.

He wrote this "Essay on Man" to glorify the Infidel system of his noble Lord Bolingbroke, but when it came to certain vulgar Infidels about town, he held them of no account, not being in fashionable society, and ranked them among the dunces and fools, and poured his contempt on their miserable heads. "His can't be wrong whose life is in the right." But whose life will you take? I think now of one of the greatest men that this continent has produced, a man who died three or four years ago, a man of immense grandeur and stateliness of character, a monumental man, a man whom future times will think more of than we do.

In his early manhood he left wealth, a splendid career which was offered him, great friends, charming society, all that the world called friendship, left it all, left it without a murmur, and gave himself, with all the strength of his intellect, with all the massiveness of his thought, with all the consecration of his character, to that cause which in his generation was considered the meanest, the ignoblest, least reputable of any; left his great friends, who cut him on the street, who passed by on the other side when they saw him coming; but he never faltered, never flinched when the demand for heroism was made upon him, that made him an outcast from his country and compelled him to drag a wretched, baneful body from land to land, had pending on his intellectual head the drooping scorn of his generation. A man whom I never think of without feeling that I stand in the presence of one of the human immortals. Men said of him, and say of him now, and will always, that he was unsympathetic, that he was cold, that he lacked imagination, that he lacked feeling, that he was exclusively overbearing in his ethical principles, that he rode on his splendid charger trampling under foot those whom he should have respected as his leaders; but his criticism was unsparing, and his feelings were ungenerous, therefore we have not the consent of even his own generation to this type of character. Whose life will you take?

I think of another man, a friend of this last, and yet so unlike him; a man of immense wealth, whose windows and doors were open; a man of vast sympathy, a man of vast wealth, who distributed it with both hands broadcast, whose ear listened to every creature, whose eye detested every form of suffering, whose heart and will went out in charity, with benefit and benediction to the poor and miserable without the slightest regard to condition. What will you say of such a man as this, was his life a life in the right?

Why, but you can reason back from life to creed. Men said of him that he lacked judgment, that he was visionary, that he was occasionally fanatical, that his gifts hurt as many as they helped, that he was a man who meant to please, but ended by doing something different. Whose life is in the right?

Take two private lives, I have been speaking of public characters. I think of a young man of excellent purpose and character, with which we cannot find fault; he has taste and talents; he has a business which he understands and in which he would achieve distinction; he has friends, many; he is popular among his friends, but he is loose, he is careless, slipshod in the substance of his character. He cannot stand by principle, cannot move straight on, but conflicts and theorizes, going this way, going that way, and there is something about him which does not convey respect. That life is not in the right; something is wanting. I have in mind another one who is very strict and conscientious, literal and prosaic, true to the letter, not swerving a hair's breadth from the line of justice, sees with the utmost distinctness what is before his vision and follows it regardless of consequences. He is all conscience. But conscience is individuality, it is conscience without the con, without the connection, without the sympathy or consideration, conscience that does not take in what is due to other people, but only what is due to himself. Conscience without a conscience, because the determining knowledge which his conscience applies, is simply a strict observance of the dictates of his own personal character. Bitter, extremely narrow—very admirable, very noble, in a manner, but narrow and perverse. Is that right? Is that the life from which you can form the creed? Not so. It is too exclusive, too limited, too personal, too individual, not enough of the sense of relationship which each one sustains to the rest.

"His can't be wrong whose life is in the right." Whose life? The Hebrews said Moses, the Christian says Jesus, the Hindoos Buddha, the Chinese say Confucius. There is no universal type of character. There is no person, however magnificent, before whom the whole race kneels. We are all fragments. The best are but stones in the whole edifice.

Therefore, I say, it is all hopeless, absolutely hopeless, to reason backward from conduct to creed, from character to belief. It is easier to reason, though there are graceless zealots who contend, and earnestly contend, not for modes, not for mere forms and definitions, or belief, but for those strong ideas, for those remarkable principles, for those strange convictions that take hold of the mind.

Most people, men and women, as character, have no belief, have no creed; but whenever you see a man or woman of character, a man or woman whose life stands for something, be sure there is a mode behind him—something which animates him though he dreams not of it, something which lifts him up, sustains and consoles him, though he may not know from where the strength and consolation comes. Take the creed of Christendom; it is very simple. The substance of the creed of Christendom may be mentioned in a few words—the theories are numberless. The sects can be counted by the hundreds, but the few cardinal principles may be numbered on one's fingers:—That man is in a helpless, abject condition, unable by his natural faculties to find the truth, unable by the natural powers of his heart to achieve goodness; unable by the sheer force of his will to attain justice, a fallen being, hopeless and helpless, struggling along. Life is a long waste, a weary pilgrimage over which he must go as he can, finding his way by light that comes only from above. A God, a personal individual Being, gives him light for his darkness, takes him under tutorage, educates him, drills him, and so by a long and wearisome course of discipline, he triumphantly restores him at last to his felicity beyond the grave. A very simple scheme of things, but how tremendously strong! how compact! It is simply impossible that any rational creature should believe that, and not feel the force of it thrill in every drop of blood. It has done so. Take Christendom through and through, in the ages when this faith has prevailed, and see those types of characters corresponding to it, that surpass in grandeur and in loveliness anything the world has seen before. But what sort of a life is it that answers to the creed? It is an austere life. The man who believes this must seldom smile; he is grim, devoted, resolute; he feels himself to be a person whose place is divinely appointed, whose work is providentially set, who goes through the world like a spy through a hostile camp—in disguise, looking neither to the right nor to the left, keeping himself under a control, not allowing his eyes to wander, or his thoughts to swerve. Pleasure he despises. Luxury, comfort, these are evil. Such work as God appoints him to do—buying, selling, trading, teaching, learning—he will do, with a grim determination, without joy, without elasticity of feeling, without any sense of his being anything else. He will do it as long as he is required to do it, but not for the benefit of mankind, not as a contribution to the welfare of the world, but as a penance laid upon him—a worm of the dust—to fill his little place, and discharge the duty of his little hour, until the place is vacant by his death, and the hour is ended. This man cares nothing about art, disregards science. His ideal of literature, the one book that he studies—studies on his knees, prays, weeps over it—is the Bible, the Word of God. That is his guide, that contains all that is essential for a rational being to know, that throws his thoughts upon the beyond, that keeps before him the dreams of his soul. He will give money to spread it abroad. He will give thousands and thousands of dollars to sway a soul to reverence it, while he will give ten or fifteen dollars, perhaps, to relieve poverty or suffering, or misery, to redeem the temporal lot of mankind, for his charity is not hearty; it is not born of natural sympathy, there is no touch of the human. It is the charity that is appointed and prescribed by the gospel, it is appointed by the creed, by divine texts, to save his soul, to get him out of hell and into heaven. The temporal lot of mankind is of secondary importance. What matters it that men are a little richer or a little poorer, more or less comfortable, more or less privileged, when in a few years at the most, all will be over, while everlasting ages will remain for the soul!

This type of life, therefore, that we have seen over and over again, among Catholics, among Protestants, among Protestants of every name—this type of life is traceable directly to that simple rugged creed which has been preached for nearly two thousand years.

Now take the opposite creed—the creed that I explain from Sunday to Sunday—the creed of evolution. This creed proceeds from a different beginning, looking to a different ending, continued over a different course. The substance of this creed may be expressed in a few words. Undoubtedly, in part, it allows of great differences, but the substance of it is this: that an unknown and unsearchable force lies behind creation, protects and impels us. The course of things has been from the lowest rudimental beginning onward and upward to the present point, and is destined to pass beyond this point to unimaginable splendor. The world of man lives, is growing, is making, from year to year, ay, from day to day. The race of man is making. Man is the real creator. Man is the real care-taker. Man is the ultimate ruler. Therefore the actual movement of the world depends not upon this personal individual, of whom it is said that he touches the spring to open the organized forces which drive the wheel.

Now, what sort of a life is it that is based upon a creed like this? Exactly the opposite in the most cardinal respects from that which is called Christian! In the first place, the holder of this creed is not ascetic, he is not grim or austere, he does not skulk or cower though the world; he walks through like a man, or tries to. He believes not that one particular shape of thought or of disposition is acceptable to all. The musician, the merchant, the financier, the inventor—men of all pursuits, of all talents, men of every land, are equally required to carry on the work of society; therefore there is no contempt, no spirit of depreciation, but a large and general sympathy, an attempt to understand everybody, to take each at his best, and to allow for every manner of faults that each can show. This man is perpetually inquiring about the truth; he is no graceless zealot who fights for modes; but he is one of the earnest people who contend for the principle of things. He wishes to know more from day to day, to cast off prejudice, to scatter ignorance, to ground his creed. He believes in having a better creed the day after to-morrow than he has to-day, the substance of it always remaining the same. Therefore he reads, he studies, and endeavors to learn what the scientific man has to say, what the philosopher has to say, what the man of literature has to say; gathering and enriching his mind and increasing his power—tributary streams leading from the whole domain of human knowledge. Therefore, instead of being a devotee of a particular system, instead of being wedded to a special creed or dogma, he keeps his mind open and hospitable to universal truth. Then, for his charity, it is simply human. His interest is in this life, in this world, in the people of this world, in the problems of this life, in the laws of character, in the conditions of society. His interest is in the working out of these problems in which the poor, the ignorant, the weak, the oppressed, as well as the enlightened and the strong, are interested. He looks to a future, a future in this world, that is to result from the power of his own elements. See the reverse of some cardinal qualities in both faiths: that preaches content and prayer — this preaches effort; that preaches reliance upon superhuman powers—this preaches reliance upon human effort; that preaches resignation, submission—this preaches courage, determination, fortitude, resolution; that teaches that man can do nothing, that God must do all—this teaches that man must do everything, that God, except through man, does nothing. In the upper and lower planes the two systems correspond. The believers in both systems tell the truth, are faithful to their neighbors and both have all those great principles of humility, of meekness, of aspiration. What a tender, what a touching side there is to the life that believes this! No one can feel that his thinking, his feeling, his wishes, have their effect in helping the world on, in making it easier for somebody, to help enlighten somebody, easing somebody's cares, without having a fount of inspiration pouring into his heart that lifts him out of his stupor, and makes him determined to do his best, be it much or little, be it with the heart or will, be it with pen or thought, be it simply with the glistening eye or smiling face. No one can feel the responsibility of that without having a spirit of inspiration pouring into him far purer, far more exalting, than that which comes from looking toward the angels. The cry of sorrow, the plaint of suffering, the moan of loneliness and pain, the strain of agony from the broken heart—if these do not touch our hearts, then no strain from heaven will ever do it. He considers how his carelessness, waywardnesss, his waste of plenty, all his squandered opportunities, may depress the strong hope and withdraw followers from that general will that bears the race onward, making it harder to answer the question, to solve the problem, making it harder to draw the breath of life. And is not life worth living for to him who can believe that he lives in a world organized as we know this world is, with the myriad stars every night, with the unceasing, unswerving sun—the unabating sun, that has been pouring its creative beams for millions of years upon this poor planet, and will go on and do the same for millions of years to come—is it not worth living for to be in a world where there are all these questions to be asked and answered, all these problems waiting for the solving; where there is nobody that does not lack something that we can give with our hands, with our hearts, with our brains, with our simplest faculties? Is it not worth while to think that when we have done our utmost, and laid ourselves down to our quiet sleep, the everlasting forces will still go on, making the world more and more beautiful, and the lot of man brighter and brighter, and bring about the consummation to which we have added our little trifle of help? "His can't be wrong whose life is in the right." Let those who believe a creed as magnificent as this try to live up to it, try to base their life upon it, and these lines that have become so popular that they are repeated, day and day again, without any meaning attached to them, will once more blaze with light, and we shall find that it is not a difficult thing any more to reason from the noblest life to the noblest belief.

Scientific Department.

Tyndall on Man's Soul.

THE PHILOSOPHER'S RECENT ADDRESS AT BIRMINGHAM.

NATURE ENCOURAGES RIGHT DOING.

"What," I have heard it argued, "is the use of preaching about duty if man's predetermined position in the moral world renders him incapable of profiting by advice?" Who knows that he is incapable? The preacher's last word enters as a factor into the man's conduct; and it may be a most important factor, unlocking moral energies which might otherwise remain imprisoned and unused. If the preacher feel that words of enlightenment, courage, and admonition enter into the list of forces employed by nature for man's amelioration since she gifted man with speech, he will suffer no paralysis to fall upon his tongue. Dung the fig-tree hopefully, and not until its barrenness has been demonstrated beyond a doubt let the sentence go forth, "Cut it down, why cumbereth it the ground?" I remember when a youth in the town of Halifax, some 32 years ago, attending a lecture given by a young man to a small but select audience. The aspect of the lecturer was earnest and practical, and his voice soon riveted attention. He spoke of duty, defining it as a debt owed, and there was a kindling vigor in his words which must have strengthened the sense of duty in the minds of those who heard him. No speculations regarding the freedom of the will could alter the fact that the words of that young man did me good. His name was George Dawson. He also spoke, if you will allow me to allude to it, of a social subject much discussed at the time—the Chartist subject of "leveling." Suppose, he said, two men to be equal at night, and that one rises at six, while the other sleeps till nine next morning, what becomes of your leveling? And in so speaking he made himself the mouthpiece of nature, which, as we have seen, secures advance, not by the reduction of all to a common level, but by the encouragement and conversation of what is best.

THE FEAR OF HELL.

It may be urged that, in dealing as above with my hypothetical criminal, I am assuming a state of things brought about by the influence of religions which include the dogmas of theology and the belief in free will—a state, namely, in which a moral majority control and keep in awe an immoral minority. The heart of man is deceitful above all things and desperately wicked. Withdraw, then, our theologic sanctions, including the belief in free will, and the condition of the race will be typified by the samples of individual wickedness which have been adduced. We shall all, that is, become robbers, and ravishers, and murderers. From much that has been written of late, it would seem that this astounding inference finds house room in many minds. Possibly, the people who hold such views might be able to illustrate them by individual instances.

The fear of hell's a hangman's whip
To keep the wretch in order.

Remove the fear, and the wretch following his natural instinct may become disorderly; but I refuse to accept him as a sample of humanity. "Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die," is by no means the ethical consequence of free thought. To many of you the name of George Jacob Holyoake is doubtless familiar, and you are probably aware that at no man in England has the term Atheist been more frequently pelted. There are, moreover, really few who have more completely liberated themselves from theological notions.

ATHEISTIC MORALITY.

Among working-class politicians Mr. Holyoake is a leader. Does he exhort his followers to "eat and drink, for to morrow we die?" Not so. In the August number of the XIXth Century you will find these words from his pen: "The gospel of dirt is bad enough, but the gospel of mere material comfort is much worse." He contemptuously calls the Comtist championship of the workingman "the championship of the trencher." He would place "the leanest liberty which brought with it the dignity and power of self-help" higher than "any prospect of a full plate without it." Such is the doctrine taught by this "Atheistic" leader; and no Christian, I apprehend, need be ashamed of it. Not in the way assumed by our dogmatic teachers has the morality of human nature been propped up. The power which has moulded us thus far has worked with stern tools upon a very rigid stuff. What it has done cannot be so readily undone; and it has endowed us with moral constitutions which take pleasure in the noble, the beautiful, and the true, just as surely as it has endowed us with sentient organisms which finds aloes bitter and sugar sweet. That power did not work with delusions, nor will it stay its hand when such are removed. Facts rather than dogmas have been its ministers—hunger and thirst, heat and cold, pleasure and pain, sympathy, shame, pride, love, hate, terror, awe—such were the forces, the interaction and adjustment of which during the immeasurable ages of his development wove the triplex web of man's physical, intellectual, and moral nature, and such are the forces that will be effectual to the end.

WHY MEN ASPIRE TO HEAVEN.

Some may retort that, even on my own showing, "the power which makes for righteousness" has dealt in delusions; for it cannot be denied that the beliefs of religion, including the dogmas of theology and the freedom of the will, have had some effect in moulding the moral world. Granted; but I do not think that this goes to the root of the matter. Are you quite sure that those beliefs and dogmas are primary and not derived—that they are not the products, instead of being the creators, of man's moral nature? I think it is in one of the "Latter Day Pamphlets" that Carlyle corrects a reasoner, who deduced the nobility of man from a belief in heaven, by telling him that he puts the cart before the horse, the real truth being that the belief in heaven is derived from the nobility of man. The bird's instinct to weave its nest is referred to by Emerson as typical of the force which built cathredals, temples, and pyramids:

Knowest thou what wove yon woodbird's nest
Of leaves and feathers from her breast?
Or how the fish outbuilt its shell,
Painting with morn each annual cell?
Such and so grew these holy piles
While love and terror laid the tiles;
Earth proudly wears the Parthenon
As the best gem upon her zone;
And Morning opes with haste her lids
To gaze upon the Pyramids;
O'er England's abbeys bend the sky
As on its friend with kindred eye;
For out of Thought's interior sphere
These wonders rose to upper air,
And Nature gladly gave them place,
Adopted them unto her race,
And granted them an equal date
With Andes and with Arrarat.

Surely many of the utterances which have been accepted as descriptions ought to be interpreted as aspirations, or as having their roots in aspiration, instead of objective knowledge.

A FALSE DREAM OF PEACE.

Does the song of the herald angels, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men," express the exaltation and the yearning of a human soul, or does it describe an optical and acoustical fact—a visible host and an audible song? If the former, the exaltation and the yearning are man's imperishable possession—a ferment long confined to individuals, but which may by and by become the leaven of the race. If the latter, then belief in the entire transaction is wrecked by nonfulfillment. Look to the East at the present moment as a comment on the promise of peace on earth and good will toward men. That promise is a dream dissolved by the experience of eighteen centuries. But though the mechanical theory of a vocal heavenly multitude proves untenable, the immortal song and the feelings it expresses are still ours, to be incorporated, let us hope, in purer and less shadowy forms in the poetry, philosophy, and practice of the future.

WHAT TO HOPE FOR.

Thus, following the lead of physical science, we are brought from the solution of continuity into the presence of problems which, as usually classified, lie entirely outside the domain of physics. To these problems thoughtful and penetrative minds are now applying those methods of research which in physical science has proved their truth by their fruits. There is on all hands a growing repugnance to invoke the supernatural in accounting for the phenomena of human life, and the thoughtful minds just referred to, finding no trace of evidence in favor of any other origin, are driven to seek in the interaction of social forces the genesis and development of man's moral nature. If they succeed in their search—and I think they are sure to succeed—social duty would be raised to a higher level of significance, and the deepening sense of social duty, would, it is to be hoped, lessen, if not obliterate, the strife and heart-burnings which now beset and disguise our social life. Towards this great end it behooves us one and all to work, and, devoutly wishing its consummation, I have the honor ladies and gentlemen, to bid you a friendly farewell.

Girard College.

Mr. D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: The Philadelphia Bulletin of Dec. 26 contains a description of the new buildings at Girard College, in that City, in which it is stated that "the handsome Chapel facing the new buildings is nearly complete, and will soon be ready for occupancy." Perhaps some one of your correspondents in the Quaker City will inform your readers by what authority or by what strategy a chapel, which we understand to be a building dedicated to superstitious uses, is made an annex of that secular institution. Have the worshipers of some sect stolen Girard College? If so, which is the fortunate sect? The spirit of Stephen Girard's will is to prevent the intrusion of sectaries, even religionists, into this asylum for orphans. By what perversion of the letter is the erection of a fane sanctioned? The will was once in peril from the relatives of Girard, who hoped to secure for themselves a portion of his large estate. It is everybody's business now to see that its provisions are not evaded, and this noble benevolence subsidized by any church. I knew W. H. Allen, the present President of Girard College, years ago, when he was a professor in Dickinson College, and believe that he was placed in the office he now holds on account of his non-sectarian views. He is a man of well-known probity and ability, and independence as well. Certainly he will not remain silent if an invasion of the Girard territory is attempted by chapel-builders and idolaters.

Franklin, Penn., Jan. 8, 1878. W. C. RHEEM,

Workings of the Comstock Laws.

CASE OF MRS. WOODHULL AND MISS CLAFLIN.

These two sisters were in 1872 publishing their Weekly, a large sixteen-page paper, devoted to their peculiar views, and having a circulation of nearly ten thousand copies. They certainly had the same right to publish a paper that any other resident of the country possessed. They saw fit, in the fall of 1872, to publish intelligence in reference to what has since been known as the Beecher and Tilton scandal, but it was no more obscene than has since been published in every daily paper in the city. Comstock caused their arrest in November, 1872. They were thrown into Ludlow prison and their paper suppressed. Thus was a great wrong inflicted upon them as well as upon their numerous patrons in all parts of the country. They printed such a paper as their patrons approved of, and they had as much right to be served as any other portion of the community. Their paper was not only suppressed, but the printer and the stereotyper who did the work for the two ladies were also arrested and subjected to great inconvenience.

Their bail was placed so high that they could not give it, and they were compelled to lie in prison many weeks prior to examination, the victims of the most bitter, intolerant spirit that ever ruled in this country. Their bail was divided up on different points, and in the aggregate is said to have amounted to over $80,000. It was the evident intention to keep them in prison without an examination, and thus suppress their paper. Dr. Ruggles, a man of considerable property, was eventually induced to go on their bonds, and they were thus enabled again to breathe the air outside the prison walls. But, for performing this humane act, Dr. Ruggles was submitted to not a little persecution. He owned a piece of property upon which there was a heavy mortgage. A member of Plymouth church bought the mortgage and immediately foreclosed and forced its sale, causing Dr. Ruggles to lose heavily. It is charged that the church-member took this course to take revenge upon the Doctor for bailing the two sisters out of prison. The pecuniary loss to the Doctor growing out of the affair has been very severe upon him, but he stood faithful to the prisoners though, he declared, he was offered $20,000 to give them up.

In January, 1873, Mrs. Woodhull and Miss Claflin were again arrested and imprisoned, but after several weeks they were brought before Judge Blatchford of the U. S. Court, and he decided that they were illegally imprisoned and that they had violated no law of the country. District Attorney Purdy proposed to a nolle prosequi in the case, but their attorney objected and the Judge instructed the jury to find a verdict of acquittal, thus disposing of the case once for all, and preventing the prisoners being arrested again on the same charge.

This prosecution from first to last was a piece of cruel oppression towards these two women, and was wholly uncalled for. They had done nothing to merit such treatment from the Government. It damaged them to the extent of at least $20 000 and though they have applied to Congress to reimburse them for the great wrong done them, nothing has been effected yet. These women were unable to recover from the loss that had been unjustly imposed upon them.

In the course of the prosecution, Comstock perceived that the laws were not as strong as he needed to convict the cases he wished to take in hand and had the passage of the statutes known as the "obscenity laws," or the Comstock laws passed by the Forty-second Congress, March 3, 1873. Since those laws were placed upon the statutes of our country, very few of the victims Comstock has seen fit to pounce upon have been able to escape his clutches, and he has made his boasts that Judge Benedict was in sympathy with and convicted all the cases that he—Comstock—took before him. Many an unfortunate person has been deprived of his liberty and disgraced for life for the most trivial offenses. Comstock enjoys the sport hugely and boasts in the published report of the "Society for the Suppression of Vice," which is of his creation and for which he is secretary and chief agent, that he has been the means of sending two hundred and forty-four persons to prison. Wo to the man or woman that, under the laws of free America, he sees fit to lay his heavy hands upon.

GEORGE FRANCIS TRAIN,

It will be remembered, was arrested in 1873 by Comstock, on a charge of obscenity, and was thrown into the Tombs' damp, gloomy prison, where he lay in his close cell for six months. His offense consisted in publishing certain indecent passages from the Bible without a word of comment. It was evident that his accusers got ashamed of their conduct in arresting a highly intelligent man for publishing a limited number of extracts from the Bible in all their native purity. They wished to get him off their hands without a trial, but he refused to leave prison until duly tried and duly discharged. This they evaded. Finally, an order was issued from Albany to raze the unhealthy Tombs prison to the ground. Under this state of things Mr. Train left the prison, after which nothing was done toward tearing down the Tombs. To keep a citizen in prison so long on so frivolous a charge is a disgrace to the government and an outrage upon the rights of an American freeman.

CASE OF JOHN A. LANT.

In the Spring of 1875, Mr. Lant moved his little paper, the Toledo Sun, from Toledo, O., to this city. It was a Freethought journal and was far from immoral in its tone. It had not been here long, however, before it attracted the attention of Comstock, who resolved that it should be suppressed. He abused newsdealers on the sidewalk who presumed to sell the little paper, and he harshly threatened a friend of ours with imprisonment in the Tombs for selling the Sun containing Ingersoll's "Oration on the Gods." After various devices, he sent an order to Mr. Lant for his paper, in the name of E. Semler, Green Farms, Conn., eulogizing the paper and urging Lant to press on in the good work he was doing. He ordered several back numbers published before the paper was brought to New York. The most objectionable matter was a letter from Dr. E. P. Miller on physiological matters and a prayer by Train called "Beecher's Prayer." Some of the matter was not, perhaps, in the best possible taste, but there was nothing immoral in the papers.

Lant was thrown into Ludlow-Street Jail, and kept there two months, so as to effectually prevent the publication of his paper, and unexceptional bail was refused. Finally, upon a writ of habeas corpus, Mr. Lant was removed from prison and admitted to bail, which was placed at $5.000. His final trial came off in December, his family suffering in the meantime for the very necessaries of life. His trial was short and severe. Anthony testified to writing the decoy letter in a fictitious name and receiving the Sun in return. The principal question raised at the trial was as to whether the matter objected to was obscene. The rulings of Judge Benedict were invariably against the accused. The charge to the jury was of the same hard, unfeeling character, and it was sufficient to induce a verdict of guilty, though not the slightest crime had been committed. The sentence was eighteen months at hard labor in the penitentiary at Albany and $200 fine. Thus this man, in a feeble state of health, was torn from his wife and three little babes who were wholly unprovided for, and at the commencement of winter. His prison life, with the labor that was imposed upon him, was very unfavorable to his health. He had, while there, as has been before stated, nineteen attacks of hemorrhage from the lungs and bronchial tubes. It is almost a marvel that he lived to serve out his time. When he returned to his family he was entirely without money and without business. This was an aggravated case and shows to what length a spirit of persecution and intolerance may be carried in this so-called free land of America.

CASE OF DR. E. B. FOOTE.

Reference has in a previous issue been made to this case, where the greatest injustice and cruelty was inflicted upon one of the purest, best, and most amiable of men that it ever has been our good fortune to be acquainted with during the whole course of our lives. We know him personally and intimately, and we say with all the assurance that knowledge imparts that he is a man of the highest incentives and motives, whose life has been spent in instructing and improving his fellow-beings by giving such information as is well calculated to enable them to be more healthy, more happy, and to be better and more useful men and women. His medical works possess the highest value, and have been introduced and thoroughly read in hundreds of thousands of families, who to-day stand ready to bear willing testimony to the great benefit they have derived from the physiological, hygienic, and moral lessons which he has so ably imparted.

In the fullest confidence we can say he has never evinced in any of his works the slightest disposition to minister to the passions or to the lower qualities of human nature. His character is elevated, and his desire is to elevate and benefit his fellow-beings. In his medical experience, running over a third of a century, no man can truthfully charge him with an action prompted by an improper motive, or with an attempt to procure an abortion or anything of the kind. His course has been singularly free from everything of the kind, and it is only alluded to because of the efforts on the part of a cruel persecutor and prosecutor to cast this vile stigma upon him. The cries of "mad dog" and "abortionist" are easily raised by those who would willingly inflict wrong upon the deserving; but how unjust it is to do so when there is not the slightest grounds for such conduct!

Dr. Foote has been an unfortunate victim of a designing, unscrupulous, and relentless prosecutor. Because he has been considered not fully orthodox in his medical status, because he has presumed to give highly valuable instruction how some of the greatest evils of society may be morally and legitimately obviated, and because he presumed to write his views to members of the legislature of this State when the passage of certain objectionable laws were pending before that body, the ire of certain prominent characters was aroused against him. He was seized as a criminal and as a disseminator of unclean literature; he was falsely charged; he was obliged to give bail to avoid being thrust into prison; the most intense anxiety and unhappiness was forced upon him, upon his estimable wife, his aged mother, who resides with him, and upon his children and friends; he was forced to stand trial in a court where the utmost severity is the rule, and where the strict construction of an unjust law was made to bear heavily upon him; thousands upon thousands of dollars were stripped from him; his business injured to the extent of fully $25,000, and an amount of that intense anxiety and apprehension which cannot be estimated by dollars and cents, and which no person can realize who has not been made to experience it; all this has been brought upon a man who had not committed a fault—who had not done the first thing towards violating the laws of honor, virtue, or morality.

For some twenty years Dr. Foote has employed the few moments he could snatch from professional labors in writing such physiological works as he sincerely believed were needed by the people. In 1857–8, Medical "Common Sense"; in 1869–70, "Plain Home Talk," embracing the main features of the first book; in 1874–5, "Science in Story," which has received commendation, not only from the secular but from the religious press. Thus far the work has received no adverse criticism. In these works and in pamphlets issued from time to time, the Doctor has labored to show the necessity of improving humanity by having no children born the creatures of accident; in other words, has treated indirectly and directly, in nearly all the works he has writtten, on the importance of scientific propagation, no less in the human family than on the stock-farm. That is to say, this has been one feature of his writings. The consideration of this important subject naturally led to the devising and prescribing of effective means for making what John Stuart Mill called "conjugal prudence" possible in all cases wherein disease was to be entailed on offspring, or indeed in all instances wherein the reproductive function might better be rendered inoperative. This information was imparted in a pamphlet, entitled "Words in Pearl for the Married," which was prepared for the purpose of answering a score of questions which are asked daily of a physician in extensive practice. To make it as unobjectionable as possible, it was set up in pearl type, so as to make it only thirty-two pages of about the size of a letter envelope, in which it was invariably sent sealed, under letter pos'age. Its object in great part was to save letter-writing when questions were asked which its pages directly answered. The pamphlet took strong grounds against producing miscarriage or abortion. When the postal obscene literature law was passed, some of its pages referring to the prevention of conception, in conflict with the new statute, were promptly expurgated. Shortly after the Congressional law was enacted, a similar one was passed in our own State, forbidding the devising or supplying of any means whatever for the prevention of conception. The Doctor was assured by his legal adviser that this clause would never be enforced against physicians, but not being a member of the conservative school of medicine, and his advice often being sought upon a subject so intimately connected with his pet hobby of scientific propagation, he thought best to put himself upon a legal footing both in respect to the Congressional and State laws. In doing this he followed legal advice.

Nevertheless, in January, 1876, he was suddenly and unexpectedly called upon to give bonds in the sum of $5,000 for his appearance before the U. S. Court, an indictment having been found against him at the instigation of Mr. Comstock for sending an alleged obscene pamphlet and notices of preventive articles through the U. S. Mail. It appears that these were sent in answer to a decoy letter to a Mrs. Semler in Chicago, who, in her application expressed great admiration for the Doctor's "Plain Home Talk." Orders of this character, however, seldom came to the personal notice of the Doctor. They belonged to the order department, where the clerk in charge had, without consultation with, or permission from his employer, sufficiently changed his arrangements to place him in a questionable position before this iron-clad law. First, it was confidently believed a nolle prosequi would be entered by the prosecuting attorney; next that the indictment would be quashed; and finally when the case came unexpectedly to trial on the 21st of June, acquittal was fully expected up to the moment when the jury retired for their decision on the 26th; even the prosecuting attorney, it was said, looked for nothing better for his side than a disagreement of the jury. It was therefore a matter of great surprise when the jury, after an absence of only twenty minutes, returned with a verdict of guilty! The rulings of the judge were peculiar. The defense, while believing that the pamphlet was not obscene, considered it a strong point that the publication was only sent through the mails sealed and under letter postage. Judge Benedict in his charge turned this point against the defense by saying substantially that those who would not buy such a work over a counter could obtain it in a sly way through the mails. Although the order clerk distinctly testified that he had sent the notices through the mails on his own responsibility, and with no permission from his employer, the Judge charged that the principal should be held responsible thesame as a bank officer would be for a notice of protest issued by a subordinate! Judge Benedict further said that medical works need not be sent by mail; that they could be sent by express; seeming to ignore the fact that the peculiar statute not only prohibited certain publications from going through the mails, but any notices in print or writing stating where such publications could be obtained.

After the rendition of the verdict, bail was doubled to $10,000, for which the Doctor must find bondsmen or go to jail! Counsel were sure that Judge Benedict under the circumstances would not impose a fine of perhaps more than $100. The prisoner was a physician; the pamphlet was nothing more than advice which is orally given by every well-informed practitioner to his inquiring patients. These circumstances, together with the unauthorized character of the notices, would be considered.

The Judge was urged by personal appeal and written to by anxious friends and patients of the Doctor to deal leniently with him. Among the letters passing through the hands of his attorneys to Judge Benedict was one from an ex-Governor, who said he knew the prisoner to be "an excellent citizen, a man of studious habits and pure life"; one from a physician of prominence in the Homœopathic school, a Professor in one of its universities, and a high officer in one of its societies, who said he was satisfied of Dr. Foote's "genial humanitarianism, keen intellect, and honest purpose"; one from an independent physician, graduate of a first-class Allopathic university, an ex-Professor of several medical universities, who remarked that "physicians generally agree that the pamphlet contains nothing but candid and rational answers to questions usually asked," etc.; one from a noted clergyman, who expressed his hearty approval of the Doctor's publications, including his pamphlets, and who said he had placed two sets of "Science in Story" in his Sunday-school library; one from a sculptor whose work in artistic bronze beautifies one of the rambles in Central Park; one from an old and honored publisher, who originally brought out Harriet Beecher Stowe's "Uncle Tom's Cabin"; one from a Professor high in the Eclectic medical profession, together with many others, all testifying to the fact that the Doctor was entitled to mercy. On the 11th day of July, while thousands of people were crowding the Centennial Exposition in commemoration of the birth of this great free Republic, Dr. Foote was fined $3,500 for publishing a little work which a large number of intelligent and reputable physicians and thousands of good people throughout the United States believed to contain only such information as at least every adult had a right to know! (Sentence was not passed for sending the notices.) It was fully believed by the Doctor and his friends that this victim of a clumsy statute barely escaped the State's Prison! The fine and costs of defense exceeded $5,000. The developments during the trial led many to the conviction that the law and its agent were being employed by conservative members of the profession to destroy a liberal medical writer and practitioner. Circumstances have come to the knowledge of the Doctor since the Summer of 1876, which have led him reluctantly to believe that these suspicions, in which he was too charitable at the time to share, were well founded. There can be no doubt that some malevolent influences were at work to prejudice Dr. Foote's case in the court and before the public; for he has a large and intelligent constituency, who swear by his publications, in every civilized portion of the globe. Whatever this influence was, the case illustrates how both the law and the person who assumes to be its executor can be used in persecuting men of honest purpose and of unblemished character.

CASE OF HALL, THE ARTIST.

Mr. Hall had a photograph gallery at 145 Fulton street. Comstock's man, Britton, visited him frequently, and wanted to buy some indecent pictures. He was importunate in his requests, and offered to pay very liberal prices for them if he could be accommodated. Hall at length was over-persuaded and got up some pictures for the pious young man, which he was to deliver on a certain Sunday morning. At the time the pictures were to be handed over to Britton, Comstock attended his pliant tool and took Mr. Hall under arrest, seized his camera and other apparatus, with negatives, pictures, etc., and carried them off. Hall's trial was a summary affair, as all these trials for obscenity are, and Hall, on the testimony of Comstock and his accomplice, was sentenced to two years' imprisonment.

When he had served his time out he wished to start his business again, and visited Comstock at his office on Nassau street and asked for the instruments which he (Comstock) had taken from his place. The pious Christian gentleman turned in a very fierce manner upon Hall, and said threateningly, "Sir, if you dare to say I have anything that belongs to you, or that I took anything from you, it will make you a great deal of trouble. Leave my office and never enter it again."

Hall insists that Anthony Comstock is a very dishonest man, and that he committed perjury in his case. He will testify to this under oath.

CASE OF DR. J. BRYAN.

We have been acquainted with Dr. Bryan for nearly twenty-five years, fully half of which time he has practiced medicine in this city. Four or five years ago Comstock caused his arrest for receiving letters in the name of Harvey, giving him a great deal of trouble and expense. He also caused him to be indicted for sending through the mails a pamphlet containing an advertisement of a perfume, put up by another party, that was recommended as having a bewitching, charming effect upon the senses. The offense was at best a very slight one, and though a conviction has never been obtained, it has cost the Doctor many thousands of dollars in cash and injured his business not less than $20,000. He has good reason to ever curse the name and memory of Anthony Comstock.

CASE OF CHARLES CONROY.

Conroy is a one-handed man, having been born without a right hand. He made a living by selling books and pamphlets, mostly of Dick & Fitzgerald's publication, being song books, dream books, books of games, letter writers, books of etiquette, etc., etc. He did business in this city, and also in Newark, N. J. It was in the latter city that Comstock commenced his atack upon him. Conroy did an advertising business, and had letters sent to him in an assumed name. Comstock, deeming this a great offense, applied to the U. S. Commissioner in Newark for a warrant for the arrest of Conroy. The Commissioner, however, not deeming the matter complained of as being sufficient to justify the issuing of a warrant, refused to do so, whereupon Comstock decided to arrest Conroy without a warrant. He accordingly did so, and took him before the Commissioner, who held him for an examination. While Conroy was being conveyed to prison in a hackney coach, he told Comstock that he had arrested him without the slightest authority, and that he had done so without a warrant. Comstock's reply was, "If I do not succeed in convicting you on this arrest, I will follow you up until I do get you into prison." As they neared the prison and Conroy saw its grim walls looming up before him, he remembered his wife and child at home and how they would be left to suffer while he was in prison, and he realized how unjust and cruel the whole thing was. He took his little pocket-knife, the only weapon he had, and with his left hand he gave Comstock one blow upon his left cheek, cutting a bad gash nearly two inches in length. Comstock recovering himself, hastily pulled his pistol from his pocket and placed it at Conroy's head, and at that instant the carriage door was opened and the jailer appeared with another pistol, which he also presented unpleasantly near Conroy's head. Thus with a pistol on each side of his head, the overpowered man with a single hand, deemed submission the wisest part and, he was placed in a cell. He was tried upon the charge of committing an atrocious assault upon an officer. Comstock, of course, appeared against him and with his testimony obtained a verdict of two years' imprisonment in the State prison at Trenton. On the day the prisoner was sentenced, some twenty of Comstock's bosom friends, members of the Young Men's Christian Association, went over to Newark to witness the interesting proceedings. And when the prisoner had been conducted to the State prison at Trenton, Comstock took the trouble to make a journey there to impress upon the keeper or warden that Conroy was a very dangerous man and ought to be kept in the closest confinement, in pursuance of which advice Conroy was kept in a very close, uncomfortable cell during the hottest weather. When his term had expired and before he had left the steps of the prison, Comstock was on hand, and had him arrested again on the original charge of receiving letters in a fictitious name, had him tried, convicted, and sentenced to another six months in prison. This statement was obtained from Conroy himself.

The cut which he inflicted on Comstock's face was somewhat serious, bleeding badly on his way home and weakening him somewhat. But his Christian friends were very kind to him, for, in consideration of the great peril he was in from such an attack, and the danger he had run in the cause of morality and justice, they made him up a purse of nearly ten thousand dollars for his great sufferings and loss of blood. It is very presumable he would willingly take several such cuts at $10,000 each.

CASE OF H. P——.

This case of heartless cruelty and wrong we have mentioned in a former issue, but by request we refer to it again.

Mr. P—— is a very worthy gentleman, sixty-four years of age. His life has been beyond reproach. He is an artistic mechanic and manufacturer of stereopticons and magic lanterns. He was formerly in business in Chatham Square and is now on the corner of Division and Catherine streets. He has lived a quiet, unobtrusive life, and no man can justly speak ill of him. His shop is filled with lathes and other implements and machinery with which and one or two assistants he manufactures the instruments that so highly interest and instruct thousands of citizens.

In the spring of 1877 he was induced by Mr. Daniel Walford, active member of two temperance organizations, to attend their social society meeting and edify them with the exhibition of one of his stereopticons. It was not his custom to exhibit his instruments in this way; in fact, this was the first instance of the kind. He was simply a manufacturer; but in this instance, to amuse a social party of temperance people, he consented to spend an evening with them and minister to their pleasure; and this he did without fee or compensation. The pictures used were chaste and moral, a portion of which were of statuary and ancient paintings, embracing, of course, some nude figures; none were from life. Many gentlemen and their wives were present, and everybody was pleased, and none were in the least shocked by the exhibition. There was however, one person present whose impure mind caught at the idea that as nude figures from statuary, etc., had been represented, it would be a good chance for Comstock to work up a case. He reported the affair to Joseph Britton, the accomplice and confidential assistant of Comstock, who at an early date communicated the intelligence to his obscenity-loving master, and he was instructed to give his attention to the matter and to work up the case. Britton visited Mr. P—— and said, with words of lying hypocrisy in his mouth, "I understand, Mr. P——, that a few evenings ago you gave before a temperance society a very interesting exhibition of pictures and engravings with one of your instruments. Now, I called to see you about giving a similar exhibition before a political club to which I belong. We are going to have a special meeting soon, and I wish to engage you to be with us with your stereopticon and pictures." To which Mr. P—— replied, "It is not my business to exhibit my instruments; I only manufacture them. I merely went the other evening to please and amuse some friends, and it is the only instance where I have done so." "Well," said Britton, "I hope you will not refuse also to come for us. We will pay you liberally for your time and trouble, and you will afford us innocent amusement."

Mr. P. thus importuned, and thinking perhaps he would make a few dollars for the evening's labor, consented to go, whereupon Britton plied the unsuspecting man on this tack: "Now, you see our Club is composed mostly of young men, and we are fond of something rich and a little gay. Those pictures you have exhibited are well enough, but can't you get something for us a little 'stronger' or more fancy?" "No," said Mr. P——; "I don't know that I can. Those are all the pictures I have." "But, my friend," said the detective, "we are willing to pay you liberally if you will get something to please us. Can you not make an effort to find something of the style we want?" "Well, yes; maybe so," answered the old man, weakening, perhaps, at the thought of turning an extra penny. "I will try and see what I can do for you." The Christian detective said he would call again.

In a short time the detective called again and looked over the addition the manufacturer had made to his stock, with which he pronounced himself well pleased. He then renewed the engagement for their exhibition before his club, to take place on a certain night.

Then the vigilant detective reported to his chief, the veritable Comstock, how successfully he had roped in the old man and how he had induced him to procure pictures that might be called obscene. Anthony soon put in an appearance at the old man's shop and asked to see the pictures, saying he was one of the club before which he was to exhibit. When this agent of the Christian Association had piously inspected the pictures which the old man had, which his hypocritical tool had persuaded him to procure, and which he never would have procured save for such persuasion, he, like a fiend, turned upon the innocent old man, and said: "Now I have you. You are my prisoner. Accompany me at once."

Mr. P—— was working at his lathe, in his shirt-sleeves and slippers, with his apron on. Said he, "If I must go with you, let me at least put on my coat and boots, and not be compelled to go through the streets in this way." "No," replied Comstock, imperiously. "Come along at once, or I will prefer the additional charge against you of resisting an officer of the Government." And thus that inoffensive old man of sixty-four years, was, on a cold day in last April, compelled by Comstock to march along the streets of this city, without his coat or boots; and when one of his employees followed with his coat, Comstock would not allow the old man to stop and put it on; and not until he reached the police station and was placed in the charge of a policeman was a kind word spoken to him or was he allowed to put on his coat to keep out the cold.

The arrest was made late in the afternoon, and when he had been examined before the proper authorities it was too late to procure bail, and Mr. P—— was compelled to pass the night in the Oak-street station house. There was nothing in his cell to sleep upon save a hard plank, and in his perturbed state of mind at the sudden change in his fortunes he trod his narrow cell all night, without a moment's sleep coming to his eyelids. This was purposely planned by the bright agent of the Young Men's Christian Association; and, as it turned out, the unhappy old man had to pass the second night in this dismal cell before acceptable bail could be procured.

The case was ultimately placed before the Grand Jury, and a bill was found against him. The result was that the affair is still unsettled, after having cost the old man a great amount of anxiety, damaging his reputation, nearly breaking up his business, and costing him fully a thousand dollars. It is still held in terror over his head, and nearly destroys his happiness and that of his sick wife, who, if her husband is convicted upon so disgraceful a charge, will be hurried to her grave. When Mr. Walford, his wife, and other prominent members of the temperance organization, went to Mr. Comstock with the endeavor to soften his severity towards the poor, unfortunate man, and said that they persuaded him to exhibit his pictures before their society, that he had charged nothing, and that there was not the slightest impropriety in the exhibition, and that both gentlemen and ladies were highly pleased with them, they found this protector of all our American decency and morality implacable and unyielding, and he seemed determined to pursue the harmless old man to the very death for committing what he—Comstock—was pleased to consider a crime, and which the old man would never have thought of committing had he not been persuaded into it by Comstock's own directions and by one of his own lackeys.

This is the true character of the man to whom the Government has given remarkable power to annoy, oppress, and drive to desperation and ruin citizens as much superior to him in moral worth and purity of character as the sun is above the earth.

CASE OF JOHN MANNING.

Manning is a young man, and in 1875 started a little news and literary stand on the corner of New Chambers and Pearl streets. He had been open but a short time when he received visits from Comstock's assistant, Britton, alias Cohen, alias Andrews, alias Levy, with as many more aliases as may be desired. He bought papers, etc., of Manning, and came in from week to week until he got well acquainted and was regarded by Manning as a friend. Britton on one occasion asked for fancy photographs. Manning told him he had none, and that he had never dealt in anything of the kind. "But," said Britton, "cannot you get some for me? If you have an opportunity to pick up any, save them for me, and I will pay you a good price." This request was repeated several times, and Manning told him if he saw anything of the kind he wanted, he would get them. Some time after this he had an opportunity of buying some photographs of nude figures, statuary, etc., and thinking they might suit his friend Britton, purchased them for him. He did not deem it best to keep them in his store, but put them in his trunk at his boarding-house. Britton called soon after and was told he had some photographs for him. "Keep them," said Britton; "I will call again and take them." When he called next time Comstock accompanied him and remained outside the store while his accomplice went in to work the ruin of young Manning. The latter told the villain Britton that the pictures were not in his store, and that he would have to lock up his place and go over to his lodging house, which he did, Britton accompanying him. As soon as he got outside, Britton communicated to Comstock that he had the pictures, and Comstock immediately arrested the unsuspecting young man, without a warrant or the slightest authority, and dragged him off to prison. The trial and conviction followed in due time. Comstock appeared against the accused, and swore that certain pictures were taken off the person of Manning, which Manning affirms he never saw till Comstock produced them in Court and swore them on to him. Manning will take oath that this is the truth. He was sentenced to one year's imprisonment, and has been out about six months, his business broken up, and a life-long disgrace hanging over him. He is ready to testify in any Court that Comstock committed perjury in his case, and swore that pictures were obtained from Manning that he, Manning, never saw till in Court.

ANOTHER SIMILAR CASE.

A young man, a youth eighteen or nineteen years of age, who lived on Goerck street, tended a little news stand for his sister, on Columbia street. Britton often visited him and patronized him, and finally wanted fancy or obscene pictures, as in the case of Manning. The young man finally found some that he thought would please his customer and secured them. It was the same story over again. Comstock caused his arrest, appeared against him at the trial, and the youth was convicted and sentenced to prison for a year, thus inflicting a cruel and terrible wrong upon the well-meaning young man—first inducing him to commit an offense, or what might be construed an offense, and then disgracing him for life by sending him to prison. Can such a person be a good man, a real lover of morality and virtue? Hardly.

CASE OF DR. J. BOTT, AND OTHERS.

In the spring of 1872 Anthony Comstock made a trip to Washington and entered upon an enterprising characteristic speculation, to which his talents and inclination so eminently adapt him. He rented Post-office Box 260, provided himself with a lot of letter-heads belonging to the Treasury Department, which must have been dishonestly abstracted by himself or some other person, and wrote some eight or ten letters to as many physicians in this city. He assumed the character of a poor, unfortunate young girl who had been seduced and was in a condition to become a mother, and appealed in a most pitiful manner to those physicians to do something to relieve her. The following is a copy of the letter sent to one of the physicians, and upon comparison they were all found to be of the same tenor:

"WASHINGTON, D. C., March 18, 1872.

"DR. SELDEN, Dear Sir: I am an employee of the Treasury and I have got myself into trouble. I was seduced about four months ago, and I am now about three months gone in the family way. The person who seduced me has run away, and I do not know what will become of me if I do not get relief. I am a poor clerk and get only sixty dollars per month, and have to keep a widowed mother and a crippled sister, so that I send you all, in fact more than I can spare, hoping that you will send me something that will relieve me.

"Now, dear Doctor, send it right away, and send it by mail, for I do not want any one to have a breath of suspicion about the matter. For God's sake do not disappoint a poor ruined and forsaken girl whose only relief will be suicide if you fail me.

"Yours faithfully, MISS ANNA E. RAY.

"Please send package by mail to 'A. E. R.', Box 260, Washington, D. C., and have it securely sealed."

Twenty dollars were placed in each letter and the same registered, so the parties receiving them were obliged to sign a receipt before obtaining the letter.

Letters of the same character were on the same day mailed to Dr. J. Bott, 84 Amity street; Dr. Alex. R. King, 10 Amity street; Dr. Dubois, 38 Great Jones street; Dr. Andrews, 45 Bleecker street; Dr. Marcus Jacoby, 161 Bleecker street; Dr. C. W. Selden, 67 Amity street. Such a cry of distress would move many a sympathetic heart to do something to afford relief, though no money was enclosed, but the two together were supposed sufficient to affect the stoutest heart.

Some of the physicians named suspected this was a "put up" case and sent nothing; others sent simple preparations, not calculated to produce any specific change in the person taking them, whether male or female. Others again, sent emmenagogue medicines adapted to the nature of the case. Dr, Bott sent a simple powder of oxide of bismuth and powdered gentian, which is a simple stomachic and would not harm a woman in any condition. The prescription for the powder was filled out at the drug-store on the corner of Sullivan and McDougal streets.

One of the physicians sent a box of common purgative pills, one sent pills and a decoction ,and some sent nothing. Comstock, having caught his game in the trap he had so skillfully set, came on to New York, feline-like, to play with them. He had all the physicans arrested who had sent him any medicines to get him out of the unpleasant condition which he represented himself to be in, and in due time they were brought to trial, convicted and sent to prison. Dr, Jacoby was an exception; he had money. By paying $1,500 he escaped a trial and consequent imprisonment. How much of that sum Anthony Comstock got, and where the balance found a lodging place, are not generally known.

When Dr. Bott was arrested he was cast into Ludlow Street Jail where he lay six months before his trial came off, and when it did take place it was a very summary affair. Comstock exhibited the registered letter receipt which Dr. Bott signed, a copy of the letter written, and the bismuth and gentian powder which the Doctor sent him. Judge Benedict ruled that no other testimony was necessary, and refused to allow Dr. Bott, through his attorney, James McClellan, Esq., to introduce testimony to show the simple nature of the powder sent, which he wished to do by the druggist who prepared it. He ruled that the Doctor's sending any powder in response to Comstock's fraudulent decoy letter was prima facie evidence of his guilt, and peremptorily charged the jury to find a verdict of guilty, which they did without leaving their seats.

The sentence of Dr. Bott was eighteen months in Crow Hill penitentiary, Brooklyn, which, with the six months in Ludlow Street jail, made two years, for the heinous crime of sending through the mail a simple stomachic powder, and which he never would have sent had not Comstock decoyed him to do so.

One who has not tasted the bitterness of prison life cannot fully appreciate its ills. Dr. Bott, naturally a man of fine sensibilities, was broken down and crushed by the weight of the great misfortune that befell him, and so were his family. They were disgraced and outraged. The Doctor's health gave way under the hardship and deprivation of prison life. He was sick in prison, and came out nearly a year ago a mere wreck of his former self. He subsequently passed a considerable portion of his time in hospitals; his health was ruined and his spirits completely broken down. About three weeks ago we visited his bedside during the closing hours of his life. He died the following night. As we watched him drawing his few remaining breaths we instinctively exclaimed, "This is but another result of the American Inquisition. This is the finale of another unfortunate victim of Anthony Comstock's greed." This case of Dr. Bott's is thought to be at least the twentieth in which Comstock by his relentless prosecutions and persecutions has sent the victim to an untimely grave as surely as though he had shot him or stabbed him to the heart. Among other victims whom Comstock has sent to prison and to death may be mentioned Jeremiah Farrel, George Ackerman, Dr. Gunspertz, Dr. Munches, and others.

DAVID MASSEY'S EXPERIENCE.

Allusion has been made to this case in a previous issue, but as it is of especial severity and hard-heartedness it deserves another mention. Mr. Massey was a merchant of St. Louis, and did a somewhat extensive and successful business until the war of the rebellion. His business was largely in the South, and upon the breaking out of the war his trade was cut off, and thousands of dollars due him by his Southern customers could not be collected, and, like hundreds of others in similar cases, he was utterly ruined. He came to New York to find something to do. He obtained a clerkship with Rogers & Co., 737 Broadway, and there he became a victim to the wiles of Anthony Comstock, who sent a decoy letter to the house or to Mr. Massey, ordering some fancy pictures. Massey enclosed in an envelope a set of what are called "Black Crook" pictures, being representations of the ballet girls in costume as they appeared on the stage. Such pictures were very common in this city a few years ago, and stared passers-by in the face from hundreds of windows. We have conversed with a party who saw Massey put the pictures into the envelope, and he will swear there was nothing obscene among them. But on the trial Comstock produced some very obscene pictures and swore he received them by mail from Massey. Mr. Massey contended in the strongest terms that Comstock committed perjury in his testimony against him, but it was sufficient to send him to prison for a year, with a fine of $500.

Without saying ourselves that Comstock committed perjury in this case, we can only say it was perfectly easy for him to do so. Now, we submit it to the reader whether the liberty of American citizens is safe when a designing, dishonest, and unprincipled man, as Comstock has proved himself to be, and with a morbid fondness for sending people to prison, has the power, by his individual, uncorroborated testimony, to send between two and three hundred persons to prison, as he has publicly boasted of doing. We have conversed with several persons who will testify under the solemnity of an oath that Comstock committed willful perjury in his efforts to convict them. This, we fear, is too true. But if it is clear that he could very easily do so, it is extremely unsafe to place so much power as Comstock has wielded in the hands of a man like him.

The sister of Massey, heartbroken at the disgrace brought upon her brother and family, died, and was carried to an untimely grave. Mr. Massey left prison greatly impaired in health. He returned to St. Louis and was compelled to go the hospital. When last heard from he was lying at the point of death. Another victim of the moral cormorant, Anthony Comstock.

CASE OF JAMES SULLIVAN.

This gentleman was a dealer in books and light literature at 113 Fulton st. In the early part of Comstock's glorious career as protector of the morals of the public, he visited Sullivan's establishment and, pulling three dollars from his pocket and laying them on the counter, said, "I want a copy of 'The Lustful Turk.'" Sullivan replied, "I do not keep that kind of books. You see what stock I have. I will be glad to sell you three dollars' worth of such as I have, but I have none of the kind you call for." Comstock replied that he wished a copy specially of "The Lustful Turk," as he wished to send it to a friend in the country. Sullivan again assured him that he had nothing of the kind. Comstock put his money in his pocket and took his leave.

In February, 1873, Comstock caused the arrest of Sullivan and took him before a U. S. Commissioner for sending information through the mails as to where improper books could be obtained. The Grand Jury, upon Comstock's evidence, found a bill, and at the trial in the January following, before Judge Benedict, upon Comstock's evidence a verdict of guilty was easily obtained. Comstock swore that in March, 1872, he had sent a letter from Norwich, or Norwalk, Conn., in the name of Jerry Baxter, to Sullivan, asking for a circular of fancy literature, and that in return he had obtained a list of books of various kinds; but the list had no name or address upon it to show that it came from Sullivan. Judge Benedict, however, instructed the jury that the reception by Comstock of that circular and envelope, which he had carried in his pocket eleven months before he brought suit, was prima facie evidence of Sullivan's guilt. Upon this remarkable ruling, and upon Comstock's uncorroborated testimony, he was found guilty, and Benedict sentenced him to one year's imprisonment and a fine of $500. Sullivan is ready to take a solemn oath that he never sent the circular, that the writing on the envelope was not his at all, and that Comstock perjured himself two or three times in giving evidence against him. But his business was broken up, he was most wretched, and disgraced for life, because Comstock swore that he had received in a fictitious name a list of books without name or address! Is this the ultimate of American liberty?

CASE OF HUNTER & CO.

This firm do an extensive publishing business at Hinsdale, N. H. Their paper, The Star Spangled Banner, has a wide circulation. They also sell many books and miscellaneous goods. Anthony Comstock let his evil eye rest upon them, and he plotted their overthrow. He commenced operations by writing decoy letters from New Jersey (I think it was Squan Village) ordering a simple French arrangement, sometimes called a "safe." This was the first one sold and also the last, and this was sent by mail for Comstock's special benefit, though ordered under a false name. Anthony, thus armed and equipped, visited Hinsdale and arrested Mr. Hunter and four of his clerks and had them carried off to be examined, though the clerks had nothing to do with the matter. He also seized and carried off a portion of their property and ransacked the entire place to see if he could find anything obscene with which to feast his morbid appetite, but he found nothing of an improper character. After Mr. Hunter had thus been spirited away, Comstock showed his extreme honesty and truthfulness by going to Mr. Hunter's dwelling and saying to Mrs. Hunter, "Mr. Hunter says you are to give me that package of fancy books." She knew nothing of anything of the kind, for the very good reason that there was nothing of the kind there. But, to increase his glory and renown with the members of the societies to which he belongs, he caused to be published in the Boston dailies, with flaming headings, accounts of the enormous seizures he had made in Hinsdale of obscene matter, claiming that it was the headquarters for villainy in the State. This was evidently done to prejudice public sentiment against Mr. Hunter and to make it appear to the public that he—Comstock—was doing a tremendous business in making seizures of matter of the most vile character.

Hunter & Co. have reason to be thankful that their case was not tried before the U. S. District Court in this city. Had Judge Benedict been the Judge before whom it was tried, the sending of that one simple, trivial apparatus, under his stern rulings, might easily have cost them two or more years' imprisonment and a fine of from three to five thousand dollars. As it was, though the case was not pressed against them, it cost them thousands of dollars, to the almost utter ruin of their business and an amount of trouble and intense anxiety on the part of themselves and families that never can be fully estimated. The most cruel and heartless part of the work of the informer in this case was his studied efforts to blacken their characters before the public by his false representations that tons of immoral and indecent matter were found upon their premises, when not the smallest part of it was true. Nothing immoral or obscene was found upon their premises, simply because it was not there. It is very easy to make false representations about others, and in this way to injure them to an incalculable extent; and a man who deliberately and maliciously does this for the purpose of carrying out his own evil designs or to add to his own reputation or glory ought to be shunned as the most dangerous viper in the land.

THE CASE OF SIMPSON.

This man kept a news and literary depot on Centre street, near Pearl street, for many years. It is not denied that he was an offender, and that in years past he sold works of an immoral character. It is not our wish to defend him or to apologize for him in this connection, but the case upon which he was tried and sentenced to ten years' imprisonment at hard labor and a fine of five thousand dollars seems one of extreme severity. Comstock got upon his track and was determined to place him in prison. He first caused his arrest for selling a card called the "picnic card," which was playful, but not immoral or vile. This was found insufficient. But not so a card referring to the marriage of Nellie Grant to Sartoris in the language of a naval engagement, without an absolutely obscene or immoral word in it. The issuing of this card, which could not possibly do much harm to anybody, afforded sufficient grounds, under the laws of Congress, for Comstock to pursue the man, for the jury to find him guilty, and for the merciful Judge Benedict to sentence him to ten years' imprisonment at hard labor and a fine of $5,000. In view of the trivial character of the offense, this seems to have been the severest sentence ever imposed in this country. Many a foul murderer, robber, thief, embezzler, defaulter, ravisher, calumniator, perjurer, or forger has gone scot free or with very insignificant punishment, while this man is compelled to spend ten years of his life in prison, at hard labor, with a fine of a sum larger than many earn in their whole lives hanging over him, and for the selling of a card without an immodest word upon it! It seems almost incredible. Yet such is the truth. Under the Comstock laws almost anything is possible. The unfortunate man is now serving out the severe sentence imposed upon him, and his wife and children are doing what they can to continue the little business.

CASE OF DR. E. C. ABBEY,

Dr. Abbey is a resident of the city of Buffalo, and is a gentleman of the highest intelligence and moral worth. He graduated in 1861, thus having been a legal medical practitioner for more than a sixth part of a century. He is a prominent member of the masonic fraternity, and enjoys a first-class reputation among the wide numbers who know him, and is thoroughly indorsed by the best men of all classes in whose midst he has dwelt for many years.

He has written and published a work on the sexual system and its derangements. Sexual diseases have been made a specialty by him; which study was induced by what he witnessed in this connection while pursuing his collegiate studies. When about to issue his work, he placed the manuscript in the hands of the District Attorney, who pronounced it legal and not in conflict with any law. After its publication he submitted it to the best medical counsel in the State of New York, as well as the best legal talent, including the Hon. Daniel F. Day and others, who pronounced the work all right from a legal point of view and one whose circulation would, as calculated, do a great amount of good. He had not the slightest motive to issue an improper or an immoral book, and he took every precaution to obtain legal and able counsel upon the subject. A competitor in business—and a man not governed by the highest motives—sought to injure Dr. Abbey in the matter of his medical work and the sending of it through the mails. A copy was taken to U. S. Commissioner Fillmore, son of ex-President Fillmore, who declined to entertain the case at all. Before another Commissioner the result was different. Anthony Comstock's attention was called to Dr. Abbey's work, and, as it imparts to the masses information upon the important subjects of human physiology and the laws of health, he decided it was an improper work to receive mail facilities. His detective in Elmira commenced operations. Decoy letters were sent. Dr. Abbey sent a copy of this work to Comstock, giving all the facts about its publication, the names of men of standing who had endorsed the Doctor's character, and asked the conservator of the public morals of America to state his objections to it. He assured Comstock also that an arrest and trial was unnecessary; that he was ready to make any such modification as might be deemed necessary.

It was perhaps an error on the part of Dr. Abbey to take that course. He was arrested and his books seized as obscene. This was unquestionably a high-handed outrage. They should not have been seized as obscene until pronounced to be of that character by proper legal authorities. Comstock, however, considers himself competent to decide what is obscene, and any popular work designed to circulate among the masses, and which gives any information upon the subject of human physiology, he pronounces obscene. He has said, in his very positive and offensive manner, "No works on physiology shall be allowed to go through the mails." The rights and liberties of American citizens have indeed sunk to a low point if a man of the very moderate literary and scientific acquirements of Anthony Comstock shall become censor of the public press and the United States mails, and shall have the power to say what books the people may read, and what they may not, what they may send and receive through the mails, and what not! Was it for this kind of liberty that our fathers fought and bled in the days of the Revolution? Was it for this kind of universal freedom that the great struggle was made to sustain our Government in the late rebellion?

The wrong thus perpetrated against Dr. Abbey by seizing his property and holding it without legal authority has been continued nearly two years, his books, as we understand the case, being still wrongfully and unjustly detained. When taken before Judge Wallace of the U. S. District Court, Dr. Abbey very promptly admitted that he had deposited his medical work in the mails and that he was proud of having done so, regarding the same distinctly as his right and duty. He raised objections to the indictment as not being specific, and claimed firmly but respectfully that his work was not in any sense an obscene book The jury that tried him were fresh from their barns and firesides, and were unfortunately of a class incompetent to judge of the merits of a medical work. They had not, in fact, read enough of works of that kind to constitute them capable judges of their true merits. The District Attorney read a few isolated passages which, to the unlettered minds of such a jury as we often see sitting to try matters they do not understand, sounded plain and reprehensible, and late on Saturday evening, when they were tired and anxious to return home, they readily decided the case adversely, and in five minutes found that valuable medical work an obscene book.

The result was unexpected to both the Judge and the District Attorney, and the Judge made the fine the minimum one prescribed by the law, to wit: one hundred dollars. The Doctor, in full confidence in his own innocence and integrity, demurred at that mild sentence and gave bail to appear at the next court. He continues to send out his work by mail without molestation; and this is one of the cases in which Mr. Comstock, notwithstanding his decoy letters and his efforts to work up the case to the best advantage, did not succeed in making very much. This, however, he did succeed in doing. He put a learned physician and worthy gentleman to a great amount of expense and annoyance, and brought a load of odium upon him, more acutely realized by the recipient and his family than it can possibly be by anybody else. It is a clear case where a designing, unworthy man, under the sanction of a law passed by the representatives of the people, and paid for, too, by the people's money, is made to oppress and wrong a far more worthy citizen. The lesson to learn from this case is that the masses are far too deficient in medical education and physiological knowledge. Had the jury which tried Dr. Abbey not been ignorant, unlettered men, had they perused such valuable works as the one from his pen, the verdict would have been altogether different, and they would not have disgraced themselves and the laws of their country by condemning a work full of merit, and which if placed in every family would prove a blessing indeed. Dr. Parr, of Indianapolis, published a medical work of a similar character, and in a similar manner was arrested, tried, and greatly troubled by the officious, meddlesome Comstock, and submitted to a heavy expense and a great deal of trouble and unhappiness. We think the case has been suspended, but our knowledge of the facts is not sufficient to enable us to speak definitely of it. Comstock has also caused the arrest of three physicians in St. Louis upon charges similar to those in Dr. Abbey's case. Their trials have not yet come off, but as Comstock is determined that no medical works shall be circulated through the mails save those issued by regular physicians in regular standing and in full fellowship with the regular schools, and that he will frown down with the utmost severity every attempt at independent medical authorship, it may be expected that he will do his utmost to secure their conviction.

CASE OF EDGAR W. JONES.

For several years Mr. Jones has been doing a very active business in Ashland, Mass., supplying thousands of customers by mail with various publications, novelties, and curiosities, embracing prize-packages, "Handbook of Good Manners," "Bashfulness Cured," "How to Make Love," "Parlor Magic," "Tricks with Cards," "Dancing without a Master," "Letter-Writing Made Easy," "Handbook of Business," "Fortune Teller and Dream Book." "Best Methods of Fishing," "The Art of Ventriloquism," "The Painter's Guide," "The Gem Microscope," etc., with several preparations for the hair, whiskers, etc. In this line of business Mr. Jones has built up a trade almost marvelous for the times, filling from 75,000 to 100,000 orders per year. At the time of his arrest, some sixty days ago, he had 1,100 reams of paper in his establishment—a four-story building—for his catalogues, circulars, etc., etc., and he gave employment to some sixteen persons in the place, whose duties consisted in folding and stitching catalogues, wrapping goods, filling envelopes, etc., etc. He increased the post-office business of the town immensely. In the year 1877 he paid over $17,000 for postage stamps alone.

Four years ago he proposed to add to his line of goods Clarke's "Marriage Guide," a work upon physiology, etc., and principally compiled from "Dunglison's Physiology." Wishing to proceed carefully, he took a copy to the District Attorney of the U. S. District Court in Boston, for his inspection and opinion as to its being mailable. The official looked it over and said he could not see why it was not perfectly proper to send it through the mails, and looked upon it the same as other medical works. "There is," said he, "but one person in the United States who will make you any trouble, and that is Anthony Comstock of New York. You had better send a copy of the work to him, and get his opinion upon the subject." Mr. Jones acted upon this advice and sent a copy to Comstock, and wrote him asking for his views upon the subject; but he received no reply; he wrote again, but no reply was received, when he still wrote again with the same result. Then, acting upon the principle that "silence gives consent," he commenced selling the book, and has been selling pretty large numbers of them for the four years that have intervened.

But it seems the pure-minded Anthony has had his watchful eyes upon him all that time, and resolved, when the right time came, to pounce down upon him as a hawk would pounce upon a chicken. Some sixty days ago Comstock got ready to move upon Jones' works. He caused his arrest, pronouncing his business fraudulent, and Clarke's work obscene. The matters complained of were laid before the Grand Jury, and upon looking all his publications over, they could find nothing to condemn save it might be a few features in Clarke's "Marriage Guide," which to their minds might possibly smack of obscenity. Upon this frail tenure they found a bill against Mr. Jones.

When he found he was indicted, Mr. Jones, of course, was obliged to procure bail and to look up counsel. He applied to Mr. Somerby, who is probably one of the finest lawyers in Boston, who said: "These obscenity cases are disagreeable ones, especially in the United States Courts. Were the case to be tried in our State Courts there would be no trouble in the matter, but in the U. S. Courts it is quite a different thing. You can hardly find a first-class lawyer who will defend a case of obscenity in the U. S. Courts for a thousand dollars. The best way for you to settle the whole matter up easily is to plead guilty and ask for a light sentence. In that way your fine will be less, and you will get through with the unjust prosecution easier than any other way. It is an outrage on your rights, but the wisest way is to get out of the clutches of the man who has attacked you the best way you can."

Mr. Jones decided to act upon this advice, and when the time of trial came on, he entered a plea of "guilty." The Judge, in a short address used the following language:

"I think there is room to doubt whether this work, Doctor Clarke's 'Marriage Guide,' comes within the statute at all, unless every book on that subject is within the statute; but after the defendant's plea of guilty, perhaps it must be taken to be a book within the statute. It appears to have been sent to parties having a prurient curiosity, and perhaps his notions in doing this were not very elevated, but the book itself is not immoral or indecent at all, except that it treats of certain subjects supposed to be unknown, or not supposed to be known, and which, I think, ought to be taught in school. I don't see anything at all indecent in the book. I think the allegation in the indictment that the book contained passages which were too indecent to be spread upon the record was made to save the pleader, who wrote the indictment, some trouble, and not for the purpose of not shocking the morals of the court. If it was supposed to be offensive to the Court, I am very much obliged to the pleader, but it was not so. I think, however, as the plea admits that it is an indecent book, it comes within the statute, but the book treats generally of medical subjects. Upon what examination I have been able to make, I couldn't see that it contains anything indecent. The Government does not claim that it contains anything lascivious, but the book treats of certain things and diseases which are disagreeable, and which, perhaps, young persons should not know, or, as many may think, ought not to know. The defendant, I think, was engaged in a business not very elevating, although he said these books he intended never should be sent to young ladies' schools, yet, as the old or middle-aged people might have a desire to read them, he wished to run as near the line as he could, and, before issuing the book, he communicated with the District Attorney and Anthony Comstock. As he received no answer from Mr. Comstock, he took silence for assent, and sold the book. However, as he has pleaded that this is an indecent book, I shall sentence him to pay a fine of $150, without costs."

During the proceedings, Mr. Comstock was called to the stand, whereupon he condemned Mr. Jones' business in emphatic terms. Mr. Jones asked him to point out what there was in his business that was vile or immoral. In addition to Clarke's "Marriage Guide," Comstock thought the little book called "Widow's Traps" was a very indecent work and unfit for circulation. Mr. Jones' attorney turned to Mr. J. and asked him if he had a copy with him. Mr J. answered that he had not. At this, Comstock was still more denunciatory and said the work was suppressed, and that he had seized the plates in New York, and that not a copy of the work was to be had. Jones, knowing this was wholly untrue, whispered to one of his attendants to go to one of the book-stores in the city and procure a copy of it. In a few minutes the young man returned with a copy. At this Comstock was evidently taken aback and began to qualify his statements.

Mr. Somerby said: "Mr. Comstock, will you please take that little book and point out such parts as you deem obscene?" Comstock, in a stammering kind of way, said perhaps he was mistaken in the pamphlet, and that possibly there was nothing in it improper. "Did you not say, Mr. Comstock, that you had seized the plates of this book, and that no copies were to be had?" "I think I must have been wrong; it must have been another work I had in my mind." "Do you now say, Mr. Comstock, since you see that a copy of the work has been easily procured, that it is obscene and unfit for circulation? and, if so, will you point out such parts and places?" "I do not now think the work is immoral or obscene." "Mr. Comstock, I consider that you have perjured yourself right here before the Court." The Court was evidently of the same opinion; and when Comstock intimated that the rulings of Judge Benedict of New York would be materially different from Judge Lowell's, and produced a long array of written or printed opinions of Benedict, Judge Lowell told him that he—Judge Lowell—was not governed by the rulings and decisions of Judge Benedict; that he acted upon the right of coming to his own decisions, the same as Judge Benedict undoubtedly did. Comstock was chagrined at his want of success in the Jones case, and the manner in which he was looked upon and treated was evidently a matter of intense disgust to him, and he could not help thinking that could he have brought the case before Judge Benedict, it would have terminated differently.

When Mr. Jones was arrested, Comstock went to the post-office in the village, and stopped all his registered letters and forbade the cashing of his money orders. He was receiving from fifty to seventy-five registered letters per day, and when the trial was over, eleven hundred had accumulated. These of course he wished to have the benefit of, as any penniless man would. He had paid the fine imposed upon him, his business had been condemned by the Court before which he was brought, and he, very naturally wished to resume his regular avocation. To remove the embargo that had been placed upon his mail, he visited Washington, and had interviews with Postmaster-General D. M. Key, and A. A. Bissell, Ass't Att'y-Gen. for the Postal Department, but he was chagrined to find that his visits there could do no good.

He was coolly informed there that Anthony Comstock had told them that he—Jones—was doing a fraudulent business, as well as sending out obscene matter, and they could not go behind Mr. Comstock's information or instructions. Mr. Jones called attention to the fact that the Grand Jury found nothing wrong in anything he was doing except in Clarke's "Marriage Guide," and that Judge Lowell had decided that that was not improper, but ought to be in every family. "No matter," said Gen. Key, "Mr. Comstock tells us that you are doing an improper business, and we are bound to accept his statement." "But, General Key, is there no proof I can bring you that will convince you of Comstock's injustice to me? The selectmen of my town, every clergyman, every merchant, and nearly every citizen in the town and county, who knows me, is willing to sign a certificate that I am doing a legitimate, honest business, and that I am a benefit to the town in which I reside. I have supplied some 250,000 persons with goods, and not one of them has complained of being defrauded, or that they have not in every case received the value of their money. What more must I do to cause you to decide that my mail ought to be delivered to me?" "All that is of no avail," said Gen. Key; "Mr. Comstock gives us his word that your business ought to be suppressed, and we believe his statement. He is an active agent in whom we have great confidence. True, he overreaches himself sometimes, but his mistakes are in favor of the Department, and we must stand by him. He is a good Christian man, too, and we are bound to take his word in

Continued on page 43.

The Truth Seeker.

D. M. BENNETT, Editor.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

The largest and cheapest Radical Journal published in Europe or America, containing nearly seven hundred square inches more of Reading Matter than any other Journal of its class.

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, JAN. 19, 1878.

The Present Issue.

We ask the generous indulgence of our readers for engrossing so much of our space in the present issue in the consideration of what are known as the "Comstock laws" and the very questionable agent or character who assumes to execute them. We deem our course in this direction necessary as we have a special purpose to serve. We hope it will not again be necessary to occupy so much of our space upon this matter to the exclusion of other and more interesting subjects.

We say what we do this week from a sense of duty. It is not from a spirit of revenge, for if we know ourselves, we do not harbor a thought of revenge in our heart. We have, of course, felt the heavy hand of the personage who is the willing executor of those very oppressive laws, and at one time our prospect of prison for a term of years, with the addition, perhaps, of a heavy fine—judging from the precedents to be found in the rulings and sentences in the court in which we were to be tried—might doubtless have been considered more than promising. It will be remembered that we were arrested for sending through the U. S. mails two small tracts—one called "An Open Letter to Jesus Christ," which is simply one of a series of polemic articles discussing certain questions in theology, and the other a scientific dissertation on a question in natural history touching a fact little understood, and written with the sole intention of imparting a simple truth in nature.

The man who acts as the agent and secret detective for the U. S. Mail Department for our Government, as well as agent and secretary for the Society for the Suppression of Vice and the Y. M. C. A., has for a long time had his eye upon us, and more than two years ago made the threat that we should be visited by him. He saw in our labors great proofs of iniquity, and he professed to regard us as the head centre in the city of everything that is vile and sinful, all because we cannot arrive at the same conclusions in theological matters that he and his friends have arrived at.

He states that he consulted an eminent judge, the legal advisers and directors, or committee of proceedings, of his society, and, after looking over the two tracts named, and others which by decoy letters he had induced us to send him to the name of S. Bender, Squan Village, N. J., they instructed him to commence proceedings against us. Whereupon, we were arrested upon a disgraceful charge which no man of the slightest respectability would wish to be arrested under, our property was seized against our will and carried beyond our reach and control, and has not since been returned to us, and we, for the first time in our life, although in our sixtieth year, arraigned before an officer of the law, and but for the kindness of a friend who was willing to stand surety for us we would have been thrust into prison.

Our friends felt the most poignant grief at the danger which threatened us; the wife of our bosom was driven nearly to frenzy at the peril in which we were thus suddenly placed. The city papers advertised us as a free lover, as a publisher of a vile sheet, and the disseminator of matter too indecent to be mentioned. This intelligence, at the instance of him who thus persecuted us, was telegraphed all over the country, thus blackening our name in a manner that very few would wish to experience.

But for the sensible view taken of our case by the intelligent and kind-hearted District Attorney, who saw in our course no evidence of any design to break the laws of our country, and who could not believe that the offense with which we were charged was of such a nature as should be prosecuted under the laws in question, we by this time would have been prosecuted with all the venom which bigotry and intolerance could engender, and would be, perhaps, now serving out a sentence for a term of years at hard labor in the penitentiary.

Having thus barely escaped the workings of what has aptly been termed "The American Inquisition," we feel it a duty resting upon us to show up the working of the laws and the character of the agent who professes to execute them. As he is to this extent a public character he cannot escape the examination and criticism which all public characters have reason to expect.

We believe that the laws are subversive of the very principles of American liberty, and that Comstock is a bad and dangerous man, and for this reason, we for the moment waive other duties and devote ourselves to this disagreeable task. We are not unaware of the immense power wielded by the person whose conduct and authority we boldly criticise and expose, but we shrink not from the undertaking nor from the consequences of our course. We have the good of the American public in view and we are willing to risk our personal safety and the censure that may be bestowed upon us in order to discharge an obligation we feel is resting upon us. The liberties of our fellow-citizens are seriously menaced so long as this man is suffered to wield the extraordinary power he now possesses, with the ability to spread terror and wretchedness over hundreds of happy families. We have felt conscientious in what we herewith present and have designed to aggravate nothing and to set naught down in malice. We have tried to obtain reliable information and to state it in plain and unequivocal language so that all can understand. We believe the information we have received is reliable and that the statements herein made may be regarded as mainly true.

As Mr. Comstock is looked upon as an extra-lover of goodness and justice; as he is held up as the special conservator of morality and purity; as at headquarters at Washington, even by Postmaster-General D. M. Key, he is regarded as a most estimable and exemplary man, a faithful agent and "an excellent Christian," we feel that it is only right that his true character should be known, and that he should not be allowed to sail longer under false colors. When his real character is known by the American people, if they wish to select him as their captain to execute the laws of this country we shall endeavor not to complain.

As for ourselves, we regard him as a man totally unfit by nature and education to be promoted to the office of censor of the mails and of the press and to decide what books shall be read by the people of the country and what they have the privilege of sending through the mails. We think him also a very unfit man, arising from his hardness of heart and the mercilessness of his disposition, to be clothed with almost despotic and supreme power to bring into the meshes of the law whomsoever he will, and to force the most terrible punishment upon good people that his distorted fancy may dictate. We cannot think it was ever the design of the founders and framers of our government that under its action any one individual should be able to exercise such almost unlimited control. If it is to be the case that this rule is to be continued, we might as well bid adieu to the principles of liberty, and make up our minds to submit ourselves to a tyranny worse than exists in Russia, Algiers, or Patagonia.

The worst feature in this whole matter, and the one which appears to bode the least good to our rights and liberties, is the fact that such a man as Anthony Comstock is supported and sustained by a class of men who hold themselves up to the world as the special lovers of goodness and honor and the representatives of virtue and purity. Can it be possible that our government has sunk so low that it cannot get along without an Anthony Comstock?

We cannot doubt that the Society for the Suppression of Vice is composed of many men who are sincere in their desire to promote virtue and morality in our city and country and that they wish to use all just and lawful means to discourage and lessen impurity and immorality, especially in connection with the young and inexperienced, but it is hard for us to understand how a good and justice-loving class of men can ever be in favor of placing authority in the hands of such a man as Anthony Comstock who has proved himself capable of resorting to the most dishonorable and villainous modes of conduct for the purpose of carrying out his nefarious designs, and who does not hesitate to do what no honorable man could possibly be guilty of rather than fail in bringing unsuspecting and well-meaning persons to trouble and disgrace.

In the Young Men's Christian Association, we are ready to grant, are numbered many persons of good motives and good intentions who could not be induced, personally, to visit injustice, cruelty, and unhappiness upon one of their unfortunate fellow-creatures, and it has become a marvel to us how any considerable number of persons of this description can find it in their hearts to accept Anthony Comstock for a leader, or that they can for a moment fellowship with him, or regard him as an agent, a representative, or a servant. One of two conclusions is inevitable, that they are ignorant and easily imposed upon by a designing, hypocritical knave, or they themselves are not as honorable, high-minded, just men as they would have the world believe them to be. We often mentally inquire within ourselves, "Can it be possible that such men of character as Phelps, Dodge, Colgate, Claflin, Jessup, Jaffrey, and many others of that ilk, do absolutely know what kind of a man their pet Anthony Comstock is, and that he is in reality one of the vilest and wickedest men that walks the streets of New York?"

What can be meaner and more detestable in a human being than to deliberately set one's self to to work to effect by hypocrisy, duplicity, trickery, decoy letters and all that sort of machinery, the downfall, the imprisonment and ruin financially, socially, and physically of an unsuspecting fellow-being? To see that Comstock has done this over and over again it is only necessary to read the truthful reports of his doings. Intrigue, duplicity and cunning seem to be the elements in which the man most delights to dwell. Indeed, Christianity must be reduced to a very low estate if it finds such champions necessary to sustain its honor and its power. Any cause in the world must suffer by having such leaders and such agents to represent it.

We have given but a moiety of the cases which exhibit Comstock's meanness and hard-hearted cruelty. He boasts of having brought two hundred and forty-four persons to prison. We have had room in this issue to mention but a small number of his victims, but they may be regarded as representative cases and accepted as fair samples of the entire lot.

We are ready to admit he has done some good; that he has brought to merited retribution some of the vilest of the vile who richly deserved the most condign punishment, and for this he must be accorded the credit that is justly due him. Probably half a dozen would exhaust the principal cases of this class; the remaining two hundred and forty are chiefly unfortunate persons who became victims to his cunning trickery and fell easily into the traps he set for them. Without the slightest compunction or pity has he not only brought the deepest trouble on men who never moved their fingers to injure him, but he has filled the hearts of mothers, of wives, of sisters and daughters with the most poignant sorrow in consequence of the disgrace and deep trouble needlessly thrust upon them. The ruin and extreme unhappiness that have thus been brought upon hundreds of good people, with the utter destruction of the most sacred rights and personal liberties, are a thousand times worse than all the obscene books and pictures that have ever been published. Theft, highway robbery, and even manslaughter under certain circumstances, are far less reprehensible than such merciless, heartless villainy as under consideration.

Since we have been made acquainted with what are known as the Comstock cases, and have listened to the pitiful narratives of the deep trouble and unhappiness that this man has willfully and purposely brought upon the families of men whose ruin he has accomplished, our liveliest pity for them has been excited, and our deepest indignation towards the base man who accomplished all this destruction of happiness. Life with all its toils, disappointments, and struggles, which can hardly be avoided, is bad enough in all conscience, without a man salaried by the Government and by religious societies to inflict worse than the torments of hell upon as good, as deserving, as faultless persons as are usually met in the walks of life. We have been led to exclaim in view of all this, "If Christianity requires this, if the doctrines of Jesus Christ make this state of things necessary, the less the world has of them the better!" Better to have men without creeds and dogmas than to drag them down to the very lowest depths of wretchedness and ruin.

In looking over the hundreds of Comstock cases which have brought such bitter woe upon still larger numbers of families, it is probably a fair estimate that this man Anthony Comstock, in his vile personal efforts to execute the laws passed by the American Congress, has directly and indirectly caused the death of not less than twenty persons, and despoiled people of their hard-earned property and injured their business to the amount of not less than $500,000!

Shall this villainy be continued indefinitely? Will our government continue these wrongs? Will Congressmen by their votes perpetuate these outrages? Will the Christian Church acquiesce in these damnable wrongs and with its immense power and influence continue to encourage, to aid and abet these high-handed crimes and iniquities? We truly hope not.

Ourselves.

It is our fortune, good of bad, to arrive at different conclusions upon theological questions from many thousands of our fellow-countrymen; but we believe we are as honest as they are and that we have, under our national Constitution, the same right to enjoy our views upon religious subjects that our neighbors and friends have to enjoy theirs. Neither they nor we can know positively that one is altogether in the right or that the other is altogether in the wrong; but we have, at all events, equal liberty to embrace that which to us seems the truth and to maintain the same in peace and security.

We are fully sensible that we are on the unpopular side, and that the large proportion of those by whom we are surrounded look upon us as lost to all that is moral, virtuous, and true. We, of course, cannot admit the truth of their opinion, and hold that we have as high a regard for the good and the true as our most zealous Christian friends. We have often said it requires more honesty and bravery to declare one's self an Infidel than it does to be a Christian. It is easier to float along with the current than to stem it; and it is only because we are firmly convinced that we are right in our convictions that we adhere to them. We certainly are not seeking popularity, for if we were, we would be likely to join the great band of Jesus and train in the vast Church battalions. In that course we should find far more friends and please the fashionable and respectable Mrs. Grundy far better than we do now. But we cannot throw away our convictions; we cannot pretend to believe what we cannot honestly accept. We had rather be unpopular than to feel that we are untrue to our convictions. We had rather have the truth with a small minority than be an advocate of error with a large majority.

We are not a Christian because we cannot believe the system is founded in truth. We find by studying the history of the past that every dogma, rite, and sacrament, every point of belief, and even the story of its origin and of the miraculous conception and birth of its founder were in existence and strongly believed in, long before Christianity was heard of in the world. Many of these superstitions and traditions formed the basis of pagan systems of religion, at least a thousand years before the beginning of our era. Realizing this to be true, we cannot admit that Christianity is original or true, or that Jesus was the first demi-god said to have been begotten by God upon the person of a young Virgin. The fable of virgin and child was cherished in many ancient nations from three to five thousand years ago. It seems far more consistent to us that this legend or superstition or whatever it may be called, was borrowed from those old pagan nations from whom all the other Christian dogmas and notions were borrowed than that the Creator of the Universe was reduced to the necessity of adopting the mythical dreams of the old pagans in order to establish a system of salvation for his creatures in this world.

In the position we occupy, though largely in the minority, we have the companionship of many good men, who are living at the present time, and who have lived in the past. Benjamin Franklin and George Washington did not believe that Jesus Christ came into the world without a natural father, that he was begotten by a ghost upon a young Jewish maiden. They did not believe in the divinity of that individual in any other sense than that every man and woman is divine. The Rev. Doctors Abercrombie and Wilson who were well acquainted with Washington's views, pronounced him a Deist. (See "Christianity and Infidelity," pp. 11, 25, & 86.)

Thomas Jefferson and Abraham Lincoln were not only unbelievers in the divinity of the Christian system of religion, but they were unbelievers in each and every one of its dogmas and to each of its claims to priority or originality. Thus it may be seen that we have very honorable precedents for that which we accept as truth. Those were all good men and were friends to their country and to the entire human race. They favored individual liberty and maintained the rights of conscience and that every man has the right to worship God as he pleases and to accept such views as to him seem true. This is all we claim for ourselves, and this we are ready to grant to others. May not every shade of theological and religious opinion have the same amount of liberality? Should any of us feel to oppress and crush the other because he cannot reach the same conclusions that we have reached? Is it any better for the large majority to try to stamp out those who differ from them because they are comparatively few in numbers? It is not more reprehensible for the strong to oppress the weak than for those of equal strength to oppose each other! Let us all learn to be really charitable one towards another and feel as tolerant towards those who differ from us as towards those who agree with us.

In the midst of the opprobrium that many attempt to heap upon us it does much to reconcile us to the odium connected with our belief to know that we have the approbation of good and distinguished men. If it will not appear vain in us let us give again the following letter which we received from James Parton, Esq., so favorably known as a historian and author:

NEWBURYPORT, MASS., Dec. 19, 1877.

D. M. BENNETT, My Dear Sir: I have read with care your pamphlet entitled "An Open Letter to Jesus Christ," and though I would not treat such a subject in that manner, I cannot hesitate to express my conviction that you were within your right, as an American citizen, in writing and publishing it. I know how painful it must be to millions of amiable people to have their religious system so ridiculed; but I am also sure that there are certain hymns and other writings, issued by and for religious persons, which give me as acute misery as anything in your pamphlet can give them. There is an individual called Hammond, who publishes a pious song-book full of the grossest superstition, and, as I think, most hostile to human happiness and virtue. Nevertheless, I think he is within his right in selling it. Moody and Sankey enjoy a clear revenue of over fifty thousand dollars a year from copyright on their books; which, I think, do great harm, and dishonor this country and this age. But I would fight for their right to publish them, and willingly concede that, in publishing them, they mean to do good to others as well as to themselves.

These things are matters of opinion, and there can be no safe and tranquil progress in human affairs unless opinion is free. Respectfully yours, JAMES PARTON.

The Rev. O. B. Frothingham, in some allusions to our arrest in his discourse on the 2d of December last, made the following kind mention of our case:

"The Church has recently laid its arbitrary hand upon a pure, sincere, aged editor, for sending blasphemous publications through the mail. Who in this age of knowledge shall decide what is blasphemous in Liberal literature and what is obscene in scientific publications? The victim of the Church this time is a conscientious, honest man of superior talent and purity of thought and who is struggling hard to elevate the race to a higher knowledge and nobler manhood and a purer womanhood. The honest effort of his life is to free humanity from the bane of ignorance, the scourge of superstition and the lash of the priesthood."

We profoundly thank Mr. Frothingham for his good opinion of us. It is worth the labor of a lifetime to gain such approbation. We shall aim to be worthy of the favorable appreciation of so excellent, learned and worthy a man. The approbation of one or two such men we value more highly than the good or ill will of thousands of such men as Anthony Comstock.

Thanks to Friends.

To those kind friends who have furthered the object we have in view—the petitioning of Congress for the repeal of certain oppressive statutes, enacted March 3, 1873,—we tender our most fervent and heartfelt thanks. We are not unconscious of the labor and effort they have bestowed upon this object, and we are grateful for the aid they have rendered in a good cause.

The petitions, well-signed, are now pouring in upon us in large numbers. Many of them contain hundreds of signature; one sent in by W. F. Bradley, of Mt. Pleasant, Pa., with 420 signatures, one with from A. Minski, of Milwaukee, Wis., with 815 names, one from H. W. Mercer, Winterset, Iowa, 1021 names, one from D. Jenkins, Hannibal, Mo., with hundreds of names, not counted, besides many others with very respectable numbers of signers. In the aggregate, many thousands of names of peaceful, intelligent, earnest, law-abiding citizens will be presented to Congress, asking the repeal or modification of those oppressive laws alluded to, and we trust the effect produced by these numerous petitions will be salutary and favorable. We are assured by many friends who have written us that large numbers of names could have been obtained in addition had not the roads been so bad that traveling was almost out of the question. The petitions will be forwarded to Washington very soon.

Not Vindictive.

It may possibly be thought that we are governed by a spirit of vindictiveness towards Anthony Comstock because he unjustly arrested and attempted to disgrace us, but such is by no means the case. If he should show the slightest compunction of conscience, and indicate that he thought he had acted wrongly towards us, we could forgive him as readily as we would a kitten for scratching us; but we regard him as an unscrupulous, dangerous man, who takes a morbid pleasure in sending persons to prison. We believe he is doing far more harm than good; that he is living and flourishing by the misfortune he brings upon others. When we see that he is sustained by the highest authorities in our Government, and that those who are considered great and good among us support him and apologize for his hard-hearted and unjust proceedings; when we are convinced that he is clothed with a power most dangerous to the liberties, the property, and the lives of American citizens—a power not given nor recognized by the national Constitution, and in direct opposition to every principle of right and justice—and all this that he may put money in his pocket and that he may add to his fame and glory by oppressing the weak and defenseless, we have deemed it time that some one dared to speak out and make some feeble effort to stem this flood of wrong which is sweeping over our land, bearing many to wretchedness, ruin, and death. We deem it time that the public were made acquainted with the revolting outrages that have taken place and are daily taking place in the name of justice, morality, and virtue. We wish to call attention to the great wrongs that are being perpetrated upon excellent men and women in the name of law and order. It is truly an appalling state of things, and cannot be known and understood too thoroughly. We would that the law-makers of our country could realize the effects of what they have done, and view the ruined homes and the broken hearts that have been caused by the worse than inquisitorial rule they have established.

We are not unconscious of the personal danger attendant upon the steps we are taking; we are not unmindful of the immense power we are opposing; we can judge of the intense ire and malignity that will be stirred up against us, but we are positive we are in the right, that our duty lies in this direction, and we will not fear to pursue it; though we may lose our personal liberty and be immured in a prison, though we may be stripped of the very little property we possess, and though our life may be the forfeit of the performance of this imperative duty, we will not flinch from it. Like one upon the watch-towers of liberty, we will cry out with a loud voice and warn our fellow-citizens of the danger which besets them and the glorious privilges handed down to us by our fathers.

We would not knowingly speak a word of falsehood; we would not willingly bear false witness. We have earnestly labored to gather the facts and to present them to the people of this land. It is possible some trivial errors have been made, but they have not been intentional. The statements made in this sheet are, unfortunately, too true, and we call upon the authorities of our city, our State, and of the nation to look into them, to investigate them, and be satisfied of their truth.

If Congress will send an investigating committee here with the power to send for persons and papers, we guarantee that the truth of the statements herein made can be established to their satisfaction and that enormities in the same line not here mentioned, can be brought to light. Our whole object is to perform a solemn duty we feel is resting upon us.

Comstock's Latest Exploits.

In the intervals between attending to the mails of the United States, the watching what everybody is sending through them, the obeying of the orders of the Postmaster-General, the carrying out of the instructions of his society for the suppression of vice, and the behests of the Y. M. C. A., Anthony Comstock has recently found leisure to visit Connecticut and aid the good pious temperance folks there to cope with the wicked class of sinners who sometimes sell a glass of beer or a drink of whiskey. The scene of operations has been Stamford and New Canaan. To the latter place he sent his beautiful, immaculate accomplice and tool, Joseph Britton, alias Cohen, Levy, Andrews, and as many more aliases as may be desired, and afterwards went himself:

The object of Britton's visit was to play the spy and buy liquor of as many persons as possible, and then turn informer and have them arrested. He is always faithful to carry out the instructions of his chief. He put up at a hotel in New Canaan, drank freely, hired a horse and carriage, visited prostitutes and committed other acts not necessary to mention, and was then prepared to appear as a witness against persons in the village of whom he had purchased liquor, which he did with willing alacrity. But he had also made himself amenable to the law. He had played his game almost too well. He had been riotous, he had become intoxicated, he had visited lewd characters, he had committed conspiracy, had hired a horse and carriage and driven twice as far as he had reported, and other acts not quite compatible with the character of a first-class gentleman.

For his misdeeds he was arrested and was in the care of an officer when his chief saw his danger and valorously came to his rescue. Comstock drew a pistol from his pocket, flourished it over his head with the air of a perfect desperado, and shouted in a loud voice, "I am an officer of the United States; this young man is in my charge and I will shoot the first man dead who attempts to take him from my custody!" He then took his bosom friend from the officer and went to the depot. Comstock is no officer of the United States, but simply a spy and informer, and he committed a most flagrant outrage in forcibly taking his accomplice from the hands of an officer, for which he deserves appropriate punishment. When Mr. G. Birdsall, hotel-keeper in the village, learned of the high-handed proceedings of Comstock, he took a few friends to the depot and entered the car where the redoubtable Anthony and his virtuous accomplice were seated. He said in firm tones, "I wish that young man to accompany me back, and if you draw your pistol or make any demonstration, you will be murdered on the spot." Comstock, like a craven, deemed discretion the better part of valor, and did not brandish his pistol any more. Britton was taken back and placed under bonds to appear at trial on Wednesday the 16th. Comstock probably induced his pious friends to go on his bond. As we go to press, the result of Britton's trial has just been learned. He was found guilty and fined, but we do not know whether Comstock has been arrested for interfering with a State officer in the discharge of his duty or not. His acting as a sneak, spy, and informer does not justify his going into another State and attempting to take, by force and without a particle of legality, a culprit from the hands of an officer. That matter should be tested.

In giving his evidence as a witness, Britton is reported to having sworn that he was a member of the Willett Street Methodist Church, and he admitted that he was a married man. The officer who took his testimony, holding up the memoranda he had made, glanced over it and remarked sarcastically: "That is a pretty record indeed for a Christian—drunkenness, rioting, adultery, etc. How is that for Christian conduct?" It is to be hoped no church in this city has sunk so low as to be disgraced with such a despicable member.

Continued from page 39.

preference to anybody's else, or to all others' combined"—or words to that effect.

Gen. Bissell showed Mr. Jones about two yards of statement from Comstock in reference to Jones' business, but when the latter asked to read it, he was denied the privilege. When he desired that it might be read to him, he was again positively refused. When he asked to know what statements and charges it contained, that he might be able to rebut them, even this request was denied him, and Mr. Jones was strongly reminded of the old Spanish Inquisition, where a poor victim was arraigned without knowing who was his accuser or with what offense he was charged. There certainly is a similarity.

Mr. Jones returned to this city with a heavy heart, and, upon arriving here, proceeded to the office of the almighty Anthony Comstock, who not only rules the entire country, the U. S. Court, the N. Y. Postmaster and officials, publishers, druggists, but even the Postmaster-General himself and his attorney,

He thus addressed himself to his Majesty: "Mr. Comstock, you have injured me to the extent of at least $16,000. You have broken up my business. You have stopped my mail. You have taken away my goods and damaged me to a much greater extent than you can ever repair. You have very unnecessarily and very unjustly caused me not only a very heavy loss of property but a great amount of trouble! Now are you not satisfied? The Judge of the Court before whom I was arraigned has pronounced my business legitimate, everybody who knows me will give me a good name, the hundreds of thousands of persons I have supplied with goods are satisfied with what they obtained of me—nobody has any complaint to make of me but yourself. Can you not let up your heavy hand and let me have my mail matter again and go on with my business, saying to the Postmaster-General that you were mistaken as to the character of my business?" "No," said his Imperial Highness, "I have pronounced you a fraud, and I shall stick to it. You sell a class of goods that are of no benefit to those who purchase them, and you are a swindler. You shall not resume your business again, and if you attempt it I will come down upon you again." In reference to Judge Lowell, Comstock spoke contemptuously and averred that he—Comstock—had not had a fair show in Boston, and that if he had had the case before Judge Benedict in this city, he—Jones—would not have got off in the way he did.

Thus, the man who represents all the morality, all the virtue, all the decency, all the religion in the country, was as obdurate, and as unimpressible as a stone. He had set out to crush Mr. Jones, and he was still determined to do it. Mr. Jones was compelled to return to his home and ruined business and to meditate upon the terrible rule of the one-man power with which the country is cursed. The eleven hundred registered letters were returned to the writers, and what he can do to mend the ruin which was thus maliciously thrust upon him is an unsolved problem with Mr. Jones as with many others.

CASE OF E. H. HEYWOOD.

This gentleman is the publisher of a paper called the Word, at Princeton, Mass. He also publishes a few pamphlets, some upon finance, some upon interest, some upon social philosophy. He is a highly moral man, a gentleman of education and culture, a graduate of Brown University, and one who is highly esteemed by his numerous friends. His views upon marriage, divorce, and kindred subjects differ in many respects from those generally held, but he is entirely honest in his views, and he has the honesty to publish his advanced ideas fearlessly to the world. He has written a pamphlet upon the social question, called "Cupid's Yokes," of which he has sold twenty thousand copies. It is written ably and in unexceptionable language, but as it deals with subjects that are tabooed by Mrs. Grundy & Co., Mr. Comstock made up his mind that Mr. Heywood must be crushed out and sent to prison. He sent a decoy letter from Squan Village, N. J., under the assumed name of E. Edgewell, for a copy each of "Cupid's Yokes," and Trall's "Sexual Physiology," upon the receipt of which he coarsely arrested Mr. Heywood, while in attendance and presiding at a convention in Boston, and hurried him off without allowing him to communicate with his wife or his brother who were in the same building.

It is a noticeable fact in connection with this case, that "Cupid's Yokes" has been many years before the public and no one has ever dreamed that it was obscene. Dr. Trall's "Sexual Physiology" has been extensively sold for fifteen years, passing through twenty-seven editions. It ranks as high in character as any work on physiology, and has been declared mailable by an authority no less high than Postmaster-General Key himself. Still, Anthony Comstock declares that neither that nor any other work on physiology shall be carried through the mails, and the question is still to be settled whether Anthony Comstock's word shall outweigh and control all the rest of the country put together.

Mr. Heywood has brought a suit for damages against Comstock, and by that means has succeeded in taking his case from the District Court into the Circuit Court from whence an appeal is possible, and having the power to refer the whole question of the constitutionality of the law and the terrible rule of Comstock to the Supreme Court of the United States at Washington. May the side of right and justice win!

How the Law is Abused.

That the U. S. Postal law enacted for the ostensible purpose of preventing the circulation of obscene literature may be employed for persecuting independent writers upon matters which deeply concern the public is sufficiently illustrated in three prominent cases: beginning at home, in our own case, wherein we have been put to much trouble and expense because of our outspoken opposition to the superstitions of popular theology; in Mr. E. H. Heywood's, wherein this gentleman was arrested because he spoke, according to the opinion of the executor of the law, too plainly regarding some of our social evils; in the case of Dr. Foote, whose offense (for which he was heavily fined,) was that he presented valuable physiological knowledge in a clear and available form for the instruction of the masses. The conservative schools of thought are ever ready to seize any instrument which will effectually overwhelm their opponents, and this postal law, with the indiscriminating agent for its enforcement, has been found exactly suited to their purpose. Success against us would have led them step by step to the exclusion of the works of Darwin, Spencer, and Huxley from the mails; success against Heywood would end eventually in strangling the efforts of the social science associations which are recommending innovations; success against Foote has already emboldened Mr. Comstock to say, according to Mr. Jones of Ashland, Mass., that no physiological works shall be allowed to go through the mails! Judge Benedict himself, in charging the jury in Dr. Foote's case, said that it was not necessary that medical works should be sent through the mails! In Mr. Comstock's report for 1875 (marked "confidential" and "burn after reading,") he boasts of having arrested some thirty physicians during that year, whose works were not regarded as scientific. Precisely whom he regards as authority in such matters was indicated in a remark made to us when he was forcibly taking us from our sanctum to Commissioner Shields to be placed under bonds. We expressed our approval of Dr. Foote's publications, whereupon he replied that they were not approved by "the profession." The "profession" whom Mr. Comstock relies upon is, for the credit of the medical profession-at-large be it said, but a small part of it; men of narrow views, some of whom would have no popular works on physiology issued at all. It is a remarkable fact which may be mentioned in this connection that, with the exception of a work by Prof. Burt Wilder, all our popular physiologies, which treat of all the organs and functions of our wonderfully organized bodies, are from the pens of new-school men. Perhaps Prof. Wilder classes himself with the new school; we make the exception, not knowing how he is classed. One thing is certain, that he is not well liked by many old school men for having written the work referred to. The bitter opposition of the old school to new schools of medicine is generally known and somewhat understood. How uncompromising it is has been illustrated in innumerable instances, such as the disfellowship of the late Dr. A. K. Gardner for having met an alleged Homeopathic practitioner at the bedside of the sick, although the Homeopath received his degree from the University of the City of New York, a well-known Allopathic institution. The reading out of Dr. Bliss of Washington for having consulted with a Homeopathic practitioner when Vice-President Colfax was seriously ill; the expulsion of eight members from the "regular" society of Massachusetts for practicing Homeopathy; the exclusion of the name of Dr. Frederick William Holcomb from the "regular" medical directory because he added to his name his specialty—the eye and ear! This medical register, by the way, is a "close communion" affair, for it excludes all but the old school "faithful," and all whose names do not appear in its pages are called by them and by a large number of conservative druggists, "irregular." No matter what may be the qualifications of an Eclectic or a Homeopathic physician, his name cannot be admitted, and he must be considered by those who consult this book as an "irregular," or, in common parlance, a quack! Prof. R. A. Gunn, a reputable physician and good citizen, a graduate of the Buffalo University, a reputable old-school college, is given to understand that his "certificates of study," if presented by a student, will not be received by at least one of the old-school universities.

With such intolerance on the part of the conservative school of medicine, how dangerous is such a postal law as that under consideration, when its execution is delegated to one who is ready to make a victim of every one towards whom its bigoted index-finger is pointed!

Foote arrested, put to great expense in his defense, and heavily fined; Trall's "Sexual Physiology" indicted; Joel Shew's work on Midwifery, published by S. R. Wells & Co., a well-known and reputable house, commended to the attention of the "Society for the Suppression of Vice" (whose agent Mr. Comstock is) by the Sanitarian, the organ of the Medico-Legal Society, which admits no so-called "irregulars" to membership. [See the Sanitarian, an organ of the Medico-Legal Society, for January, 1878, page 47.]

With one blue theological leg and another straight-laced medical leg to walk forth, carrying the pompous and well-fed body of conservatism generally, and, finally, topped off with the indiscriminating head of Mr. Anthony Comstock, what cannot this statute accomplish in stamping out the liberties of the American people? Can we really tolerate this newly-invented, despotic monster, even if it can be shown that it has accomplished in some instances work which meets the approval of the high-minded citizen? Cannot all such work, deserving serious attention, be safely left for our State courts, and leave the mails free from espionage?

A Note of Warning.

MR. EDITOR: In the beginning of this wave of social and political agitation in regard to your arrest and others involved in the same and analagous charges by A. Comstock as agent for the Government, I wish to present, through your excellent, fearless, and truth-seeking sheet, some of my carefully matured thoughts on the subject. It is a subject of far-reaching consequences, and should be fairly and candidly considered. It is doubtless a wise and beneficient policy of the States to protect the youth of the nation, while animal passions are vigorous, and in many cases in the ascendant, against being goaded into frenzy and unbridled licentiousness by positively obscene and immoral pictures, books, pamphlets, etc., got up expressly by their authors to cater to and awake into destructive activity the passions of those who for want of proper instruction on this most important department of our common humanity fall an easy prey to their seductive influences. How do we expect to maintain in their purity the freedom of speech, of the press, and of conscience, for which our noble sires poured out their blood and treasure without stint? By an enlightened and cultured people. This is the only way to save us from the night and gloom that has buried other republics in oblivion's dark waters. And how shall the people be saved from passion's lurid fires but by enlightenment? And how shall they be enlightened when books that have cost a life-time of patient research and untiring study are tabooed and forbidden the people? Shall philanthropists, scholars, scientists, professors in colleges, preachers of the Gospel of Jesus, whose heads are white with frosts of many winters and many long years of anxious study how best to alleviate the ills and lift the burden from the souls of the wretched, hungry, and starving poor of our common brotherhood and sisterhood, who have embodied their best and most sacred thoughts in chaste, plain and well-chosen language, and desire, perhaps as their last and best gift to the race, to publish them in a chaste and cheap form, that all may treasure them as priceless souvenirs of their self-sacrificing benefactors—I say, shall they be forbidden to partake of this rich fruit of life's fair tree by the hand of the Government?—that Government which is supposed to foster every commendable means to enlighten, elevate, and develop its citizens? Can this great nation afford to lend its legal sanction to such suicidal means? Extend this principle of mail espionage to the political arena, and see where it will lead. Any reasoning that establishes the right of Congress to carry out the law as in Sec. 3,893 will also prove the right in Congress to prohibit any other pamphlet, paper, or book issued by the party not in power. Should any system of religion become the dominating power in the Government, all publications inimical to its faith could be forbidden the mails under the pretext of protecting the public morals, on the ground of a sincere belief that all other religions are wrong and their heresies cannot be tolerated. Does it require much of a stretch of the imagination to see the rack, thumb-screw, gibbet, block, and guillotine looming up in the distance, and the Dark Ages rolling back again? "Righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people." What is righteousness but the act of doing right? And what sin is greater than government not dealing righteously and justly by the people? We have, I am proud to say, many noble, talented, earnest, and sincere philanthropists in Congress, who, if they will take time to look this matter square in the face, will put forth their strongest efforts to wipe these unjust laws from the statute book, or so modify the provisions of the law and define the terms "lewd, obscene, and blasphemous," that the innocent may not suffer with the guilty.

Besides, while the government is struggling to pay off its public debt, and retrenchment of public expense is loudly clamored for, do the people need a mail spy whose services cost the people from four to six thousand dollars yearly? Do they need, especially, one who has not the manhood to secure such works as he would desire to make out a case against without writing false and decoy letters, assuring the parties of his full sympathy with them in their labors, and ordering through the mails and taking from the mails—himself violating the law under which he proposes to arrest and condemn others? Is not the partaker as bad as the thief? If government is really in need of such an officer let one be appointed to fill his place worthy of the people he represents.

If Comstock is seeking to maintain the majesty of the law, why not arrest Wood & Holbrook, publishers of Dr. Trall's "Sexual Physiology," and many other responsible firms who have been engaged in selling this and other invaluable works upon the same subject for many years? Why not arrest them? or is he so intolerably ignorant that he does not know of their circulation by hundreds of thousands? Dr. Trall's elaborate work has passed through twenty-seven editions, and is now in the hands of the cultured and scientific, farmers and mechanics, professors of religion and no religion, and of every grade of people throughout our goodly land. And what of Dr. Clark's "MarriageGuide," Dr. Knowlton's "Fruits of Philosophy," Mrs. Duffey's "Relation of the Sexes," H. C. Wright's "Empire of the Mother over the Destiny of the Race," and many other smaller and cheaper works on the same exalted themes, adapted to the wants and purses of the poor? I have no doubt if the judges before whom Comstock's cases are to be tried will carefully and thoroughly read the above-named works they will find no cause of action. I am reluctant to believe that after full examination of those authors they will soil their judicial ermine by rendering judgment of obscenity against them. And I most sincerely hope the President of the United States and Members of Congress will find time to read and carefully digest the animus and grand philosophy of these works while the subject is agitating the nation, feeling fully convinced that after doing this they will not only introduce them to their sons and daughters but recommend them to the sons and daughters of this Republic. Are young men and women who are now studying anatomy and physiology in medical schools handling works of obscenity? Do we not all know that in studying the human organism we are very much aided by appropriate drawings and illustrations? And is the instrument of a thousand strings—the wonderful temple in which we domicile for so short a period as human life—so obscene and vulgar that we must not illustrate its wondrous labyrinths, its pillars, its arches, its rivers and fountains of life, its electric and magnetic wires and batteries, by the proper and intelligent use of which the race may be elevated above its present level in one generation more than in any ten generations preceding? And shall Congress strike this light from our hands, lighted and presented to us after long years of wearisome study, care, and experiment?

Physiology defines the function of brain, nerve, organ, tissue, and their sympathies and vicarious offices. Can we predicate functional results until we understand it? And can we understand it, will the people try to understand it, if it is tabooed by the highest authority in the land? Yes; I affirm, they will. The leaven already hidden in the measure of meal will not cease its work until it be leavened. As the blood of martyrs was the seed of the Church, so the fines and imprisonment of some better and nobler men than their persecutors will lift the torch on high that all may enjoy its light. As well attempt to blot the sun from the heavens, or stop the roar of Niagara's turbid waters, or force its sinuous waves back upon the lakes, as to try to blot out the love of science and truth and their grand practical results.

Mark this prediction! There will be a greater demand for these and similar works during the next ten years than ever has been known. The world needs them and will have them. Prohibit their circulation by mail and express, and they will be carried in trunkfuls and scattered like leaves of autumn from Maine to California.

Are not time, money, science, and skill employed to develop and perfect all kinds of stock, seeds, and fruits? This is well, and as it should be. But must no effort be put forth to improve, develop, and exalt men, women, and children in harmony with the fixed and beneficent laws of their nature? And if so, shall one man's hand brush it aside? But this hand hides a stiletto whose thrusts shall penetrate the heart of all whose theology does not have the ring of the aggressive party. Here's the rub. Liberals, Spiritualists, Freethinkers, Reformers, scientists, lovers of truth, justice, and honor, awake! arouse! Make common cause in this struggle! United we stand; divided we fall. Cringing submission only arouses insolence in an ungenerous foe. The Church will jubilantly drive the wedge to open the way as a stepping-stone to place and power in the Government. Then down with heretics, Infidels, and blasphemers! Then will dawn on a patient, insulted, and oppressed people another St. Bartholomew's Day. This will be the day of wrath and terror if the Church and Government provoke it.

Tender-handed stroke a nettle,
And it stings you for your pains;
But grasp it like a man of mettle,
And it soft as silk remains.
Thus it is with vulgar natures;
Treat them kindly, they rebel,
But be harsh as nutmeg-graters
And the rogues obey your will.

Mungerville, Mich., Dec. 20, 1877. D. HIGBIE, M. D.

The Artistic Point of View.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I have just read the article in the Boston Index upon what is called the "Obscenity Legislation." I fear it may influence you to change your position in regard to the necessity of withdrawing that legislation. I venture to send you some suggestions why it should not, from an artist's point of view.

There is, in the first place, an acknowledged moral evil to be dealt with. All good men and women deplore the existence of real obscenity, and of a class of publications and venders of publications who seek to make gain of debauching the public imagination and morals, and especially of the young. The real remedy for this it is not my business to point out now. But so great is our abomination of this filthy and hateful thing, that it becomes infinitely easy to excite the public prejudice and hostility against anything whatever which can be ignorantly branded and confounded with the real offense. It is this blind severity of public opinion against one kind of thing, which constitutes the very danger of a persecuting and oppressive crusade against other and wholly different, even directly opposite things, which may be imagined, from some superficial resemblance, to be part and parcel of it. In this lies the danger. There can in fact be no legal accurate distinction between these things—it depends upon the person and the point of view. There is no line so delicate, varying and difficult to be drawn as that between "a real vulgarity of expression," and that audacity of purity and genius, which, soaring above all thought of vulgarity, withdraws the veil of concealment worn by common-place decency, and lays bare the secrets of Nature and of truth for some great and sufficiently holy and artistic purpose. That purpose may be a moral rigor against the very sins in question, as in the Bible and other religious books; an inspired literary or artistic fidelity to Nature, as with all great poets and artists; an intellectual research into the hidden truth of things, for truth's sake, as with physiologists and other men of science; or, in fine, a fanatical zeal in behalf of purity itself, or other social benefits to be obtained, as in the case of social reformers, Malthusians and others.

If this subtle line must be drawn and established by law, under the severest penalties of imprisonment at hard labor, confiscations, immense and ruinous fines, search-warrants, an organized corps and system of paid Government spies, and all the paraphernalia of a milder kind of Inquisition, reëstablished in this modern and progressive age, and on American soil, and brought to bear mercilessly upon whosoever thoughtlessly, or for any insufficient or sufficial purpose, oversteps that subtle and impalpable line, then, in God's name, let us have some competent tribunal to fix cautiously and wisely the limits of religious, literary, artistic, scientific and reformatory freedom. Let not the very flower of the liberties we have achieved be surrepttiously filched away from us by legislation upon a subject where any accurate definition is from the very nature of the case impossible, and just as likely to bear hard upon the innocent as the guilty.

Better a thousand times, if all these impalpable questions of propriety of utterance are to become, in this freest age and freest country of the world, matters for some sort of criminal tribunals; better a thousand times reëstablish a modified censorship of the press to accompany and soften the horrors of the new Inquisition. We ought, at least, to have the protection of knowing beforehand whether what we have written and desire to publish will be tolerated, or whether it will incur the penalties of the law, and consign us to a dungeon. We ought, at least, to have the benefit of a series of warnings, such as the most despotic governments give to the publishers of obnoxious political matters. We should have, indeed, some sort of special tribunal, for the trial of such questions—if they must be tried, instead of intrusting them, as all civilized countries have hitherto done, to the good sense of the community—a tribunal most carefully constituted of the highest experts in literature, science, art, morals and reform. The very worst contrivance for the trial of such issues, will be the trial by jury. To submit the highest inspirations of genius, and the most daring investigations of science, and the boldest speculations and tentatives of social reform to the blundering average opinion, the real vulgarity of common ignorance and prejudice, would be the one thing needed to extinguish genius, to trammel scientific investigation, and clog the wheels of the progress of the world.

Several great questions are now agitating the minds of men: for example, whether moral results are best attained by legal repressions or by merely moral agencies—as in the temperance movement; whether devices of science and art for limiting the number of progeny are moral and expedient or immoral and inexpedient; whether more familiarity with the processes of nature, in respect to generation especially, debauches the young mind or purifies it, etc. Of all these and such questions, there is a progressive and a retrogressive side. Upon all these questions the Comstockian legislation has taken a snap judgment in behalf of the conservative and repressive side. Of course, that cannot be the end of it. Of course, a reaction will take place, on the side of progression, and the enlargement of liberty. The long line of battles which were fought in past ages on the field of religious and that of political freedom are now to be renewed on the social and artistic fields. The new crusade for liberty will have its martyrs; and it is to be expected that some of those who should be its staunchest defenders will show a genius for getting themselves planted on the wrong side, as seems to me unfortunately to be the case with our friends on the Index.

This great subject is not yet even plainly opened to the public. Artists, men of science, and reformers, are, as yet, scarcely aware of the existence, much less of the reach, of the new legislation. It constitutes a real and formidable danger, for every one of them, or for some among them. There has been always, for example, a sharp conflict, literary and moralistic, over the question of The Nude in art. All bold art-instincts have been in favor of it. Real art is impossible without it. Puritanism is opposed to it. Forty years ago, when Power's Greek Slave, and other similar works were first exhibited in this country, puritanism took the alarm, and made a staunch fight over the subject; and was, definitively, as it was supposed, defeated. The art-instinct triumphed. Since that time not a murmur has been heard of objection to the usages of high art. At the Centennial Exposition, at Philadelphia, nude nature was exhibited nearly as freely as it would have been in any capital of Europe, and not even an objecting comment was made in any quarter. But at that very time, Mr. Comstock had surreptitiously, that is to say, quietly and unobservedly, obtained at Washington, the passage of laws, nominally relating to obscenity, under which many of the artists and importers of works of art, at the great national exposition, could have been consigned to prison; for beyond question a vulgar-minded jury could have been readily found whose verdict would have declared many of the pictures and much of the statuary there to have been indecent!

When the full force and meaning of this legislation shall really burst on the public mind, not a scientist, an author, or an artist, but will feel himself transported backward into a new Dark Age, breathing the mephitic atmosphere of a new repressive persecution, the very ground of American ideas and freedom gone, slipped away, stolen from under our feet, leaving us in the purlieus of a new Inquisition, and under a new Reign of Terror. There is probably not a full library or cabinet in the land, but contains plates and descriptions that a common jury, urged by a fanatical or malign prosecutor, might not deem indecent; and the law lodges with its chief spy ample powers to institute a search wherever any suspicion exists. I ask for that freedom in which only Art and the Artistic spirit can live, and therefore I pray you to stand by your Petition for the total repeal of a United States censorship at the Custom House and the Post-office, established by the Laws to which it refers.

Yours with respect and gratitude, ARTIST.

Clandestine Publications.

[We reproduce the following from The Index by request.—ED. T. S.]

There are many wrongs among mankind with which law cannot meddle without making them worse. I do not say that the production of a certain kind of books and pictures, which a decent person puts into the fire at sight, is one of these wrongs; but I do say it is only a symptom of a social disease which has baffled law hitherto, and which, while the disease lasts, will continue to baffle it. There is, in my opinion, no remedy but in a better gospel—a gospel of home education, which shall fortify the child against this species of filth before the age of going to school, so that one of these manufacturing scoundrels would no more dare to send one of his circulars to a young scholar than to the mother. This is not saying that there should be no law to punish such outrages upon decency. Till such nuisances cease, they must be punished, though perhaps shooting would be better than boarding at the public expense.

But all that law can do, and it is precious little, can be done by State and municipal laws, if it can be done at all. In this opinion I am exceedingly sorry to differ from my excellent friend, the editor, with whose indignation against the authors and distributors of this clandestine literature and vile art I most fully sympathize. I think Congress has no occasion, and therefore no right, to legislate on the subject, except for the District of Columbia and the Territories. Moreover, I think its act touching the circulation of obscene publications through the mails is an outrageous violation of the Constitution, incapable of any modification which could make it either constitutional or safe. I wish to sign a petition for its total and immediate repeal, even at the risk of being classed with the vilest publicans and sinners, if anybody sees fit so to class me. Let men be punished for obscenity or treason, if they are guilty of either, but not for sending either through the mails. If it has come to that, that these two crimes, or any crimes, cannot be suppressed without invading the sacred privacy of the people's correspondence, we had better abolish the post-office.

If we are to admit as true the statements published in the Journal and quoted in the last Index—though they bear on their face signs of great exaggeration—it is very plain that the class of books and prints used to corrupt schools can be suppressed without meddling with the mails. Any manufactory turning them out by the "ton" cannot be hidden from a vigilant police anywhere. Thousands of citizens of all sects and parties are interested in having the police do its duty, and have the votes to enforce their will. The problem is simply to find the origin of the filth, burn it in the mass, and put the producers where they will produce no more, making as little noise about it as possible. Then will there be none of it going through the mails. The indiscretion of making so much noise and publishing such frightful statements is too palpable. It is a gratuitous advertisement that the scoundrely wares can be had somewhere, and sets the viciously-inclined, the misbegotten, and parentally-neglected to looking for them. If the Society for the Suppression of Vice were acting with good faith and the requisite degree of common sense, they would go quietly to the proper authorities and insist on their doing their duty.

The distinction between the open and the clandestine book and print trade is sufficiently marked. The former is kept clean, not by law, but by public opinion. A reputable bookseller no more thinks of selling one of those vile books which are the only subjects of legal prohibition than he does of walking in the street with nothing but a hat on. And he would not do that even if the law did not forbid it.

The simple truth is that the Society for the Suppression of Vice does not care a pin for the suppression of the clandestine and really vile book trade; but, taking advantage of the great elasticity of the adjective "obscene," they first make a raid upon the clandestine trade as a cover to their attack upon the science of human physiology, in the interest of their peculiar religion. Pretending and loudly bragging to have done the work of the police authorities better than they ever did or could do it themselves, they now come to their real work, which is to suppress science and cultivate ignorance and superstition among the people. The honest and self-sacrificing men and women who are laboring openly, earnestly, and intelligently to prevent social corruption and keep men and women out of a hell-upon-earth by instructing them in the laws of life and health, are pounced upon as if they were pimps and harlots! Do our orthodox friends think such strategy is going to succeed? Do they think ignorance is the best protection of innocence, and that those are safest from precipices who either know nothing about them or are instructed that they are delightful places to jump from? If they wish to save their cause from the greatest disgrace it has ever yet suffered, they will take care to turn the energies of Comstock and his crew out of their present channel. E. W.

MORE COMSTOCKISM.

CASE OF LEANDER FOX & SON.

These gentlemen keep a bookstore on Canal street, near West Broadway. They have been in business many years and bear a first-class reputation. Mr. Fox, the elder, is advanced in years, and is probably as favorably known, so far as his acquaintance extends, as any man in the city. He has maintained an unblemished character all his life. He has, of course, seen his share of the troubles and vicissitudes of life, but it was reserved for Anthony Comstock—or rather he reserved it for himself—to bring this gray-haired old man to sorrow, to prison and disgrace, and to this end he worked assiduously for several years. During all this time he called repeatedly at the store of Fox & Son and inquired for various obscene and indecent books. Mr. Fox invariably told the gentleman that he kept nothing of the kind and never had.

Failing in finding anything there of the sort he is so fond of inquiring after, he resorted to his favorite expedient of writing a decoy letter in a false name and ordering a copy of a work upon which he could arrest him. He accordingly ordered a copy to be sent by mail of Dr. Ashton's "Book of Nature and Marriage Guide" (published and copyrighted by Benj. T. Day), a work which has been sold regularly for twenty years and by nearly every dealer in the city. Upon receipt of the order, young Mr. Fox, not having a copy on hand, went out and bought a copy from the trade and mailed it. The elder Mr. Fox did not see the order or the book. Anthony's angelic nature was, doubtless, filled with joy as his eyes fell upon the work thus received, and, "Now," thought he, "I have the game within my grasp that I have been lying in wait for so long." He lost little time in causing the arrest of father and son for being caught in the trap he had so skillfully set for them, and he had the extreme humanity to cause them to be arrested late on Saturday afternoon in a snow-storm, that they might be unable at that late hour to procure bail and thus have the pleasure of lying in prison over Sunday. This is a favorite game of his and he has played it upon many occasions.

But Mr. Fox, being so well known, was able to procure bail, and to evade the punishment that the Christian Comstock had so cunningly planned for him.

Messrs. Fox & Son employed the distinguished attorney, Wm. A. Beach, to defend them, but Comstock managed to have the case brought on while Mr. Beach was at Albany, and they were thus placed at great disadvantage, and were unable even to procure such witnesses as they should have had. Under the circumstances, it was very little trouble for Comstock to swear both father and son into prison.

The Jury, such as they know how to get up in the U. S. District Court, found them guilty, and sentenced them to prison for a year.

Think for a moment of the sad havoc such an event must have caused in their business, the sorrow and agony it must have created in their families. Think of the sorrow of the wife of the old gentleman, who had sojourned with him through life's trials, to have him cruelly torn from her by such a malicious hand and thrown into prison upon the disgraceful charge of dealing in obscene literature and sending it through the mails. A lady whose husband had been sent to prison in that way said it nearly killed her and that she would much rather see her husband laid in his coffin than dragged off to prison on such a disgraceful charge. Few persons can realize the utter wretchedness and despair which seizes upon sensitive minds under such circumstances.

Fortunately for Mr. Fox, he had a warm friend in Thurlow Weed, who, as soon as he learned that his friends Fox & Son were in prison for selling a book of which many thousands had been previously sold, having great influence with Gen. Grant, succeeded in having both father and son pardoned out. "Kissing goes by favor," and when a man is in prison it is a lucky thing to have a friend who has influence at court, but when a poor devil without friends gets into prison, no matter how unjust the conviction may be, he would have to serve his time out, though death might be his doom before it was over. As it was, Fox and his son had to lie several months in durance, and at a time too, when another son was on his dying bed without the presence and care of his father. Should not the Fox family entertain the warmest affection for the good Anthony Comstock, who is such a special favorite with the Y. M. C. A. and the S. F. S. V.?

CASE OF DR. WILLIAM MORRISON.

One of St. Anthony's later feats was in bringing this worthy and reputable gentleman into serious trouble. He is an Englishman, but has been twenty years in this city and is most respectably connected, both in England and in this country. He keeps a drug-store at 515 Pearl street, and connected with that store for many years has been a trade in what have been called "French Remedies and Goods." Comstock has had his evil eye, or probably his pious eye, on the Doctor, and has been secretly working his downfall. Four years ago he wrote letters simulating a young lady up town, asking for certain goods and certain articles forbidden by the laws to be sent through the mails, to which the Doctor promptly replied that the trade was in violation of law and he would have nothing to do with it.

In October last, Comstock renewed his epistolary correspondence with Dr. Morrison. This time he simulated a young lady by the name of Ella Bender, of Squan Village, N. J. She wrote a very confidential letter to the Doctor and asked for some information or some remedy that would prevent her being unfortunately caught should she be exposed. The Doctor simply enclosed in an envelope an old leaf of an advertisement referring to Hooper's Female Pills, which have been a standard medicine for a hundred years and are not capable of doing much good or harm.

Miss Ella again wrote more affectionately and confidentially to the Doctor, speaking to him in very endearing language, chiding him for his want of gallantry in not writing her and signing his name to the letter. She in plain language informed the Doctor that she was under the necessity of making a living in the best way she could, and that sometimes she had to do some things a little against her will, and she wished him to send her some of those French appliances that would keep her safe and sound. He replied that it was against the law to send anything of the kind by mail, and he should not do so. Again she wrote the Doctor, growing still more affectionate and urgent in her appeals, and informing him that her sister would probably buy some of the same kind of goods if he would send her one of his circulars. She wrote four letters in all, at which time the Doctor was so far seduced by her artfulness as to send her a pessary and a "safe."

This was enough to do the business. The crafty hypocrite and falsifier had met with the success which his heart coveted. He at once took steps to arrest the honorable gentleman, who has led an honest and useful life, with the view of immuring him within the walls of a prison. He visited the Doctor's place of business, accompanied by a U. S. Deputy Marshall who has borne him company upon many a similar errand of cruelty, heartlessness, injustice, and terror, the same who arrested us at the beck of his chief and marched us off to a stern official who held us to appear, and the same deputy who, half an hour later, stuck close at our elbow ready to immure us in Ludlow Street Jail had we not been fortunate in finding a friend owning property in the city who was willing to sign our bond. It was soon made apparent that Miss Ella Bender, the Squan Village girl who wanted to buy some French fixings that she might engage in certain liaisons without danger to herself, and Mr. Anthony Comstock, the eminent Christian, the noted agent, inquisitor and detective for the United States Government, the agent and secretary of the Society for the Suppression of Vice, and the pet champion of the Y. M. C. A., were one and the same person. Miss Ella, instead of being a dashing, fascinating brunette of the female persuasion, turned out to be a coarse, burly, hard-cheeked, sandy-haired, merciless masculine, with a frightful gash on the left side of his face inflicted by the pocket-knife of the one-armed Conroy.

While on such a friendly call to the Doctor's, Comstock, in rummaging a private drawer in a writing-table, played the sharp game of abstracting the letters which the sweet Ella had written to her "Dear Doctor," which he carried away with him, and in his haste took other letters belonging to the Doctor which have not yet been returned. Upon the examination the Doctor says Comstock made a statement under oath in reference to the taking of these letters which was false. It is not impossible.

In the indictment found against the Doctor a "flaw" was discovered and it was set aside, but being determined that the game he had worked for so assiduously should not escape him, Comstock caused another indictment to be procured, and Wednesday, the 16th, was the time set for trial, in Judge Benedict's Court. At this writing it is not known whether the trial was held or what the result was. If a conviction and imprisonment of a worthy, educated man follows, it will be the consummation of another case of the most gross injustice added to the chapter of Comstock's iniquities.

CASE OF MR. KENDALL.

This man was a dealer in rubber goods. Comstock, by a decoy letter, induced Kendall to send him by mail a rubber female syringe, a useful and valuable instrument. For this enormous crime, he was arrested and disgraced, thrown into prison, kept there for six months, and his business entirely ruined.

CASE OF MR. WEIL.

This gentleman was a photographer pursuing the even tenor of his way on Broadway, not far from Twelfth street. He was a quiet, well-disposed citizen, but Comstock would fain ruin him. Comstock, in person or by his deputy, visited his gallery in search of improper photographs. Weil informed him that he made nothing of the kind. "But will you not make them if I bring you the negatives?" "No, sir; I wish to do nothing of the kind." But finally Comstock discovered in the gallery an artistic photograph which Weil had taken of his own little boy in undress. This was a heinous offense against the peace and morality of the country. His negatives were seized, his property carried off, and he was subjected to much trouble and expense.

In a similar way many photograph galleries were raided, and negatives and apparatus to the value of thousands of dollars forcibly carried away. The censor and protector of public morals deems photographs of classic statuary and paintings grossly obscene, and this is sufficient incentive for him to seize and remove negatives, instruments, etc. In this way many photographers have been seriously wronged.

It is reported that victims have been arrested, tried, and imprisoned for sending through the mails photographs and prints of statuary like Powers' Greek Slave, the original of which hundreds of thousands have viewed with the purest and grandest emotions of pleasure.

CASE OF EDWARD W. BAXTER AND LUTHER P. TUCKER.

These are probably the last arrests effected by Comstock, and were made a little over a week ago. Mr. Baxter has been a resident of the city about eighteen years and has been extensively engaged in the furniture trade, but like many others became embarassed and failed. Recently he engaged in putting up a remedy for leucorrhea and other female weaknesses. It is a simple preparation of zinc and is said to possess excellent qualities. It is advertised in the usual way by means of circulars, etc., and in them a caution is said to be inserted that special care should be taken not to use the remedy after certain exposure has taken place, as its use would almost certainly prevent conception. It is only proper to state in this connection that before embarking in the preparation and sale of the remedy, Mr. Baxter took able legal advice, and the business was pronounced legitimate and legal; but here was food for Comstock. He ranks prevention of conception as among the greatest crimes in the calendar, and he enjoys no greater pleasure than in sending persons to prison and in pocketing the fines drawn from them for that crime of immense magnitude.

Comstock sent a decoy letter, obtained one of the circulars, ordered by registered letter some of the remedy, Baxter signed the registered letter receipt, and then he was in the power of the terrible informer, who arrested him at his residence, 993 Sixth avenue, on the evening of Monday the 7th inst. He was taken from his family and thrown into Ludlow prison. On the following day he gave bail in the sum of $2,500 to await the action of the Grand Jury. His former partner Luther P. Tucker, 684 Broadway, was also arrested and placed in the Tombs Prison. Comstock got out a search warrant and went through his establishment and found on an upper floor goods, circulars, etc., belonging to Barker & Co., of which firm Baxter is the Co. We are informed a bill has been found against Tucker by the Grand Jury, and that Baxter's case will be called on in a few days. If Comstock succeeds in getting these men imprisoned; if he can put a few thousand dollars of their money in his pocket; and if he can succeed in making their families utterly wretched and miserable, his pious friends can congratulate him upon his immense success in suppressing vice, and he can add these cases to the number of his victims in his next annual report to his Society.

In connection with this case an important subject is involved—the sinfulness of preventing conception. The procuring of abortions cannot be justified by any moral, right-minded person, but the too rapid increase of population and the expediency of preventing it by safe and legitimate means is a question which will demand the serious attention of future philosophers, physicians and legislators. There are thousands of children brought into the world that it would be better for themselves and for the world if they had never entered it. If conception in these cases had been prevented, no wrong would have been committed. Whether, in densely populated countries and cities, the prevention of the ingress of too many children by simple modes of prevention of conception is a capital crime, is a question which must necessarily agitate the public mind in the near future.

Subscribe Now.

Those who wish to add their names to the list of TRUTH SEEKER patrons, and help us stem the current of misguided public opinion, to the extent of three dollars per year, and get in return sixteen pages of radical and scientific reading matter weekly, are requested to send in their names. Back numbers furnished from the commencement of the volume. To new subscribers for a year ten numbers of Vol. IV. will be sent extra. Twelve months, $3.00; six months, $1.50; three months, 75 cents.

B. F. UNDERWOOD spoke at Gardner Ill., on Jan. 12 and 13; Streator Ill., 14, 15 and 16; and will speak at Toronto, Ont., 20, 21, 22 and 23; Meaford, 24, 25 and 26; Owen Sound, 27, 28 and 29, and Lindsay, Ont., Feb. 1, 2, 3 and 4.

Anthony Comstock.

As Anthony Comstock is a public character, as he is a special agent of our Government, as he seeks notoriety, and as he is considered the champion and defender of all the decency and morality we have in our country, and as without his watchful care we would all go to the "demnition bow-wows," it is but fitting that a brief notice should be taken of him personally.

It was not till he devised the idea of engaging in the obscene business and in the suppression of vice as a profession, and in laying traps and in digging pitfalls to catch his unsuspecting fellow-beings, that he seemed to find his true vocation. Since that period he has flourished in wordly affairs while thousands of his unfortunate fellow-beings have been reduced to beggary. He has pocketed many thousands of dollars. After organizing his Society for the suppression of vice; after becoming a zealous member of the Y. M. C. A.; after securing the passage of a set of the most unconstitutional laws, the most subversive of personal liberty of any set of laws that ever disgraced the American statute-books; after learning how to plan devices and intrigues to catch and despoil the unwary, finding in the United States District Court of this city active aid and coöperation, enabling him to have all the cases he took there proved convictions, as the judge was in warm sympathy with him; after all this, he has made money, which is evidently the grand moving principle that impels him.

He has become a great favorite with the Y. M. C. A., and he has induced them to think he is a strong foe to evil of every description, and that no man ever lived who did so much as he has done to eradicate obscenity and impurity from the varied walks of life. He boasts of the heavy seizures he has made of indecent matter; he is fond of exhibiting it and asking his friends to call at his office and look it over with him. He takes an evident pleasure in relating his exploits, and in giving the number of tons of books, types, plates, negatives, etc., etc., which he has captured. When he goes to Washington and Albany to persuade Congress and members of the Legislature to vote for bills giving him almost supernal power to seize, slay, and destroy, he is sure to take along a carpet-bag full of his choicest obscenities and display them to the law-makers, and after they look them over sufficiently they seem willing to legislate about as brother Comstock dictates. Then he returns home with his curiosities, and has them ready for the next meeting of the Y. M. C. A., the S. F. S. V., or some other grand occasion, when his godliness can be made manifest by a free exhibition of obscenity.

We do not wish to make the assertion that Anthony Comstock will tell falsehoods under oath, because we have not yet heard him when under oath, but we have seen fully a half a dozen persons who are ready to make oath that he perjured himself in their cases, and there are numerous persons who do not hesitate to say that they do not believe he lets the fear of perjury stand in his way when the conviction of a poor unfortunate victim and the securing of a fat fine requires it.

He claimed a year ago to have convicted two hundred and forty persons, and the most of this was done by his uncorroborated statements. It is a fearful state of American liberties when one individual, who has shown himself possessed of so little principle, mercy, and justice as our hero has, should have it in his individual power to send hundreds of his fellow-citizens, far better than himself, to a terrible, gloomy prison, and when he too, receives a portion of the fines imposed by his own evidence.

Americans, this is a truly woful state of things and demands your immediate attention. If he does not make false oaths against his betters he certainly has it in his power to do so, and by it to send men disgraced to prison with fines most heavily imposed.

We have heard it stated that this Comstock brought one of his decoy-letter cases before Judge Cadwallader of Philadelphia, with a view of convicting his man on his unsupported testimony. The Judge very properly asked if there was no other evidence against the prisoner. When informed there was not he immediately set the case aside, and said no man could be convicted in his court by the unsupported testimony of any witness who was to receive a portion of the fine imposed. It was eminently a sound decision. Comstock has since had few or no cases in that court and he seeks fields and judges more congenial with his mode of doing business.

A judge in Kansas not long ago took a similar stand. A professional detective had wormed an acknowledgment out of an accused man while shut up in prison with him for the express purpose, after which he came into court and attempted to convict him on his oath, but the presiding judge immediately put a stop to that by saying no professional liar should convict an accused man in his court by his unsupported testimony. Had Judge Benedict been governed by views of that kind, many poor victims who have been brought before him would have escaped without fine and imprisonment. He has often ruled that Comstock's statements, wholly unsupported by any testimony, were prima facie evidence of the guilt of the accused, and he has instructed juries to bring in a verdict of guilty, which they have often done.

The avocation of a professional detective is one of the hardest known, and it is very doubtful if any strictly honorable man would ever engage in it. Their duties tend to make them callous, unscrupulous and merciless, and it is entirely wrong to allow the unsupported testimony of such men to send their superiors in all the moral virtues to prison and to ruin. A reform is needed in this regard.

Like Master, Like Man.

Perhaps in no way can the character of a man be better judged than by the company he keeps and the quality of the companion and friend whom he takes to his bosom. On this basis, let us take a view of Anthony Comstock through his accomplice in virtue, Mr. Joseph W. Britton, alias Cohen, alias Andrews, alias Levi, with other aliases too numerous to mention. The young man, unfortunately, does not bear a first-class reputation, but he seems to be very well adapted to the elevated business conducted by Anthony Comstock. It is not our purpose to narrate all the mean and contemptible tricks of which he he is known to have been guilty; but to those who are curious to know what kind of a character he has maintained through his somewhat brief life we shall be happy to give some references.

Those who would like to know of some of his youthful moralities and immoralities we would refer to Mr. M. Sullivan, paper-dealer, 138 William street, in whose employ Britton, or Cohen, formerly was. Mr. S. will doubtless give very good reasons for discharging the young man from his service. The reasons will certainly be satisfactory to most persons.

If there are those who would become more familiar with his liaisons and immoral improprieties we would refer them to Dr. Mitchell, 23 Frankfort street, with whom young Britton began studying medicine. At Dr. Mitchell's option, however, the young man ceased to remain in his office and to darken his door with his entrance. The reasons for this course will also prove satisfactory to the majority of inquirers.

For information concerning his adroitness in selling bawdy pictures and books, so that his master might seize the buyers and throw them into prison; in inducing parties to procure lewd pictures for him; in playing the spy on a large scale to perfection, we would refer inquirers to his master and adored chief, Saint Anthony himself. He has on many occasions sent his man Friday out to try his hand at inducing unsuspecting dealers to buy his filthy wares, so his master might pounce down upon them as a hungry wolf would pounce upon a frightened kid, as well as in persuading dealers to look up and procure for him such indecent pictures and books as they could get for him. If Anthony does not incline to be communicative, call on Dr. Thayer, John Manning, James Sullivan, and many others.

For the particulars relative to his perjuring himself on the day of the last election, when he was challenged on the ground of his having bets on the election, and when he swore in his vote by taking an oath that he had made no such bets, inquire of Geo. Dunn, who challenged him, and Henry Mayer, the druggist on Tenth street, near Tompkins Square, with whom he had made two bets on the election.

For his late exploits at New Canaan, Conn., where he went to perform the work of a spy on liquor dealers, representing himself as a sporting man, and was arrested for overdriving a team and for conspiracy, we would refer the reader to Mr. G. Birdsall and others of New Canaan. It was at Birdsall's Hotel that he registered his name as J. B. Andrews, and freely passed around his cards, reading:

I AM J. B. ANDREWS.
WHO THE DEVIL ARE YOU?

It is reported of our dashing young gallant that while in New Canaan he played the young blood pretty strongly—that he got intoxicated, visited prostitutes, drove hired horses to excess, and finally, made oath that he was married and a member of a Methodist church in this city.

This person is said to be a Jew by birth, but he has proved a renegade in that direction as to the cause of decency and morality. We had been dishonored by several calls from him before we learned who he was; he seemed to be of a very inquiring turn of mind, wished to examine everything we had to sell, and made some inquiries as to how he could procure a stock of our books and pamphlets to sell in Philadelphia. On one of his visits he signed the anti-Comstock petition to Congress, asking for the repeal of the Comstock laws. He signed his name on that occasion as Joseph Levy. He professed to be considerably interested in Liberal literature.

There is no question but that he is an individual of very deficient principles, and for any honest business he is indeed poorly adapted. There is but one position which he seems eminently fitted to fill, and that is the one he now occupies in the employ of Anthony Comstock. He is certainly well qualified for that vocation, and they seem to get along "hand in glove," like two veritable brothers. If they are not strictly the counterparts of Damon and Pythias or David and Jonathan, they may long be remembered as the loving Anthony and Joseph. With the addition of Judge Benedict the trio is complete. By their combined efforts great deeds have been accomplished, if beguiling and ensnaring unwary and well-meaning persons and sending them to prison and imposing heavy fines upon them, may be called great. When will such a trio ever be seen again?

Is Comstock a Saint?

In the issue of the Waverley Magazine for Nov. 10, 1877, appeared an advertisement reading like this: "To Sports.—An elegant book for you will be sent on the receipt of 50 cts. Address J. G. Phillips, Box 49, Squan Village, N. J." This was pointed out to us, and we were informed that it was Comstock who was advertising. We knew that it was one of his post-offices, that he had a home in that vicinity, and that he had written us two letters from that point under the name of S. Bender (probably the father of Miss Ella), ordering The Truth Seeker, the "Open Letter to Jesus Christ," the "Marsupial" tract, and several others, as well as a copy of Dr. Trall's "Sexual Physiology." It was from Squan Village, under the same name, that he ordered goods from E. W. Jones, and it was from Squan Village that he wrote to E. H. Heywood for "Cupid's Yokes" and another copy of Trall's "Physiology." It was from Squan Village that the interesting letters came forth to the kind-hearted Dr. Morrison.

We were prepared to think that J. G. Phillips, S. Bender, Miss Ella Bender, and the Hon. Anthony Comstock were one and the same person. In this we were correct. We suggested to a friend the propriety of ordering a copy of Anthony's "Book for Sports." He did so, enclosing 50 cents in a letter which he had registered. In due time the receipt came back signed "J. G. Phillips," and after a few days more came a copy of a cheap London edition of the New Testament, which in England retails at twopence, and of which hundreds of thousands are given away. In quantities they probably cost two or three cents. On a corner of the wrapper was a small gum label, reading, "From the American Tract Society, 150 Nassau st., New York," which place, by the by, is where Anthony holds forth in all his glory. Here the connection between J. G. Phillips of Squan Village and Anthony Comstock of 150 Nassau st. was thoroughly established. But we thought his profits were too large. For the fifty cents a book had been received which cost at the most three cents, postage two cents. Fifty cents for what cost five is a thousand per cent, which in these hard times is a very fair profit. In a few days, however, back came the fifty cents in a registered letter, with a pious homily from Anthony, but which bore no signature; but it could have been from none else than the Squan Village firm.

We learn that some eight other persons ordered his "Book for Sports" and received a Testament in return, etc.

At this stage of the business our friend thought he was a testament ahead. He had received a copy of that estimable book, a pious letter and his money back again—a very good investment. We were at a loss to see where Comstock could make much by doing business in this way, for he had used seventeen cents in postage stamps besides the stationery. We did not understand his game till a few days later when there came from the same source in a sealed envelope with six cents in stamps upon it, some fifteen or twenty pages torn from a most villainously obscene book entitled, "Pleasing Memoirs," with an indecent obscene picture of the most objectionable character. The envelope was directed in a disguised hand. These curiosities can all be seen by any moral person bearing a letter of introduction and recommendation from Saint Anthony.

That all this is the work of the good Christian Anthony Comstock there cannot be the slightest doubt. We sent a special messenger down to Squan Village to interview the postmaster and others and he learned that J. G. Phillips, S. Bender, and Anthony Comstock are the same person, and that the postmaster there is privy to the artful games he is playing. The name and address given by our friend to J. G. Phillips were never given to any other person, so all that came to that address must have come from the party who had that address. It could not have been otherwise. It was Anthony and nobody else that mailed that vile stuff. He was the only one who had the address referred to, and he is the only one who has that kind of literature, having monopolized all there is in the country. In the whole transaction it is easy to trace his low cunning and his diabolical desire to catch some unsuspecting, unsophisticated person in his snare. We will leave others to decide whether such a man is "truly good," and is fit to control the morals of the country, and to be entrusted with unlimited power to persecute, to imprison, and to take the property and life of those far better than himself.

Letters from The Tribune.

THE PRINCIPLES OF THE DADDIES.

To the Editor of The Tribune, SIR: There are other American people besides Elder Evans in a "tantrum" over the arrest of D. M. Bennett for circulating his publications through the mails. I wonder that the whole nation does not shake and quake with apprehension of coming danger when a free American citizen can be arrested, put under bonds, and tried for printing, publishing and mailing opinions that are "off color," from an orthodox point of view. We used to hear the "price of liberty" quoted at the stock board of political principles, and "eternal vigilance" was demanded as the very lowest terms on which the article could be had. What has occurred to make it cheaper now? Does not this arrest indicate that we had better be stiff holders and keep up the price? The fact revealed that we have orthodox Bourbons among us, who never learn anything and never forget, and that their ignorance and their obliviousness are organized into an official force entirely unwarranted by the Constitution, should arouse the old time vigilance. A Bureau of the Spanish Inquisition is a new department of affairs in this Republic; but here we have it, thriving and growing right before our eyes; and its local habitation is in that great stone pile that Mullet built. Here are the beginnings of an evolution into a new Bastile, unless that same eternal vigilance puts its foot upon it. Slightly adapting the indignant lines of Hosea Biglow, we can shout with him:

"Hain't they placed a censor demon?
Hain't they made your journals whizz?
Wut will make ye act like freemen?
Wut will git your dander riz?"

An Administration that keeps a Key that keeps a Comstock to put a padlock on Liberal lips will get no Liberal votes when the next election comes around. Personal liberty and freedom of the press rise above all other considerations. If the right to send through the mails unsectarian and unorthodox books, tracts, and journals, on equal terms with those that are orthodox—a right inestimable to us and formidable to tyrants only; a right that we thought settled long ago and forever—has, after all, to be yet fought out and settled over again, then all other political questions are of less importance and will have to be postponed until it is determined who runs this important Department, Comstock or the American people; and whether Liberals and thinkers of their own untrammeled thoughts have in the National mails any rights which Postmasters are bound to respect.

Measures for defense are already set on foot. There is a little cloud now rising, not big enough for much of a shower as yet, and serving at present only as a shining mark for Illiberals to point their shafts of ridicule at. "The National Liberal League" has been organized to form a new political party and cast votes; and it needs only a few more acts of tyranny on the part of the Comstock crowd to swell that cloud into a storm altogether beyond the calculations of "Old Probabilities;" and that will flash the conviction into what passes for the minds of the Administration of this Government that they had better adhere to the principles of the "Daddies," whatever becomes of the dollars.

New York, Dec. 29, 1877. THERON C. LELAND.

[Keep cool. This lurid rhetoric won't have much influence with readers when they know it is all expended in defense of the right to send obscene matter through the mails.—ED. Tribune.]

PROSECUTION FOR OBSCENE PUBLICATIONS.

THE CHARGE AGAINST MR. BENNETT.

To the Editor of the Tribune, SIR: The Tribune, I am sure, cannot mean to be unfair. It has not been in all the nearly forty years I have been a reader of and occasional writer for it. I was not defending "the right to send obscene matter through the mails." I was defending the general principle of freedom of the press, violated by the arrest of Mr. Bennett, Editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER; and the result of the prosecution justifies my defense. The charge of obscenity against him was so manifestly untenable that District Attorney Woodford would not press it; and last Saturday, the 5th inst., the suit was withdrawn without trial, and all proceedings were dismissed. Mr. Bennett was ready with his defence, and contributions from Liberals all over the country were pouring in to back him up with means. Finding that he has no case and cannot succeed in a direct attack, the complainant has subsided into indirect methods of annoyance, as the manner of such is and has been all along the path of history. Friends and sympathizers who had wished to give Mr. Bennett the influence of their names are intimidated and induced to withdraw their support. Strife is fomented, and prosecutions on side issues are threatened.

The Massachusetts case, Comstock against Heywood, is resulting the same way—or rather, the tables are turned, and Mr. Heywood is prosecuting Comstock for damages. Both these gentlemen, selected to be tried on obscene charges, are editors of newspapers with thousands of subscribers, who order and pay for their papers because they like the morals taught and the principles inculcated. These editors are not dealers in obscene literature. They are at the head of concerns running and established for years, and the charge of obscenity is now heard for the first time, under the rulings of the new inquisition. Both these prosecutions were sheer, unmitigated acts of tyranny, without the shadow of fact or justice for their foundation. In both, "obscenity" was attempted to be stretched to cover attacks on current creeds and social abuses, very sharp and vigorous no doubt, but no more obscene than the essays and discussions in the Christian Advocate or Observer—that is to say neither are obscene.

Perhaps my defence was a little impassioned, but much can be forgiven to the spirit of liberty. A rhetoric born of indignation at acts of oppression is apt to be "lurid." There was a good deal of it, in '76, running through the declaration of the "daddies," and, in view of an attempted renewal of the old struggle between freedom of thought and repression, this is a good year to revive some modifications of the style.

New York, Jan. 11, 1878. THERON C. LELAND.

[On Mr. Leland's statement of the facts, he was clearly justifiable in using rhetoric as "lurid" as he pleased.—ED. Tribune.

ELDER EVANS IN A TANTRUM.

To the Editor of the Tribune: Why do you great and powerful editors allow the God-in-the-Constitution party to persecute, unopposed, D. M. Bennett, editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER? Are there any people more anxious to protect the youth of our nation from the corrupting influence of obscene publications than the Shakers? Yet, as my soul liveth, I would rather have the repeal of all laws for the suppression of vile publications than this robbing of the United States mail, these pious, lying, decoy letters, this interference with, and suppression of, free opinion on theological matters, where the orthodox Infidel is just as good a man or woman as the orthodox Christian, as good an American citizen, and a thousand times more safe with human liberty in his custody. What pranks before high heaven are those that are being played in the name of religion, when men who are like Jefferson, Franklin, and Paine—founders of our Government—are being persecuted by officers of the Government which the founders gave their lives to establish! F. W. EVANS.

Mount Lebanon, Dec. 27, 1877.

To the Editor of the Tribune, SIR: Why add that expressive mark of contempt—the word "tantrum"—to my article, which I thank you for publishing, not for stigmatizing? Are not "the clergy a source of danger to the American Republic?" In its palmy days, The Tribune was not hand in hand with the clergy, but a pretty free-thinker. Has Samson fallen into the hands of the Philistines? If so, I regret it.

Twenty-five years ago I was in a "tantrum" about Spiritualism. To-day my prediction that "henceforth it is an American institution," is fulfilled. It is an institution of Christendom—of the world.

Last mail I received a letter, dated Cape Town, South Africa, from J. M. Peebles, who is on his second tour round the world, preaching Spiritualism and Shakerism with increasing success.

I was in a "tantrum" about slavery. It cost us something to abolish it! I predict as bloody a war about Church and State theology as we have had about slavery. No danger—that is the battle cry. There was no danger about the "Comstock laws" to suppress infidelity until they were past and doing their inquisitorial work. What have you Shakers to do about it? You are not in danger from obscenity or infidelity—blasphemy. We owe our liberty of conscience—our existence as an order to a secular government. We dread the Peace of Warsaw, when American citizens can lie quietly in jails and the editors go not into "tantrums" about it. With the Bible in public schools, chaplains in Government service, all church property—except that of sixty communities of Shakers—untaxed, and Governmental subsides to theological institutions, do you ask, "What aileth thee?" F. W. EVANS.

Mt. Lebanon, N. Y., Dec. 31, 1877.

From the Gospel according to Saint Anthony.

CHAPTER FIRST.

The Parable of the Hypocrite.

1. Now it came to pass in the first year of the reign of Rutherford the First over the land of Yankeedoodledum, that these marvels did happen unto the people.

2. There was a certain pious youth surnamed Scarfaced Tony, of the Tribe of Connecticut, which is the land of peg oats and wooden nutmegs, who did enter into the fold of the Y. M. C. A. even as the wolf in sheep's clothing entereth into the fold of the good shepherd.

3. Forasmuch as they did harbor great hatred against the evil scribes, and they who hunger and thirst after unclean literature, they were moved to send out the valiant Tony to do battle with them.

4. And Tony girded on his coat of mail and set forth to battle with the obscene scribes, whom he smote hip and thigh and cast into dungeons, and great was the spoil thereof.

5. But Tony became exceedingly valiant, and laid waste the country round about until he came unto the abiding place of Selden, the disciple of Esculapius, who spat in Tony's face, and did smite him under the left eyebrow.

6. So likewise did Conroy, the Jerseyite, in the New-Ark, smite Tony the Sneak with the sword of liberty, and the cheek of Tony, though of the hardness of brass, was rent in twain, and Scarfaced Tony shall he be called henceforth among the sons of men.

7. Moreover, Sullivan the book-man did rise up in his wrath and bust Tony in the snoot, forasmuch as Tony had borne false witness against him before the altar of Benedict, the Great High Priest of the Y. M. C. A.

8. Then Tony did retire for the space of many days within his tent, and did clothe himself in sackcloth and ashes, and the sound of weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth was heard therein.

9. But Tony did hunger and thirst after the greenbax of the land of Uncle Sam, and he again set forth like a raging lion seeking whom he might devour.

10. And lo and behold! the two virgins Vickie and Tennie did fall into his meshes, and were cast into the dungeon called Ludlow for many days, until the wise men of Gotham did unbind their chains.

11. So likewise did George Francis Train sojourn for the space of six months in the Tombs of the Judges, because of the displeasure of Tony the Scarfaced, who did not like to have the epistles of Moses and Solomon and Shakspere sent through the United States mails.

12. And Satan smiled.

13. Furthermore it came to pass that Scarfaced Tony would not permit any manner of learning which is called science to be carried in the mails, and he did cast into dungeons many of the disciples of Darwin, Voltaire, and Paine.

14. And the Health Monthly put its Foote in it to the extent of five thousand pieces of silver. Selah.

15. But last of all came Bennett, the scribe who wrote an Epistle to Jesus H. Christ, the Son of God, and sent it by mail to the end that his petition might be answered.

16. Furthermore, this good and wise man sent forth a tract, to enlighten the benighted heathen of Amerikee on the subject of the propagation of the opossum and the kangaroo.

17. Whereupon Tony the Scarfaced waxed exceedingly zealous, and sent Britton his Hebrew spy for copies of THE TRUTH SEEKER containing these Epistles, and these two champions of the cause of Christ decided that it was obscene and blasphemous.

18. And they endeavored to inveigle Bennett the scribe into the temples of Justice to the end that they might divide his substance among them.

19. But they fizzled.

20. For Bennett was discharged, and his publications have become twice as large and the circulation doubled twenty, thirty, fifty, yea, an hundred fold.

21. So endeth the first chapter. C. W. S.

Letter From B. F. Underwood.

BRIGHTON, IOWA, Jan. 11, 1878.

DEAR BENNETT: From your statement in THE TRUTH SEEKER, I judge that you are not in danger of prosecution for "blasphemy and obscenity," on the information filed against you by Comstock. I congratulate you on your escaping the annoyance and trouble of a trial, with the worse results that would follow in case of conviction. How Comstock could expect a trial and conviction for blasphemy in a U. S. Court, I am still unable to see.

I think all Liberals should unite in petitioning Congress to modify that "obscenity act," so it cannot be made to apply to any publishers or persons except those who are engaged in spreading literature concerning the obscenity of which there can be no doubt. There is a class of books to which the word is applicable, and there is only one class of books to which it is applicable. Whether Congress has rightful authority to prohibit the transmission of such literature through the mails, seems to be a question on which there is a difference of opinion. Why not, then, have a petition which all Liberals can sign. There is no doubt that there should be legislation by some authority adopted to prevent the circulation of vile literature, the kind that is written to excite the passions and to corrupt the minds of youth. Whether Congress or the State deals with this matter, there must be something clear and definite as to what literature is included. Now, I don't think we should waste time or temper in disputing on a subject concerning which Liberals are perhaps equally divided. Let us have a petition for such modification of that "obscenity act" as shall not render possible the arrest of honorable men by a narrow-minded and bigoted agent of the Government, A. J. Comstock. The foregoing has been suggested by Mr. Abbot's articles, and by those in reply in subsequent numbers of THE TRUTH SEEKER. Why should THE TRUTH SEEKER and the Index get into a dispute over this matter, especially where it is liable to degenerate into bad spirit and bitterness (as shown by the article of H. B. B., in THE TRUTH SEEKER), and where it can do no good. Mr. Abbot is a hard worker in the cause of Liberalism, and has been years arousing Liberals to organize for defense against every infringement on their rights by orthodoxy. I know you, too, to be a warm-hearted lover and advocate of the same principles. Now what I want is to see you and Abbot, and the Investigator, Evolution, and Religio-Philosophical Journal, and other Liberal papers, pulling together. Then we will have harmony in our ranks and something will be accomplished.

If you deem it necessary to retain the form of petition you have issued, do so for those who like it; but why not issue another form for those who believe there should be laws against the circulation of obscene literature through the U. S. mails, but who would gladly petition for a modification of the present foolish and unjust law as it now stands? Be assured that I have but one object in writing you this letter—which I write by way of suggestion only—and that is to encourage unity and coöperation in working for an object in which all true Liberals are interested, and which is liable to be kept back by needless differences and disputes among us. Fraternally yours,

B. F. UNDERWOOD.

Rough Rhymes.

BY A. W. TAYLOR.

Ye foes of oppression, arise in your might!
A brother 's unjustly arraigned
By a base tool of bigots, whose hatred and spite
Would crush and thrust into oblivion's night
A name by dishonor unstained.

A dastardly decoy, of Christianly crew,
Is doing the d——dest he can
To grind to the dust, degrade, and subdue
An Infidel, honest, straightforward, and true;
Our truth-seeking Bennett 's the man.

Shall we sit down supinely? see go to the wall
This great-minded man of the age?
Shall we stand by and see the brave TRUTH SEEKER fall?
Nay, friends; 'twere a shame! to his aid, one and all!
Defend him from bigotry's rage!

Shall Comstock rejoice, and exultingly tell
This immaculate Y. M. C. A.
That the strong prison walls and a damp felon's cell
Contain the aged form of a hero who fell
'Neath his cunning a struggling prey.

The priests and soul-mongers would rule this fair land
With an absolute, despotic sway;
The thumb-screw and wheel, the rack and the brand
They'd apply with a cruel, relentless red hand.
As did Calvin in Servetus's day.

Shall we cringe to a sycophant, kneel to a slave,
Bow the head when a dominie nods?
No; we'll trust to our reason, be fearless and brave;
Hurl dogmas and creeds into one common grave
Along with all mythical gods!

He's unworthy a right which he dare not maintain,
Or a thought which he dare not express;
On his brow he should carry the coward's dark stain;
His shame should surround him; his pathway be pain,
Who tyranny's hand would caress.

Congratulatory Letter from Mrs. E. D. Slenker.

Three cheers for Bennett and the enlarged, improved, January number of our beloved TRUTH SEEKER!!

It is now the ne plus ultra of papers, and all others will have to bow to its shrine, as sheaves of Joseph's brothers bent in obeisance to his sheaf. The "New Song of Christmas," by Frothingham, is the best Christmas article I've ever read. "The Radical Pulpit" is designed to open the eyes of the blind, and become one of the best and most useful departments of the paper. The letter from old Split-foot is very interesting, suggestive, and truthful. This department of the paper will have an immense number of readers among those who are curious in regard to the ways and doings of Diabolism, and [prophesy the "Son of the Morning" will in time have as many true and consistent worshipers as his "Big Brother" now has. Macdonald handles the labor question well, and few questions are of greater importance, at present, than this one. "Answers to Inquiries" will be a good school for us all to learn at. The Comstock articles are well put; and friendly letters have each one of them individual merits of its own, which makes them of general and wide-spread interest, as well as drawing us Liberal readers nearer together in the bonds of loving fellowship. The defense fund speaks loudly for the interest D. M. Bennett's readers feel in him personally, as well as for the cause itself. It is a glorious list, and I am proud of the honor of having my name enrolled therein, even though it be but for one little dollar. Tyndall is grand and full of new thought as he always is: Train, unique, fresh, vigorous, and right, as well as prophetic and far-seeing. Indeed, the papers are so good all over that I can't see how even its almost perfect editor, as universal a genius as he is, can keep it up to its present standard through the coming months of the expectant future.

"Truth is shining, earth's awaking,
Freedom's rising, chains are breaking,
Tyrants on their thrones are quaking
For their reign is nearly done.
Love upspringing, hate is dying,
Men rejoicing, knaves are sighing,
Deadly curses fast are flying
From a renovated world." —Denton.

A Dozen Questions.

ANSWERS EARNESTLY REQUESTED FROM ANY ONE WHO IS DISPOSED TO BE HONEST AND UNBIASED.

1. Is there a natural disinclination or repugnancy in mankind to receive Truth?
2. Is belief or unbelief of any matter of record either a virtue or a crime?
3. Is sincerity a virtue? If so, is it not as much of a virtue in one school of thinkers as in another?
4. Are not sanitary measures of more avail for the prevention of diseases than any other means that can be used?
5. What is the difference between the Natural and Super-natural?
6. Is there any class of thinkers to-day who can cast out devils; speak with new tongues; drink any deadly thing without hurting them; or lay hands on the sick, and thereby cause them to recover?
7. If in every mediation there must be two contending parties and one to reconcile them, is it not clear that all together make more than two?
8. Does not climate have much to do with the physical, intellectual, and moral development of man?
9. Can there be any knowledge without contrast? Any idea of size without gradation?
10. Is not the fact that manner is indestructible proof that it is increate?
11. Will not all things which have had a beginning also have an ending?
12. If it was once necessary that a certain person should be crucified in order to accomplish some great end, would the persons used as instruments be held culpable and justly subject to punishment?

Respectfully, INQUIRER.
Kansas City, Mo., Dec. 12, 1877.

Letters from Friends.

COLUMBUS, KAN., Dec. 22, 1877.

DEAR BROTHER BENNETT: My pockets are empty, but my heart and head are full of sympathy and moral indignation for you and the struggling cause of truth.

Having been a Freethinker and Truth Seeker for many years, I know the cost. For advocating unpopular truth and toleration, I have been belied, persecuted, mobbed, my person has been injured, and my life threatened by Christian Church members, who said I was "not fit to live." A volume would not describe all the abuse and misrepresentation I have received as a teacher and lecturer on scientific and reformatory subjects. Never have I been more belied, and hated for my opinions than for five years past in Kansas. A liberal schoolboard sent for me to teach a school at small wages; and poverty compelled me to accept. Several bigoted ignoramuses in the district raised objections because I was a Spiritualist and an Infidel.

They soon began to circulate lies about me, and to instigate their children to disobey and insult me in school, hoping to provoke me to some rash and illegal act. I was bullied, insulted and threatened out of the school. The Board firmly supported me. A meeting was called; all their lies, stated in meeting, were proved to be malicious fabrications to drive me away; they were completely baffled and their unmanly course brought to light.

Thus you see, my good Brother, that I can sympathise with you in every sense. I I wish I had money to send you, but I have to go without the comforts of life. I have induced others to help you, and will continue to advocate you and the truth.

"The seeds that, in these few and fleeting hours,
Thy hand unwearied and unsparing sow,
Shall deck thy grave with amaranthine flowers
And yield thee fruits divine in heaven's immortal bowers."

C. B.

FROSTBURG, MD., Dec. 3, 1877.

D. M. BENNETT ESQ., Dear Sir: I mailed you a letter this morning, but having to go to Cumberland unexpectedly this afternoon, I will procure a bank check for five dollars, which is enclosed as part of the twenty dollars promised you, in the letter alluded to above. I expect to be in Florida in about two weeks, where I expect to remain, in company with my wife, during the winter. You will hear from me while there.

Holding as I do, a very low estimate of humanity, I fear the liberals will not respond, as they ought to, in supplying material aid, but in this I hope I will be mistaken. Every lover of free speech, free thought and a free press should feel implicated in your arrest and probable imprisonment. This, in my judgment is the only rational light by which the question is to be judged in this aspect.

As a matter of policy, perhaps, your extreme views as published from time to time may be in advance of the times, in which case a more conservative course might produce better results. Superstition and long cherished myths, inculcated from childhood up, are very difficult to eradicate, as you so well know, from the human mind generally. When we consider the power of priestcraft, it is no wonder that their following is so immense. Philosophers of all ages, back to prehistoric times, held views peculiarly their own, in contradistinction to the other two great religions of antiquity, paganism and idolatry. There are too much self-interest, ignorance and superstition in the Christian world to overcome, short of ages in the future. If a large majority of mankind were philosophers, or were well educated, there would be hope. Even as it is, rapid strides have been made in the last twenty years. Here I will call a halt, knowing that you are much better posted on all those questions than I am.

It does seem to me that in the event of your ultimate incarceration in the State prison at hard labor, for the alleged offense, it would be outlandish in the extreme. I shall drop all my former ideas of a free country. Free Blazes! As to the prevention of over-excess of population, science has given us a God-send, whereby it can so easily be controlled. Are we not at war with nature every day? It is mind over matter. No use for Comstock, Bigotry & Co., to try to suppress such knowledge, as it is being widely known and becoming quite common amongst the educated thinking class. The time is fast approaching when such questions will be generally known and practiced. All criminality and conscientiousness will give way to the harmless remedy, when it is seen that argument against it is untenable.

You have a hard fight, and will need much help in money, and it is to be hoped you will get all you need.

Don't under-rate your enemy. Why does the N. Y. Herald say so little about it? Answer.—Fear of sectarian opinion.

Very truly yours, N. BEALL,

ELGIN, IOWA, Dec. 2, 1877.

D. M. BENNETT: I am sorry to hear of your misfortune, but still it is no more than I have expected for some time. The Christian element has always been tyrannical, and always will be while it has the power. I have been threatened by those saints divine, because I openly spoke against the priests and their immense salaries, without benefiting mankind in the least—not making the slightest exertion to earn their daily bread. Shame on these hypocritical humbugs, which help every day to add to the misery of our (I hope it will be) free country.

You have one thing to console you even if they do stop you now. The work is bound to go on. Many have awakened from the lethargy of priestly powers, and your name will stand out in bold relief with other benefactors of the race, after your body has turned back to the dust from whence it came. It will be a monument grander than the marble slab. True principles and rational opinions must, in a few generations, take the place of the old superstitions of Christianity.

Yours with esteem, W. N. BENNETT.

THE COUNCIL FIRE.

Furnished with fuel by both White Men and Red. A paper of intense interest—History, Legend, Tradition, Indian Policies, Causes of Wars, Massacres, etc. Only paper of the kind. Hon. A. B. Meacham, ex-Supt. Indian Affairs, Editor. Monthly, 16 pages; $1.00 per year. Samples 10 cents. Address Council Fire, Box 1949, Philadelphia, Pa. 3t2

Radical Lectures,

BY

JAMES W. STILLMAN.

1. The Unknown God.
2. Woman Suffrage,
3. Herbert Spencer.
4. Reform in Education.

For terms, address
JAMES W. STILLMAN,
3t2 128 Broadway, New York.

DO YOU WANT Books, Cards, Prints, Chromos, Photographs, Albums, Gold Pens, Pencils, Paper, Stationery, Knick-knacks, Notices, Novelties of every description? Dealers in unprofitable leaders—avoid risk—send only to the old, original and only "HEADQUARTERS." Established, 1860. We originated what is now an enormous trade. We import largely. Supply all Scientific, Legal, Medical, scarce, foreign and other books not often to be obtained—in fact, supply ANYTHING AND EVERYTHING in the Book or any other line. Our large store has four floors crowded with cards of books on every known subject, and all offered very low. CATALOGUES FREE. Information given. Send stamp, and send now. Address, HUNTER & CO., PUBLISHERS, HINSDALE, N. H.

THE TRUTH SEEKER COLLECTION

OF

FORMS, HYMNS, AND RECITATIONS.

Forms for organizing Societies, Forms for Constitutions and By-laws, for Funeral Services, Marriage Services, Naming of Infants, Obituary Notices, Epitaphs, Wills, etc. Also, nearly 500 Liberal and Spiritualistic Hymns, original and selected; for Public Meetings, Funerals, Social Gatherings, etc., etc. The whole supplemented by a fine selection of Recitations, comprising many of the finest poetical gems in the language. Nearly 600 pages, at the extremely low price of 75 cents in cloth. The price is made low, so that every family can have a copy. Let none fail to have it. D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth St., New York.

THE MAGNETIC TREATMENT.

Send 25 cents to DR. ANDREW STONE, Troy, N. Y., and obtain a large, highly-illustrated book on the system of Vitalizing Treatment. 1y36

YES YES WE WANT an agent in every town. Easy work at home. Write now and we will start you. $8 a day sure to all. SIMPSON & SMITH, 60 Cortlandt St., N. Y. 3t

RIFLES, SHOT-GUNS, REVOLVERS, sent C. O. D. for examination, all charges paid. No risk; no humbug. Write for catalogue. Address GREAT WESTERN GUN WORKS, Pittsburgh, Pa. 6mo27

$12 A DAY at home. Agents wanted. Outfit and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta Maine. 1y50

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. H. HALLETT & CO., Portland, Maine. 1y50

TRUE TIME. 50,000 SOLD. The GENUINE Swiss Magnetic COMPASS, INDICATOR AND TIME-KEEPER. A perfect GEM for the pocket of every traveller, trader, boy, farmer, and for EVERYBODY desiring a reliable Time-Keeper and also a superior Compass. Usual watch size, steel works, glass crystal; all in a neat OXIDIZED case. Perfection guaranteed. WARRANTED to indicate correct time and to keep in order—if fairly used—for two years. Nothing like it! This perfect triumph of mechanism will be sent to any post-office address, for only $1.00; 3 for $2.00. Circulars & details. BEWARE of a "bogus" article offered as a "specimen." Get the BEST—Get the Genuine. Send all orders to the sole Agents, J. J. KING & CO., Brattleboro', Vt.

HISTORY OF THE CONFLICT BETWEEN RELIGION AND SCIENCE. Truly one of the most valuable works that have appeare within the last ten years. By PROF. DRAPER. Price. $1.75.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine. 11

PRO AND CON OF SUPERNATURAL RELIGION; or an answer to the question, Have we a Supernaturally-Revealed, Divinely-Inspired and Miraculously-Attested Religion in the World? By E. E. GUILD, ex-Universalist clergyman. Paper, 50 cents: cloth, 50 cents.

"IT'S STILL WAVES!" The old, original, and only "STAR SPANGLED BANNER," the "FAMILY FAVORITE" and home paper for THE MILLION. Established, 1853. There's nothing like it. Old and young, rich and poor, saint and sinner,—it's welcome for ALL. It is a large 40-column, 8 page paper, crowded with Charming Tales, Sketches, Stories, Poems, Wit, Humor, Fun, Recipes, Puzzles, Humorous Poems, etc., etc. It is "ROOTED" CORN for every fireside. Quack, Humbug, and Fraud is fully, freely, and fruitfully exposed. No one can be swindled who reads the "BANNER." 100,000 now read and rely upon this National Paper. TRY IT ONCE AND NOW. Only 75 cents a year, or with Premium of SIX Charming Chromos, one Dictionary, cloth, 384 pages, only $1. Trial 10 cts., three months, 25 cents. Specimen FREE. Don't put it off but SEND NOW. Address, "STAR SPANGLED BANNER," Hinsdale, N. H.

READER, that little cottage contains one of the choicest libraries in the country. I buy my books of J. FRANCIS RUGGLES, Bibliopole, Bronson, Mich. Rare O. P. works a specialty. Lists for stamp. 3m1

THE EVOLUTION. No. 16.

CONTENTS.

1. MERRIE ST. NICHOLAS. By Prof. A. Wilder.
2. THE BATTLE OF THE CATS.
3. HUMAN LIFE, ITS PHYSICAL SOLUTION. By T. P. Wilson, M.D.
4. MEDICAL ASSISTANCE, A SOCIAL FUNCTION. By Henry Edger.
5. THE LABORER IN POLITICS. By Prof. A. R. Grote.
6. CURRENTE CALAMO PAPERS. No. 2. By Edgar Fawcett.
7. COL. WARING AND HIS BOOKS.
8. TRAPS BAITED WITH ORPHANS.
9. JOSEPH COOK'S LECTURES. By Rev. George W. Cooke.
10. COOK ON GOD AND EVOLUTION. By J. D. Bell.

Bookbuyers and those who wish to subscribe to periodicals should see The Evolution. No. 16.

Ask Newsdealers for it, or send 15 cents to The Evolution, 34 Dey street, New York.

NEW SUBSCRIBERS TO

THE EVOLUTION, at $1,50 per year in advance, have their choice of 100 excellent books, each published at $1,50. One fine volume containing the following works by Charles Dickens, each entire, and handsomely bound, viz.: Child's History of England, Edwin Drood, Master Humphrey's Clock, The Mudfrog Association, A Holiday Romance, and Geo. Silverman's Explanation, will be sent to every new subscriber who sends us $1,50, and The Evolution will be sent one year free. (If the book is sent by mail, 15 cents must be sent for postage). Address, ASA K. BUTTS, 34 Dey Street, New York.

The Priest in Absolution,

The first Number of the "HOLY CROSS SERIES," is from the abridged London edition of the same work, which created so much excitement in England. The original volume was issued by the "High Church" authorities as a guide to the clergy in the confessional, and was designed to be introduced into the English Church. Price 25 cents.

D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth St., New York.

☞ The other twenty-five numbers of the "Holy Cross Series" are being brought out as rapidly as possible.

The Career of Religious Ideas;

THEIR ULTIMATE,

The Religion of Science.

BY HUDSON TUTTLE.

An able examination of the Religions of the World—the subjects treated as follows: Chap. I.—Introductory; Chap. II.—What is Religion? Chap. III.—Fetishism; Chap. IV.—Polytheism; Chap. V.—Monotheism; Chap. VI.—Value of Ancient Bibles; Chap. VII.—Man's Moral Progress Dependent upon his Intellectual Growth; Chap. VIII.—Theological Problems; Chap. IX.—Man's Fall; Chap. X.—Free Will, Necessity, Responsibility; Chap. XI.—Duties and Obligations of Man to God; Chap. XII.—The Ultimate of Religious Ideas.

Price, in paper, 50 cents; in cloth, 75 cents. Postage prepaid. D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth St. N. Y.

COOKE UPON COOK.—Rev. GEORGE vs. REV. JOSEPH. An Exhaustive Review of the Sensation Lectures. See THE EVOLUTION. No. 16.

ANOTHER OF J. D. BELL'S GREAT Reviews.—Cook on God and Evolution in THE EVOLUTION, No. 16.

ATTENTION, LADIES!

THE BEST THING OUT.

An Excellent, non-Rusting, Durable Galvanized Iron Plater,

with directions for using the same, will be sent, post-paid, on receipt of $1.25, with order and address. E. D. BLAKEMAN,
Circleville, O.

The Evolution One Year Free

To any one ordering of me $5,00 worth of the works of A. B. Alcott, Louisa M. Alcott, Alger, Antoninus, Bagehot, Bain, Bartol, Bastian, C. T. Brooks, Buckle, Carpenter, W. E. Channing, E. D. Cheney, Clodd, Coulanges, Dall, Darwin, Emerson, Epictetus, Fish, Goethe, Gregg, Gibbon, Higginson, Howells, Huxley, International Scientific Series, S. Johnson, Lecky, Lessing, Lewes, Lubbock, Martineau, Mivart, Parton, Reade, Herbert Spencer, Tyndall, Weiss, and others. For further particulars, send 15 cents to THE EVOLUTION, 34 Dey street, New York.

TRUTH IS MIGHTY!
Professor Martinez, the great Spanish Seer and Wizard, will for 25¢ Cents, with your age, height, color of eyes and lock of hair, send to you a correct picture of your future husband or wife, full name of your future husband or wife, full name of your future husband or wife, the time and place where you will first meet, and the date of marriage. Address, Prof. MARTINEZ, 42 Province St., Boston, Mass. This is no humbug!

The Evolution for 1878 free

To any one sending me an order for $5 worth or more of any leading magazines (See Appleton's advertisement), or $10 worth of books.

The Evolution free two years to any one sending me an order for $10 worth or more of magazines, or $15 worth of books. All orders must be accompanied with the cash by registered letter, P. O. order, or draft on New York.

Send 15 cents for Evolution No. 16 and further particulars. Address, ASA K. BUTTS,
34 Dey Street.

FOR MASTERLY CRITICISM READ EDGAR FAWCETT'S articles in THE EVOLUTION.

Gems of Thought.

FROM the lowest depth there is a path to the loftiest height.—Carlyle.

I DID not give to the man (being reproached for giving to an unworthy one) I gave to humanity.—Aristotle.

THE grandest of heroic deeds are those which are performed within four walls and in domestic privacy.—Richter.

SCIENCE has done what skepticism failed to accomplish: it has given knowledge as a substitute for faith.—W. S. Bell.

THALES, being asked what was the most universal possession, answered, "Hope; for they have nothing else."—Epictetus.

SENSE shines with a double lustre when set in humility. An able and yet humble man is a jewel worth a kingdom.—William Penn.

INFIDELITY no longer synonyms with mere disbelief. Infidelity is synonymous with the knowledge and acceptance of the general rules of science.—W. S. Bell.

HEALTH, beauty, vigor, riches, and all the other things called goods, operate equally as evils to the vicious and unjust as they do as benefits to the just.—Plato.

No piled-up wealth, no social station, no throne, reaches as high as that spiritual plane upon which every human being stands by virtue of his humanity.—Chapin.

THE head truly enlightened will presently have a wonderful influence in purifying the heart; and the heart really affected with goodness will much conduce to the directing of the head.—Sprat.

NEVER believe to be right those who, having but a piece of metal in their hearts, would persuade you that to be cold is to be wise. Warmth is the vivifying influence of the Universe, and the heart is the source of noble deeds.—Kossuth.

HOPE is the ruddy morning ray of joy, recollection is the golden tinge; but the latter is wont to sink amid the dews and dusky shades of twilight; and the bright blue day which the former promises breaks indeed, but in another world, and with another sun.—Richter.

THERE is but one temple in the world, and that is the body of man. Nothing is holier than this high form. Bending before men is a reverence done to this revelation in the flesh. We touch heaven when we lay our hand on a human body.—Novalis.

THE heart has often been compared to the needle for its constancy; has it ever been so for its variations? Yet were any man to keep minutes of his feelings from youth to age, what a table of variations would they present! how numerous, how diverse, how strange!—Hare.

PUT it out of the power of truth to give you an ill character; and if anybody reports you not to be an honest man, let your practice give him the lie: and to make all sure, you should resolve to live no longer than you can live honestly; for it is better to be nothing than a knave.—Marcus Antoninus.

CLEOBULUS, being asked why he sought not to be advanced to honor and preferment, made this reply: "O friends, as long as I study and practice humility, I know where I am; but when I shall hunt after dignities and promotion, I am afraid I shall lose myself."—John Bate.

TRUE humanity consists not in a squeamish ear; it consists not in starting or shrinking at tales of misery, but in a disposition of heart to relieve it. True humanity appertains rather to the mind than to the nerves, and prompts men to use real and active endeavors to execute the actions which it suggests.—Fox.

HUMILITY is not a weak and timid quality. It must be carefully distinguished from a grovelling spirit. There is such a thing as an honest pride and self-respect. We should think something of our humanity, and not cast it under men's feet. Though we may be servants of all, we should be servile to none.—Chapin.

IN these days half our diseases come from the neglect of the body in the overwork of the brain. In this railway age the wear and tear of labor and intellect go on without pause or self-pity. We live longer than our forefathers, but we suffer more from a thousand artificial anxieties and cares. They fatigued only their muscles; we exhaust the finer strength of the nerves.—Lytton.

USED with due abstinence, hope acts as a healthful tonic; intemperately indulged, as an enervating opiate. The visions of future triumph, which at first animate exertion, if dwelt upon too intently, will usurp the place of the stern reality; and noble objects will be contemplated, not for their own inherent worth, but on account of the day-dreams they engender. Thus hope, aided by imagination, makes one man a hero, another a somnambulist, and a third a lunatic, while it renders them all enthusiasts.—Sir J. Stephen.

SOCIETY opens up to its unfortunates no pathway towards redemption. We want purity and valued citizenship. It gives them no hope in life, no opportunity to achieve respectability. Bigotry, superstition, and blind zeal have too long held sway in this matter, and it is high time that the light of science should step in to reveal to the world a better way, a more truthful solution of this serious problem. Let science reign! Let truth prevail! And though under its benign sway our rotten social structure may crumble away peacemeal until its present form shall be lost in oblivion, there will rise from its dust a more glorious edifice, suited to the need of a developed humanity.—Dr. Sara B. Chase.

Odds and Ends.

"THEY came here," said Artemus Ward of the Puritans, "that they might worship in their own way way, and prevent other people from worshiping in their'n."

A LITTLE girl, daughter of a clergyman, being left one day to "tend door," and obeying a summons of the bell, found a gentleman on the steps who wished to see her father. "Father isn't in," she said; "but if it's anything about your soul I caa attend to you. I know the whole plan of salvation."

A FEW Sundays since a teacher in the Sunday-school of an Episcopal church in Chicago said to one of her pupils, "James, what good thing—what great thing are you willing to give up as a sacrifice during the Lenten season?" James meditated about ten seconds and responded: "I think I'll give up going to Sunday-school."

SHE was a pretty little bundle of calico as any place can boast of, and as modest as a violet withal. So when her big cousin, throwing his foot over the back of a chair, said saucily, "You can't do that," she blushed with embarrassment. But after he went out she nearly uncoupled her bustle in trying to make her little gaiter boot form a parabola over the back of that chair.

"PRETTY WELL, THANK YOU."—"Why, howdy do, Mrs. Crippins; are all the folks pretty well?" asked one woman of another, in market, the other morning. "Oh, yes, tolerably so, thank you. Father is laid up with his side again, and mother's rheumatism has got so bad she hasn't been able to get down stairs for a week, and Martha Jane had another fit yesterday, and Billy cut his foot with a hatchet, and Tommy can't speak above a whisper for a sore throat, and Eliza has a gathering in her ears again, and the baby has had four spells of croup, and my husband can hardly work with his sore eyes, and I thought I'd die last night with a sick headache, but we're all about as well as common. How's your folks?"

HOW COL. INGERSOLL ANSWERED A CALVINISTIC ENQUIRER.—A sharp and Calvinistic clergyman having been introduced to Mr. Ingersoll, persisted in an attempt to draw him into a religious controvery, which Mr. Ingersoll tried to avoid. The clergyman, not to be foiled, said: "Mr. Ingersoll, I understand you to have said that you could change to advantage the fundamental laws which govern the Universe—which a wise Creator has ordained for man." "Yes," said the Colonel, "I have." "Now, sir," said his inquisitor, triumphantly, "will you be good enough to put your finger upon one single law of nature which your puny wisdom could improve?" "With all the pleasure in life," said the accommodating Colonel; "I would make health catching instead of disease."

AN EXCHANGE OF COURTESIES.—He was the manager of a church fair, and one morning he walked into the newspaper office and said: "Want an item this morning?"

"Of course," replied the editor, whereupon the visitor laid the following note upon the table:

"The ladies of the —— street church will give a festival at their vestry hall next Friday evening. Literary and musical entertainments will be provided, and a supper will be served to all who desire. The ladies in charge of the affair have much experience in such matters, and are sure to provide a good time. The admission will be only fifteen cents, and it is certain that no one can spend that amount to a better advantage. Be sure to go and take your friends."

When the editor had read it, he said: "Oh, I see, an advertisement."

"No, not an advertisement. We prefer to have it go in the local column," replied the manager. And seeing that the editor looked skeptical, he continued: "It will interest a great many of your readers, and help a good cause; besides we have spent so much money getting up our entertainment that we can't afford to advertise it without increasing the price of the tickets. In such a matter as this, we ought to be willing to help each other."

"Well," said the editor, "if it goes into the locals, I suppose you would reciprocate by reading a little notice in your church next Sunday." The visiting brother asked what notcie, and the editor wrote and handed him the following:

"The weekly Chronicle, for the coming year, will be the best and cheapest family paper in Maine. Its proprietor has had much experience, and has all the helps which a large outlay of money can procure. His paper has a larger circulation than any other published in the county, and is to be furnished at only two dollars. It is certain that no one can spend that amount to a better advantage. Be sure to take the Chronicle and subscribe for your friends."

The manager hemmed and hesitated, and and then said, solemnly, that he "doubted whether it would be judicious to read such a notice," but suggested that if it was printed, copies of it might be distributed at the door of the vestry on the evening of the entertainment.

"Yes," said the editor, "but it would attract more attention in the middle of a sermon. It will interest a large number of your congregation and help a good cause, and, besides, so much money is spent upon the Chronicle that I don't see how the owner can afford to print handbills to advertise it without increasing the subscription price. In such a matter as this, we ought to be willing to help each other."

Then the gentleman saw the situation, and went straight out, without so much as leaving a complimentary ticket.—Farmington, Me., Chronicle.

Truth Seeker Tracts.

No.	(REVISED LIST.)	Cts.
1.	Discussion on Prayer. D. M. Bennett and two Clergymen.	3
2.	Oration on the Gods. Ingersoll.	10
3.	Thomas Paine. "	5
4.	Arraignment of the Church. Ingersoll.	5
5.	Heretics and Heresies. "	5
5.	Humboldt, "	5
7.	The Story of Creation. Bennett.	5
8.	The Old Snake Story. "	2
9.	The Story of the Flood. "	5
10.	The Plagues of Egypt. "	2
11.	Korah, Datham, and Abiram. nnett.	2
12.	Balaam and his Ass. "	2
13.	Arraignment of Priestcraft. "	8
14.	Old Abe and Little Ike. Syphers.	3
15.	Come to Dinner. "	2
16.	Fog Horn Documents. "	2
17.	The Devil Still Ahead. "	2
18.	Slipped Up Again. "	2
19.	Joshua Stopping the Sun and Moon. D. M. Bennett.	2
20.	Samson and his Exploits. Bennett.	2
21.	The Great Wrestling Match. "	2
22.	Discussion with Elder Sheiton. "	10
23.	Reply to Elder Shelton's Fourth Letter. D. M. Bennett.	3
24.	Christians at Work. Wm. McDonnell.	5
25.	Discussion with Geo. Snode. Bennett.	5
26.	Underwood's Prayer.	1
27.	Honest Questions and Honest Answers. D. M. Bennett.	5
28.	Alessandro di Cagliostro. C. Sotheran.	10
29.	Paine Hall Dedication Address. B. F. Underwood.	2
30.	Woman's Rights & Man's Wrongs. Syphers.	2
31.	Gods and God-houses. "	2
32.	The God's of Superstition and the God of the Universe. D. M. Bennett.	8
33.	What has Christianity Done? Preston.	3
34.	Tribute to Thomas Paine.	2
35.	Moving the Ark. D. M. Bennett.	1
36.	Bennett's Prayer to the Devil.	2
37.	Short Sermon. Rev. Theologicus, D.D.	1
38.	Christianity not a Moral System. X. Y. Z.	3
39.	The True Saint. S. P. Putnam.	3
40.	Bible of Nature vs. The Bible of Men. J. Syphers.	3
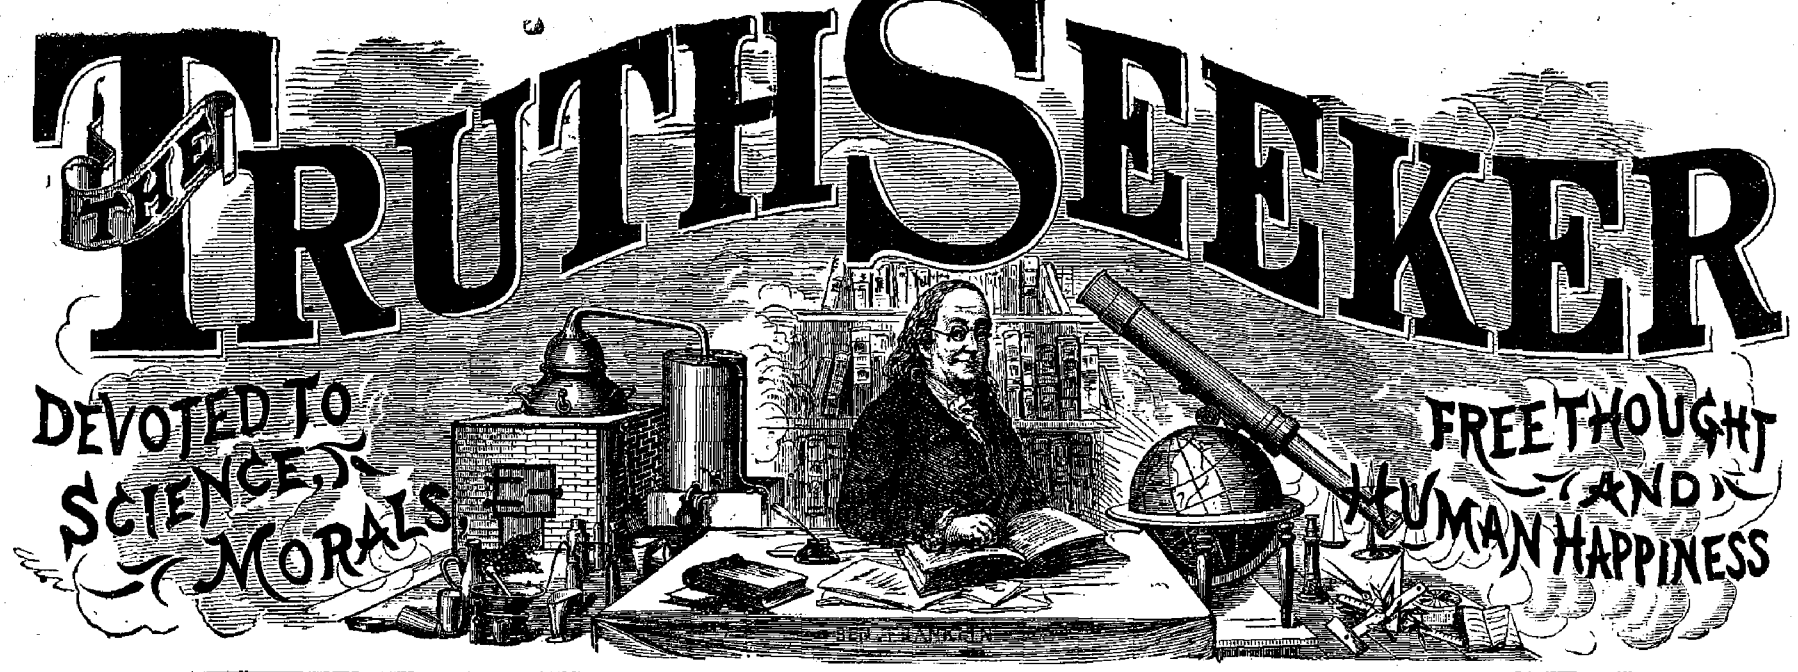
41.	Our Ecclesiastical Gentry, Bennett.	2
42.	Elijah the Tishbite. "	3
43.	Christianity a Borrowed System. "	3
44.	Design Argument Refuted. Underwood.	2
45.	Elisha the Prophet. Bennett.	3
46.	Did Jesus Really Exist? "	3
47.	Cruelty and Credulity of the Human Race. Dr. Daniel Arter.	5
48.	Freethought in the West, G. L. Henderson,	5
49.	Sensible Conclusions. E. E. Guild.	3
50.	Jonah and the Big Fish. D. M. Bennett.	1
51.	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 1.	5
52.	Marples-Underwood Debate, Underwood.	3
53.	Questions for Bible Worshipers. B. F. Underwood.	2
54.	An Open Letter to Jesus Christ. Bennett.	5
55.	The Bible God Disproved by Nature. W. E. Coleman.	8
56.	Bible Contradictions.	1
57.	Jesus Not a Perfect Character. Underwood.	2
58.	Prophecies.	2
59.	Bible Prophecies Concerning Babylon. B. F. Underwood.	2
60.	Ezekiel's Prophecies Concerning Tyre. B. F. Underwood.	2
61.	History of the Devil. Isaac Paden.	5
62.	The Jews and their God. "	10
63.	The Devils Due-Bills. John Syphers.	3
64.	The Ills we Endure—their Cause and Cure. D. M. Bennett.	2
65.	Short Sermon No. 2. Rev. Theologicus, D.D.	5
66.	God Idea in History. H. B. Brown.	5
67.	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets No. 2.	5
68.	Ruth's Idea of Heaven and Mine. Susan H. Wixon.	2
69.	Missionaries. Mrs. E. D. Slenker.	2
70.	Vicarious Atonement. J. S. Lyon.	3
71.	Paine's Anniversary. C. A. Codman.	3
72.	Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego. D. M. Bennett.	2
73.	Foundations. John Syphers.	3
74.	Daniel in the Lion's Den. Bennett.	2
75.	An Hour with the Devil. "	10
76.	Reply to Erastus F. Brown. D. M. Bennett.	3
77.	The Fear of Death. D. M. Bennett.	5
78.	Christmas and Christianity. D.M.Bennett.	5
79.	The Relationship of Jesus, Jehovah, and the Virgin Mary. W. E. Coleman.	2
80.	Address on Paine's 139th Birthday. Bennett.	5
81.	Hereafter, or the Half-way House. John Syphers.	1
82.	Christian Courtesy, Bennett.	2
83.	Revivalism Examined. Dr. A. G. Humphrey.	5
84.	Moody's Sermon on Hell. Rev. J. P. Hopps, London.	2
85.	Matter, Motion, Life and Mind. Bennett.	10
86.	An Enquiry about God's Sons. "	2
87.	Freethought Judged by its Fruits. B. F. Underwood.	1
88.	David, God's Peculiar Favorite. Mrs. E. D. Slenker.	3
89.	Logic of Prayer. Charles Stephenson.	3
90.	Biblo-Mania. Otter Cordates.	2
91.	Our Ideas of God. B. F. Underwood.	1
92.	The Bible; is it Divinely Inspired? Dr. D. Arter.	5
93.	Obtaining Pardon for Sins. Hudson Tuttle.	1
94.	The New Raven. Will Cooper.	5
95.	Jesus Christ. D. M. Bennett.	10
96.	Ichabod Crane Papers.	10
97.	Special Providences' W. S. Bell.	2
98.	Snakes. Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker.	2
99.	Do the Works of Nature prove a Creator? Sciota.	5
100.	The Old and the New. R. G. Ingersoll.	5
101.	110th Anniversary of Thomas Paine's Birthday. Bennett et als.	5
102.	The Old Religion and the New. W. S. Bell.	1
103.	Does the Bible Teach us all we Know. Bennet.	2
104.	Evolution of Isrsel's God. A. L. Rawson.	10
105.	Decadence of Christianity. Cappharo.	2
106.	Franklin, Washington and Jefferson Unbelievers. Bennett.	2
107.	The Safe Side. H. B. Brown.	5
108.	The Holy Bible a Historical Humbug. S. H. Preston.	1
109.	Ghosts. Ingersoll, 4 pp.	1
110.	Materialistic Prayer. Bennett, 4 pp.	1
111.	Reply to Scien tific American. Bennett,	1
112.	Sensible Sermon. Savage, 8 pp.	2
113.	Come to Jesus. Bennett. 8 pp.	2

SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

1.	Hereditary Transmission. Prof. Louis Elsberg, M.D.	5
2.	Evolution; from the Homogeneous to the Heterogeneous. B. F. Underwood.	3
3.	Darwinism. B. F. Underwood.	3
4.	Literature of the Insane. F. R. Marvin.	5
5.	Responsibility of Sex. Mrs. Chase, M.D.	3
6.	Graduated Atmospheres. J. McCarroll.	2
7.	Death. Frederic R. Marvin, M.D.	5
8.	How do Marsupial Animals Propagate their kind? A. B. Bradford.	5
9.	The Unseen World. Prof. John Fiske.	10
10.	The Evolution Theory — Huxley's Three Lectures.	10
11.	Is America the New World? L. L. Dawson.	10

Discount on one dollar's worth 10 per ct. off; on two dollars' worth 20 off; on five dollars' worth 40 off; on ten dollars' worth 50 off.

As few or as many of any given kind may be ordered as desired.



RADICAL BOOKS.

SENT POST PAID AT THE PRICES ANNEXED.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

Age of Reason. Paine. Paper covers.	25
" " " Cloth "	50
" " " and Ex. of Proph. Paper 50; cl.	75
A Few Days in Athens. Frances Wright.	75
Apocryphal New Testament.	1 25
An Eye Opener. Paper, 50; cloth,	75
Antiquity of Christianity. Alberger.	25
Analysis of Religious Belief. Viscount Amberly. $3.00, 4.00, and	4 50
Apples of Gold. Susan H. Wixon.	1 50
Anti-Theological Lectures. Rev. R. Taylor.	2 00
Antiquity and Duration of the World.	25
Astronomy and Worship of the Ancients.	25
A. J. Davis' Entire Works.	27.00
Adventures of Elder Triptolemus Tub.	15
Bible in India. Jacolliot.	2 00
Buckle's History of Civilization. 2 Vols., 8vo.	4 00
Burgess-Underwood Debate. 50 and	80
Bible in the Balance. Fish.	1 00
Bacon's Novum Organum.	2 00
Bhagvad-Gita, or Dialogues of Christna and Arjuna.	1 75
Buechner's Man, Prsent and Future.	4 00
Christianity before Christ. Craven.	25
Chapters from the Bibles of the Ages.	1 50
Criticism on the Theoligical Idea of Deity.	1 00
Childhood of Religion. Clodd.	1 25
Childhood of the World. Clodd, 40 and	60
Christianity and Materialism. Underwood.	15
Cause of Religious Ideas. Tuttle.	1 00
Conway's Sacred Anthology.	4 00
Colenso on the Pentateuch, Abstract of.	25
Devil's Pulpit, Rev. Robt. Taylor.	2 00
Diegesis	2 00
Denton's Irreconcilable Records,	50
" Our Planet, Past, Present, and Future,	1 50
" Radical Rhymes.	1 25
" Who are Christians, Deluge,
Denton's Common Sense Thoughts, Be Thyself, What is Right? Man's True Saviors, Sermon from Snakspere's Text, God Proposed, Spiritualism True, Orthodoxy False, 10 cents each.
Draper's Conflict between Religion and Science.	1 75
" Intellectual Development of Europe, 2 vols.,	3 00
Darwin's Origin of Species,	2 00
" Descent of Man, (Impr'd Ed.)	3 00
Descent and Darwinism, Schmidt,	1 50
Einstein's Origin of Religious Ideas,	1 00
Exeter Hall, Wm. McDonnell,	60 & 80
Errors of the Bible, Wright,	35 & 60
Essence of Religion. Fuerbach. 40 and	80
Eight Scientific Tracts.	20
Frothingham's Religion of Humanity,	1 50
" Child's Book of Religion,	1 00
" Stories of the Patriarchs,	1 00
" Safest Creed,	1 50
" Transcendentalism in New England,	2 5
Faraday's Various Forces of Nature.	2 0
Fiske 's Myths and Myth-Makers.	2 0
God Idea in History, Tuttle.	1 25
Good Sense, D'Holbach,	1 00
Gould's Curious Myths of the Middle Ages.	2 50
" Lost and Hostile Gospels.	3 25
Graves' Sixteen Crucified Saviors.	2 00
" Biography of Satan.	60
Grey's Enigmas of Life.	2 00
" Creeds of Christendom. 2 Vols.	7 50
Heroines of Freethought, Mrs. Underwood,	1 75
Heathens of the Heath, McDonnell.	1 00 & 150
Hume's Essays and Treatises,	1 50
Huxley's Lay Sermons,	1 75
" Man's Place in Nature,	1 25
" Critiques and Addresses,	1 50
History of all Religions Sects. Evans.	1 00
Haeckel's History of Creation. 2 Vols.	5 00
Hollick's Nerves and the Nervous.	1 00
Humboldt's Works.
Ingersoll's Gods and other Lectures. 30 and	50
" " etc., Large Edition.	1 25
Influence of Christianity on Civilization.	25
Infidels' Text Book, Cooper.	1 00
Jehovah Unveiled.	35
Jamieson's Clergy a Source of Danger.	1 00
Josephus' Complete Works.	2 50
Johnson's Oriental Religions. 8vo.	5 00
John's Way.	15
Kneeland's Review.	1 00
" Hymns.	35
Koran, with Notes and Life of Mahomet.	2 75
Lecky's Rationalism in Europe. 2 Vols.	4 00
" History of European Morals.	6 00
Life of Thomas Paine. Blanchard. p 50; cl	75
Lewes' Biographical History of Philosophy.	8 50
" Problems of Life and Mind.	3 00
Lizzie Doten's Poems of Progress, and Inner Life, each	150
Lubbock's Origin of Civilization,	2 00
" Pre-Historic Times Illustrated.	6 00
Lyell's Elements of Geology, 770 cuts.	3 40
" Principles " " 2 vols. and maps.	8 00
Monks and Popes. Alberger.	1 00
Morley's Life of Voltaire,	2 00
Martyrdom of Man. Winwood Reade.	3 00
Peeble's All Around the World,	2 50
" Seers of the Ages.	2 50
Plato's Divine and Moral Works,	2 20
Pro and Con of Supernatural Religion,	30 & 50
Physical Man, Tuttle.	1 50
Paine's Common Sense.	12
" Crisis. Paper, 50; cloth	80
" Rights of Man. Paper, 50; cloth	80
" Theological Works, with portrait	1 50
" " " paper,	1 00
" Political Works, cloth,	1 50
" Great Works Complete. Crown octavo, with life and portrait.	3
" Political Works, steel portrait.	1 5
" Life, by Calvin Blanchard with portrait Paper, 50; cloth	75
Parturition without Pain,	1 00
Plain Home Talk and Medical Common Sense, E. B. Foote, M.D.,	1 50
Proctor's Six Lectures on Astronomy,	20
Reason, the only Oracle of Man, Ethan Allen	60
Syntagma, Taylor,	1 00
System of Nature, D'Holbach,	2 00
Self-Contradictions of the Bible,	25
Studying the Bible, Mrs. Slenker,	75
Spencer's (Herbert) Entire Work,
Strauss' Old Faith and New.	2 00
" New Life of Jesus, 2 vols.,	12 00
Supernatural Religion, 2 Vols., 8vo.,	8 00
Sexual Physiology, Trall,	2 00
Talleyrand's Letter to Pope Pius vii.	25
Tyndall' (Prof. John) Entire Works.
The Christ of Paul,	2 00
The Case against the Church.	75
The Relations of the Sexes. Mrs. Duffey,	2 00
The Voices, Warren Sumner Barlow.	1 25
The World's Sages, Infidels, and Thinkers, Bennett. $3 00, $4 00, and	4 50
The Champions of the Church, Bennett $3 00, $4 00, and	4 50
Thirty Discussions, Bible Stories, etc., 75 &	1 00
Truth Seeker Tracts, Vols. I, II, III, and IV., by the lot, 50 &	75
The Truth Seeker Collection of Forms, Hymns, and Recitations.	75
The Outcast, Winwood Reade,	30
Talks with My Patients, Mrs. Gleason, M.D.,	1 50
Underwood-Marples Debate.	35 & 50
Underwood's Twelve Tracts.	20
Vestiges of Creation.	75
Volney's Ruins.	1 00
Volney's New Researches in Ancient History.	1 50
Voltaire's Philosophical Dictionary.	5 00

THE TRUTHSEEKER

Vol. 5. No. 4. {PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY D. M. BENNETT.} New York, Saturday, January 26, 1878. {SCIENCE HALL, 141 8th St., NEAR BROADWAY.} $3 per Year.

Notes and Clippings.

In agony of spirit the Worcester Press cries out: "If there isn't any hell, where does the Devil hang out?"

The doctrine that "cold is death and heat is life" is said to explain the enigma why a soul that goes to hell never dies.

Mr. Comstock is now enjoying himself in the happy land of "New Canaan," Conn. A new "Canaan" is what he fears.—Telegram.

A Nice Distinction.—The difference between a model woman and a woman model is; one is a bare possibility and the other is a naked fact.

A Massachusetts little girl thinks "God ought to be very glad when prayer-meeting night comes, 'cause he hears such lots of news."

"It seems appropriate," said the officiating clergyman, "that we should sing, 'I would not live alway'; it was a great favorite of the remains."

A minister in New Orleans is said to be worth half a million dollars. It is stated that he has very little to say about camels, needles' eyes, etc.

The New Orleans Picayune says if Adam could have had a happy home in which to hang up his Christmas stockings, he might have become a better man.

The Bible says: "Of all things, wisdom is profitable to man." Probably that is so. A man rarely calls his wife a bald-headed old jade the second time.

The Worcester Press says clergymen prefer leather slippers, for they can be parboiled and used to impart an animal flavor to the oyster soup wherewith donation parties are satisfied.

The Cincinnati Saturday Night says, "The Episcopal divine, Canon Farrar, of Westminster Abbey, expresses a belief in hell, but if you adopt his views you may go Farrar and fare worse."

Thus says the World, "In the bright, new American Cyclopædia there's no such word as "Hell." Is this a conspiracy to defraud the American people out of its latest inalienable grievance?"

A Springfield preacher has discoursed on the question, "Ought a Methodist to Dance?" Puck says: "We don't know about a Methodist, but we do think a Baptist ought not to be absolutely ignorant of the Boston dip."

Consolation in the Hour of Death.—"Now," sobbed a fisherman, as a passenger packet went crashing on the rocks in the storm and darkness. "Now," he exclaimed, raising his hands to heaven and falling on his knees, "Now, thank heaven, my wife and daughters can have good clothes and jewelry to wear to church."

Anthony Comstock of the Y. M. C. A., and of the Society for the Suppression of Vice, wrote thus from Washington to a Doctor in this city: Dear Doctor: "I was seduced about four months ago,' and am now about three months gone in the family way." Mr. Comstock is endorsed as a "good Christian" and he ought certainly to speak the truth. Poor fellow!

Col. Robt. G. Ingersoll will speak at Chickering Hall in this city on the evening of the 29th inst.—anniversary of Thomas Paine's 141st Birthday—and no other observance of the day will probably be made in this city. We presume our Christain friends are duly prepared to be horrified at the Colonel's utterances, though it is morally certain that he will not speak an untruth or inculcate an immoral sentiment.

In his sermon of Jan. 20th Mr. Beecher gave utterance to the following statements, which are none the less true for coming from him: "The conditions of society keep the masses in a heated nervous, struggling condition. The barriers of society are among the strongest to keep men in place in a civilized community. There is not a man in this church, nor a woman either, who dare defy them. No adequate provision has been made in Church or State for the elevation of men who have not enough will-stamina to act as independent individuals. There have been more quarrels and more wars on account of religion than there ever were from any other cause. If the Church had been left in the hands of the priesthood it would have gone to the devil long ago. They have no sympathy with anything that combats their ideas."

The Congregationalist says of the Rev. George Muller: "He is great in organizing faculty. He is bland and unctuous. He appears to be an 'oily man' of philanthropy. He wins upon the women." It adds that his tour through this country is a gigantic advertisement of his orphanage. On the other hand, the National Baptist sets Mr. Muller down as one of the most truly meek men on earth, and says that he has at various times refused vast sums which have been offered him as a compensation for sitting for his photograph.

The Rev. M. Macrae of Scotland is in trouble with his Presbytery, by reason of having asked questions which the Presbytery hesitates to answer. The questions were as to whether elders on being admitted to office should be required formally to accept the statements in the Confession of Faith as to the creation of the world in six days, and as to the everlasting puntshment of the non-elect. The first statement is that "God did make of nothing the world and all things therein, for himself, within the space of six days, and all very good." Concerning election the statement is that "by the decree of God, for the manifestation of his glory, some men and angels are predestinated unto everlasting death." Not only did the Presbytery refuse to answer Mr. Macrae's question, but actually directed the Moderator to administer to him an official reprimand for his presumption in asking such things. Macrae accepted his reprimand, and subsidsd.

An eastern paper contains the following police report: In the police court this morning William R. Dean was up, for lascivious carriage before three little girls, between the ages of six and ten years. He has been employed in the Young Men's Christian Association building as a carpenter, and he had enticed the little girls into an unoccupied room in the upper part of the building, and had acted before them in a most indecent manner. His defense raised the plea of moral insanity. He was fined $7 and costs in one case, which he paid, and the other case was continued until Feb. 1st, Mr. J. E. Durand giving bonds in $100 for his appearance at that time. He has been guilty of the same offense at three different times before, but these were privately settled. Mr. Dean is a life member of the Y. M. C. Association, and has always taken a prominent part in church and temperance matters. He may not be of sound mind, but such a monster should not be allowed to go at large, and exert a corrupting influence upon young children. If not sent to jail, he should, for the sake of morality, be sent to an asylum. Parents cannot exercise too close a watch over the associations of their children, when outside of their home. Such events as these convey a warning which should not be neglected. It is very unfortunate that when such things as these happen, they are from a source from which such things are least expected, and their tendency is therefore to bring discredit upon respectable people.

The Devil and Bob Ingersoll.—It is with the grief of one who sees the old landmarks removed and the fond beliefs of a lifetime suddenly subverted that I behold the cold-water streams of modern theology now being poured upon the fires of hell. It is plain that the devil is about to be drowned out, and his whole domain abandoned for swamp land. It may be counted mawkish sympathy extended to an unworthy object, but, notwithstanding, there comes a pang of feeling for Old Nick, who, in his old age, is thus dispossessed and turned adrift upon a cold, cold world, where the mercury never rises above one hundred and forty degrees. The question is, Where is the devil to go? A collateral question is, Where is Bob Ingersoll to go? but this, of course, is of minor importance. His satanic majesty has, by common consent, been recognized for many thousand years as the proprietor of an extensive reservation set down on the map as "Hell." He has always offered the most liberal inducements to immigrants. Settlers have always gone there of their own free will, and seem always to be satisfied, for none of them ever come back. Insinuations are made, to be sure, that water can be struck only at very low depths, but then the pumps are never known to freeze, and, as far as known, the proprietor has never stolen an armful of wood from any adjacent territory, although he keeps up warm fires the year round. Then, why this sudden and unreasonable attempt at dispossession? And will not the next attempt be made against heaven itself? If hell be thus recklessly made desolate through the rashness of mortal man, how long before a raid will be made on the abode of the blest? If the descendant of the Darwinian ape can, on this lowly fulcrum, earth, and with no longer lever than his tongue, upset the time-honored kingdom of the devil, what assurance but that he will next give the kingdom of his master a tip? Prometheus stole fire from heaven and was severely punished. How much greater should be the punishment of those who maliciously design to rob hell of its chief staple and stock in trade? Let an end be put, by legislation or otherwise, to this theological nonsense. Let us let the devil alone and turn our attention to cleaning out the innumerable small hells which infest this earth of ours.—Chicago Times.

The following is from Dr. Foote's Health Monthly: Bennett Case Dismissed.—On the 5th of January, on motion of Assistant District-Att'y Herrick, before Commissioner Shields, the proceedings against Mr. Bennett were dismissed. This course was doubtless taken because of the general uprising of Mr. Bennett's friends against the injustice of such prosecutions in a country which boasts of freedom of conscience and freedom of press. We have been enabled to draw one lesson from it. When we were prosecuted our counsel advised silence, and to such an extent was this policy pursued we were accused by one of the evening papers of having paid $100 to reporters to keep all allusion to the case out of the press. What did leak out in the court news and through the associated press brought us daily letters burning with indignation from the best people in the land. When, at last, it was generally announced by the press that we were convicted, we were inundated with letters of sympathy from every part of the country for months, until finally heart-felt echoes came from far-off Australia. Meanwhile letters from influential citizens, and many from our best physicians, poured in upon the judge who was to pronounce sentence pleading for a light punishment. When the fine of $3,500 was imposed short call loans were sent in to us by our friends to meet the fine, and thus keep us out of jail. Then followed remittances from our grateful and sympathizing patients, of various sums from $1.00 to $20.00 for our Health Monthly and the fine, till we received fully $1,000 above the printing and postal expenses attending the publication of our two supplements giving full account of our trial, etc. Now, had there been no attempt to conceal the unjust proceedings, for we had done and published absolutely nothing of which we were ashamed, the indignation of our friends and patients would have been felt before the case assumed such unwarrantably large proportions in what are called the "halls of justice." Silence was a mistake; but it was impossible for our counsel to comprehend till the very moment of the jury's verdict, that the prosecution had a "case." They could not be made to believe that we would be convicted and punished for an offense which was morally a virtue, and which a large body of intelligent people in every part of the world openly endorsed as such, especially when the proof on one count was inadequate and the decision of the jury on the other depended upon opinion which is widely and honestly divided in the community at large. We congratulate Mr. Bennett on his release from the merciless clutches of the law. His friends have done well for him in bestirring themselves and using both personal influence and money for his defense. His defense fund grew rapidly, and had the case gone on would have amounted to a sum fully sufficient to have paid for a strong, and, if necessary, protracted struggle with the adversaries of a free press.

Events of the Week.

Five hundred tailors have struck in Chicago.

Senator Morrissey in Florida is still improving in health.

Stanley, the explorer of Africa, has been tendered a reception in Paris.

The silver men claim fifty-two votes in the Senate. They are feeling very jubilant.

An oil refinery and a large quantity of oil was destroyed by fire in Wheeling, W. Va.

Samuel Bowles, the well-known editor of The Springfield Republican, after a lingering and painful illness, is dead.

Fifteen steamships left this port for Europe this week. The export of Breadstuffs is very active. Freights are good.

Peter Cooper, while driving in Greenpoint on the 22d, accidentally run over a boy ten years old and injured him somewhat seriously.

One thousand tons of coal have been distributed among the poor of this city since the commencement of winter. The coldest half is doubtless before us.

After a term of very open weather with warm rain it has suddenly turned cold, and the prospects are that ice may be made for next summer's creams and cobblers.

King Alphonso of Spain was married to Princess Mercedes on the 23d inst. The ceremony took place in the Atocha Cathedral, and the event was celebrated with great pomp.

The war upon rum has been very active in some Connecticut towns. The raid upon the liquor-dealers is generaled by the Rev. Mr. Buckley, Methodist, formerly Catholic. The spy system has been adopted. Buckley has been arrested which is said to have increased the fervor of the temperance party.

More failures are constantly taking place, among others, the large drug and medicine house of John F. Henry, Curran & Co. Within the last few days, the leather houses, usually considered about the safest business going, have many of them gone to the wall. These last disasters are especially bad in Philadelphia.

The Chinese question is all the excitement in San Francisco. Some 50,000 men are out of work, and they are feeling very bitter toward their Celestial competitors. They are holding meetings nearly every night, and the police and military are obliged to be continually on the alert to prevent outbreaks and attacks on the Chinese. Petitions have been gotten up to present to Congress asking relief for the working classes.

A serious railroad accident happened several days ago near Tarriffville, Conn., by the giving way of a bridge, precipitating a loaded train into the abyss below. Thirty persons were killed outright and many more badly injured. They were returning from a Moody & Sankey meeting and it puzzles believers in a special Providenceo to tell whether Providence was displeased with their attending the meeting, or whether they did not remain long enough, or whether as a crowd they were as near converted as they ever would be, and so it was deemed best to take them off before they relapsed into sinfulness. The ways of that mysterious personage are exceedingly inscrutable.

The Russians are playing havoc with the poor Turks. They have been pushing them south, step by step, till none of the Ottoman forces are north of the Balkan mountains. A severe battle took place on the 16, 17 and 18th inst, between Gen. Gourko, on the Russian side, and Sulieman Pasha, on the Turkish side. The Turks were finally driven into Rhodope mountains, with a loss of 4,000 men and 49 guns. The Russians will probably next attack Adrianople, and then Constantinople, which must fall before them. The Turks are dispirited, demoralized, and in destitution. The sufferings now being endured in that distracted country is fearful to contemplate. The Russians are too young and powerful a nation to long be withstood by such an effete nation as the Turks. The fittest must survive.

Radical Romance.

The Darwins.

BY MRS. ELMINA D. SLENKER.

"And didn't you see Mr. Darwin, or Willie?" asked Sue.

"No. Mrs. Darwin apologized for their absence, saying they were busy fixing up the machinery in the factory so as to have it ready in time for the wool-clipping season, and said they seldom came in till it was too late to see to work any longer."

"Well, Edith," said Jennie, "I must confess I'm rather favorably impressed by what you say of the Darwins, and if I thought they would call on you Sunday, I would come over."

"Well, come anyhow; if they do not happen to be here, we'll practice that new song you wished to learn," said Edith.

"And poor me! I must stay at home and read 'Baxter's Call to the Unconverted,' or some other of the dry, musty, old volumes which compose the family library," said Sue. "I declare it's too bad! I wish there wasn't any Sunday at all."

"You had far better wish that everybody was at liberty to enjoy the day as they pleased, whether in work, recreation, or pleasure," said Edith seriously. "It is a pity your father is so strict with you, for I'm sure there is no harm in taking a walk, or calling on a friend on Sunday, any more than on any other day. The Bible says the Sabbath was made for man, and surely we ought to be allowed to use it as we think best. But of course you will obey your father in all things reasonable as long as you remain under his roof."

"Well, I don't know about that. He is naturally so unreasonable that I never can tell when it is right for me to obey, and I sometimes think a few more years of such training as his will fit me for the lunatic asylum," replied Sue, with a sigh.

"No danger of that," said Edith, smiling. "As long as you jump over the traces as often as you have done of late, you will find enough outside amusement to keep your brain all right. It's none of my business, you know, but I am well aware who it is that rides over to N—— every few weeks and dances till the wee small hours, while her parents think her quietly sleeping in her little chamber."

"Yes, and a nice time there'll be some day about it, too. Bill and Sam—the twins, you know—were off skating one Sunday a few weeks ago, and the ice was so thin I was terribly uneasy about them, and when they came back I told them if they went again I'd tell father. They said, 'Tell away if you want to: we can tell things, too. You needn't think we don't know that you have been to five balls this winter.' I had to promise to keep quiet then; and so it goes all the time. It's one continual fuss about something or other, and a perpetual covering up and hiding, till I'm so sick of shams that I often wish that everybody had to live in literal glass houses without a curtain at all to them."

"It's a funny idea, Sue, but it would doubtless vastly add to the morality of some of us if we knew our every act was thus laid open to public criticism," said Edith.

"A nice time we would have with father, though, in the glass house," remarked Sue, with a grimace. "He is always grumbling now from morning till night, and continually finding fault with some of us, and what would he do if he could see all that goes on!"

"I don't suppose he could well do more than grumble all the time," and Edith laughed archly and mischievously at her little troubled friend, though in her heart she really pitied and sympathized with her.

"Ah, me! I do so long for a few gleams of real sunshine in our home," said Sue, after a moment's pause. "You don't know how bare, cold, and desolate it looks after I have been to call on some friend, who, like yourself, lives in the very midst of brightness and beauty. Father will not even let us cultivate flowers. He says he will not have them in the way darkening all the windows; and out of doors he gives us no chance, for he pastures his horse right in the front yard, and pulls up every one we plant in the garden, saying we had better set a cabbage there, or put out a potato hill. And he will not allow us to play games—not even fox and geese. I do wonder if he was never young himself, that he insists on us having old heads on young shoulders?"

"What can't be bettered must be borne, and should be borne as cheerfully as possible for one's own sake, as well as for others," said Edith kindly. But had she chosen to do so, she could have made Sue open her blue eyes wide with astonishment, for her mother and the Deacon had both spent their younger days in one of the southern counties of the State, and had, by chance, again drifted together at P——, members of the same church and the same community once more. Therefore Mrs. May knew all his antecedents, and had acquainted Edith with his former history. She had told her that the now sober and sedate old deacon had not only been wild and reckless in his earlier life, but absolutely lawless. He spent the Sabbath hours in all sorts of amusements; robbed orchards and water-melon patches; stole nuts, and everything else that was eatable; drank liquor to great excess; and, worse than all, he had seduced the only daughter of a poor widow and left her to raise his child as best she could, and to drag out the remainder of her life a sad, lonely, broken-hearted woman, neither maid, wife nor widow, and belonging to no class of society save to outcasts, with whom she refused to associate, preferring even isolation to further wrong-doing. But all this was kept quiet by Edith and her mother, for they could not see that any good would result from its being known, and therefore let things take their course, aware that right generally triumphs in the end, and the good things of life preponderate over the evil.

Sunday came, and as it was unusually mild, pleasant and warm, Edith and Jennie sat out in the little porch and watched for the expected visitors. They soon saw Mrs. Darwin coming up the garden walk accompanied by a tall, fine-looking gentleman whom she introduced to the girls as Mr. Darwin. Edith led them through the hall into the sitting-room, where her mother, a pleasant-looking old lady, sat in a comfortable arm-chair reading some magazine. Edith presented her new friends, and soon after Jennie came in and was presented to Mr. Darwin. They all fell into a pleasant sociable chat, soon feeling like old acquaintances and real friends. After an hour or so, Edith slipped out and brought in a lunch of cakes, and cream, and apples and some water in a beautiful silver pitcher which she told her new friends she had received the day before from her class of pupils, who had given it as a testimonial of their good-will and esteem for one who had proved not only a good teacher but a true friend to each and all of them.

"Yes," said Mrs. May, with her motherly pride, "all Edith's pupils love her, and it seems as if they could not do enough to show their appreciation of her, and well they may, for she is mother, friend and companion to them. She grudges no labor or expense that will add to their happiness or improvement."

Edith blushed a bit at her mother's words, but soon recovering from her embarrassment she invited her guests to eat something after their walk. "Perhaps," said she, after all had been helped to a generous supply, "perhaps I ought to apologize for not treating you to wine, as it is so customary to do in this place, but temperance has always been one of my mother's hobbies and I have followed in her footsteps, only more so."

"No apology is needed," said Mrs. Darwin, "we, too, are strongly opposed to all kinds of spirituous liquors. We do not even make home-made wine, nor beer, nor cider. Some think us almost fanatical on the subject, but if we do err I wish to err on the right side. Liquor has been the cause of so much misery and wretchedness in the world that I often wish the art of making it could be forgotten."

"It would soon be learned again," said Mr. Darwin, "for the juice of berries or fruit of any kind, if sweetened and left to stand awhile, will ferment and become alcoholic; therefore, if we wish to do away with strong drink we shall be obliged to try some other mode than forgetting how to make it."

"And what would be your plan, Mr. Darwin?" asked Edith, earnestly.

"Well, if liquor must be had, and it is useful for preserving specimens of curious animals and perhaps in many other arts, I should say, have it made by such persons as government should appoint. Have it made perfectly pure and unadulterated. Sell it at a stipulated price, so there would not be much profit accruing from it to the manufacturers, or any who should buy or sell it. Let those who make the liquor have regular wages, and let what little profit there might be go to the government, just at it does from the making of postage stamps or greenbacks. If no one could sell it for more than the government did there would be no motive for any one to traffic in it. Who will try to make money by buying and selling postage stamps?'"

"But, Mr. Darwin, I don't see as your plan would better it much, for all could get it that wanted it, just as we all get stamps when we wish to," said Edith.

"True, but you see if people only got it in that way, and no one made money by it, there would be an end to all the rum-shops and other places of temptation. Then education would do away with the rest in a very little while. Once get people generally to see that liquor is not food, strength, or nourishment, and entirely valueless as a remedial agent and that it is moreover, really injurious to the system, both mentally and physically, and few would touch it."

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Freedom of Thought.

Has a man the right to think for himself? Protestantism answers "Yes," but it adds thereafter, "to think as Protestants do!" From whence came the right of a church to dictate what a man shall think or believe? Is not a church an aggregation of men, and does a body of men acquire a right not possessed by them as individuals? Can they as a whole arrive at a truth which they cannot as individuals?

Having a body carries with it the right to use that body for its natural uses, and having a mind gives the right to use that mind—to think. We have a right to believe or disbelieve whatever we please; to read such books as may interest us, to listen to such discourses, to write or speak as we please, subject only to the limitation that in so doing we do not interfere with others' rights in the same direction.

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Discussion.

The Bennett-Teed Discussion.

I.—JESUS CHRIST IS NOT ONLY DIVINE, BUT IS THE LORD GOD, CREATOR OF HEAVEN AND EARTH.

MR. BENNETT'S SIXTH REPLY.

MR. CYRUS ROMULUS R. TEED, My Dear Sir: It seems to me you are making slow progress in establishing that Jesus was the Creator of Heaven and Earth, and I am not a little amused at your process and efforts in that direction.

In the first place you admit that Matter or Substance or something was never made or created by anybody or any power. That admission ought to be conclusive at all events that Jesus did not do it.

In the second place you assume that there is an ever-existing coördinating mind, that has ever-existed as matter has done,—that it did not originate matter nor create it, but that ultimately it must dominate it and that this eternal mind is Jesus Christ. Now if you could succeed in showing that this grand speculation of an eternal mind had the slightest foundation in fact, you fall far short of proving that it created the Universe, because you have already admitted that the Universe was not created and was never creatable; that this eternal mind is only co existent with eternal matter, and that neither created the other. So if I yield to you that there is an eternal mind that has ever existed, and that the name of that mind is Jesus, you still fail to show that he created the Universe or the heavens and the earth, for you only claim at most that matter and mind are co-existent and co-eternal. So your first proposition inevitably falls to the ground.

Though a certain beauty pertains to your speculation as a theory, it is utterly deficient in the matter of proof. This original mind is very pretty to think of and talk about, but it is utterly impossible to find, except in the imagination. You say it is a substance, a reality, but you entirely fail to produce a particle of it. Before I can grant you the existence of any form of substance, you must produce some of it and prove to me that it has an existence. Your manner of proving such an all-important theorem as the existence of a self-existent, eternal, coördinating mind by a beautiful, aerial, metaphysical, visionary theory is entirely unsatisfactory, and cannot be granted. If there is such a form of substance that coexists and coördinates with matter at all times and everywhere, you ought to be able to produce some of it and apply scientific tests to it.

I fully agree with you as to the various forms of matter; of the relative gravity or levity of platinum, gold, silver, water, atmosphere, and hydrogen, which you so clearly illustrated. All these forms of matter have an absolute existence; they can be found, exhibited, and tested. So have light, heat, attraction, cohesion, electricity, magnetism, luminiferous ether an existence. Some of them are forms of matter and some of them are forces inherent in matter and inseparable from it. All have a real existence, and can all be produced and submitted to actual scientific tests that every rational man is bound to accept. But the individualized "mind-substance" which you theorize about and speculate upon has no real existence. You cannot prove it; you cannot produce it; you cannot apply any tests to it that will satisfy a practical mind. You can only assert that it exists. The world, during the reign of darkness and superstition, was long content to accept these assertions as facts, but now men want something more than assertion; they call for proofs.

You are simply engaged in the same kind of employment that theologians and god-makers have been engaged in for thousands of years, only you occupy a somewhat more elevated and intellectual plane. Your theory is not so crude as theirs, but wherein you have any more authority for claiming the existence of your god than the dwellers in Africa have for theirs, I cannot understand. You and they alike tell me a theory which I cannot comprehend, and alike you fail to give me the slightest proof that your theories have any foundation in fact. Your gods are alike uncatchable, untraceable, unprovable, unknowable. Unless you can produce some of this ever-prevailing, ever-existing, coördinating substance called mind, God, or Jesus, do not ask me any more to believe in it or to accept it. I deny its existence, and I call upon you for proof that it does exist. Unless you can bring proofs to sustain it, you must abandon it, however much you may be fascinated with the idea. Until you can produce mind not the result of organized matter, you must not ask me to believe in it.

Even could you overcome the impossibility of producing a moiety of this original, omnipresent, independent mind that you tell me of, you will find the greatest difficulty in identifying it with the Jewish Jesus, who is said to have come into existence nearly nineteen hundred years ago. You can only do so in theory, and by that process you could just as easily make it Mumbo Jumbo, Mohammed, or Joe Smith. In the first place, the personal existence of the man Jesus is at best extremely hypothetical. There is nothing to base the story of his advent into the world upon save the accounts ascribed to Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John, and they are so contradictory and uureliable that little dependence can be placed upon them. It is now pretty well known that neither of the books was heard of till nearly two hundred years after the time when Jesus is said to have been born. This simple fact proves that so far as Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John being the authors of those narratives is concerned, the claim is utterly false. And if that important part is false—if they were not written by the parties claimed as their authors—what possible assurance have we that the entire story is not a complete fabrication? If I should assure you that a certain John Jones wrote a narrative about the miraculous life and adventures of Samuel Smith, and you should afterwards discover that the narrative was not written until Jones had been dead more than a hundred years, you would be fully justified in discarding the story about Smith as an utter fabrication.

The whole story of Jesus and his remarkable conception upon the person of a young maiden is a mere reproduction of the fable about the virgin and child which is well-known to have been believed in in India, Egypt and other countries fully a thousand years before the dawn of Christianity, The conception of the virgin and child is one of the oldest in the human race, and formed a part of the framework of many ancient systems of religion.

The life ascribed to Jesus was as near like the Christna of India, Buddha, and many others who were believed in many hundreds of years before his supposed advent into the world, and who also performed miracles, had disciples and followers, and taught beautiful morals, that his story seems a mere plagiarism of theirs. Why, there are in the religious systems of the old pagan world near forty demi-gods or sons of gods, who were miraculously born and who performed miraclulous deeds, and nearly half of them are said to have been crucified for the salvation of mankind. The belief that demi-gods existed who had gods for fathers and virgins for mothers, was old nineteen hundred years ago, and that they had been crucified as an expiation for the sins of the world was equally antique. Neither the manner of conception nor of death, as applied to Jesus, has the virtue of originality. Both were borrowed ideas, as nearly all the dogmas of the religions of the world have been borrowed from prëxisting systems, Nothing is truer or more susceptible of proof than this. Christianity is no exception to this rule, and I defy you to name a single tradition, dogma, rite, sacrament or point of belief in the Christian religion that was not hundreds of years earlier taught in other systems of faith. If you wish the names of these gods and demi-gods born of virgins or in a miraculous manner, who led extraordinary lives and performed miraculous deeds, and were finally crucified hundreds of years before the Jewish Jesus, I will cheerfully give them to you.

The morals of Christianity are no more original than its story, the beatitudes ascribed to Jesus, his most beautiful sentiments, and the "golden rule," which is claimed to be par excellence above every other moral principle, were taught by other sages and reformers hundreds of years before his advent into the world. If he was the son of God and possessed powers and abilities which no man before him ever possessed, it is most singular that he was under the necessity of following in the exact footsteps of the old pagan myths, some of whom had preceded him a thousand years, who performed as much or more than he performed, and gave sentiments as wise, as sound, as deep, as moral, and as beautiful as anything he uttered. I tell you, Brother Teed, the entire story of the life and adventures of Jesus, whom you would have me believe is the creator not only of this little globe and all there is upon it, but of millions of other suns and worlds, is nothing more than a rehash or a reproduction of the old fables and traditions ascribed to other similar characters thousands of years ago, and I am surprised that a man of your intelligence is not sufficiently aware of the fact to keep you from joining the clerical aristocracy who have a great bread and butter interest in still holding up these fables that were old twenty-five hundred years ago. Your mind is capable of grasping something better and truer, and you ought to do it. The world is searching for something grander and higher than the myths, creations and absurdities of thousands of years past, and you ought to be one capable of teaching a better class of truths. Oh, cast away the errors and legends of the dark ages of our race and embrace fully the great truths of science and progress now being brought to light! Cease dabbling in moonshine idealities, and take hold of the solid, substantial truths of nature.

I do not say there was not a person by the name of Jesus who once lived in Palestine. There might have been several. It was a common name and is said to be synonymous with Joshua. In Spain and Mexico it is common to-day. If, however, there was such a character as Jesus, I can only accept him as a man. If we divest ourselves of all that feeling of reverence which we have been trained to feel for him, and the mythical characteristics that have been accorded him, he becomes a person of only common abilites. Numbers of men have lived in the world who possessed greater powers of mind, who had more information, more strength of character, who accomplished far more in life and left a more brilliant record behind them than did Jesus the Jew. In my honest opinion, there are very grave doubts whether such a person ever had an actual existence. If he did, and he was the character he is represented to have been, and he performed the great deeds ascribed to him, it is very strange that it is not corroborated by any other writers than the mythical Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John. That such a person lived cannot be proved by any sacred or profane writer or historian of his time. The short paragraph in Josephus making mention of him was long ago, by the highest Christian authorities, admitted to be an interpolation—a forgery. Thus, the whole story of the life of that person you claim created the Universe rests only on the unsupported narrations of four doubtful characters who died fully a hundred years before their writings had an existence. So, my friend, if you succeed in the herculean task of convincing me that the grand old Universe was devised and created by any being or person, you will have hard work in convincing me that Jesus was the man who did it.

There are some arguments, points, and questions in your last letter deserving of attention. You take me to task for saying it seems consistent that the Universe is infinite and then turn and ask me how I know it. I did not pretend to know it. I never was at the confines of the Universe, and consequently I cannot know how it is. But it is far easier to conceive that space is infinite, boundless, than to imagine that it has limits beyond whch there is no space. It is the same with the Universe. It is far easier for my mind to grasp the theory that it is infinite than that it extends only to some wall or boundary line where it stops, and beyond which there is no Universe. My belief is that space is without bounds, and that wherever space is, there matter exists in some form, and that all matter and its inherent forces and all space constitute the Universe. You may imagine limits to it if you are able, but I cannot; but I do not pretend to know whether it has limits or not.

Your catching at my use of the word "form" as applied to the Universe, implying limit, does not seem to amount to very much. Every atom or molecule in the Universe has form. Every combination and organization has form, every world and sun has form, every planetary system and stellar constellation has form; hence I fail to see the absurdity of applying the term "form" to the Universe, or that doing so implies limit or finiteness. It seems very easy for you to give form to the Creator of the Universe, but deny it to the thing created. You wish me to become convinced of the anthropomorphic character of God; and that of course means God in the form or shape of man. Now that I may be convinced more readily, please tell me if God is infinite, and if he is in the form of man and has a head and other parts like a man, whether he must not necessarily have an infinite head, infinite lungs, an infinite stomach, infinite arms and hands, and infinite legs and feet. If God fills all immensity and is just as much in the most remote star as here, and is still anthropomorphic, will you please tell where his head is, then again where it is not; where his heart is, and then where it is not? If he fills all expanse, and is still in human form, are his head and his feet in the same world or system of worlds, and does he sit in one constellation more than in another? Verily the idea of an anthropomorphic God is attended with many difficulties and seems far too crude and senseless to engage the serious attention and belief of a man of mind like yourself. The idea of form in connection with a being implies limit, but with the Universe the term "form" is only applied to the multitudinous and divers parts, and does not limit the grand entirety and universality.

I am much pleased with your skillful exhibition of matter in its various forms and densities. Hydrogen, the lightest gas you mentioned, is not the lightest form of matter, and it is hardly probable that it exists in a pure stratum above the atmosphere. Nearly all the hydrogen in existence is combined with some other gas or form of matter. It is not often found in nature in a pure or uncombined state, and if that is found to be the case, it is a great stretch of privilege to make it in that pure state to be water, or what the Bible calls water. Hydrogen by itself is no more water than is oxygen. It takes both gasses to form water. Your efforts in this connection to make the clumsy, ignorant account in Genesis about the firmament, in which the stars of heaven were set, being used as a barrier or separating line of division of the waters which were below the firmament, from the waters which were above the firmament are slightly ludicrous. This firmament described in Genesis, and which in Hebrew means a solid plate or substance, was represented as having apertures or windows in it which were occasionally opened, and notably about the time when Noah commenced his remarkable cruise, when the waters above the firmament poured through the holes or windows and submerged the earth to the top of the highest mountains which are nearly 30,000 feet high, or over five miles above the level of the ocean. How does that remarkable shower agree with your theory of a stratum of pure hydrogen? When the windows in the firmament were opened by the anthropomorphic personage who is presumed to preside over that department of affairs, did your light hydrogen, which is so light as you have shown that it necessarily rises far above the atmosphere, pour through and fall to the earth, covering it with water to the depth of five miles? Or did your Anthropomorphic friend, to suit the exigencies of the case, convert the light hydrogen into heavy water for the beneficent purpose of drowning out the races of man, the races of animals, and the innumerable varieties of trees and plants, which he had taken such pains to create? If he did not do that, will you please tell me whence came that immense amount of water on that remarkable occasion? Please tell me also by what process that body of water five miles in depth all over the face of the earth, became reconverted to hydrogen, so as to take its place in an immense stratum far above the atmosphere? Did your Anthropomorphic Jesus do it? If so, was it not one of the most remarkable chemical transformations ever accomplished? Will you not need to revise your beautiful explanation about the firmament mystery just a trifle? What you say about the application of this exquisite story about the firmament to "the structure of regenerated humanity, evolved through the physical Universe, and corresponding to it in his celestial, spiitual, neutral and physical organization" I will let pass for what it is worth. I confess I fail to comprehend it.

You very politely thank me for conceding and "yielding the point regarding the existence of mind as coexistent with and perpetual as matter," aud continue thus: "As you have yielded to the first, I may hope you may accede to the second step in our discussion." You are too kind by half. I am not entitled to your thanks. I have made no such concession. I have contended persistently that mind is the result of matter and organization, and that it is not coördinate and coexistent only where conditions are favorable to its production. Matter on this globe, with the forces belonging to it, have always been capable of producing mind when the conditions were favorable for such production, but for unknown thousands of years this was not the case; consequently, during all that time, on this sphere at least, matter and mind were not coexistent, neither did they coördinate, as you will have it they did. Don't be too profuse with your thanks. I respectfully decline that to which I am not entitled.

There are other points in your letter I would be glad to notice, but my reply has already outgrown its proper proportions, and I will defer further remarks till another time.

I am respectfully yours,

D. M. Bennett.

Communications.

Letter from Elder Evans.

Mt. Lebanon, January 15, 1878.

Friend D. M. Bennett: Allow me to congratulate you on the praise and victory you have achieved. You have escaped like a bird out of the snare of religious devils. Father Joseph used to give them, of all devils, the first place. You have seen how the Tribune has published my articles with the scoffs "Tantrum," "At it again," "Keep cool, this lurid rhetoric is all expended in defence of the right to send obscene matter through the mails." Is not that cool for a piece of editorial impudence? Of course we all understand what it means. Union of Church and State commences with the press, then it passes into the Government, We propose to deal with this enemy of human liberty in its first stage of development. The subsidized press wants to fight obscene literature as it passes through the mails. That is serving the sovereign people as the bear did his friend whose face was afflcted with an intruding fly. He smashed the face in killing the fly. Again, it is like fighting an enemy after he is in the cities, towns, and villages of the nation rather than meet him in the harbors or on the ocean. May not some good thing come out of Nazareth—Shakerism? Suppose the fashionable clergy provide this people with daily bread to keep them from stealing or selling hurtful things—banish poverty. Then, suppose they teach them to "think on these things: whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good repute." Stop the evil of obscenity at the fountain—in the family, in the church. Would not that give the priesthood something to do that would keep them from being a sentimental terror and source of danger to American citizens and American liberty? Respectfully,

F. W. Evans.

From a Friend.

Winterset, Iowa, January 9, 1878.

Friend Bennett: I send you to-day, per U, S. express, petition signed by 1021 citizens of all classes save one, and that is the class of which Saint Anthony seems to be chief. I found no great difficulty in getting any saint or sinner who had sense enough to run a coffee-mill to sign it, except one old tooth-carpenter in this city who refused on the ground of its being too "demoralizing." And would you believe that no longer than last night this same sweet-scented specimen of morality was found within less than five feet of my place of business in a state of drunken insensibility, where he would have frozen to death had not a good-hearted Infidel pointed him out to our city marshall, who had him properly cared for? I suppose Saint Anthony is like certain Christians in this vicinity. They go to church every Sabbath and boast how they love and follow the meek and lowly Jesus, while their only object is to recapture that long-tailed varmint the aforesaid J. C. stole while on his journey to Jerusalem. I wish George Francis Train or some other man would give us the true definition of the word "Christianity." Does it mean persecution for opinion's sake? If so, call me by some other name—Atheist, Infidel, or what you please, so you don't class me with that cowardly, low-flung scamp who has undertaken to do the dirty work for the Y. M. C. A. And here let me say that if such men go to Heaven I prefer to take the other road, for should he and I meet in Father Abraham's bosom there would be a greater tussle than the one that took place between Jacob and the great Jehovah.

I believe that you might as well undertake to run a raft of crowbars down the Mississippi river as to find a man of brains and education who honestly believes in the divinity of Christ or the inspiration of the Bible. Yet they pretend to believe it because it is popular and because it pays. Enclosed find $34.15; $10 for the defense fund, $1 balance due on enlarged Truth Seeker, and $22.50 for the following books; Great Works of Thomas Paine, Diegesis, Exeter Hall, The Outcast, Apples of Gold, Buckle's History of Creation (2 vols.), Darwin's Origin of Species, Morley's Life of Voltaire, Heroines of Freethought, by Mrs. Underwood, Graves' Sixteen Crucified Saviors, Reason the only Oracle of Man, and Contradictions of the Bible.

H. W. Mercer.

Communications.

From the Gospel according to Saint Anthony.

CHAPTER SECOND.

Tony Performeth a Miracle in the Land of New Canaan.

1. And in those days went George Francis Train into Madison Park with his pockets full of ginger-cakes and candy, saying: "Suffer little children to come unto me, likewise also the fowls of the air, and I will feed them. Selah.

2. "But unto this generation of vipers, who barter both body and soul for the sake of filthy lucre, I warn ye to flee from the wrath to come, for the kingdom of Satan is at hand, and the smell of brimstone is upon you. So be it.

3. "Furthermore, I say unto you, hearken unto the voice of the prophet, cussed be the land of Canaan, and the days of the wine-bibber and they that deal in lager beer and iniquity are numberless." Amen.

4. And George evoluted.

5. Now it came to pass according to the prophecy of George the Evolutionist, who had foretold that these things would happen to the people in the land of New Canaan, that certain pious men did gather themselves together secretly and send an epistle to Anthony surnamed Comstock to the end that he might aid them.

6. Now, Old Man Comstock, who begat Anthony, was a bad man who ran away from the land of Canaan, leaving a widow and eight children, and no man knew whither he had departed, until he returned with a strange woman and four more children, at which the good people did murmur exceedingly.

7. And the sins of the father did descend upon the son called Anthony, who was considered the biggest hypocrite and sneak throughout all the region round about Connecticut.

8. So that when anything mean happened, the oldest inhabitant would place his finger alongside his nose, and remark: "I'll bet drinks all round that Tony the Sneak had a hand in it."

9. Accordingly, Tony sent unto the Pharisees of New Canaan a Hebrew spy, called Cohen, alias Andrews, alias Gomperts, alias Levy, alias the alphabet, to the end that he might spy out the stewards in the vineyards of Canaan, so that they might give unto him meat and drink, which is forbidden fruit in the land which yieldeth wooden hams, india-rubber tape-worms, sole leather tobacco, and shoes with paste-board soles.

10. Moreover, it is written that the Hebrew spy did inveigle a certain youth named Leopold Brown, to the end that he might lead him around wheresoever might be found the jugorum and the birds that are called game, likewise also the mansion of the foolish virgins, which lieth in the valley about four miles southeast of New Canaan.

11. And the spirit of the Devil which aboundeth in the liquors of New Canaan did enter into the gizzard of Britton, the Hebrew spy, who became beastly drunk and did commit adultery with the scarlet woman who dwelleth by the wayside.

12. Albeit, Britton got back to Canaan and swore upon the books of Moses, Christ, & Co., that certain men did exchange measures of whiskey and lager for greenbax and pieces of silver, which is forbidden by the laws of the land of Connecticut.

13. Yea, verily, he did compel the publicans and sinners, who enter not into the congregation of The Young Men's Christian Assassination Society, to pay into the treasury of the Lord fifty pieces of silver each.

14. And they gave each fifty shekels.

15. But one of the publicans who had not the fear of the unjust law before his eyes, got out a warrant for the arrest of the Hebrew spy, to the end that he might be dealt with for adultery, conspiracy, fast driving, and several other of the commandments of Moses which Comstock's spy had broken.

16. Then the constable collared the spy, whose face turned the color of a side of sole leather, and whose teeth rattled in his head, and whose knees smote together, for verily he thought his hour had come.

17. But the Angel of the Lord, or the Devil, it is difficult to determine which, came down in a basket, a whirlwind, or a pillar of fire (there seems to be some doubt among the scribes as to the exact mode of conveyance), in the person of Anthony Comstock, otherwise called Tony the Sneak, or Scarfaced Tony, and lit upon the stage, and, flourishing a revolver, made the multitude stand back in exceeding great fear, while he and Britton (or Cohen) drove down to the depot.

18. And it came to pass that in the land of New Canaan there is one valiant man who keepeth a first-class house of entertainment for man and beast, and who is clothed with the mantle of honesty, so that he feareth neither ghost, witch, nor Devil, nor can any man make him afraid, for he hath plenty of brains and nerve, and plenty of greenbax to back them.

19. His name is Gilbert Birdsall.

20. And when he heard of this miracle of Saint Anthony he gathered unto himself his serving-men, and pursued the stage down to the depot, and arrested the spy and bound him over with the strong arm of the law to the end that he might be punished.

21. Now Saint Anthony said not a word but sat trembling in the car, for Birdsall spake unto him, saying, "You infernal skunk, if you draw a pistol in my presence I will have you pitched out of the car and torn limb from limb."

22. And Tony sneaked off.

23. Furthermore he hath not been seen in those parts since, for there is such a hullabaloo among the people of Norwalk, Stamford, New Canaan and other places, that nothing short of another miracle would save the pious sneak from the vengeance of an outraged and law-abiding people.

24. So endeth the second chapter.

25. Glory Hallelujah! C. W. S.

An Open Letter to D. M. Bennett.

DEAR SIR: With a full appreciation of your sincere efforts for the maintenance and propagation of liberty, you will allow me to give you my opinion regarding your "Open Letter to Jesus Christ," and also of some communications which appeared in your paper. Your pamphlet contains many pithy sentences; but will it benefit humanity if better developed Liberal minds ridicule and speak slightingly of persons like Jesus? My dear brother in humanity, if that fully as sincere man as you are yourself could answer your letter, would you expect a kind, fraternal reply? Is it not more likely to convince those who have such extravagant and erroneous opinions about their Christ, and would it not promote the cause of Liberalism if you abler writers would criticise and communicate the truth in such a kind way that even the orthodox Christians and others would be compelled to call it kindness and charity, or at least respectful?

When Mr. Francis E. Abbot logically explained why he could no longer be a Christian, an orthodox lady said to me, "Mr. Abbot says that he is not a Christian, but I call him a true Christian." That sincere lady expressed the idea that Christianity means everything that is good and true, and there are many who have the same idea. Now, is it liberal to offend such good people who can not see beyond the circle of their church? Is it not an absolute necessity for a Liberal to cherish what he finds good and true in any historical form of religion and its sacred books, but to explain kindly what his reason compels him to call error?

With due respect, I compare some of the communications in your paper with solanum dulcamara—bittersweet—which is a good remedy for certain brain diseases provided it is rightly adapted and given in the right doses. The excellent and sweet letter of Mr. James Parton of Dec. 29th ult. is an appropriate administration and dose. But Mr. H. B. B., with his "Wet Blanket," and Mr. George Francis Train will have to take their own dose and wrap that "Wet Blanket" around them to cool off.

Every one who has his reason developed to the standpoint of Liberalism, and not perverted by speculation or vanity or jealousy, and who knows what the Index has done and is doing for the cause of Liberalism, must disagree with such wrangling attempts to criticise a good endeavor. Is there anything in Mr. Abbot's editorial in the Index of Dec. 20, 1877, but a kind and needed advice and his opinion? "A law against obscene literature" sounds so plausible that it certainly requires all the best explanations to convince the Senators and Representatives why it ought to be repealed or materially modified. The three sentences which Mr. Abbot proposes would certainly be a valuable addition to your petition.

Sincerely yours, CARL H. HORSCH.

Dover, N. H. Jan, 8, 1878.

REPLY.—It is hardly to be supposed that any one style of writing will just suit every class of readers. While the "Open Letter to Jesus Christ" may seem harsh and irreverend to some conservative, prudent minds not fully freed from reverence for ancient legends, myths, and dogmas, it just suits thousands of others. Seeing no more to revere in the story of Jesus than in that of Christna, Hercules, or Apollo, we put to the imaginary character a series of questions calculated to show the absurdity of the faith connected with a system of religion made up exclusively from the fables and legends of preëxisting systems. The letter must necessarily shock or chafe the feelings of those but partially cut loose from a belief in gods and demi-gods; but the best we all can do is to be tolerant. If a certain style does not suit us exactly, and we see that it suits others, let us not oppose it too strongly. Let all classes be suited. Some bitter may properly be blended with the sweet where there are so many tastes, that in the great "feast of reason and flow of soul" a variety of dishes may be very proper.

While we do not feel like censuring any course that Mr. Abbot may see fit to pursue, we regret that he should deem it necessary to condemn the hundred thousand who have seen fit to sign a petition not originated by himself. We believe the signers are as much opposed to real obscenity as much as he is, though they are not so sensitive on the score of respectability as to be forced to join hand in hand with our opponents in lauding and supporting the bitterest enemy the Liberal cause has to-day, and a man capable of committing the most heartless crimes against humanity and personal liberty for the sake of sustaining the rule of puritanic intolerance and bigotry. [ED. T. S.]

Selections.

The Question of Eternal Damnation.

The following remarks on the revived discussion upon the subject of Hell are from the Herald:

Is there a hell, and if so, what kind of a place is it? We give a large portion of our space this morning to a discussion of this exceedingly interesting subject. First, there are in an extended form the views of Mr. Beecher, who has unbosomed himself to one of our representatives more fully than he did to his congregation in his recent remarkable sermon on the question, and, second, we present a condensation of a large number of letters which have been sent us in regard to the matter. Mr. Beecher, it will be seen, breaks clear away from the red-hot old Calvinistic faith of his fathers and utterly repudiates the brimstone and the bottomless pit and the oceans of eternal flame. It has, he assures us, been a subject of anxious inquiry with him for years, and, while he believes that there is a spiritual hell, the old-fashioned arrangement that the Calvinistic divines so vividly painted some hundreds of years ago is all nonsense. This is pretty bold ground for a Congregationalist clergyman, but the Plymouth pastor politely tells the descendants of the Puritan fathers that if they feel like making a row about it they can do so. Mr. Beecher has simply planted himself on the Universalist ground, and in denying so material a point of Congregational doctrine has to that extent denied Congregationalism. But aside from what this distinguished preacher may or may not hold, there can be no doubt that the question is at the present time uppermost in the thoughts of a great many people, and those who agree with Mr. Beecher are perhaps far more numerous than the majority of orthodox preachers would care to admit. There are thousands and thousands who believe that, as the worst use to which even the most hardened criminal can be put is to hang him, so the worst use to which he could be put after death is to roast him for all eternity. This belief is a much more comfortable one in every way than the generally accepted theory, and that is perhaps the chief cause of its popularity. John Milton's hell and the hell of the Bible are exceedingly unpleasant places, and it is not surprising that so many persons are anxious to get rid of them. But if there is no hell where in the world do our city politicians go after death?

Out with the Backhouses.

The Eleventh Commandment has always been a mystery to those who never heard what it is. Some have interpreted it one way and some another, giving various renditions of it somewhat in contradiction of each other. We suspect that a learned friend of ours has fathomed the secret. The gentleman in question has a mania for the fine arts. He demands that everything be esthetic. His study, which contains more books, all valuable and many of them old and rare editions, than, we dare say, are to be found in any other private library in the county, is unique with its pictures and articles of vertu, as well as its plain but elegant drapery, and all the appointments of a literary man's castle. In itself it furnishes a useful lesson in good taste to the visitor. Calling on this gentleman on Sunday last, we found him "luxuriating," as he termed it, in the reading of Viscount Amberly's great work, "The Analysis of Religious belief", recently published by Bennett, the Liberal and scientific book publisher, of 141 Eighth street, New York, from the English edition—excellent Sunday reading, to be sure as our friend declared it to be "the most conscientious, even-tempered dissection of the putrid body of religion by an English writer ever issued."

But we wander from one religious subject to another. The gentleman in question is esthetic in other senses than literary ones, and indulges a profound hatred of that abomination, the New England privy, which, he says, is called privy in N. E. merely through puritanic perverseness, since it is the most public thing in all the province, and having provided his house interiorly with water-closets, has also built out of sight of the public and in the corner of an outbuilding a spacious and elegant "sanctuary" for the devotions of servants, or the general household, with every appointment for comfort possible where water is not one. It is arranged upon the dry earth closet plan, with the exception of the earth distributing machinery, which it was found impracticable to use therein; and our friend has provided a large box with dry earth or hard coal ashes and a proper cup for use instead of the machinery of the patent earth closet. And now we come to the religious part of our item again. Being invited to survey the gentleman's recent improvements, we were shown the new and elegant privy, and therein found posted upon its walls where none could fail to see it, in bold letters, the following, which struck us as possessing a bit of pungent sarcasm and lively religious humor withal:

"THE ELEVENTH COMMANDMENT.—A NOTICE EXTRAORDINARY.

"Whoever occupies the pulpit of this Sanctuary will, after services, on each and every occasion, please to deposit at least a half cupful of dry earth or ashes from the box below, into the vault of the treasury hereof. That 'cleanliness is next to Godliness,' in this respect even dull-headed people may come to know as well as cats and dogs."

The Eleventh Commandment, it will be observed is of more sanitary importance, as all who understand the dry earth closet philosophy readily see, than the other ten commandments together—and if, like our philosophical friend, who hates that vile New England coat-of-arms, the ever-in-sight privy, the rest of the people in town practically regarded it and the Eleventh Commandment as does he, Winsted would not be the only wholesome place in New England, we are sorry to say.

The old sectional quarrels between East and West streets, and the three-cornered fight of these and the Flat, may perhaps be attributed to the bad influence of the (public) privies. "What peaceable thing could you expect," asks this apostle of the dry earth closet religion, "from a people who are eternally compelled to look upon other folks' temples of dishonor wherever they turn their eyes, and who constantly practice the indecency of setting their own in the face of all their neighbors?" We are inclined to think that there is a good deal of moral philosophy in that question.

War on the backhouses of New England would be far more holy than the rest of the religious wars which have ever disturbed the world, and we were glad to see lately that a contributor to The Springfield Republican had sounded the tocsin of such a war. Let him keep on; and let everybody who can't do something better follow the Eleventh Commandment, and for its better understanding send to the manufacturers of dry earth closets (advertised in many papers) for earth closet literature, mostly issued in tracts, which are much more important and useful than the documents sent forth by the American Tract Society. The earnest seeker after knowledge hereabout might, we suppose, inquire for our affable friend, the discoverer of the Eleventh Commandment, and could hardly fail to find him by seeking first the only private residence, we believe, in town which is not ornamented by a (public) privy in its front door-yard, or somewhere fully in sight.—Winsted Press.

Mr. Comstock's Arrests.

The following is from the Telegram:

There is a large class of people who are not absolutely ignorant, but who are so bigoted that they will not tolerate any idea opposed to those in the belief of which they have been reared. We are by no means prepared to place in this class Mr. Comstock, who is paid by the government to suppress various forms of vice. Probably he has done a great deal of good by the courageous assaults he has made upon men and women engaged in infamous traffic. We do not even declare that he has made a mistake in arresting, as he did a day or two ago in Boston, a man named Heywood, charged with sending obscene books through the mail. That is a question which the law will determine. All that we now propose to do is to suggest whether an error is not sometimes made in deciding a book to be obscene which was written with no other intention than that of drawing the regards of intelligent people to important physical facts. Such was the intention of Mr. Charles Bradlaugh and Mrs. Annie Besant in their pamphlet entitled "Fruits of Philosophy," which drew upon them the affected censure of the prim and proper British public some months ago. These authors, both of whom were animated by the purest motives, became the subjects of warm vituperation in the public prints, and were sentenced to a certain term of imprisonment. The sentence of the Court, however, was never carried out, and to-day Mr. Bradlaugh and Mrs. Besant stand virtually exonerated before the world.

Of course it is often true that enthusiasts who set out to reform the world make most lamentable blunders. They are large-hearted enough to feel the miseries with which mankind are oppressed, but scarcely large-brained enough to perceive the remedy for those miseries. A few times in the course of a century men and women arise who have the power of so dealing with these vital questions as to encompass a certain appreciable amount of cure. In this way the world slowly progresses. It is the addle-headed, pseudo reformers who make the great mistakes—who sow crude ideas broadcast and take the wrong means to right ends. In determining where the law shall step in and where it shall refrain the nicest tact is requisite—a tact which we hope Mr. Comstock will always show that he possesses.

PRAIRIE CITY, JAN. 10, 1877.

D. M. BENNETT, ESQ., Dear Sir: I have noticed with chagrin, but not with surprise, knowing something of the fate of others, that you have been arrested on complaint of one Comstock of Christian fame; and I also understand that you have caused to be drafted a petition to Congress for the repeal or modification of certain laws. If you will send me a copy of the same, I will take pleasure in circulating it. I have never until recently been a reader of your paper, and only now through the kindness of a relative, an admirer of THE TRUTH SEEKER. If you will also send me specimen copies of such papers as contain articles in reference to your arrest, I will also take pleasure in trying to get subscribers for the same. I don't know that I would succeed very well, but would like to try. The last paper I had was of Nov. 24, 1877, and it is so badly worn as not to be presentable to persons to whom I should apply.

Use your own judgment and pleasure in sending. Hoping you may be able to defeat the pernicious Comstock, I am Truly yours, ALEX. HAMILTON.

The Great Religions of the World.—Continued.

A LECTURE DELIVERED AT WOLCOTT, AUG. 18, AND AT NEW HAVEN, SEPT. 23, 1877.

Let us give a brief consideration to the religion of Greece, that small but famed land which pushes out into the Mediterranean in the southeastern corner of Europe. In number of square miles it is not larger than some of the States of this Republic; but in great deeds and proud achievements it has hardly been surpassed by any other country on the globe. It was the land which produced Lycurgus, Thales, Solon, Bias, Anaximander, Pythagoras, Hippocrates, Democritus, Socrates, Plato, Euclid, Pericles, Aspasia, Xenophanes, Xenocrates, Aristotle, Zeno, Epicurus, Carneades, Hipparchus, and many other old worthies and sages who distinguished themselves three thousand years ago and more.

Greece was undoubtedly a colony from the Aryan country in Central Asia, and its language was doubtless made up largely of the original Sanscrit. In hundreds of words in the two languages, we are told by philologists, a close resemblance can be traced. At the time of the planting of the Asiatic colony in Geeece, Egypt was an old and flourishing country, and perhaps a long time previous was colonized from the same source; still the settlement of Greece was at a very remote period.

Though the religion of Greece, with the centuries that passed, experienced changes and modifications, it had its distinguishing characteristics. The most noticeable of which was the number of its gods and the human qualities and characters that were imputed to them. The Grecian gods and goddesses were little more than idealized men and women after grand patterns. The gods of the East had been mere cold abstractions, but the gods of Greece seemed gushing with life, emotion, ambition, and passion.

Olympus, with its thirty thousand gods and goddesses, as represented, was a place of activity, abounding in designs, purposes, intrigues, friendships, enmities, favoritisms, revenges, loves and hates, as found in communities of actual human beings. Among the vast throng were found many worthy characters with a preponderance of generous and noble qualities, while some again were malicious, cruel, and vindictive.

Olympus existed only in the imaginations of the people, and the making and devising the gods which inhabited that imaginary world was done as in the ancient countries; the people attributed to their gods the leading characters they possessed and which they admired. Thus Jupiter was a grand old warrior whose thunderbolts were deemed sufficient to shake both heaven and earth. He had his amours, liaisons, and adventures; but after all a pretty good old fellow for a god. His character, with all his failings and weaknesses, stands far better than that of some other gods which have been extensively worshiped by men.

Juno and Venus were rather interesting and lovable characters, and did not leave a very bad name behind them. Bacchus was very fond of his cups and kept very late hours. He was worse to himself than to anybody else, and would not be taken as a good model for a temperance society. Mercury was a brilliant fellow, a friend to literature and art, but left some slight stains upon his character. Mars was a bloody, warlike soldier; but did not seem to enjoy bloodshed and carnage as did the god who was for a long time worshiped in Palestine. Pluto was the presiding genius over the infernal regions; but he does not seem to have been materially worse than his companions in divinity. His capture of Proserpine and carrying her off to his subterranean abode was a discreditable proceeding; but to the human race generally he was not a very great enemy.

It is somewhat interesting to read the memoirs and adventures of the Grecian and Roman gods, and in doing so it is easy to realize how easy the process of god-making is. There is no trouble for people with a lively imaginations to get up gods to order at any time. It might perhaps be interesting to pursue at some length the rise and fall of the Grecian gods; but probably it will be better to defer it for the present. A simple remark might be added that the symbolical meaning of each god and goddess of the Grecians was portrayed in its character.

The religion of the Greeks differed from Brahmanism in the fact that its gods were sensous beings, not mere abstractions; and from Buddhism, whose god also was a man, in so far as the gods of Greece were less moral but more pasisonate and interesting. It has been said of them that they cared not for saving men's souls, but only to have a good happy time among themselves. They were not ascetics, with long faces and dolorous tones, but good, jolly fellows who believed in being as happy as they could under the circumstances. Fighting, feasting, and making love were their favorite occupations. If it may be considered that they were governors of the world, it must be admitted that it was a loose sort of government they maintained. Their interference with human affairs seemed to be controlled by their own interests. They evinced little disposition to torture and afflict human beings.

The Greek religion, unlike most of the ancient religions of the world, had no great founder or savior or redeemer who led a life of vicissitudes and unhappiness and was finally put to death for the benefit of the human race. The Persians had their Zoroaster, the Hindoos their Christna and their Buddha, the Chinese their Confucius, the Christians their Jesus, and the Mohammedans their great prophet whose name they bear; but the Grecians had no similar great leader. They had numerous sons of gods and demi-gods who had gods for fathers and females of heavenly or earthly origin for mothers, but none of them could be called great leaders or saviors.

In the matter of sacred writings or a bible, the Grecians were an exception to the general rule. Almost all other nations had their sacred writings, said to have been delivered to them by the gods. But they seemed to get along very well without such writings. They had their great poets, Homer and Hesiod, whom they believed wrote or sung with the rapture of inspiration, and they regarded the productions of their great poets with much veneration.

The gods of the Greeks were hardly manifestations of a supposed supreme power or spirit that came down from the heavenly regions, but were rather outgrowths or emanations from earth life. They came up from below rather than down from above. In the Jewish religion, man was said to be made in the image of God, while in the Greek religion the gods were devised in the image of man—a much truer theory. The Greek Pantheon was strictly an emanation of the national mind.

It must be borne in mind that there were three races or families of Grecian gods. First were, of old, Chaos, Gaia, Tartarus, Erebus, Ether, Eros, Uranos, and others, meaning unorganized matter in space—earth, the dark regions below the earth, night, day, fire, the starry heavens, etc. Then came the Titans, the offspring of Gaia and Uranos—earth and heaven—immense giants. Next we have the gods that peopled Olympus, exaggerated men and women, which we have chiefly considered, and which became the most popular of all their gods. The first were powers of nature and were not personalized. They were supplanted by the second, and those again by the third, who were modeled altogether after the humanities.

The Greeks were distinctively a poetical race, and their mythological creations were poetry itself. In this respect, as well as in the naturalness of the character of their gods, it was very unlike the Jewish mythology which contained but little poetry and very little beauty.

The worship of the Grecians consisted of sacrifices, prayers, and public festivals, and in this respect they did not differ widely from other nations. These have been the concomitants of all religions. Every religion that had a god or gods inculcated the necessity of placating and pleasing its god or gods. Sacrifices and prayer were thought to affect this. Festivals were an especial feature in the Grecian religion, and were the great occasion which brought the people together and united them in a common impulse and a common bond.

The Bacchic Mysteries formed an important part in the Greek religion. They were probably introduced from Egypt. They were said to have been established first in the island of Samo-thrace by Orpheus. Other accounts have it that he opposed the drunken, licentious rites by establishing a purer worship, and for this he was said to have been killed by women who were incited by the priests of the Bacchic mysteries or the worship of the gods of the under world. They were adorers of the wild powers of nature.

The Eleusinian Mysteries were commemorated in honor of Ceres and were imported also from Egypt. The wanderings of Isis in search of Osiris were changed to those of Ceres or Demeter—the mother Earth in search of Persiphone—a symbolism of the wandering of the soul seeking God and truth. These mysteries were celebrated by the Athenians every fourth year at Eleusis. It was claimed that they were introduced more than thirteen hundred years before the Christian era, and they were considered very sacred. The members of the society were initiated with great solemnity at night in a vast temple, where they were instructed and purified. The nature of the doctrines taught are not clearly known, but are believed to have been the unity of God and the immortality of the soul, if not a belief in an existence after death; and a retribution in that life entered into the various phases of Grecian religion.

In taking leave of the Grecian religion, it may be truthfully remarked that polytheism recognized a divine principle in nature, and that by dividing this divine principle into almost numberless deities it was able to conceive something of divinity in every human being. It was far from the worst religion the world has known.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

THE use of saracenia purpurea, or pitcher plant, in small-pox is the remedy. Steep two ounces of the root in a pint of water, and give the whole pint in a day. This will not only save life in the worst cases, but will prevent pitting. It cuts the primary fever short and almost entirely prevents the secondary fever. The failures with this remedy are due to an old and worthless drug, or because too little is given.

The Radical Pulpit.

The Ethics of the Social Question.

LECTURE BY PROF. FELIX ADLER, DELIVERED BEFORE THE SOCIETY FOR ETHICAL CULTURE, SUNDAY, JANUARY 13TH, 1878.

A word for a pledged cause; a word for a great need. Will you accept it? Though it be thankless to climb the heights of aspiration and take in the wide prospects, yet to remain below, to regard the deficiencies, often in our own selves, is also a hard and difficult task. But it is the solemn obligation which all take upon themselves who venture to address the public on the great theme of Ethics. I venture to believe that my relations to you are not those of an ordinary speaker. I am not a lecturer that addresses an audience; but I am the speaker of my society, and hope, in some respects, their mouthpiece. I consider my task accomplished when I have expressed their thoughts. Your best thoughts I would try to interpret, and by these I will be judged even against our lesser selves.

The belief in the inherent goodness of human nature is the foundation of the entire human life. I do not know of anything more irreligious than the doctrine that has been taught by religion—the doctrine of the depravity of the human heart. We believe that man is really good. How we love those who see what is excellent in us; not for reasons of vanity, but because their belief confirms the excellence, and aids us in holding fast to the standard of what is excellent! How we love those rare men and women who are great, and kind, and noble, because they confirm us in our belief! Yet, we must confess also that there is evil in human nature. We know that a certain thing is right, and yet there is the colossal selfishness of our nature which stands up in arms against us and seeks to corrupt our reasons. There is a constant conflict against this enemy of ours; and if Liberalism means anything, it means a new assault upon the old, to bring new contrivances into the conflict. Think of the story of Orpheus in the Greek Mythology, who descended into the nether world in search of his wife, but failed of his object, because he was selfish, because in that region of darkness and death his heart shrank and he thought of his return to the upper life. Whoever dares to take up the conflict with the powers of darkness in the human heart must not greatly value his life, but must go prepared to face difficulties, achieve his object, and secure the victory for his cause.

There have been men who were bold enough to do this, and stand up in the face of victorious iniquity and proclaim the right, and say it is right, and that sophistry cannot prevail against it.

You remember that I have often spoken highly in your presence of the Hebrew prophets. I am glad of an opportunity to explain more fully why. Their enemies were idolaters. We usually think that idolatry is something merely stupid; we cannot imagine how men of ordinary common sense should bow down to sticks and stones and worship them. But it was not stupid only; idolatry was cruel. There was the notion of gods whom it was necessary to appease, just as we would throw a morsel to a wild beast—they had human sacrifices. To disturb the priests in these solemn rites was bold, was courageous; to say to them "this is wrong, this is outrageous superstition," was taking one's life in one's hand. And this is what the Hebrew prophets did, and therefore we should esteem them. There were noblemen—not in the literal sense of the term, feudal nobles—in the city of Jerusalem at that time, who had gained their wealth by plundering and robbing the poor and prostituting justice, and none dared to oppose them on account of their power. And these were the very men that supported the temple-worship. They brought the largest gifts; they were acceptable to the priesthood. To stand up against them in the midst of the people, who were over-awed by their presence; to charge them with their guilt in open and terrible phrases—this is what the prophets did. It is said that they predicted the future. They did no such thing. These predictions that were recorded in their name were often written after the event. It is not very wonderful to predict an occurrence after it has occurred. Nor do we honor the prophets because they were said to have communion with the Deity; but we respect them because they dared to say what was right.

We call those "children of the prophets" in our times who do like them. We call them "children of the prophets" who in our recollection, in our days, opposed the national crime of slavery, though the vice was deeply seated in many States of our Union, and cultured and refined society was ranged on its side, though Bible-texts without number were adduced, though ministers of the gospel said it was ordained by God.

We want something of that spirit, friends. We want again to-day new "children of the prophets." We want to see them in the pulpit, if the religion which they represent is to revive at all. New "children of the prophets" we ask for in our pulpits, who will have the courage to see the false and say it is false; who will change the burden of their song of dogma, and institute a religion of life that shall form the forces of life, and make bold to draw away the veil from our social condition, and show the moral rots that stain it, and speak out its need, and that is what we ask for—that they shall aid in pushing on humanity a step farther, one step farther in its tardy progress.

The ethics of the social question has its end and its beginning in the outgrowth of social justice. Justice is a condition of equilibrium in which the natural and inalienable rights of all men are evenly balanced. Among these natural and inalienable rights, we American citizens are accustomed to class, in accordance with our great charter of independence "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness." As to the first two, the American Government has been successful. Life is as secure here as elsewhere. Of liberty, at least of external, political liberty, we have a greater share than the European nations; we have at least abolished kingship, and an aristocracy has become impossible in our midst.

With the third, "pursuit of happiness," we have not been equally successful. You understand, it is the pursuit of happiness which the Government undertakes to guarantee, not happiness itself; no State could do that, but an equal chance—and if not an equal chance, a tolerably fair chance—that the Government can undertake to secure and has pledged itself to do.

On the first sight, it seems very strange that we have not been as successful in that as in the others; for here is a land in need of nothing so much as labor, abundantly rewarding labor, leaving the laborer free to go where he can dispose of his services to his best advantage. I remember, a few years ago, it used to be the custom for an American to help himself, and it was a maxim that everyone must help himself. Now, we know better. Now, they who have had any experience know that there is a great number of persons who desire nothing so much as to help themselves, who are willing to toil hard for their daily bread, and yet cannot do it because there is no work to be found. And in this new land, which is not filled by any means, which has wide regions of country hardly populated at all, we see great aggregations of population suffering in our large towns; we see the giant spectre "pauperism" raise its head. There is something wrong.

I venture to believe that the "pursuit of happiness" would be guaranteed if these three points could be secured—a just remuneration for labor, constant employment, and social dignity. These three points open an outlook upon the whole subject and reveal a few of those evils from which society is at present aching and groaning. It will repay our efforts to give a little attention to these these points.

But I see at once that there is a great difficulty in my way, which I must try to get rid of, or I cannot proceed. Why! the remuneration of labor is fair, and is fair because reward and merit correspond. Every one can achieve the highest rewards in this country, we are told, if he only possess the necessary qualifications. Now, I am willing to admit that success by accident, pure and simple, is very rare; it occurs now and then, though it is very rare, and we will let that pass. I am willing to admit that success itself depends upon something admirable. Success suggests untiring perseverance, honesty, unwavering constancy, and above all an unflagging industry; for without industry there is no success. It is deceptive to perceive the ease with which most great masters set about their task. That is only the ultimate of their perseverence and patience. So thus far the man of success may take credit to himself, but because success depends upon certain precious and excellent qualities, it is not therefore true that the possession of these precious and excellent qualities insures success.

There is another factor that here comes in for consideration, and that is "opportunity." That really decides success. Opportunity is necessary to develop those very qualities. A great deal of talent is constantly lost to the world for lack of opportunity. I dare say that there are in this city dozens of men who would be great statesmen and artists; but they lack the opportunity. Opportunity gives you the education, the home influences; and if you have not those, you are lost. Put yourself in the place of others. For instance, if you had been educated in the haunts of crime, had none but vicious companions about you from your youth upward, your father a drunkard, who beat you and put you to work in a factory when you were ten years of age, what specimen of humanity do you suppose you would become? Not very exalted, I will venture to assert. I have known young men of admirable qualities, who were predicted to become great discoverers and inventors in their day; suddenly, in the midst of their college course, the parent dies, they are compelled to go home to support their needy family, and that is the end of their discoveries; they lack the opportunity. Take the mechanic who has talents to become a merchant-prince, who has saved a sum of money with which he means to go into business; he has confidence in a savings-bank; the trustees of that savings-bank are scoundrels and do away with his savings, and he has lost his chance; he will never be what he aspired to be.

Men see the few dazzling examples of success; they point out that instance and this instance; they don't see the thousand others that failed in the effort. The splendid few who succeed leave their mark on the imagination; the futile efforts of those who did not succeed leave no marks behind them. We see one seed that takes root and becomes a tree; we do not see the thousands of seeds that perish in the ground. We point out Stephen Girard, who began with sweeping the decks, became a captain, and then a great merchant, and dispensed lordly wealth at his death. We point out Jacquard, who was a poor weaver, and who built up one of the largest factories in Europe, and assumed an influential position in the commercial world. We do not notice the thousands who remain miserable weavers all their lives. It is not true that every one can rise; a few only can now and then. The avenues of opportunity are closed against them; the doors of circumstance are locked. But even if they could, they would not benefit us. We do not want to lift the laborers above the capacity of being laborers. We want to lift them in their capacity as laborers.

It is said that the price of a commodity depends upon competition. A great many statesmen say that that ought to be so, and that labor should be like any other commodity. And they are sometimes really violent about proving that the price of labor should be like the price of any other commodity, and that it is not right to draw sentiment into business matters, when we say that in the laborer is comprised the life of his family. In reading the journals of this city, we think it might be better if more sentiment were drawn into matters of business.

There are two great factors, demand and supply. The price of a coat depends upon the number of coats in the market and the demand for coats which is present in the community. The price of labor depends upon the number of laborers in the market and the demand for labor which is present in the community. But there is a slight difference which is sometimes overlooked. When the price of a coat sinks, it is utterly indifferent to the coat; that does not grow old and feeble. When the price of labor sinks, it is not so indifferent to the laborer. There are some political economists who look upon this law of supply and demand with great complacency, and cannot imagine the difficulties of the laborers' position—that his family are not blocks of wood but innocent human beings. It is not with complacency that we can regard it. It is easy to understand that when the number of persons in any occupation is small, the demand for them is great—the price is high. When the price is high, the demand is met by an influx from other occupations until the supply has so far increased that the price sinks. There is a surplus of labor in the market—a surplus population which must somewhere be got rid of. It is got rid of. If you will consult the table of statistics, you will perceive that when the price of labor sinks, something must rise to keep up the balance. That something is the rate of mortality.

Well, how can we keep up the price of labor without injury or detriment to the employer or the rest of society? The wages of the laborer are the portion resulting from dividing a certain dividend by a certain divisor. The dividend is the capital existing in society. The divisor is the number of laborers that wish to share in that capital. There are two ways to increase their portion in it. The one way is to increase the dividend; the other way is to decrease the divisor. To increase the dividend, we can cut off exorbitant luxuries by devoting what we spend in frivolous and useless pursuits to the increase of the wage-fund in society. By cutting off useless luxuries we can do our share in solving the social problem. On the other hand, we can better the condition of the working classes by limiting the number of those who apply for a share in the capital; and under this head would come the establishment of an American colonization society, of which I have spoken on a previous occasion, to relieve great cities of their evil of over-population and to provide means to emigrate for those who have none. Under this head comes the question of apprenticeship and the laws of operatives, and also that fearful and vexed question of over-population, which ought to be discussed without any prudish sentimentality. I suggested, a few weeks ago, a workingman's lyceum. Such a lyceum would go a good way to elucidate those questions which concern the workingman.

In order to guarantee the "pursuit of happiness" we need constancy of employment. You know what a fearful thing it is to watch at the sick-bed of those we love. You know what a terrible thing uncertainty is, and we sometimes pray to have a certain decision rather than be in this condition of anxiety. It is the same with the workingman who cannot get the necessaries of life. It is demoralizing—this living from hand to mouth. I believe that this insecurity of prospects, this inconstancy of employment, is the great evil that manifests itself in our present industrial system. Far worse it is than low wages, for we can accommodate ourselves to a standard of living; we can make a little go very far provided that the income be there. But without this insurance—with the wolf driven away to-day ever returning to-morrow, a very unwholesome state of mind is brought about.

A very considerable portion of our working classes are in extreme poverty. You know their recklessness. None waste so freely, paradoxical as it may seem, as those who have nothing to lose. None spend so unthinkingly as those who should save every farthing. Here the text is applicable, "Unto him which hath shall be given, and from him that hath not, even that he hath shall be taken away from him." Our working-classes are charged with filling the dram-shops. Friends, it is a terrible crime, this crime of intoxication; you know its fearful ravages, the terrible punishment it entails upon its victims. But, I say, put yourself in the place of others. Imagine the enormity of the temptation. It is easy for those who have been raised in intelligent homes, and who have no taste for intoxicating stimulants, to turn away with an inward nausea from the place where they are dispensed. Put yourself in place of another, who returns from his work to find a cold room, his wife over-burdened with work, the children clamoring for food, and he himself without work for the coming week, and will you be the first to throw a stone upon that man for seeking the poisonous liquor that can give him respite from his thought. The poor wretch wants to be warm and jolly; he cannot be warm and jolly in his cold attic. The vice is too deeply seated to be cured by the closing of the dram-shops.

We cannot weed the evil out in that way, for this extreme intemperance is the result of moral shiftlessnees, and that is the result of inconstancy of employment. We want education to nerve the working man. By our increasing the facilities for it we will create an effective protection against mental and moral degradation.

It would be well if, in conjunction with the present crusade against the vending of liquor, a few hundred reading-rooms were opened in this city, where light and warmth could be obtained by the poorer classes; and as there is a certain expense connected with the opening of such reading-rooms, I would suggest that the churches, who are constantly preaching charity, should turn their buildings into reading-rooms during six days of the week, and thus remove the charge of being useless for the greater portion of the year.

Thirdly, and lastly, I want to say that social dignity will insure a fairer chance in the pursuit of happiness to the working classes. Men desire consideration, and because wealth brings consideration they desire wealth so much. A great many of our wealthy men are very abstemious, notwithstanding the riches that are placed at their disposal, because it is position in life which they aspire to. We can do that for those who can never aspire to be wealthy. We want to raise the social dignity of the working classes, and we can do that, not by a rash denunciation of their faults, not by a supercilious condescension—this is an insult to self-respect—but by stretching out the hand of fellowship to them in good, honest faith. We can help them by our educational effort; for the cultured are the natural guides for the uncultured.

I know very well that we cannot do a great deal with our limited number, and we cannot venture on great undertakings now. But we can do this which is not a little: we can give the direction. When the ball is propelled, it is but a point or two from the ground; but the direction is upward, and it reaches the skies ere it returns.

I care not for your philosophy. Help is our philosophy, and help is our religion. I know we can do something towards helping, and for that reason I have undertaken to bring up this theme for discussion, because I know we can do what is needful. I have not shunned it, although, alas that it is so! there is a great odium attached to this discussion; although there are those who hold up against our efforts of reform the red flag, as if society were a mad bull to be frenzied by their flaunting the red flag of communism; as if society were a mad bull to be frenzied by their hoarse acclamations. We can rise to stop the alarmists; we see the way clearly before us leading to progress and peace.

The issue between ourselves and the churches is all one of economy; they lavish their means upon false luxuries. We want to be a life and purpose in the community, a genius of life and good upon earth. For this alone can we work. Which of the two voices is destined to succeed let the future decide. I know of a seed whose dormant power is not regarded among men; I know of a mighty oak with high uplifted crown; many nations gather in its shade and hang their garlands upon its boughs; but there is a worm gnawing at the root, and it is doomed to fall. And there is life to the one and death to the other. And I say you would rather be that little seed than all that mighty oak, although every tree in the forest should bow down before it and do it honor.

The Theory of Hell.

From The New York Times' report of O. B. Frothingham's sermon of Sunday, Jan. 20th.

The large hall of Masonic Temple overflowed yesterday morning with a fashionable and intelligent audience, assembled to listen to Rev. Mr. Frothingham's views on the subject of eternal punishment. Mr. Frothingham's "Scriptural lesson" was taken from the writings of ancient Persian, Buddhist, Turkish, and Hindoo philosophers, the burden of which was that the good are rewarded and the wicked punished in this life, or, as one expressed it, "Hell is but a spark of worldly trouble, and heaven but an instant of the repose enjoyed on earth." He began his sermon without preface in this style: "Had I been told six months ago that I would give a discourse on future punishment, I would have received the announcement with utter incredulity, as deep as that which a hunter would feel who should be told some bright summer's morning to take his patent rifle and go hunt the ichthyosaurus, the plesiosaurus, or any other pre-Adamite monster with unpronounceable name. For the doctrine ranks with those monsters of a bygone age which may be described but can hardly be characterized. Their forms have been lost, and men go about picking up a bone here and there, and imagining what grotesque creatures they must have been. The doctrine is no longer to be observed by the keenest-sighted men. Those who have charged it on Christian theology have been accused of being caluminators. In the world of art, literature, history, philosophy, or science it was unknown, and it was only here and there, as some revival preacher went his dreary rounds, that, ever and anon, a bold man ventured to bring it forth behind a screen of gauze—to materialize it, as the saying is nowadays—so that people might think there was something there, they knew not what. All at once the ichthyosaurus has come to life and the creature walks the streets! In Central New-York, last summer, I met some excellent people—I can hardly call them intelligent—who really believed that there is a lake of fire, and who were astonished that any one could discredit it. In New-England, three months ago, an earnest man was refused ordination on the ground that he was not sound on this article of doctrinal faith. I, myself, have heard a learned Doctor of Divinity express his undisguised contempt of Canon Farrar's recent declarations. How is this to be explained? Here is something that our wits are taxed to account for. The peculiarity of the doctrine is, that there is no necessity for any one to believe in it. One may be good, and even devout, without believing. Why, then, does this ancient spectre come forward? Human intelligence in every department has been against it. Theology denounced it. In the third century Origen, in the ninth, Dun Scotus, and since then others discarded it and prophesied that the day would come when Satan would be converted and hell extinguished. Preachers have talked of perdition, retribution, suffering, sorrow, misery, but not of eternal damnation. Philosophy, from the beginning, has quietly protested against it, because the mission of philosophy is to establish the harmony of the universe, and to do that it is obliged to reduce to its lowest point the element of sorrow, pain, and agony in the world. In the last century, Joseph Butler defended the doctrine on the remarkable ground that eternal punishment, after death, is as credible as the many outrageous things that happen this side of the grave. If he had wanted to champion atheism in its worst forms he could not have done better. If he had gone in to prove that the devil rules the world, he would have succeeded to perfection. Origen or Dun Scotus or Voltaire or Tom Paine never tried such an argument. It was reserved for a Christian divine to put forward a theory which reduced God to a fiend. Science has been expelling evil from the world. It has delved into poisonous plants and told us their uses. It has pointed out the habits of reptiles and beasts. It has expelled Satan from the air. And when science shall have done its work perfectly no evil spirit will be left in the world. From the beginning the natural consciences of men have rebelled against the theory of hell. The human heart teaches us to love those connected with us, and there is something in us that tells us to love even those who injure us. Was there ever a mother who thought her child had gone to hell? Or a wife who believed her husband to be there? Or a converted pagan who contemplated such a destiny for his heathen friends? Never! Such a thing was never heard of. It is easy to say we believe, but to believe there never was a human heart that dared."

"So we go back to the Bible. To me, in whose regard the Bible is precisely like any other book—to me, who judge all questions by reason—this question is of no moment whatever. But it is necessary to say something to those who believe the Bible to be inspired. It cannot, in my judgment, be shown that the doctrine of future punishment or eternal damnation is not mentioned in the New Testament. It can be shown that it is not in the Old Testament, because the practical sense of the Hebrew people, at the time it was written, would not permit them to entertain such a belief. They believed in a place of shadows, but in endless torture, never! Neither do we find it in the earlier part of the New Testament, but we do in the latter part, where the words, 'Depart from me ye cursed into everlasting fire,' are put into the mouth of Jesus. It takes a better grammarian than I am to explain away these words. Universalism has done good service in showing that one need not find hell in the Bible unless one wants to. That should be enough. But why is this doctrine sprung now? Why this survival of the unfittest? Because it is essential to the Christian scheme. Because it is a vital and organic part of the doctrine of redemption, and cannot be eliminated without weakening the whole structure. Deny the Trinity, and you deny the divinity of Christ. Deny the divinity of Christ, and you deny the efficacy of the Atonement. Deny the efficacay of the Atonement, and you deny the doctrine of the Expiation. Deny the doctrine of total depravity, and you render inoperative the whole scheme, because you deprive it of its object. So if you deny the doctrine of hell, you take away the balance of the doctrine of total depravity. It will not do to substitute annihilation for hell, because a great many people would like that very well. [Laughter.] If the fires of hell were banked, the sinner would have no motive to repent. Let me add that this has always been an ecclesiastical—not a religious or spiritual—but a Church doctrine. The people who are consigned to hell are not murderers, or thieves or malefactors, but Infidels, heretics, unbelievers. Their essential crime is discarding the doctrines of the Church."

Mr. Frothingham here recited several old legends in point, causing much laughter, and then continued: "The crimes of infidelity, heresy, and unbelief, and no others, were punished thus. The doctrine never had any moral significance. People say, if there is no hereafter of retribution we may as well give up trying to restrain the passions of mankind. What a calumny on mankind! Must we, then, be hounded like cattle to Paradise? Terror may have restrained men, but did it ever make them better? For 2,000 years God has been set up as a vindictive judge. Suppose he had been regarded as a merciful father, would the world be any worse? My belief is that whatever Christendom has done to mitigate the rancor of the world has been done in spite of the doctrine of future punishment. The only effect of the doctrine upon the world has been to brutalize it in its most sensitive part. Those who believed in it not only became indifferent to human suffering, but felt that it was an imperative duty to persecute those who differed with them. The doctrine is unquestionably dying out. In proportion as men become intelligent they discard it. Only those people who make a trade of their professions, or are utterly brutal, believe in it. If it is a question whether to believe in the traditions of the Church and the Bible or in reason, let all the others go, for reason is more than all. It cannot be expected that the doctrine will ever die out of Christendom, because Christianity cannot live without it, but the ideas of vindictiveness and Providence are inconsistent. When Satan is abolished, not only as a reality but as a figure of speech, we will have a view of the Supreme Power worthy the acceptance of rational minds."

An Open Letter to the Spirit of John Milton.

DEAR SPIRIT OF THE DEPARTED MILTON: Allow me, as a commencement, to quote from your "Paradise Lost" the following:

> "Goodness thinks no ill
> Where no ill seems. . . . .
> For neither man nor angels can discern > Hypocrisy."

O Milton, what gross inconsistency! You use all the powers of your mighty intellect in your attempt to justify God in punishing mankind for the sin (?) of Adam and Eve, and yet let such expressions enter the volume in which you condemn mankind to eternal punishment for the sin of the first pair.

Our mother Eve was pure—fresh from the hand of God, having nought but goodness, so not capable of detecting hypocrisy.

Did not the Devil appear to her without evil? But, you say, she had the command from God not to eat of the tree of knowledge. How knew she who God was? How knew she that it was evil to break a command? Surely no evil seemed, for she was pure. No evil did it seem to her to break a command, even of God; no evil, then, could have appeared in the taking of the fruit and eating it, and no evil could have seemed in offering it to her spouse. Neither could Adam have perceived evil when he took the fruit from Eve and ate it. Then, if neither of our first parents perceived evil in what they did—and they could not, for they were pure—where was the sin for which they suffered, and for which we all must suffer?

I can admire the talent, genius, and wonderful power of imagination that you displayed in the construction of "Paradise Lost," but must tell you that you kept too near the Bible to be near the truth also. I very much wish that you could visit the world at the present time and read THE TRUTH SEEKER and Radical Review, for if you did, I am sure that you soon would be as much opposed to the doctrine of original sin, and all that nonsense, as you were in favor of it when a material dweller on this planet.

Truly yours, C. M. HAMMOND.

The Truth Seeker.

D. M. BENNETT, Editor.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

The largest and cheapest Radical Journal published in Europe or America, containing nearly seven hundred square inches more of Reading Matter than any other Journal of its class.

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, JAN. 26, 1878.

An Explanation.

In an editorial in The Index of the 17th inst.—in which an effort is apparently made to defend Anthony Comstock in the raids he is persistently making upon freedom of speech, freedom of the pen in matters of theology, physiology, and sociology, rather than to present us in a favorable light before its readers—the following advertisement from the Tribune is quoted:

> The public are respectfully informed that the use of our name in connection with a circular petition, issued by one D. M. Bennett, is wholly unauthorized. It is a matter of regret that our laws provide no suitable penalty for offenses of this kind. McKESSON & ROBBINS.
> Wholesale Druggists, 91 Fulton st., New York City.

After which The Index makes the following comments:

> The same paper states that McKesson & Robbins have brought suit against Mr. Bennett for having refused to strike their name from his circular. We submit that, no matter what its objects, a petition pressed in such ways as these—putting on it the names of some parties against their protest, and slandering some parties because they decline to sign it—is just such a petition as should be left severely alone. It it rather late in the nineteenth century to imagine that such tactics as these can succeed with intelligent or high-spirited Liberals. The cause of Liberalism is the cause of purity, of truthfulness, of justice, of common kindness, of a noble morality in the very best sense of that word; and it can only be served by methods as high and noble as its objects.

We can but regret that Mr. Abbot should deem it necessary to speak such unkind words about us, and to so readily catch up an unfair statement, in the interest of Christianity, made against us. We cannot object to his defending his champion of purity and respectability, Mr. Anthony Comstock, but we do object to his placing us in an unfair light before the Liberal public. We would not impute improper motives to the man who thus writes about us, nor express the suspicion that it is induced by a spirit of jealousy and rivalry. We cannot think that he will raise himself higher in the estimation of the Liberal public by pulling us down and insinuating that we are impure, untruthful, unjust, unkind or immoral. We presume that in this direction Mr. Abbot could give us very instructive and useful lessons, but that he has misrepresented us and placed an unfavorable construction upon well-meaning conduct, we cannot deny. It might be well, however, for Mr. Abbot to become a little better informed on this subject before he speculates too profoundly concerning our dishonest course.

In the first place we have put no person's name to the petition alluded to, either against their protest or with their consent. The document to which names were printed was not a petition but a circular letter explanatory of the petition; so Mr. Abbot's stinging remark that for this reason the petition should be left severely alone falls pointless to the ground, as well as about its being too late in the nineteenth century to imagine that such tactics can succeed, &c. Let us explain about the use of that name.

When we decided to send out a petition for general signature, asking for the repeal of the oppressive and unconstitutional laws by which many deserving and honest people have been most cruelly wronged, we deemed it desirable that the names of certain publishers, druggists, artists, physicians, etc., who are directly affected by the laws in question, should be appended to it to accompany the petitions over the country. We put the circular in type and had some proofs struck off with the names appended which we wished to go with the circular. Then we called upon the persons whose names we had selected and conversed with them about the objectionable character of the laws and the propriety of petitioning for their repeal or modification. We called upon Messrs. McKesson & Robbins, and was very courteously received by Mr. Robbins. He agreed with us in reference to the objectionable and unconstitutional character of the laws complained of, and that an effort for their repeal or modification should be made. He said he had written a letter in full to the authorities in Washington condemnatory of the laws, and had a man go on there at an expense of fifty dollars to himself with a view of having modifications made therein. In fact, he seemed to sympathize with us heartily in the effort we were making. True, when he saw the name of his firm printed at the foot of the circular, he said, "I hardly know as we want our name attached to the paper." To which we replied, "Why, Mr. Robbins, what harm can it possibly do? The object of the paper is only to call the attention of the people to whom the petitions are sent to the necessity of action upon the subject. Your name will carry much weight with it, and I am very anxious to have your consent to its remaining on." He made no objection to that, and, in addition, remarked that if a certain other party, whose name was mentioned, would join in the effort, his firm would do so also. We left a copy of the circular and the petition with him. He did not say take their name off, nor did he protest against its use. Feeling that he was in full sympathy with the effort we were making and that he had tacitly consented to the use of their name, we did not deem it necessary to remove it. We may have acted ill-advisedly, but we certainly did not intend anything dishonorable, much less criminal. In no case did we use the name of any party who protested against the use of the same and who did not express themselves in sympathy with us.

It was over ten days after our conversation with Mr Robbins, and after some pious Christians had belabored him for suffering his name to be used in connection with an "Infidel document" that he objected to its remaining on. It was then too late. The circulars had been sent to all parts of the country and the evil complained of could hardly be remedied. No more were printed with their name attached, but by mistake some were sent out without its being erased.

The frowning of displeased Christians has been most potent in other instances. Some who had given us full consent to use their names, when approached by Anthony Comstock and threatened with a libel suit if they did not "go back" on us, denied that they allowed their names to be used, and absolutely signed a paper asserting that they had not authorized us to use their names. Such has been our experience.

We wish to assure Mr. Abbot that we have not been prosecuted for printing the name of McKesson & Robbins to the circular, though Anthony Comstock visited them repeatedly, urging them to prosecute us or to allow him to place the case in the hands of his own lawyer. He evidently wished to put us to all the trouble he could. When our Attorney called upon the drug firm, Mr. McKesson asserted that Bennett had acted about right in the matter. We can only say we intended no wrong, and if we committed one, we regret it as much as any one.

Thus, when the case is fairly understood, we think it will be seen that Mr. Abbot is unnecessarily severe upon us. We regret this as well as that he should deem it necessary to take such positive ground against the signing of the petition. We have coöperated with him in the measures he has introduced, and hope still to do so. We regard the placing of the Jewish God in our Constitution as an unwise movement, but the retention of Comstockism in our Post-Offices, and in our courts, we regard as a far greater evil. The petition was drafted by an able Attorney of this city, who is a deep thinker and one of the soundest Liberals with whom we are acquainted. It is probably a pity that Mr. Abbot was not consulted in the matter. Had he been so consulted, possibly he would not have been so disturbed. Carping and fault-finding may remedy any mistake that has been committed, but we have serious doubts about it.

As it is, we perhaps have not much to complain of. He may have prevented a few from signing the petition, but we estimate that nearly a hundred thousand earnest liberty-loving people have signed it, and before this paper reaches our readers, the petitions joined together in one large roll of several hundred yards in length, will have been conveyed to the capital, where, despite Mr. Abbot's objections, it is to be hoped they may exert some influence in calling the attention of Congress to the necessity of taking action in regard to the unjust laws known as the Comstock laws, passed in the expiring hours of the 42d Congress, March 3, 1873. All it asks for is that the laws alluded to may be repealed or modified so as to be less oppressive; yes, this is all that naughty petition prays for.

We concede to Mr. Abbot an unusual amount of purity, morality, and respectability, to say nothing of kindness, truthfulness, etc., but we object to the hundred thousand persons, more or less, who have signed that petition being counted as impure, indecent, or immoral. We believe the larger portion of the signers alluded to possess in an eminent degree the sterling virtues of purity and decency in which Mr. Abbot shares so largely. And, although they ask for some change to be made in certain unwise laws, we deny that it is because they are in favor of indecency or obscenity.

Anthony Comstock ought to be truly grateful to Mr. Abbot for the defense so kindly tendered in his behalf, and we trust Mr. A. will still continue to be pleased with his approved representative of purity and respectability. Mr. Comstock has many very ardent Christian defenders and apologists, but in the Liberal ranks they are not numerous. We presume The Index will not be overlooked by Mr. C. The time may come when, in the estimation of people of ordinary purity, Anthony Comstock will need all the defense that can be accorded him. If Mr. A. is pleased with Mr. C., as exemplified in Mr. Heywood's arrest and trial, as in the arrest and trial of hundreds of others, and especially with his late conduct at New Canaan, he is to be congratnlated, and also for having in Mr. C. such a "truly good man" to represent the purity and decency of the country. As for ourselves, with all the love of purity, decency, truthfulness, kindness, justice, and respectability that has been enkindled in our breast, in selecting from the two classes into which the country is divided on these questions, for companionship and congeniality we shall not choose the class in which Anthony Comstock is numbered, even though we may thereby be compelled to part company with The Index.

If, with Mr. Comstock, Mr. Abbot regrets our escape from trial upon the charge of indecency, blasphemy, and obscenity before the American Inquisition, and the consequent imprisonment which befalls the most of those dragged before that terrible tribunal, he is to be commiserated by his numerous friends. Let him not despair; with his timely aid and earnest endeavors, there may be another turn in the wheel of fortune, or injustice and oppression, as the case may be, when we shall doubtless receive our deserts. At all events, the consolations of purity and respectability are not denied him.

A word about the ruling of Judge Blatchford in the lottery cases quoted in The Index. Our attorneys were familiar with those cases, and saw a wide difference between a crime definitely described by the law and those not defined at all, and where the construction of criminality is left entirely to the spy informer, the District Attorney, jury, and Judge. It is a ground of great complaint connected with the obscenity laws that the offense is not defined, and many have been sent to prison who had not the slightest desire to break a law or to commit a real crime against morality. We have seen this within the last few days, where a verdict of guilty has been rendered in a case where the jury decided that they did not believe the work condemned was obscene within the meaning of the law. It is to be hoped that the people of this country may ere long regain their senses.

Another Correction.

We prefer not to notice personal attacks upon us, but there are instances where justice to ourselves and the public requires it. Let us, then, make another slight explanation and correction.

The Age of Reason, recently started in this building, in endeavoring to show how profitable "Liberal publishing" is, said Mr. Mendum had become one of the wealthiest men of Boston, and that we, though we begun here some four years ago without a dollar, are now estimated to be worth $200,000. The statement was so extravagant and utterly wide of the truth that we wrote a short reply and requested Mr. Payne to publish it. He did publish a part of it, but refused to publish all.

Mr. Mendum is far from being among the wealthiest men of Boston. If he is, his piteous appeal for aid not only to save Paine Hall, but the Investigator itself, published in the same issue of the Age of Reason in which his wealth is so over-estimated, would seem most inconsistent. The fact is, Mr. Mendum by his assiduous labors of near half a century, has simply succeeded in placing himself in comfortable circumstances. His publishing business has never been a source of great profit. We have no doubt the debt incurred by the building of Paine Hall is very oppressive upon him.

As to our immense wealth, we will just say we know not in what it consists to amount to $200,000. All we have is our books, our paper, our type, and our plates, and upon the latter we owe more than they would sell for at a sheriff's sale. From our commencement here, up to the present month, we have not found it necessary to keep a bank account. All the money we have been fortunate enough to receive from our patrons we easily carried in our vest pocket, and many a time it has been a problem as difficult of solution as some of Euclid's where the money was to come from to pay our hands and meet our bills. Sometimes they have had to wait.

We had but little to start our paper with, it is true, but during the first six months we put in between one and two thousand dollars—all we had—and by dint of the strictest economy for the nearly four and a half years we have pursued the business, and working sixteen to eighteen hours per day, seven days in the week, we have succeeded in keeping our head above the waves while a good many have sunk all around us. We had no capital to draw upon nor stock company to look to. We have played a lone hand and made a single point. We have found kind friends who have been generous, and a few loans were made to us.

If Mr. Payne thinks we are worth $200,000, we will sell out to him or any other person he may bring, all we have for $10,000 to-day and retire from the business. We doubt very much if he can find a person who will give $5,000 and take our risks.

When we requested Mr. Payne to make correction of his misstatement, he did it in an unsatisfactory manner, and intimated that the reason that we did not wish the public to know our wealth was that they would cease to continue their donations to us, and then he spoke about our "numerous appeals" for donations, about professional beggars and frauds, overdoing the business of begging, etc., etc. We were sorry to see this. It seemed like adding insult to injury. We have not made numerous appeals for donations. We have made only one. When we announced our arrest we said, in view of an expensive trial which awaited us in the United States Court, if friends felt like making contributions to a defense fund—as the friends of Charles Bradlaugh and Mrs. Besant had done in England under similar circumstances—that the same would be gratefully received and duly acknowledged in these columns. This is all the begging we have done. Friends responded kindly; we acknowledged the same and returned thanks. This has been our offense. We are only sorry we fall so far short of pleasing the publishers of Liberal papers. We had far rather be on pleasant terms with all if possible. We cannot accuse ourselves of acting in any way unkindly towards Mr. Payne. We announced his paper before its appearance. We advertised it and gavé it a kindly greeting when its first number was issued, and we wish it only kindly wishes. We are not aware that we have at any time written or spoken a word to prevent any person from taking it. If it fails to reach the height it aims at it will not be because we have pulled it down.

As a specimen of Mr. Payne's accuracy of statement may be taken his remarks that Comstock had been trying for months to prevent the government from prosecuting us. The exact reverse of this is the truth. So far from Comstock's persuading the government not to prosecute us, he was the one that caused a prosecution to be commenced, and was much displeased when the District Attorney decided not to prosecute us—threatening to pursue us and to yet accomplish our overthrow. Mr. Heywood and ourselves were arrested about the same time, and Comstock has tried to prevent the prosecution of Heywood as much as he has ours.

The publishing of Liberal books and papers may in the future prove to be remunerative; but up to the present time it has not. Abner Kneeland did not find it remunerative. Robert Dale Owen and Francis Wright did not; George H. Evans did not; Jeremiah Hacker did not; Gilbert Vale did not; Geo. W. Matsell did not; Calvin Blanchard did not; Dion Thomas did not; A. J. Boyer did not; Charles P. Somerby did not; and others whose names are not mentioned. We may succeed in making money where others have failed; but if we do it will be after this date. Up to this time we have not. Our object is to do what we can while health and activity remain, and if our friends see fit to patronize us sufficiently to keep us at work we will be duly grateful. Now, "let us have peace."

Cruel Punishments.

For the past quarter of a century or more humanitarians have urged that punishments should be inflicted for the improvement of offenders rather than from any feelings of retaliation or vengeance. This proposition has taken sufficient hold of the public mind to influence even the clergy to a more or less degree in discussing the doctrine of hell. It has been announced from one of our Orthodox pulpits that a punishment which exceeds its power to improve an individual's character is cruelty. It is seldom we have the pleasure of coinciding with orthodox utterances, but we confess ourselves as fully agreeing with this sentiment. All who do accept it and who are interested in the present discussion of the postal law for the pretended suppression of obscenity, are particularly requested to observe the severity of the penalties usually inflicted under this statute. Take for illustration the case of Simpson, who, probably, would receive the least sympathy of any of the cases mentioned in our last issue. He was sentenced to ten years' imprisonment at hard labor, and to pay a fine of $5,000! Perhaps something in his previous dealings in articles charged as being obscene may have prejudiced his case, for the misdemeanor for which he was tried consisted simply of mailing a card containing a suggestive double entendre. If this was really his only offense, the punishment was monstrous. If he had been guilty of previous irregularities of this kind, it was nevertheless cruel. Who supposes that if this man had been "sent up" for ninety days or at most for one year he would have resumed such a perilous calling on regaining his liberty? It is not an easy matter to obtain such a severe sentence as this in a case of manslaughter, house-breaking, highway robbery, etc. Some extremists will urge that polluting the minds of the youth with such impure prints, "picnic cards," etc., deserves the punishment. Hold a minute! Who were responsible for such tastes among children? It is no uncommon circumstance for people who consider themselves respectable and who move in what is called good society, to amuse each other with smutty jokes. Great men have been said to indulge in such pastimes. What, then, can be expected of the children of such men? Then, again, if men in high positions will talk such slang, will not other men of less pride of character and less refinement print and sell just such stuff? If, therefore, there is gradually coming over the minds of men a disposition to correct this tendency, why not commence at the outset at least with mild punishments? It will be time enough to throw stones when it is found that grass will not answer. Probably in almost every other law in our State and National statutes the punishment is graded commensurately with the crime. Take the lottery law for example: Sending lottery circulars through the mails subjects the convicted offender to a fine of from $100 to $500. The fine cannot exceed the last named amount, nor is there any imprisonment for such an offense. But, under the obscene literature law, we find that a physician who has been giving advice which he conscientiously believes the public at large needs, is fined thirty-five hundred dollars for sending a tract containing such supposed valuable information through the mails. For such an offense, which is in fact no offense against morality, the victim who has been convicted by a narrow-minded jury, may be visited with a penalty of ten years' imprisonment and $5,000! Think of it, Americans who are deluded with the idea that they are living in a free country with a free press and free speech!

The real reformer who is a few years in advance of the rest in any of the great questions which affect religion, society, and medicine, or the mistaken fanatic who thinks he is doing right in printing and circulating his doctrines, may suddenly find himself confronted by a sentence which is sufficient in a majority of cases for the most depraved felon.

Inconsiderate as the postal obscene literature law is in most of its features, there is nothing in it after all which stands out so appallingly cruel as the provision which puts the power into the hands of any court having jurisdiction in such cases to inflict a frightful punishment for a questionable offense!

Conviction of E. H. Heywood.

As we go to press the telegraph brings the news of the conviction, in the United States Court at Boston, of E. H. Heywood, editor of The Word. His trial was commenced on the 17th and lasted two days. The arrest was for sending through the mails, in answer to a decoy letter by Anthony Comstock, a copy each of Trall's "Sexual Physiology" and Mr. Heywood's pamphlet entitled "Cupid's Yokes." The first work, as we have before remarked, is strictly a scientific work, and is highly approved by many intelligent physicians and thousands of other most excellent people. It has been extensively sold for nearly twenty years, and has passed through twenty-seven editions. It was gotten up by one of the purest minded men this country has produced, and was designed exclusively to impart useful information and not in the slightest degree to excite the passions. The second work is a candid and albe dissertation on social ethics by Mr. Heywood himself, and is written in a perfectly fair and able style, containing not a word indecent or impure, but in opposition to the current orthodox opinions of the day.

A marked peculiarity of the case was the severe rulings of Judge Clark, who excluded all testimony in reference to the character of the works as viewed by competent judges. And works of a similar character, which are by no means obscene, which were offered as testimony were also ruled out. Some twenty most respectable citizens, among whom were Elizur Wright, A. E. Giles, S. H. Morse and others were thus practically excluded from the witness stand. The judge also decided that the intent or design of the person writing and mailing books had nothing to do with the matter. He allowed no comparison to be made with any other book that might be considered better or worse.

The charge of the judge is considered by the best lawyers of Boston as a most flagrant departure from judicial precedents and from the plainest principles of justice. The case was given to the jury on Friday afternoon, the 18th, and they are reported to have been out twenty hours, when the judge, wishing to return to his home in New Hampshire, dismissed the jury till Tuesday the 22d. The verdict was guilty, but altogether a most singular one. They said they found him guilty on the first count, but did not find the book obscene within the meaning of the law. It is not strange that such a verdict raised a big laugh. If they did not find the book obscene, how they could find a verdict of guilty is a mystery.

The truth is, Mr. Heywood entertains views obnoxious to the orthodox people, and it was a foregone determination to suppress him. It it is one of the greatest outrages of modern times. It is the old story of intolerance against mental liberty—the same cruel spirit that has lighted thousands of martyr-fires and turned the cranks of innumerable machines of torture and death.

An appeal was at once taken to the Supreme Court of the United States, and it is to be hoped there are enough fair-minded judges sitting on that bench to execute justice regardless of religious bias. In that high court of the country it is hoped that Mr. Heywood will be pronounced guiltless as he is, and that the laws under which he is prosecuted will be decided unconstitutional, as they are.

Those Petitions.

We wish to extend our warmest thanks to our numerous friends in all parts of the country for their kind and cordial co-operation in obtaining signatures to blank petitions we sent out. A large number of names have been procured, and we well know the labor and time that is required to obtain them. We would be glad to write a letter of thanks to every friend who has interested himself in this good work, but we have not the time to do so. Let this be considered as a personal address to every one who has lent his assistance in the matter. We heartily thank you.

We have attached the petitions all together in one roll, and estimate the entire length at nearly one thousand yards, containing over fifty thousand names. Large numbers of petitions have been sent direct to members of Congress. Friend Bundy, of the Religio-Philosophical Journal, Chicago, has obtained many names and duly forwarded them. And many will doubtless still come in, as some twenty petitions are now coming in daily. The highest number of names sent on one petition is 1,021, from H. W. Mercer, Winterset, Iowa. One from A. Minski, Milwaukee, Wis., containing 805 names; one from D. Jenkins of Hannibal, Mo., containing 723 names; one from C. L. Roberts, Yates City, Ill., containing 426 names; one from W. F. Barkley, Mt. Pleasant, Pa., containing 420 names; one from Dr. A. Sherman, Champaign, Ill., with 405 names; and large numbers of others with varying numbers of names of lower denominations which we have not the space to give now.

It is a great achievement, and it is to be hoped that combined, they will wield a powerful influence upon Congress to induce them to perform their simple duty and by which every individual in the country will be benefitted.

Donations to the Defense Fund not Previously Acknowledged.

Leroy Dutton, $6; J. C. Schaffer, $2; L. W. Sibley, $2, R. S. Wellman, $5; John A. Jost, $1.50; R. J. Lamborn, $2; A. W. Butler, $1; H. W. Mercer, $10; Werner Boecklin, $5; R. P. Main, $2; A. Hanson, $1; Paul Simons, $1; Even Larsen Moen, 50 c; Marc Thrane, 50 c.; C. W. Moergan, $1; B. S. Valstad, $1; E. T. Jahr, $2; John Olson Sunde, $1; Henry Sander, $4; B. F. Riley, $2; Joseph Thomas, $1; T. M. Hines, $2.50; T. G. Todd, $2.50; H. Buxton, $2; P. G. Buford, $2; M. Bisbee, $1; J. Meyer, $1; W. S. Hudson, $1. H. J. Miller, $1; George Scharff, $1.

PLEDGES.

T. Goerdens, $25; S. R. Shepperd, $5; C. S. Cobb, $5.

We have again to thank our kind friends for their many exhibitions of sympathy and generosity. We are thereby placed under heavier obligations than we fear we will ever be able to repay. We have endeavored to faithfully use the funds that have been sent us in paying the attorneys we employed to attend to our defense and in sending over the country numerous petitions, etc., for signatures, the same to be placed before Congress very soon. We have in this way expended a good deal of money, and are not yet done. Kind friends, we thank you most sincerely.

The Positive Thinker.—By reference to our advertising columns it will be seen that our Liberal friends, G. L. Henderson and Hugh Byron Brown, will in the course of a few days issue the first number of a new Radical monthly, called The Positive Thinker. It will be an advocate of Freethought, with a decided partiality to the work of reconstruction. To this extent it may be considered as an organ of The Church of Humanity, founded largely upon the positivistic philosophy. Messrs. Henderson & Brown are able men, and their monthly will undoubtedly be an able journal. They are of course anxious to obtain subscribers. Price, $1.00 per year. Address Henderson & Brown, 141 Eighth St., New York.

Personal.

W. F. Jamieson is full of lecture engagements for weeks to come. He gave four lectures in Osage, Kansas, Jan. 15, 16, 17, 18; two in Kansas City, Mo., Jan. 20; five in Harrisonville, Mo., Jan. 21, 22, 23, 24, 25; two in Kansas City Jan. 27, and is engaged to give five in Paola, Kan., Jan. 28, 29, 30, 31, and Feb. 1. Address, Box 1250, Kansas City, Mo.

The Truth Seeker for one year to new subscribers and "The Humphrey-Bennett Discussion" for $3.50; the paper and Thomas Paine's Great Works in one volume, or "The World's Sages, Thinkers and Reformers," or Amberley's "Analysis of Religious Belief," for $5.00, all sent postpaid. The paper alone, per year, $3.00; six months, $1.50; four months, $1.00; three months, 75 cents.

Religious Views of a Romish Priest.

Last Will and Testament of Jean Meslier,

CURATE OF THE ROMISH CHURCH IN FRANCE, AND WHOSE VIEWS UPON THEOLOGY WERE NOT PUBLISHED TO THE WORLD UNTIL AFTER HIS DEATH.

The following is a faithful translation of the principal arguments contained in a very rare work, written by a French priest, and having for a title, "The Last Will and Testament of Jean Meslier." It is highly esteemed as a specimen of French Free-thought literature, not only because of its sound common sense and irrefutable logic, but because of the persecution of which it has invariably been the object during every reign in France in which priest-craft held sway. There are but a few copies extant, and we are happy to be able to give our readers a good translation of one of them:

Jean Meslier, vicar of Etrepigny and of But in Champagne, was born in the village of Mazerni, a dependency of the Duchy of Mazarin. Though born of humble parents, he nevertheless succeeded in completing his studies, and was eventually called to the priesthood.

During his stay at the seminary, where he made himself remarked for the austerity of his morals and his great charity to the poor, he attached himself to the system of Descartes.

The vicar of Va, Monsieur Voiry, and the vicar of Boutzicourt, Monsieur Delavaux, were his confessors, and the only persons he was known to visit.

He was a rigid partisan of justice, and sometimes carried this zeal too far. The village squire, having one day maltreated some peasants, Jean Meslier refused to pray for him by name at the altar. The dispute was carried before the Archbishop of Rheims, Monseigneur de Mailly, who decided against him. But on the Sunday following the rendering of this decision, the priest ascended the pulpit and bitterly complained of the cardinal's sentence. "Such is," said he, "the usual fate reserved for us poor country parsons; the archbishops, who are all great lords, despise us and will not hear us. Let us then pray for Antoine de Toully, that he be converted and have the grace to no longer oppress the poor nor despoil the orphan."

The squire, who was present and heard this mortifying recommendation to mercy, carried a second complaint to the archbishop, who once more summoned Jean Meslier before him and reprimanded him severely. From that time forth but few events marked his career, and he was never called to any other charge than that of Etrepigny.

His favorite books were the Bible, Moreri, Montaigne, and some of the Fathers, and it was from his study of these latter and the Bible alone that he drew the sentiments and reflections to be found in his testament. Of this latter he made three copies with his own hand, one of which was handed to the Keeper of the Seal of France. It is from this copy that the following extracts have been made; The manuscript is addressed to Monsieur Leroux, Magistrate, and Advocate in Parliament, at Mézières. On the inside of a sheet of coarse grey paper, which served as an envelope, was written as follows:

"I have seen and recognized the errors, the abuses, the vanities, the follies, and the wickness of men; I hate and I detest them. I have not dared to say so during my life, but I will at least say so in dying and after my death; and it is to the end that it may be known to all that I make and write the present memoir, that it may serve as a witness of the truth to all who may see it and whom it may please to read it."

There were also found, among the books of this priest, a copy of the treatises of Fenelon on the existence of God and his attributes, and the Reflections of Father Tournemine, Jesuit, on Atheism, with marginal notes, signed with his hand.

He had written to two clergymen, the incumbents of parishes neighboring his own, to acquaint them with his sentiments and convictions, telling them that he had consigned to the care of the justice of the parish (St. Menehoult) a copy of his writings, in 366 sheets in 8vo, but that he feared they would be suppressed, according to the prevailing evil custom of preventing the simple from receiving enlightenment and coming to the knowledge of the truth.

This priest worked all his life in secret to attack all opinions he believed to be false. His testament is headed with a sort of preface or notice, in which he asks pardon of his parishioners for having so long preached to them lies which in the depth of his heart he detested.

"You know, my brethren," he says to them, "my disinterestedness; I do not sacrifice my convictions nor belief to vile personal interest. If I have embraced a profession so directly opposed to my sentiment, it is not through cupidity: I obeyed my parents. I would have enlightened you sooner could I have done so with impunity. You yourselves can bear witness to the truth of what I here advance. I have not degraded my ministration by exacting any of the tithes and dues attached to it.

"I here likewise called heaven to witness that I supremely hate and despise those who laugh at and deride the blindness and ignorance of the masses who piously provide them with enormous sums to the end of purchasing their prayers. How horrible a monopoly! I do not blame the contempt that those who fatten on your sweat and the fruits of your labor show in secret for the mysteries and superstitions they trade in, but I abhor their insatiable cupidity and the pleasure they take in laughing at the ignorance they are intent upon maintaining and encouraging.

"Let them content themselves with laughing at their own success; but let them not at least add error to error by abusing the blind piety of those who make their lives so easy. You doubtless render me, my brethren, the justice due to me. The sympathy I have shown you in your sorrows and troubles must guard me from any taint of suspicion. How often have I performed gratuituously the functions of my ministration? How often has my heart mourned that I could not assist you as often as I could have wished? Have I not always proved to you that I had more pleasure in giving than in receiving? I have jealously avoided exhorting you to bigotry, and I have spoken to you as rarely as possible of our wretched dogmas. As vicar, I could not do otherwise than perform the functions of my ministration. But what have I not suffered when perforce I must preach to you the pious lies that in my heart of hearts I abhorred! In what contempt I held my ministration, and especially that superstitious mass, and these absurd administrations of the sacraments above all, when forced to do so with the solemnity that excited to the utmost your piety and good faith! What feelings of remorse has not your credulity excited in my bosom? A thousand times I have been on the point of opening your eyes, but a fear stronger than my strength arrested me and forced me to a silence that death alone can end."

Meslier died in the year 1733, at the age of 55 years. It is thought that, disgusted with life, he purposely denied himself the necessary aliments, as he persistently refused all food and drink to the last. He left all he was possessed of to his flock, and begged they would bury him in his own garden.

Currency and Finance.

The Effect on Wages of Bland's Silver Bill if it Become a Law.

"The interest of the poor man and of those in moderate circumstances lies in a plentiful supply of money which will pay every variety of debt."—TRUTH SEEKER, January 5, 1878.

MR. EDITOR: The evils which you attribute to a deficient amount of money in circulation, and which you think would be remedied by an increased amount of irredeemable paper currency or by silver coins, the nominal value of which is below the market value of silver bullion, are evils arising from the facts that society is not established, as to the production and distribution of wealth, on the system of the Oneida Community (as it might be for these purposes without the repulsive sexual arrangements of that community), and that in the old prevalent system of competition among individuals, the want of sufficient of sufficiently remunerated employment is caused by the fact that the use of complicated machinery greatly supersedes the use of human labor; while the increase of numbers in the laboring class conspires with the lessening demand for human labor to lessen the proportion of money that is made the share of the working man.

How can any increase of paper money or any substitution of siver coin for gold rectify this? Our manufactories and other seats of industry do not now sustain the number of laborers which they formerly did; but this is not caused by a want of what passes for money. We have abundant evidence that such circulating medium is being lessened in amount by its issuers, because there is not a demand for the supply there is of it! If there were more of it, it could pass into the hands of poor men only if they could obtain employment; and to replace the working man in the condition he has here been used to, his wages must have a nominal increase in proportion to the increase of the currency; and that could only be if the demand for laborers was somewhat equal to or in excess of the number of laborers that need employment.

But the use of modern machinery in many countries prevents such a demand for labor; and by its power, and by the use made of it to produce more goods than can be sold, the machinery cannot be constantly used at its full power; it is controlled by the state of the markets. When they are overstocked, or are supplied by countries where the rate of wages is very low, our manufacturers must suspend operations; and, therefore, as now, they cannot use the amount of circulating medium that has been and still is ready for their use.

It has been demonstrated that irredeemable paper money, aided by the increasing inventions of machinery, chiefly contributed to reduce English laborers from a condition in which humble-minded people could be happy to a condition of miserable paupers, or to be worse housed, fed, and clothed than paupers. And the irredeemable paper money greatly assisted in the development and use of machine power, for such money was readily obtained on loan, and by its aid inventors produced machines, and by its aid manufacturers and others bought machines. And the easily-borrowed irredeemable currency not only aided in the destruction of home industries and destroyed the comparative independence of the artisan, but it also aided in the establishment of the mammoth trading concerns, which may have economical advantages, but they have compelled a large number, who under the old system would have been store-keepers, to become clerks, artisans, and laborers, and to add to the competition for employment.

As the money now waiting for use cannot find profitable employment, any addition to it could be used only by rash or dishonest speculators, who would rush into schemes that wiser and honest men would avoid. Some of them would gain by causing some poor dupes to purchase their responsibilities.

Paine says, "Paper money is strength in the beginning, weakness in the end." Have you read Paine's "Decline and Fall of the British System of Finance?" and Cobbett's "Paper against Gold?" Cobbett, the decided opponent of an irredeemable paper currency, says on the subject that it was "at Paine's expiring torch I lit my little taper."

It is true that anything made by law a legal tender as money will serve to pay debts; though it defrauds the creditor, and defrauds all who have made contracts for interest, or to sell goods, lands, or labor in a legal tender of a higher value in exchange for commodities.

If we have silver dollars, five of which are not equal in value to five in gold, then paper money promised to be paid in such silver dollars will be worth only as much as the silver dollars. Both will serve to pay debts, though these debts were contracted to be paid in currency redeemable in gold; but the depreciated currency will not, in new transactions, pass at the same rate that it will in paying debts.

Your poor journeymen printers may submit to take their wages in silver or paper that will not purchase as much of commodities as the same number of dollars used to buy, because they may not understand that cheap silver will not be taken in exchange for as much of other things as was given for the same weight of dearer silver; or the fear of being unemployed may induce them to submit to a real reduction of wages, though nominally they are paid the usual amount. In either case their submission will be the initial of a permanent reduction of wages. But, with the probable exception of labor, more dollars will have to be given for almost everything you use. Prices will be said to rise, while the fact will be that the estimated value of the goods is stationary, but the value of the currency is lessened, and more of it must be given for the goods.

Competition for employment may keep the nominal wages of labor stationary; improvements in machinery, or materials for manufactures being found in greater abundance, or being obtained and worked by less labor, will prevent goods so affected from rising in nominal value; they, like the currency, will have become cheaper.

If gold coin could suddenly be made, over all the civilized world, as abundant as some people say paper money ought to be, gold would become cheap; a dollar or a sovereign of the present weight would not purchase then as much of commodities as they purchase now, and all who were then paid debts, fixed rates of rent, salaries, interest, and wages, in the coin named in their contracts, would be cheated by that coin having become cheaper—worth less in exchange for other things. (The value of the precious metals has varied, as we see now in the case of silver, but it is very seldom that such a change of value occurs in them, during a short time, as exists now with silver; and, when it does occur, Government should mitigate the evil as far as it is possible, instead of using it as a new means to violate public and private contracts; and to obviously do that for the benefit of intriguing bullion dealers and politicians.)

Farmers would, with cheap gold, as they will with silver and paper dollars of reduced purchasitg power, receive more dollars for the products of their farms (if they do not keep down their prices by increasing productions beyond the demand for them), but they will have to give more dollars for all that they purchase, including land, for taxes, and for rent, unless they have a lease, under which, for as long as it lasts, the poor landlord will be cheated. The laborers are striving for increased wages, but if they obtain only as many of the depreciated dollars as they now obtain of the dollars of higher value, their wages will be reduced; and if competition for employment does not make them submit to this reduction, farmers must increase the nominal amount of wages. Then, in what are farmers to be benefited by their obtaining a higher nominal price for their products?

It is not a present scarcity of currency that prevents what is called "moving of the crops;" a slack demand and low prices exist because the world produces more than can be sold at a profit. The vast amount of money now invested at very low rates of interest, or kept unproductive by seekers for more profitable investments, the national bank-notes that have been paid back to the Treasury because they could not be profitably used, all such currency would have been loaned to produce-dealers in good credit or who gave security; but markets are overstocked, and dealers are restrained as to purchases, not by a difficulty of obtaining currency, but by the certainty that prices will be low, and by the uncertainty as to selling at a profit.

The experiment of issuing coins of less actual value than coins of the same denomination previously had has often been made, and the disastrous results are matters of history. One of them was that the laboring classes, by fraud and force, were made to submit to receiving smaller shillings (in England) than their fathers had received; and as they did not generally receive any increase in the number of the shillings, their wages did not purchase as much as their fathers' wages had purchased; and every time the experiment was repeated, it still further diminished the value of the wages of the generality of the laboring classes.

An increase in the world's quantity of silver (not met, as it is not met now, by an equivalent increase in the demand for it by those who can buy it) reduces its market value; and to keep the purchasing power of the shilling or dollar, in which wages are paid, at what it was before the increase of the quantity of silver, the shillings or dollars ought to be made heavier in proportion to the reduced market value, and the old shillings and dollars ought to be officially declared to be reduced in value. But such honesty would not suit the wide-awake get-money-by-any-means class.

British India is now suffering from the change in the value of silver; that is, large classes are suffering; but the classes of debtors and employers are benefited. The silver rupee is not now worth what it was, and the large number, including the working people, who have made contracts for payment in rupees are defrauded. Many of them may not know that their rupee will not purchase as much as it did formerly because silver is cheaper; they probably say commodities are dearer; and, if the working classes here have to take their wages in silver dollars and in paper money payable in silver dollars—either of which will not purchase as much gold as paper money payable in gold will—to the extent of the difference will the purchasing power of the wages be diminished, and the working man will not see that he has been cheated by cheap silver; but will say, when traders will not give him as much of their commodities for a coin of cheap silver as they did for a coin of the same weight of silver of a higher value, that by some infliction of providence, or by some roguish league of the traders, prices have risen.

Irredeemable paper money is more mischievous than is paper money that is to be paid in such silver coins as is now contemplated. Paper money is easier produced than metallic money is, and it has been produced in such quantities as to greatly reduce the value of every nominal amount of currency, the quantity of it pulling down the value of the coins so long as they continued to circulate with the paper; but the coins then became of higher value in the bullion market, whither they went, to be sold to other countries where coin had a higher value, or they were transferred into gold and silver ornaments and utensils for those who were made richer by the hocus pocus of irredeemable paper money.

The Silver bill is mainly designed by its projectors to be a source of great emolument to traffickers in silver, who want to gain the profit that there will be on making silver dollars of less weight than they ought to have according to the market price of silver. This may be prevented. The profit may be taken by the Government, and may perhaps be used as perquisites, or as an additional salary grab by our legislators. At the best, it may be beneficially used to reduce the national debt; but then the profit on the coinage will be of the nature of an indirect tax upon all creditors, upon fixed incomes, and upon wages.

MARGARET CHAPPELLSMITH.

Jan. 11, 1878.

NEW HAVEN, Dec. 10, 1877.

EDITOR TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: You are again called upon to record another victory for Liberalism, and this, too, in the hotbed of orthodoxy. The Board of Education of New Haven passed the following resolution at their meeting held on Friday evening, Dec. 7, 1877, by a vote of six to three: "Resolved, That all religious exercises in the public schools shall be dispensed with," said resolution to take effect at the commencement of the next regular term. This, remember, is under the shade of old Yale, and the home of a Beecher, a Bacon, a Porter, and a Woolsey; the barracks of blue-skin Presbyterians, and the birthplace of Connecticut Blue Laws, which under this trio of superstition once held the populace in submission to their idols of bigotry, creeds, and dogmas. Do we live in an age of progress? Nature says we do! The grass ever grows, water continues to run, the earth revolves, disintegration is visible; the handwriting upon the wall ever reminds us of progress. Nature performs her functions of evolution, so with men and minds. I believe the era is near at hand when superstitions, creeds, and religious bigotry, must find itself recorded in the histories of the past. The future is destined to become famous for its liberality and respect for all men's views, when all new phases shall have an impartial hearing. A good work has been accomplished. Brave men and women have fought a noble battle, but not with the sword. We used not a scourge of small cords, neither did we cast great stones down upon them, but with forcible arguments appealed to to their convictions of justice, and showed the unconstitutionality of forcing religious exercises within the walls of our public schools. Thank, then, the School Board of New Haven for their honesty, sagacity and patriotism in removing the bone of contention which so long has threatened to destroy the usefulness of our common school system. Most respectfully yours,

W. M. STOW.

The Labor Question.

Macdonald Hauled Over the Coals.

JERSEY CITY, January 10, 1877.

MR. D. M BENNETT, Dear Sir: After looking over the enlarged copy of THE TRUTH SEEKER, I am inclined to think that the plain, common-sense working people who read its pages will conclude that the enlargement of your paper is no advantage to them. I am quite sure they will so conclude if it shall continue to afford aspirants for newspaper notoriety the opportunity to ventilate their ignorance of subjects they boldly assume to enlighten others upon. I am impelled to make these remarks by reading the article in THE TRUTH SEEKER of the 5th instant (the first enlarged number) headed "The Labor Question" and signed Eugene Macdonald. I think his allusions to, and his charges made against, the working classes are very unjust, harsh, and cruel. And his weak attempt to ridicule the Land Reform measures put forth by men who have devoted their lives to studying the Labor Question—to get at the real bottom facts—and to know what measures to propose to promote justice and better the condition of mankind, I think does very little credit to Mr. Macdonald's intelligence.

I think his article will make sad the hearts of all honest workers that read it, and will gladden the hearts of the monopolists and the oppressors. I think the article can do no good and will not increase the circulation of THE TRUTH SEEKER among working people, for all the working people and friends of the working people that I have met who have read that article, have vehemently denounced it—some even saying it was an infamous outrage and libel on the character of the laboring classes. If Mr. Macdonald had given one moment's thought as to who the criminals now being tried and punished are, I think he could not have made that unjustifiable assertion that the sons of the working man keep the ranks of our criminals full and his daughters are our children of shame. As a plain working man I would advise Macdonald to get a little of that knowledge (at least, on the Labor Question) that he says is easier to get than money at present. It may save him from many a blunder and foolish notion hereafter.

WILLIAM ROWE,

A careful reader of THE TRUTH SEEKER and an earnest seeker after Truth and Fair Play.

Mr. Beeny's Opinion.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I looked forward to the coming of the enlarged TRUTH SEEKER with much satisfaction. Although not a subscriber, I am yet a sympathizer, as with all Liberal publications, and I honor the man who has the courage to fight the old fallacies and errors of superstitions through which humanity has had to struggle. When the paper came to me through the hands of a friend, I eagerly seized it and scanned every article, but "The Labor Question," riveted my attention. Said I, "This is the question that has attracted the ablest minds and the most devoted friends of humanity throughout the civilized world. It is worthy a place in THE TRUTH SEEKER." I read the article through, and the paper dropped from my hands with a sigh of disappointment and sorrow for the young man who could write such a libel upon his class and kind. Evidently he is beyond his depth. "That there are more men in this country than there is work for!" He certainly knows but little about the geography of "this country." Is the Labor Question confined to a country? Is it not world-wide? Did he ever read what Mr. Neibhur wrote to Baron Von Humboldt, while Minister from Prussia to the Court of St. James', in the year 1825? After reflecting on the subject, that great historian makes the following summing up: "The world is verging towards barbarism unless that which has not been heard of in centuries be revived, namely, a redistribution of the lands amongst the people of the different nations." Mr. McCollough, one of the standard writers of England, says on the same subject and with greater force: "When we reflect on the effects of the combined power of capital and machinery, it is too horrible to contemplate, and all we have to do is to fold our arms and await the intervention of some contravening cause." That contravening cause is shadowed forth by Mr. Neibhur—a redistribution of the land, whether in "ten-acre cabbage patches," or according to the natural principles of limitation.

The workingman's children "are born in poverty, reared in ignorance, and die in sin. His sons keep the ranks of our criminals full, and his daughters are our children of shame!" Shame on you, Mr. Macdonald, as the son of a workingman! Is it the sons of workingmen that have robbed the people of over $30,000,000, during the past three or four years? Was it the workingmen that formed the Credit Mobilier that robbed the government of millions of dollars and hundreds of millions of acres of the people's lands? Is it workingmen that form the rings in our Legislative halls, that control legislation in the interest of capital, to the detriment of labor? Is it workingmen who run the moneyed and insurance institutions of the country, that live upon interest and usury, which begets the two extremes of society—the few very rich and the many very poor?

If you have no words of hope and cheer for the class that have created the wealth of the world, while inheriting only its poverty, do not insult them by a want of sympathy, or a mixing up of their trials and sufferings with your notions of theology, for the Labor Question is a separate and distinct question from theology. But the laboring man's needs are the same, no matter what his religious belief may be.

H. BEENY, 344 Fourth ave.

Mr. Ingalls Enlightens Macdonald.

EDITOR TRUTH SEEKER, Dear Sir: For a long time I have waited to see if you would not turn your search in the direction of labor and of the land. In your issue of Jan. 5th, on reading the heading of a communication, I thought you had really begun the investigation in your columns of the "Labor Question." I was, therefore, hardly prepared to find in the very first paragraph a slur cast upon Land Reformers, as wishing to divide the earth and sea into "ten-acre cabbage patches." The writer's discovery, that "there are more men in this country than there is work for," is worthy of an Apache Indian, who thinks that "scarcity of game" is a good reason why a neighboring tribe should be exterminated, or at least its increasing population killed off. Of course, no sensible political economist would think of questioning so ridiculous a proposition. France, with a population of fifteen proportionately where we have one, is the only civilized country on the globe in which labor is fully employed, and where there is little complaint of over-production. And, by the way, France nearly a century ago tried this "ten acre cabbage-patch" plan, and it is logical to assume that it (imperfectly as it was applied) has largely contributed to her industrial prosperity, by furnishing opportunity of self-employment, whenever the system of monopoly has failed.

The increase of workers the writer seems to regard as a great misfortune, because it tends to overstock the labor market. Now this may be a just subject for consideration, for the individual workingman; but its fallacy as an element in political economy is seen the moment we reflect that it involves the complementary proposition, viz., that an increase of consumers would increase the demand for productions. Even if the nonsensical idea that there were more men than there was work for had any foundation in fact, it would serve just as well as an argument in favor of a more rapid increase of consumers as for a restriction on the reproduction of producers. But this seems to require an exercise of the logical faculties to which no one once bitten with the Malthusian virus seems equal.

This writer is equally unfortunate as to facts in his sweeping libel on workingmen, that their "sons keep the ranks of our criminals full," and that their "daughters are our children of shame." As if to show the absurdity of such puerile general statements, in the past week the annual report has been made by the Police Department, in which all the arrests have been given for the past year. In the classification there appears a large proportion of those who are not usually regarded as belonging to the working-class, viz.: agents 396, artists 31, brokers 152, clergymen 16, editors and reporters, 108, grocers 456, hotel and saloon keepers, 3,106, lawyers, 151, merchants 544, physicians 114, teachers, 48. Nearly one half of the whole are classed as those who have "no occupation." Now, as the poor usually have their children put to some occupation, it is fair to assume that this class are quite largely drawn from the more well to-do, who "have a right to use rum and tobacco, when they can afford it." The statement that the intelligent shun drink, and that "the rich drink moderately," will bear no better comparison with facts. It is evident that something more is wanted than "education," as "a remedy for hard times," viz: to make a sensible use of it.

The writer's attack upon the monopolists and the clergy call for no remark from me. Nor do I wish to appear as the advocate for the interference of Government to furnish work for people who will not set themselves to work when they have the opportunity. But it is notorious, and must be familiar to every one who has studied the subject of industrial economy, that Government, through its sanctions of monopoly, particularly of the land, is a perpetual interference with the right of the producer to employ himself. In the first treatise ever published in our language on political economy, Dr. Adam Smith clearly points out the consequence of the land system to create "a monopoly" on every thing that is produced from the land. What the land reformers ask of legislation particularly is, to repeal its class laws and keeps its hands off. With freedom of access to the soil, increase of producers and of consumers would be one and the same thing. It is also worthy the consideration of the Malthusians, that the oppressed and defrauded, as by a compensatory law of nature, multiply most rapidly; and that in proportion as their condition improves, the tendency becomes reversed.

It is to be hoped that this writer, who wields so ready a pen, will mature his thoughts by a careful study of the Labor Problem in all its bearings.

Yours, &c., J. K. INGALLS.

Letters from Friends.

ALTON, ILL., Jan. 9, 1878.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: The first number of your fine sixteen-page paper is received, and I am reminded that my time of subscription expires Jan. 1st, so I begin with the first enlarged paper and enclose the $3. When you first started your modest little monthly in Paris, Ill., some four years since, I had my doubts of its success, and when you changed it to a semi-monthly I doubted the propriety of the enterprise, but when you changed it to an eight-page weekly I was surprised still more at what seemed to me bordering on recklessness. Now I doubt no longer. When, in the face of hard times and failures, you push the paper up to its present grand size, there would seem to be no such a word as fail in your vocabulary.

I see your trial is still pending, and if the tyrant and inquisitor Comstock concludes to try his hand on you, and the trial comes off, you can count on five dollars more from me, and if you bring suit against him for damages, I will make it ten dollars. I was sorry and disgusted at the article in the Index where the editor virtually turns you over to the tender mercies of the inquisitor, and says to his friends to stand off, while he holds up his kid-gloved hands, as the tyrant passes by, in token of his innocence. This may please a few of Mr. Abbot's friends, but it will not satisfy the bold thinker, who sees behind this thin veil of obscenity the Young Men's Christian Inquisition, which only desires to crush your paper, and Freethought with it. When that is done, Mr. Abbot's white hands would not save him from a like fate, and it is strange he does not see this fact.

No doubt this pious Christian Inquisition is busy sending the Bible to all parts of the country, regardless of its obscene and disgusting stories. Let them read the pitiful story of the young brother who refused to cohabit with his brother's widow, also of the good prophet, when he lost his ring, and of Abraham on the house tops with his father's concubines, and of father David when he espied the beautiful wife of Uriah, and the most disgusting story of all where the drunken Lot debauched his daughters. I dare not describe, or even tell these horrid stories as they stand recorded in the Bible. If I should, I should justly stand convicted of violating the purity of the mails, but let this pious Christian Inquisition read these loathsome tales, and then tell me whether their real object is to protect the purity of the mails, and morals of the young, or whether it is not to crush Freethought, and a free press, under what they are pleased to term blasphemy. The veil is too thin, and the Index's soft words and white hands cannot diguise it.

Yours truly, D. R. SPARKS.

WEBSTER, MASS., Jan., 16, 1878.

MY DEAR MR. BENNETT: Well, it seems by the last TRUTH SEEKER that you are again let loose to enjoy the same privileges that the rest of us have. Some time ago I gave you my promise that my husband and myself would give you ten dollars towards helping you pay your fine, fully expecting at that time that you would surely be beaten by our pious law-givers. But as you are to have no trial I shall not forward you the money. My excuse for the withdrawal is that we have not got the money to spare, unless absolutely necessary. And as our names have stood among the promised donors, I am perfectly willing that this letter should be published, for I do not want the credit of doing that which I have not done. I enclose to you in this a money order to pay for my TRUTH SEEKER for one year; also, one dollar for Payne's Age of Reason, to be credited to James Forbes, Webster, Mass. Yours truly,

MARGARET FLINT.

SCRANTON, PA., Jan. 11, 1878.

DEAR BENNETT: Enclosed you will find six dollars to pay subscription for TRUTH SEEKER one year for R. D. Plimpff, and one year for A. H. Hartley. THE TRUTH SEEKER as enlarged is worth double its price, and if you are true to your promise of printing the sermons of Adler, Frothingham, and Chadwick, they will fully be worth the subscription price themselves. With anxiety we watch your case with Comstock, and hope he has felt what a hornets' nest he raked up, and wisely drop it.

R. D. PLIMPFF & A. H HARTLEY.

TROY, KANSAS, JAN. 9, 1878.

HON. D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Or shall I not address you as Saint Bennett, along with the other glorious martyrs, heroes and saints (as yet uncanonized in the Infidel calendar)? Whereas I once admired, with an admiration akin to worship, Saint Paul of old for his dauntless heroism in adversity and his unconquerable determination to preach what he thought the truth, in spite of hell, now I cannot (and wish not to) repress a feeling of hearty sympathy and unbounded admiration for you in your most noble, honorable, brave, able, cool, calm, persistent, and determined efforts to declare the truth and preach salvation to a dying world. Not salvation from penalty (a rogue's salvation) but salvation from sin—from error, from ignorance, from superstition, from damn meanness. I have read every number of your paper for five years, and the only obscenity I ever saw in it was the naked truth. That's what's the matter with Ghoul Comstock and all the other Christian ghouls who are supporting him. I was six years an ardent Congregationalist, but never a ghoul. I don't like ghouls. I do not believe a quarter of the Christians are ghouls. I hate a cruel man or a cruel woman or a cruel God, and I almost hate those who do not hate them, too. Comstock is by nature a cruel devil, a mercenary wretch, a sneak, a monster—fitted by nature for the very part he is acting.

I send herewith a list of names to one of your petitions. Not that we are in favor of the publication or circulation of obscene literature. It is infamous! A man who will publish, sell, circulate, buy, or read it, is unfit to mingle in decent society. But we are not in favor of going back to the good old times when Puritanic ghouls fined, whipped, beat, banished, imprisoned, mutilated, burned, and murdered unbelievers for "Christ's sake." Jesus was heterodox—was literally an Infidel—was murdered for blasphemy and for his bitter hostility to the orthodox religion of that day, by as dirty a pack of devils as ever went unhung, set on by priests and other church scoundrels. Suppose Jesus was here now, preaching against church diabolism as he did then. They'd make short work of him unless five thousand Infidels attended him as a body guard, especially in his travels through New York city and Texas. Localities, like individuals, that most deserve the wrath and need the mercy of the Christian God are invariably the most intolerant and blood-thirsty in pursuing those who deviate. The good, the pure, and the virtuous are ever the most charitable.

Why does not some Eastern Liberal, who desires to go West, organize a colony of Liberals and settle together in Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, or Texas? Almost every week a colony from some Eastern or foreign State buys a few sections of land and settles in Kansas.

S. R. SHEPPERD.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., Jan. 20, 1878.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Old Friend: So the "Inquisitor General" has been obliged to forego the pleasure of having his divine (?) pleasure gratified for once, and allow me the pleasure of congratulating you on your fortunate escape from the clutches of that hydra-headed monster the church. It would have been a great loss to the Liberals of America to have lost the bright thoughts that flow from your fertile brain. May you live long years before you are forced to become a martyr for the cause, for you are endearing yourself to the hearts of thousands you know not of, and had your prosecution gone on, you would have found more substantial aid flowing in to help you to fight our cause. Your expose of the Comstock cases shows us the true character of your arch-enemy. He is a noble specimen of a Torquemada, but let him and his Society of Christian Asses have their way, we shall soon see the stake in fair America, but I hope Old Split-foot will soon stop his capers for him.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.

DEAR D. M: Your last paper, so full of information about Comstock, will not fail to open the eyes of thousands of persons who have been heretofore uninformed about the character of this man and the inquisitous methods he has descended to use (if indeed it is a descent for him to be villainous), to ensnare the unwary and bring poverty and misery upon their families. You have done well to show up the unconstitutionality and gross injustice of a law which can be made to sap away the foundations of our civil and individual liberties. No Dred Scott decision or Compromise Bill ever threatened to jeopardize and destroy so much of human rights, as does this unjust law. Who does not see in the arrest of yourself and Heywood that it is the mailed hand of a religion seeking as of old to destroy those whose truths they cannot refute? What connection, relation, or similarity is there between the obscene picture business and that of publishing most fearlessly the truths of science and delinquencies of ministers? Obscenity! The Bible has more obscenity than any other book which is on sale in the stores. Obscenity! When Train published the obscenities of the Bible, he was put in prison for it, but the craven hypocrites did not dare to give him a fair trial. It needs no discussion to prove this a bad law, for any law that will clothe one man with authority to go about and arrest law-abiding citizens, throw them into jail, put them to expense, expose them to ill-repute, and yet decline to give them a trial when the victimizer sees that he cannot convict them, is an exceedingly wicked law. I am pleased to know that Mr. Heywood is going to drag the would-be-inquisitor before a court of justice. I wish you also may yet deem it best to do the same. Despair not of the justice of your course; it is not finished but only begun. Why did Comstock arrest you for the "Open Letter to Jesus Christ" and the marsupial tract? Did he not know that it was not only out of his busines, but that he could not get up a case against you? The common people all over the land know it, if he does not. When I first heard of your arrest I was in Ohio, and in conversation with the first man I met, not a lawyer either, he maintained that Comstock had no case. I refer to this simply to point out the fact that the common people understand their rights, and, let us trust, will not readily surrender them. W.S. BELL.

FRIEND BENNETT: Your opponent, Mr. Teed, says "the word hydrogen is a compound of two Greek words, hueder, water, and geunao, to produce. Hydrogen is the water producer according to the application of the term employed to designate it, and it is simply water in its positive or male form," etc. It is well known that water is composed of oxygen and hydrogen in certain definite proportions. To say that hydrogen is "the water producer," is therefore untrue. As Mr. Teed says he is opposed to modern science, he may be unwilling to admit as true what I have stated. I hope, however, he is sufficiently open to conviction to believe the evidence of his senses, and so I instance the following: Water may be resolved into its original elements in the manner herein stated. Into a gun-barrel which has been entirely closed at the breech, pour a small quantity of water, place the barrel in a hot fire in such a position that the water will not escape. Soon the water will begin to boil, steam will be formed and find its way toward the open end of the barrel. Before reaching this point, however, it has undergone a change, has parted with its oxygen, and hydrogen gas alone will issue from the mouth of the barrel. Upon examination, it will be noticed that the interior surface of the barrel is oxygenized, the oxygen in the steam having a great affinity for iron forms the oxide of iron, and hydrogen, the other constituent of steam, is the remaining product

The galvanic battery will also demonstrate in the plainest manner what water is composed of. Place the negative and positive poles in water, and bubbles will be seen to rise, hydrogen gas from one pole and oxygen gas from the other, and under the action of the battery the water will entirely disappear. The resulting products of the decomposition of water may be verified by other experiments. Those I have mentioned are the simplest and most palpable to the senses.

Charity.

"WITH MALICE TOWARD NONE; WITH CHARITY FOR ALL."

In speaking of a person's faults,
Pray, don't forget your own;
Remember, those with homes of glass
Should never throw a stone.
If we have nothing else to do
Than talk of those who sin,
'Twere better we look to ourselves,
And at that point begin.

We have no right to judge a man
Until he's fairly tried.
Should we not like his company
We know the world is wide.
He may have faults—and who has not?
The old as well as young—
Perhaps we may, for all we know,
Have fifty for his one.

I'll tell you of a better plan,
And find it works full well,
To try your own defects to cure
Ere others' faults you tell.
And though I sometime hope to be
As good as some I know,
My own shortcomings bid me let
The faults of others go.

Now, let us all, when we begin
To slander friend or foe,
Think of the harm one word may do
To those we little know;
Remembering curses, chicken-like,
Sometimes to roost come home;
Don't speak of others' faults until
You have none of your own.

COUSIN EVE.

New York, Jan. 10, 1878.

B. F. Underwood, in Boston Investigator.

This author (Hudson Tuttle) is one of the ablest of his school. His works denote the thinker and investigator. He is impressed with the spirit of modern thought. Some years ago he wrote two scientific works which at the time impressed me with their originality and boldness. It is no small credit to Mr. Tuttle that those works, written more than fifteen years ago, contain very little that may be considered crude or obsolete to-day, while most of the positions taken and views advanced have been confirmed by subsequent discoveries and developements. This work, "Career of Religious Ideas," shows that the author has pondered carefully the subject of religion in all its bearings. He writes with a fullness of information as conspicuous as his vigor of intellect. He makes no compromise with error, but is always manly and fair. His views are very heterodox, wicked and blasphemous from the standpoint of the orthodox Christian. Revelations, whether from gods or angels, are no authority for him. He knows nothing about a creator of the Universe, and frankly admits it. On the whole, the work is a credit to Mr. Tuttle, and a valuable contribution to Freethought literature.

From PROF. J. W. PIKE.

As thinker, writer, philosopher, Hudson Tuttle may be considered the Aristotle of the Spiritual Dispensation.

An Open Letter to the President of the U. S.

SIR: In the hope of promoting a better appreciation and a better protection of the Indians, I beg leave to offer the following suggestions: It is assumed that the dark-skinned aborigines are the "Savages" and that the white-skinned Americans are the civilized, when the fact is that he is the most a Savage who is the most selfish, and the more of art and science he has, the greater is his power to oppress his fellows; hence the man who acts like the dog in the manger, grabbing that which does not belong to him, and which is needed by another, is the most brutish, and the real Savage; and it is remarkable that all the facts of history and the most authentic testimony assures us that the aggression of the whites, as illustrated by the dog, has broken every treaty and commenced every war which has ever occured between the Indians and the whites. Gen. Harney affirms that he has been a frontiersman for fifty years, and that during that time in every war against the Indians they were in the right and the whites were in the wrong. Gen. John E. Wool affirmed that the Oregon Indian war of '54-5 which cost the country $10,000,000, "was got up by a set of white rowdies, who were unworthy of the name of men."

The Right Rev. Bishop Clark said in a public speech, that there is not on the face of the earth a people who are more wronged and robbed of everything which is dear to humanity than are the aborigines of this continent.

The Rev. Dr. Sunderland (chaplain of the Senate) said that "when our posterity shall read of the treatment of the Indians by their fathers they will wonder why God did not cause the earth to open and swallow them up." Now if these statements are true, surely it is time that the term "Savage" was applied to those to whom it belongs, instead of being used as a cloak to cover the brutality which they practice, and in confirmation of this view we have the testimony of Webster's Dictionary (see under the word "savage"), "the American Indians are remarkable for their hospitality to strangers and for their fidelity to friends," and I will add, for their justice to their enemies.

Mrs. Jessie Fremont lived alone more or less for two years with the Indians, Gen. Houston lived six years, and the Right Rev. Bishop Whipple has lived fourteen years with them, and they all agree in the statement of the Hon. Felex A. Brunet (Indian Commissioner) that "when the Indians are kindly treated, they are quite tractable and easily moulded in the right."

When all the circumstances connected with death of Gens. Canby and Custer and many others are known, it will be seen that each of them fell in accord with the law by which the crawling worm turns on the foot that crushes it.

And sir, I ask, was it not a needless and unjust waste of life and money in forcing the Sioux to the Missouri River last Fall against their will and against an existing treaty, and was not the pursuit of Sitting Bull and Chief Joseph a violation of their right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happeness? I think if justice could speak, it would say that inasmuch as these Indians believe that they could have better protection under a Queen than they had under a President, it was an outrage upon common humanity to waste life and money to prevent them from getting it. I think the case is clear that the Indians being unjustly called "Savages" have on that account been deprived of that regard which is due to them as equal fellow-men.

Another cause of difficulty grows out of the assumption that as the Indians are "Savages" they have no true conception of God, and of goodness, and it is therefore a Christian duty to press upon them Christian creeds and customs, which many of them instinctively repel. Because of their inherent reverence for the Great Spirit, whom they hear in the thunder and feel in the sunshine and see in the stars above and in the flowers and fruits of the earth, thus looking from nature up to nature's God, they cannot accept the missionaries' statement about the creation, and the fall, and the mission of Christ. Some of the tribes believe that the Great Spirit caused them to come from a pair of bears, and other tribes believe that they came from a pair of eagles; and if, as scientists affirm, man came from a pair of monkeys, and the Bible says that he was formed from the dust of the earth, it is no wonder that the Indians cannot see any superiority in the white man's origen over their own. They also say that it is not true that the serpent ever walked on his tail, or that it now eats dust, for it eats what it can catch, and it goes on its belly now as it always must have done; and they say that although the white race may have been conceived in sin and shaped in iniquity, the Indians are not, and that Christ did not come to them and if he had they would not have crucified him, and as the "preached gospel" has not brought to them "peace on earth and glad tidings of great joy," but instead they have suffered robbery, sorrow, and destruction from the race who preaches it, they have in consequence lost all confidence in anything which the white man tells them.

Another assumption is that the Indians, being "Savages," are destined to perish, and it is useless to use means to avert their doom. Now it seems to the writer that this is much like the thought of "a certain rich man who was clothed in purple and fine linen and who lived sumptuously every day" relative to a poor beggar that lay at his gate sorely afflicted and covered with rags; but the sequel shows his sad mistake, and that it is not superior wealth nor high position which frees men from selfishness and savagism, but on the contrary it helps them in their power to harm, as we see in the Tweeds and the Belknaps and in a host of swindling speculators who victimize alike the white man and the Indians. It is this class "whose inhumanity to man makes countless thousands mourn." These are the real "Savages" who are "destined to pass away" before the march of a true civilization, while the good of every race and grade and color will live and multiply until the ancient prophecy is fulfilled "when righteousness shall cover the earth, as the waters cover the great deep."

In giving this statement from the Bible as well as from the Indians' standpoint I reflect no blame upon any person or party, because I know that human beings act according to their developments; if they are on the animal plane, they will act the brute, and therefore there is no cure for the difficulties with the Indians nor escape from the retributions which now afflicts our country, but by the golden rule "do unto them as we would wish to be done unto; for whatsoever a man soweth (good or evil) that shall he also reap," and in regard to the mode by which existing difficulties can be adjusted to insure abiding peace, the writer will offer a few suggestions in another open letter. Respectfully,

JOHN BEESON.

Science Hall, 8th street, New York,
Jan. 23, 1878.

St. Patrick's Church.

SERMON BY A REDEMPTIONIST FATHER.

One bright Monday morning of late, at half-past five, one of the Redemptionist fathers preached as follows in St. Patrick's church:

The art of printing has been considered by some to be a great invention wherever it has been introduced, but, like all other things which are good in themselves, it has often been used for other purposes than those for which it was intended. It has been used for other purposes than disseminating sound doctrine and sound morals. I wish to speak to you this morning about the classes of literature you must not read, about bad books, and bad papers. All bad books, or all books forbidden by the Church to be read by good Catholics, may be classed under three heads: first, those whose direct tendency is to destroy the doctrines of the Church; secondly, those whose influence destroys morals and doctrine indirectly; thirdly, those whose tendency is neither one nor the other, but to destroy faith. I would warn you, my children, against all such. First, infidel books, by which is meant books written against revelations and intended to destroy a belief in things supernatural—I may mention among these the works of Tom Paine, Darwin, Huxley and such men—accepting only the natural and disbelieving the supernatural. Such books are forbidden by the Church; even a priest is not permitted to read them, except by permission of the archbishop, who gets the permission from Rome. This permission is sometimes granted to those whose duty it is to refute them. Then there is another class which, while they cannot, strictly speaking, be called infidel, are heretical. Such books include

ALL PROTESTANT WORKS, BEGINNING FIRST WITH THE BIBLE.

If anybody asks me if the Bible is the Word of God, I answer: If they mean the Catholic Bible—Yes; if they mean the Protestant Bible—No. The latter is the word of the devil, and is a lie, because written by the father of lies. When Luther left the Church he immediately changed the Bible to justify his actions, and they have been at it ever since, until now there are no less than four thousand variations in the Protestant Bible, consisting of texts left out, parts of texts suppressed, additions, and alterations in punctuation which change the meaning. This book Catholics are warned against. Do not think because the Church forbids the reading of it that she is a tyrant. If a mother saw her child have a razor in its hand would she not immediately take it away? Well, the Protestant Bible is a razor in the hand of a child; a man may use a razor because he knows how, and a priest may read by permission a Protestant Bible because his education is such as to not make it dangerous to him. Some will tell you a Catholic is not allowed to read any Bible; if any one says a Catholic cannot read a Catholic Bible tell him he is a liar—tell him he is a jackass. Tell him for me—with my compliments—

HE IS A JACKASS.

This class of literature also comprises those newspapers and tracts, of whatsoever kind, that make fun of your religion. And I find that in this city are some which are not only forbidden by the fact that they ridicule your religion but are also specially forbidden by the archbishop of this diocese; and yet I learn that some Catholics read them! How much better it would be for the Church if she were rid of such! A Catholic ought not to be ashamed of his religion and read a paper of this kind to escape the sneer of Protestants. He then becomes a lick-spittle of Protestants. When a lukewarm, milk-and-water Catholic like this comes to me and says he needs to on account of his business, I do hate such a Catholic; I feel like spitting in his face. Then, my children, I would warn you against all books of superstition, for they are against faith. All fortune-telling books are forbidden, because only God can foretell future events; even the angels are unable to do this, how much less men! Also all books of immoral tendencies purporting to be medical works and intended to encourage improper practices, especially those illustrated with improper cuts that a Catholic eye should never see, and all novels and light reading. Now, what is the duty of a Catholic when a book published by a Bible Society is placed in his hands, or when a lady with a blue veil and a reticule on her arm, looking like a potato taken from the cellar, where it has been for ten years, hands you a tract, or, if you won't take one, sticks it under the door or in at the window? Some of you are fond of the weed—some of you smoke—then or let your wife make coffee with it. These tracts generally have four or five leaves, and are written by Methodist ministers, who have no money in their pockets, and it is done to make money and get a living. These tracts will perhaps tell you that works are not necessary to salvation, or tell you untrue stories about priests and nuns. Burn them; and when you have any doubts about a publication, come and ask your father confessor. If you can read, buy Catholic books and papers; subscribe to them,—they will make a good Catholic of you, and you will be able to fight Protestants with your intellect as well as your fists; the former being a more effective way.

JUST LIGHT YOUR PIPE OR CIGAR WITH IT,

Religion and th Public Schools.

On one side religionists claim that the public schools make atheists, and on the other that the influence of religion in them is cramping the power of education. The Catholic Church says that the schools cannot flourish without its benediction, and the Protestant Church contends that if the Bible is taken from the schools religion will be lost. But in the din of this controversy the people are beginning to know that learning is not necessarily associated with any particular dogma or denomination. Their Catholicism, Protestantism, the Bible, priests and parsons—all stand in the way of progress. They threw all the higher responsibility of the scholar away with the mumbled prayer. Is it possible that this should have the power of quickening the mind or of making the pupil more fit to meet the Master? The public schools will not be perfect until they are completely unsectarian. There must be no priest, no pastor, no sacrament, no Bible in them. The whole question must be to rationally educate the young mind for the best enjoyment of an intellectual life. The office of teaching must not be condemned to a subordinate; let religion lift its hand off and leave the results to conviction alone. The intrusion of formal religion breeds sectarian strife. We have Catholic and Protestant text-books, histories, interpretations of the sciences and all the rest, none of them having a comprehensive view of their subjects and all bent on imposing their own peculiar views upon the American youth. This is an outrage of indescribable magnitude; it is a thing against which every man in the country should array himself. We know that history, philosophy and the sciences need not be sectarian; that Romanism, Protestantism, the Greek Church—all are but sects; that they are ethically the same and seeking identical interests. In the light of this knowledge of truth, the books put into the hands of our boys and girls should not be on the side of Romanism or of Protestantism, but on the grounds of eternal truth. Unless the schools be anti-sectarian they must degenerate, and can never fulfill their mission to educate Americans.

GOD IN THE CONSTITUTION.

Certain people believe that we would be more happy by constitutionally avowing ourselves a Christian people; that our not saying this by the voice of Congress leaves us in the place of outlaws among nations. The opponents of this measure think it is illogical, useless and unconstitutional, having nothing whatever to do with the working of the laws. The idea that the avowal of Christianity in the Constitution would make the American people more happy or prosperous is absurd, and it is hard to believe that any set of men could entertain such a frenzied notion. What expectation is there in the heart of the people that this alteration of the Constitution would make the millions better off? Many of them are unable to read it, and more who cannot understand the meaning thereof. It is needful that Americans should call their attention from abroad and fix it sharply at home. Let religion appoint no chaplains in the army, navy, or legislature upon whose idle prayers the ignorant should depend; appoint no Sabbath to be kept in any particular way other than that of the general desire. Let religion set no fast or feast days, telling people when they ought to be sorrowful or glad. The people can find these things unerringly enough for themselves. We have not had an opportunity, because of the struggles between Church and State, to see what an unsectarian government could do. Let the State mind its own affairs and religion bless the world as best it knows how.—From a sermon by O. B. Frothingham.

WHILE most churches are groaning under onerous burdens of mortgage, and some are counting up the arrears of unpaid interest, the Lutheran Church of Beaver City, Pa., is enjoying freedom from financial pressure by reason of having an oil well on its premises. The continued flow of the dark and oleaginous stream from this well suffices to keep the church on its feet. These Lutherans now have no need of the sixpenny pincushion, the cake raffle or the bowl of weak oyster soup, for the time-honored church fair is no longer a necessity with them. Time was when churchyards were frightful places, especially at night, on account of the spooks which were supposed to make their abiding places there. But if oil wells can be generally introduced, the surroundings of the sanctuary will be lighted up with a brighter lustre than the phosphoric gleams that have often been seen. But it will not do for any one church in a town to have a monopoly of the flowing oil. Pew rents will go down, and collection boxes be neglected to such an extent that all the other churches will lose their members. Instead of starving the minister, and charging high pew rents to worshippers, the oleaginous church can keep its pastor in princely style, and declare a dividend every week or two to each original pewholder. It can spare money enough to supply all the Madagascar people with trousers and flannel shirts, and furnish everybody in Timbuctoo with a hymn-book, too.

I Wish it Were Respectable.

I wish it were respectable to lead an honest life,
To speak the truth at every turn, no matter for the strife
That Bibles, books, and selfish priests have taught so very long;
I wish it were respectable to sing another song.

I wish it were respectable hypocrisy to shun,
And let the world know what we are by what we've said and done;
To teach the little children they are not all defiled
Because Eve ate that apple where knowledge sweetly smiled.

I wish it were respectable an Infidel to be
To every false theology, on ocean, land, or sea;
To loosen chains of slavery that custom's laws have forged,
And pull down every throne on earth where sits a mortal lord.

I wish it were respectable for women to be free
To own the soul God gave to her, and from all bondage flee;
That man no more shall be her lord, to tell her when and where
She may learn wisdom from his lips, and when she must forbear.

I wish it were respectable for man to learn the cause,
That woman, too, is human, made so by Nature's laws;
And so amend his customs, his prejudice forsake,
That she may be a helpmeet in all the laws he makes.

I wish it were respectacle to reason out the plan,
How Nature caused this earth to be, and how the law made man;
And if the true philosophy should kill the BIBLE GOD,
I wish it were respectable to put him 'neath the sod.

I wish it were respectable to love all days alike,
And not on Sunday preach and pray, and Monday morning fight;
To know that all the week is good, was so by Nature given,
And Sunday not the only day to learn the way to heaven.

I wish it were respectable for Freedom to be bold,
To grapple with old tyranny that long has cursed the world,
And hurl him from his gilded throne to unknown depths below;
Oh! if it were respectable it shortly would be so.

I wish it were respectable to strangle gray-haired lies,
And not because they're OLD AND GRAY applaud them to the skies;
To place all dogmas, books, and creeds upon their real worth,
And if they do not stand the test, count them of good a dearth.

I wish it were respectable to own we don't believe
That Jonah lived in whaledom so long, and took his ease,
Or Elijah, with his fiery coach, went up to heaven so high,
Oh! I wish it were respectable to say, "THAT IS A LIE!"

I wish it were respectable for ministers of grace,
If they have loved another's wife and kissed her out of place,
To be no cowards at their posts, but own the truth as well,
And let the world say what it will, or send them straight to hell.

The Conflict Between Church and State.

LECTURES BY E. C. WALKER.

1. The National Reform; or, God in the Constitution.
2. The State Secularization Movement.
3. Taxation, Republican and the Opposite.
4. Religion in the School.
5. The State and the Sabbath.
6. National Protection for National Citizens.
7. Education and the State.
8. Who Shall Vote?
9. The Duties of Liberals.
10. The Liberal League and Politics.
11. The Modern Inquisition.
12. The Final Authority in Morals.

Will lecture in the West until the 1st of April for actual expenses. Especially desirous to assist in the organization of Liberal Leagues

Address E. C. WALKER, Forence, Iowa. Lock Box B.

Useful Recipes.

COLLARED PORK.—A leg of fresh pork, two tablespoonfuls of powdered sage, two of sweet marjoram, one of sweet basil, one-quarter ounce mace, powdered, one-half ounce cloves, two nutmegs, one bunch of pot-herbs, chopped fine, one loaf of stale bread, grated fine, one-half pound butter, two eggs, one tablespoonful salt, black pepper to taste; mix all with grated bread and eggs; take out the bone of the leg of pork, rub the meat on both sides well with salt, spread the seasoning thick in the hole made by taking out the bone, and tie up tightly and in good shape, and skewer well; put in a dripping-pan with water, and bake two hours, basting well.

FOIE DE VEAU.—Soak a calf's liver in cold water till it turns blue, then in salt and water for two hours, after which remove three or four layers of skin; be careful in doing so not to draw blood; lard it with salt pork, fine and near together; in each hole made for larding put one allspice and one clove; sift a little flour over it and put it in a dripping-pan with half a pint of water, a piece of butter the size of an egg on top; bake for an hour and a half and baste often; this is a nice dish for lunch.

SMOTHERED LIVER.—Lard the liver with strips of pork; brown nearly a quarter of a pound of butter in a stewing-pot; roll the liver all over it; add salt, pepper, onions, carrots and herbs, with some wine; cook slowly for two and a quarter hours, very tightly covered; frequently shake the pot so that the liver may not stick to the bottom; half an hour before serving add some carrots, cut into long square strips, and a few little onions; when served, the liquor and vegetables to be poured over the liver as sauce.

SCALLOPED OYSTERS.—Heve plenty of fine crushed cracker crumbs—either soda or butter crackers—put a layer in the bottom of a buttered pudding dish, wet slightly with oyster liquor and milk mixed, next a layer of oysters, seasoned with salt and pepper and small bits of butter, then more crumbs and oysters alternately until the dish is full. Let the top layer be of crumbs. Beat an egg and mix it with a little milk to pour over the top, place little lumps of butter all over the top, cover the dish and bake half an hour. Remove the cover a few minutes before taking from the oven, to let brown.

CURE FOR EAR-ACHE.—Put about four drops of laudanum and four drops of best kerosene oil into a teaspoon; put in a little bit of cotton-batting—about enough to absorb the mixture; hold the spoon and contents over a lighted candle or gas light till it begins to hiss with the heat, turn the cotton over, apply spoon and contents once more to the heat, then pinch out the cotton; put it hot into the ear; tie a bandage over the ear to keep the heat in, and relief is immediate. If you are subject to ear-ache keep a little box with a small vial of each of the articles named, and you can get relief at all hours of night or day in a few moments.

FOR CHILBLAINS.—Steep white oak leaves (found on the trees during the winter season), and soak the feet several nights in succession.

WASHING SILK HANDKERCHIEFS.—To wash a white silk handkerchief so that it will not be stiff, make a suds of tepid water and plain white soap, adding a tablespoonful of Magical Mixture, and lay the handkerchief to soak 20 minutes, covering it up so that it will steam; then wash with the hands and rinse, putting a little blueing in the water, which should be a little warm.

TO REMOVE THREADS FROM A BRUSSELS CARPET.—Use a clean, new broom; make it wet; then shake the loose water from it, and rub the carpet back and forth well with the broom. The threads will collect on the broom, or roll in wads on the floor, and are easily picked up.

TO DESTROY COCKROACHES.—Where borax and insect powder fail to work on cock-roaches, use red wafers, scattering abundantly where they run—a sure cure. A quarter of a pound will clear the largest house; they eat and die.

TO RID A HOUSE FROM BEDBUGS. Take ten cents' worth of quicksilver and the white of an egg; beat them well together until the quicksilver is like fine pepper all through the egg. It may take one hour to beat. Do not use an egg-beater, for the silver is poisonous. Then apply the mixture with a feather to all cracks or places where there are any bugs. This, if persevered in, is a certain remedy.

USEFUL FAMILY HINTS.

BUTTER.—I find that butter will come in about the same time in winter as in summer if the cream is kept in a cool place and then put in a pail of warm water while being churned, of the temperature of 62 degrees by the thermometer.

RELIEF from the ear-ache will be found in the following: Put in a spoon two or three drops of sweet oil, or, better still, almond oil, and the same of molasses and laudanum, warming it all together. Absorb some of the mixture in cotton wool, which put in the ear, placing a piece of the wool on the outside to keep out the cold air; repeating the operation if necessary. A roast onion-heart, dipped in this mixture and surrounded with cotton, is often very efficacious.

THE asthma is unknown in New Market, N. J.

HAIR TONIC.—Pour a wine-glassful of dry table salt upon a sheet of paper. While the hair is dry dip a metallic hair-brush or a stiff bristle hair-brush into the salt, rubbing it into the roots of the hair. Apply every day until the hair ceases to fall, then discontinue. Alum water will check the fall of hair that has become saturated and drowned with the use of oils, acting as an astringent. A strong decoction of boneset is also a good tonic for the hair.

George Francis Train.

Mr. Train holds himself responsible for the utterances here made, and entirely exonerates the Editor from all responsibility therefor.

Train on Taxation.

MILLIONS FOR A RICH OLD GOD: NOT ONE CENT FOR STARVING HUMANITY!

MR TRAIN'STILL STIRRING UP THE ANIMALS!—THUNDER AND LIGHTNING ALL ALONG THE SKY!—COMSTOCK STANDING ON HIS EAR!—COFFEE DROPPED FROM MR. TRAIN'S HYGIENIC DIETARY TABLE!—HE DECLINES TO BE PHOTOGRAPHED!—KIMBALL'S EVANGELICAL SWINDLE DIAGNOSED!—MOSES HULL'S IMMACULATE CONCEPTION!—THE FREETHINKERS EMASCULATED!—STEPHEN PEARL ANDREWS' LUCIDITY!

MADISON SQUARE, P. E. 48.

CITIZEN D. M. B.: When yon see me cheer Comstock and hiss the Freethinkers, don't lose faith in the Psychologic evolution. Freethinkers are poor, and poverty is mental slavery! When they become rich they are no longer free. A man must be so poor in purse as to be desperate before he will break his chains! But our people are so debased they prefer starvation to desperation.

"You would not be after striking a man when he's down, would you?"

"No."

"Then, damn me if I get up," responded Erin.

Talk is cheap! Everybody sympathizes with you, but few back it up.

"How much you pity that man?" (whose wagon had broken down) said the Frenchman.

"I pity him ten dollar."

For the life of me, I cannot see the consistency of building a monument to the dead Paine who believed in "One God" instead of the live Bennett who is above ground and who believes in THE TRUTH SEEKER.

THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES!

The corpse never rises till putrefaction makes it float!

The bridge never falls till an extra weight bears down the rotten timbers!

The game never drops from the nail till too putrid to hold its own!

The tea did not go overboard in Boston harbor till the outraged colonists could not stand it any longer.

Charles never lost his head till the Rump Parliament forced Cromwell to the front!

The slave oligarchs had to fire into Sumter before the people could be enthused to save the Union.

A million white men had to be killed before the blacks were emancipated!

So a score of editors may have to rot in jail before the country will understand the true meaning of Comstockism!

THE EVANGELICAL SWINDLE!

KIMBALL'S REHYPOTHECATION TABLE OF SIN.

Westminster Presbyt'n, San Francisco..	$7,500
Third Congregational, San Francisco...	4,000
First Congregational, San Francisco...	75,000
Calvary Presbyterian, San Francisco...	28,000
German Methodist, San Francisco.....	2,000
Central Methodist, San Francisco.....	16 000
Grace Methodist, San Francisco.....	2,000
Howard Presbyterian, San Francisco...	66,000
First Methodist, Oakland, Cal.....	25,000
Second Methodist, Oakland, Cal.....	1 000
First Congregational, Sacramento, Cal.	4,000
Congregational, Redwood.....	2,000
Vallejo, Presbyterian.....	2,000
Congregational, Peoria.....	36.000
Central Presbyterian, Denver.....	32,000
First Congregational, Denver.....	2,000
First Baptist, Denver.....	10,500
Memorial Presbyterian New York.....	110,000
Central Presbyterian, New York.....	40,000
Dr. Tyng's, toward $236,000.....	160,000
Dr. Scudder's, toward $34,000.....	44,000
Shepard Congregational, Cambridge..	85,000
First Presbyterian, Geneva.....	5,000
Total.....	$760,000

Charities in England commence with pounds and end in pennies. In America, donations open with dollars and finish with cents. According to Christ, what right have those churches to break the sabbath in their financial transactions? Is Kimball licensed by Christ to turn a prayer-meeting into a stock-exchange? This debt-paying epidemic is a dead swindle. 'Tis obtaining money under false pretences!

Those subscribers are mostly all bankrupt through the specie payment craze, and if they pay up they will cheat their creditors! Where does Kimball get his money to always take the first and last $10,000? Is he a millionaire? Here lies the fraud!

CHURCH PROPERTY MUST BE TAXED!

Perhaps it is none of our business how much these Christians swindle each other; but there is no reason why we should be taxed and their property go free. Are not all Infidel halls and lands taxed by the United States?

The report of Daniel A. Gleason, Esq., Tax Commissioner, Mass., gives the value of Church property in the United States:

1850, ...	$ 87,328,801
1860, ...	171,397,932
1870, ...	351,483,581
At the same rate it would equal in
1900, ...	2,835,868,648

When this immense property can be used to pass Congressional acts to employ Comstockism to destroy liberty, is it not about time to stop talking and act? This mint of money is hourly spreading its deadly poison over the land! This upas tree shades all society! This maelstrom is dragging down to death all mankind! When THE TRUTH SEEKER has found the truth, why not adopt it? G. F. T.

MR. TRAIN DELIGHTED WITH THE TRUTH SEEKER.—SIXTEEN-PAGE EVOLUTION.—TOO MUCH FOR THE MONEY.—ALL FRIENDS MUST CANVASS FOR SUBSCRIBERS TO MEET THE GREAT EXPENSE.—THE TEED-BENNETT DISCUSSION BOILED DOWN.—HEYWOOD'S MISTAKE IN SUING COMSTOCK!

MADISON SQUARE, P. E. 48.

CITIZEN D. M. B.!—

"George Francis Train! The epigrams and sharp, pungent sayings of this remarkable man are popular and sought after by a large number of readers. It is but right that Mr. Train should have a chance to be heard."

As these Psychologic articles are the last I shall ever address to any newspaper, I am glad you show such appreciation! We like those who like us. That is all there is in Friendship. An editor broad enough to allow me to appear as I am commands my evolutionary thought.

Once I speculated on the world! Now the world speculates on me! True genius, Goethe says, disturbs our fixed ideas! My long fast (the longest ever known without food or water) exploded my dictatorship delusion! Wrecks often seek the shore; but whoever heard of the shore going to the wreck (unless in a life-boat)? As Henry Clay had rather be right than President, so I think a private gentleman nobler than a public servant! Hence, absolute dictatorship over myself is greater than ruling a nation!

Most men act on Passion! Fame! Appetite! Money! My evolution obeys the odic! occult! magnetic Psychology of two hundred years of longevity!

VOL. V.! No. 1! A BIG THING!

"The largest and cheapest Radical Journal published in Europe or America, containing nearly seven hundred square inches more of reading matter than any other journal of its class."

That's so! But I know enough of newspapers to know that D. M. B. cannot give so much for the money unless each subscriber becomes a canvasser to throw corn into the hopper.

Printers cannot live on air! though good ventilation is a splendid diet. As THE TRUTH SEEKER, however, is big enough to take in everybody—even Comstock and G. F. T.—everybody ought to take in THE TRUTH SEEKER! But don't make the same mistake our friend Heywood is making.

RELINQUISHMENT IS POSSESSION.

"A SUIT AGAINST ANTHONY COMSTOCK.—Anthony Comstock, Special Agent of the Post Office Department to suppress the sending of obscene matter through the mails, and who recently arrested Mr. E. H. Heywood of Princeton, Mass., for sending two books, 'Sexual Physiology' and 'Cupid's Yokes,' has been sued by Mr. Heywood, in an action brought in the United States Circuit Court at Boston, for damages for false arrest and false imprisonment, and to test the legality of Mr. Comstck's proceedings, it being alleged that he has abused his legal authority in this case."—TRUTH SEEKER.

This is a fearful blunder! Why load a cannon to shoot a polecat? This loses Heywood his martyrdom; and I hope the T. S. will not make the same blunder.

While firing your Parrott petition into Congress at the master, is it not absurd to shoot pop-guns into the servant? This movement saves Comstock. The Y. M. C. A. will rally to a man. The balloon has not yet burst. Commerce! Trade! Agriculture! Politics! Government are still owned by the Church, and Comstock is its Obscene Prophet!

Heywood should withdraw the suit immediately. If he is not big enough to suffer incarceration for Christ's sake! he ought not to jeopardize the cause by allowing the rattlesnake to escape from the bag! If Mr. Heywood wants to make the point of his life, let him back out of this dilemma, and arrest the Bible Society for printing an "Obscene Book." Arrest Beecher, Chapin, Tyng, Potter, and Dix! for reading this "Obscenity" from the Pulpit!

IS NOT THE TRUTH SEEKER MISTAKEN?

"QUELP.—Who is the author of the following couplet?

"'Now twilight lets her curtain down,
And pins it with a star.'

"Ans.—Fitz Green Halleck."—TRUTH SEEKER.

Is Mr. Bennett sure about this? Overhaul your memory again. I always supposed these beautiful lines were from the pen of the so-called "Crazy Poet," Willis Gaylord Clark. Where did you find it in F. G. H.

THE TEED-BENNETT DISCUSSION.

"There is no room nor necessity, as before remarked, for any Brahm, Jupiter, Jehovah, Jesus, or Mumbo Jumbo, or any kind of a god that man has devised. The Universe exists, and we know it. The gods may exist, but we do not know it. There may be one god, there may be a million gods; but until there is a shadow of proof that either is a fact, it seems utterly a waste of time for intelligent people to fix up theories about them, their qualities, their natures or attributes."—D. M. B.

This ought to end the debate! You nutshell the whole argument in this clincher! Teed, in these words, is tied in a hard knot that no sophistry can untangle! To discuss it after this is to water your stock! That you should leave to Abbot! Mendum! Seaver! White! Ingersoll! and The Ghostly Army of Spiritualists. Is it not about time to abolish Tom Paine's "One God"? Must we ever live in the past? Is there never to be a present?

Do you not think it is about time to bury Voltaire! Hume! Gibbon! Franklin! Rousseau! Jefferson! and adopt THE TRUTH SEEKER's programme? Must we ever advertise the old Hobgoblins? Infidels! Freethinkers! Skeptics! Atheists are only the pegs that the Jesuits arrange for Christians to hang their hats on!

When the Christians found they could not squelch the old pagan custom of Christmas, they adopted it! When the British fifed and drummed Yankee Doodle in derision, the Americans made it their national tune! No progress can be made till skeptics stop fighting Christians! We must abolish all prayer! all debate, where the debaters are ghosts! and wipe out all religion! The words God! Heaven! Hell! Christ! Prayer! Sin! must be sunk to the bottom of the sea! There can be no war when there is nobody to fight.

Minstrels of the Gospel.

It is odd that the idea of organizing a troupe of clerical minstrels has never yet occurred to Mr. Talmage, or to any one of his professional rivals. Such a troupe could give an entertainment in which religion and humor would be beautifully combined, and which could not fail to be popular. It would not be necessary for all the members of the troupe to be ministers. If the middle-man—the grand and dignified "Mr. Johnsing," who propounds conundrums—and the two "end-men" who make the jokes were to be eminent comic preachers, their associates, whose chief business it would be to sing, need not even be theological students. In fact, a troupe which included Mr. Talmage as "bones," and Mr. Beecher as the other "end man," could even dispense with a clerical "middle-man," provided some grave layman like Mr. Stanley Matthews, for example, could be induced to take that position. Still, there are undoubtedly a good many comic preachers who are as yet unknown to fame, and who would gladly accept subordinate positions as members of the clerical minstrel troupe, and there would probably be little difficulty in making up the requisite number without going outside of the profession.

The entertainment would, of course, consist exclusively of religious songs and jokes. Instead of propounding secular conundrums, as for example, the familiar one as to the door which is not a door, the clerical "Mr. Johnsing" would confine himself strictly to Scriptural subjects. For instance, after the overture by the full band, "Mr. Johnsing" might remark, "Brother Talmage, who is the smallest man mentioned in the Scriptures?" Brother Talmage gracefully laying his bones on the floor beside his chair, would then reply, "Who am de smallest man mentioned in de Scriptur?" and "Mr. Johnsing" would repeat, "Yes Sir: I asked, who is the smallest man mentioned in the Scriptures?" Then Brother Talmage would give it up, whereupon Brother Beecher with much eagerness, would suggest "Bildad the Shuhite," amid a chorus of "yahyahs" from the rest of the troupe; after which "Mr. Johnsing" would announce as the next thing on the programme, "Now, brethren, The one hundred and ninety-ninth Psalm."

This is merely given as a specimen of the sort of entertainment which a troupe of clerical minstrels would give. It would also include dances and other gymnastic eccentricities by Mr. Talmage, and perhaps a pathetic song—as, for example, "O, ye Tears," by Mr. Shearman, who would undoubtedly be willing to black his face and accept an engagement in any troupe of which Mr. Beecher might be a member. With two such "end-men" as Messrs. Talmage and Beecher, the entertainment could not fail to draw, and the mere fact of Mr. Beecher's participation in it would be a guarantee that no jokes would be permitted which could possibly bring a blush to the cheek of a young person.

It needs no argument to prove that if the comic preachers were to exhibit their humor only on the minstrel stage, and to keep it entirely out of the pulpit, the public would be vastly benefited, and the comic preachers themselves would find their professional burden greatly lightened. No matter how gallantly they try to combine fun and religion in the pulpit, they cannot succeed; but they might preach serious sermons on Sunday and still maintain their reputation as comic preachers by performing as clerical minstrels on week-day evenings. The suggestion is made from the very kindest motives, and Mr. Talmage ought to feel thoroughly grateful for it.—N. Y. Times.

Solution of the Christ Question.

MR. EDITOR: I am truly pleased to see the awakening there is upon the God question and to see the beautiful development in the realization of an overruling Power or force in matter accepted and suited to every form, shape and size, even in a chaotic state, mist or vapor, all the same throughout endless space, in every sense infinite, clothed with wisdom, almighty in its effects upon a plane of eternal progress, elevation and refinement. Also, in not writing to you before this, I was anxious to hear some remarks from our Christian friends in reference to the Humphrey discussion. But little has as yet reached my ear further than a general disappointment as to the amount of evidence brought by Mr. Humphrey to sustain his God and Bible, for which they cannot account; thus showing they are disappointed, and that it is hard to give up household gods and the long-standing ideas of their fathers; they have become as heart-strings interwoven in the very soul, and the parting with such is as the parting with one's life. Nevertheless, error, no matter how long standing and sacred, is mortal and cannot long survive; while truth, no matter whose hand it is in, is immortal and cannot die. When the idea of a personal God is gone, the Bible goes with it. Yet it is more reasonable to believe in a personal God (it being the first idea of a child that God is a big man) than to believe the Bible of higher origin than man, as it portrays the character of a God below that of a half-civilized man. Is it not a self-evident truth and a scientific fact that no organized form can exist in the absence of a power or force to produce it, which power or force we find inseparable with matter?

Joseph Smith, the Mormon prophet, gave a more reasonable solution of the vexed question. He claimed the same Paul did (by inspiration) that spirit and matter were eternal, and through the operation of spirit and matter a God was organized and formed and delegated with all the almighty power, as the ruler of our Universe or solar system, thus becoming the creator of forms. This delegated power Smith claimed was the eternal father, and the organized form was the only begotten of the father, who took upon himself human flesh in the womb of the Virgin Mary and became the savior and redeemer of mankind and the heir to this planet, it being made by him and for him, and all true saints would be joint heirs with him. All who honor the son honor the father also.

As for other planets and worlds belonging to our solar system, or the Universe, this God the Father was the father of as many sons as there were worlds or planets belonging to our Universe, and that Universes through space could not be numbered, so there were Gods many and Lord's many, but to us there was but one God, the ruler of our Universe, each universe holding the same relation to its god-power that ours does.

As for Rev. Mr. Humphrey, he has shown his manhood and his honesty in meeting you in open combat, for which he is entitled to the respect of all parties. When he failed to produce evidence to sustain his God and Bible it was no fault of his. Such evidence does not exist. Therefore he failed to prove the existence of a personal God, independent and outside of matter and the laws of Nature.

Thus Infidelity stands unimpeached on the side of reason, science, common sense, everyday observation, and the unchangeable laws of Nature based upon infinite power and force in matter, while Christianity stands upon faith, tradition and superstition based upon a fickle, personal God, supernatural, miraculous power and the mysteries of Godliness.

ISAAC PADEN.

P. S. The Pittsburgh Leader man thinks neither of you proved your point. Rev. Mr. Humphrey raised this point: A belief in Infidelity leads to crime and wickedness, while a belief in Christianity leads to goodness and righteousness. Dare the Leader man or any Christian defend this and test it by the scaffold and the inmates of penitentiaries? I. P.

Woodhull, Ill.

Radical Lectures,

BY

JAMES W. STILLMAN.

1. The Unknown God.
2. Woman Suffrage.
3. Herbert Spencer.
4. Reform in Education.

For terms, address
JAMES W. STILLMAN,
3t2 128 Broadway, New York.

THE COUNCIL FIRE.

Furnished with fuel by both White Men and Red. A paper of intense interest—History, Legend, Tradition, Indian Policies, Causes of Wars, Massacres, etc. Only paper of the kind. Hon. A. B. Meacham, ex-Supt. Indian Affairs, Editor. Monthly, 16 pages; $1.00 per year. Samples 10 cents. Address Council Fire, Box 1949, Philadelphia, Pa. 3t2

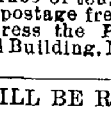
DO YOU WANT Books, Cards, Prints, Chromos, Photographs, Albums, Gold Pens, Pencils, Paper, Stationery, Knick-knacks, Notions, Novelties of every description? Beware of unreliable dealers—avoid risk—send only to the old, original and only "HEADQUARTERS." Established, 1860. We originated what is now an enormous trade. We import books weekly. Supply all Scientific, Legal, Medical, scarce, foreign and other books not often to be obtained—in fact, supply ANYTHING AND EVERYTHING in the Book or any other line. Our large store has four floors crowded with words of books on every known subject, and all offered very low. CATALOGUES FREE. Information given. Send stamp, and send now. Address, HUNTER & CO., PUBLISHERS, HINSDALE, N. H.

THE TRUTH SEEKER COLLECTION

OF

FORMS, HYMNS, AND RECITATIONS.

Forms for organizing Societies, Forms for Constitutions and By-laws, for Funeral Services, Marriage Services, Naming of Infants, Obituary Notices, Epitaphs, Wills, etc. Also, nearly 500 Liberal and Spiritualistic Hymns, original and selected; for Public Meetings, Funerals, Social Gatherings, etc., etc. The whole supplemented by a fine selection of Recitations, comprising many of the finest poetical gems in the language. Nearly 600 pages, at the extremely low price of 75 cents in cloth. The price is made low, so that every family can have a copy. Let none fail to have it. D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth St., New York.



THE MAGNETIC TREATMENT. Send 25 cents to DR. ANDREW STONE, Troy, N. Y., and obtain a large, highly-illustrated book on the system of Vitalizing Treatment. 1y36

YES YES WE WANT an agent in every town. Easy work at home. Write now and we will start you. $8 a day sure to all. SIMPSON & SMITH, 60 Cortlandt St., N. Y. 35

RIFLES, SHOT-GUNS, REVOLVERS, sent C. O. D. for examination, all charges paid. No risk; no humbug. Write for catalogue. Address GREAT WESTERN GUN WORKS, Pittsburgh, Pa. 6mo27

$12 A DAY at home. Agents wanted. Outfit and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta Maine. 1y50

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. H. HALLETT & CO., Portland, Maine. 1y50

TRUE TIME. 50,000 SOLD. The GENUINE Swiss Marvello COMPASS, INDICATOR AND TIME-KEEPER. A perfect GEM for the pocket of every traveller, trader, boy, farmer, and for EVERYBODY desiring a reliable Time-Keeper and also a superior Compass. Usual watch size, steel works, glass crystal, all in a neat OROIDE case. Perfection guaranteed. WARRANTED to denote correct time and to keep in order—if fairly used—for two years. Nothing like it! This perfect triumph of mechanism will be sent in a neat case, prepaid to any address, for only $1.00; 3 for $2.00. Circulars free. BEWARE of a "bogus" article offered as a "premium." Get the BEST.—Get the Genuine. Send all orders to the sole Agents, J. J. KING & CO., Brattleboro', Vt.

HISTORY OF THE CONFLICT BETWEEN RELIGION AND SCIENCE. Truly one of the most valuable works that have appeare within the last ten years. By PROF. DRAPER. Price, $1.75.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. STINSON & CO., Portland, Maine. 11

PRO AND CON OF SUPERNATURAL RELIGION; or an answer to the question, Have we a Supernaturally-Revealed, Divinely-Inspired and Miraculously-Attested Religion in the World? By E. E. GUILD, ex-Universalist clergyman. Paper, 20 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

THE POSITIVE THINKER,

Owned and published by the New York Liberal Publishing Company, in Science Hall Building, No. 141 Eighth street, near Broadway, G. L. Henderson and H. B. Brown, editors, is an eight-page family newspaper, devoted to the three greatest human interests—True or Positive Thought, Industry, Improved and Happy Homes. It will advocate the Religion of Humanity, showing that, though there are many churches and sects, there is but One Religion; that, when separated from Superstition and based on the solid rock of Science—leaving the barren fields of negation, doubt, the unknown and the unknowable to metaphysicians and theologians—will, when properly presented, unite mankind everywhere, furnish instruction to young and old, teaching the true, in order to do the right—giving instruction and guidance from the cradle to the grave. The "Positive Thinker" is not the organ of any society, sect or party. It assumes the responsibility of all its utterances. It hopes to find many readers within as well as outside the churches. It will do more to present what is true than to ridicule what is false; to affirm rather than deny; build than destroy; to replace faith by convictions—and particularly labor to make this world better and man happier. The first few numbers will appear monthly, until our subscribers learn its value, after which it will be issued weekly. Price per annum $1.50; six months 75 cents; three months 40 cents. To clubs of five $5; to clubs of ten, and one to getter up of club, $10, postage free. Send for sample numbers. Address the POSITIVE THINKER, Science Hall Building, No. 141 Eighth St., New York. 3-t-4

WILL BE READY IN A FEW DAYS,

The Popes and Their Doings.

NO. 3 OF THE "HOLY CROSS SERIES."

Being brief stories of fully one hundred and fifty of the conspicuous and sinful Popes—the Vicars of Christ and Vicegerents of God—who filled the chair of the Holy See in Rome during several centuries. The cheapest and most popular history of the Popes ever written. A friend styles it "rich, rare and racy." 273 pp., 12mo. Sent by mail at the very low price of 50 cents in paper; 75 cents in cloth.

Address D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth St., N. Y.

COOKE UPON COOK.—Rev. GEORGE vs. REV. JOSEPH. An Exhaustive Review of the Sensation Lectures. See THE EVOLUTION. No. 16.

"IT STILL WAVES!" The old, original, and only "STAR SPANGLED BANNER," the FAMILY FAVORITE and largest paper for THE MILLION. Established 1863. There's nothing like it. Old and young, rich and poor, saint and sinner,—"it waves for ALL." It is a large 40-column, 8 page paper, crowded with charming Tales, Sketches, Stories, Poems, Wit, Humor, Fun, Recipes, Puzzles, Humorous Poems, etc., etc. In its "ROGUE'S CORNER" are Sprightly, Quick, Humbug, and Fraud is fully, freely and truthfully exposed. No one can be swindled who reads the "BANNER." 100,000 people read and rely upon this National Paper. TRY ONCE AND NOW. Only 75 cents a year, or with Premium of SIX Charming Chromos, or a fine Dictionary, with 321 pages, only $1. Trial Trip, three months, 15 cents. Specimens FREE. Don't be put off NOW. Address, "STAR SPANGLED BANNER," Hinsdale, N. H.

FULL DESCRIPTION OF OTHER LIBERAL WORKS FROM TIME TO TIME.

BOOKS FOR THINKERS,

PUBLISHED BY

CHARLES P. SOMERBY, No. 139 Eighth Street, New York,

(A few doors East of Broadway.)

A FEW

WORDS ABOUT THE DEVIL,

AND OTHER BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES AND ESSAYS.

By CHARLES BRADLAUGH

1 Vol. Extra Cloth. $1.50.

"Quite an interesting autobiography of Charles Bradlaugh forms the introduction."—Sunday Journal.

"In a handsome volume before us Charles Bradlaugh has 'A Few Words' to say 'About the Devil.' Mr. Bradlaugh has a right to his Few Words, and the Devil will, we presume, at no very distant day, have a 'few words' to say to Mr. Bradlaugh, and will doubtless get the best of the argument."—Chicago Interior (Dr. Patton's).

"His Atheism is, after all, very much akin to the views put forth by Huxley and Tyndall and by Prof. John W. Draper.'—Daily Graphic.

"His position herein is defined and defended in a spirit of reverence for the truth."—Chicago Eve. Journal.

"To those, however, who can enjoy a vigorous presentation of the arguments against those beliefs termed orthodox, we commend Mr. Bradlaugh's Essays."—Morning Democrat.

"We should insist, were we in any way connected with the government of Theological Schools, on the perusal of this work by the youth fitting under our charge for the duties and responsibilities of the pulpit. They will find Mr. Bradlaugh no common man, and they will be introduced by him to persons and thoughts which can not fail to be of use in their professional studies."—New Haven Palladium.

"Displays much learning and research."—The Democrat.

"In fine, there is much that is noble about him."—The Advance.

"We have only to urge that the religious press should meet him squarely and discuss the positions taken upon their merits"—Chicago Evening Journal.

Good Discounts on Orders of $5 and Upward, according to quantity.

Send 10 cents for Prometheus containing 28 pp. choice reading matter and a Full List of Liberal Publications; or for List only, Free.

CHARLES P. SOMERBY,

PUBLISHER, BOOKSELLER, IMPORTER AND PRINTER,

139 EIGHTH ST., Bet. Broadway and Fourth Ave., NEW YORK.

READ OUR ADVERTISEMENTS EVERY WEEK, AS FREQUENT CHANGES WILL BE MADE.

JUST ISSUED.

BEYOND THE VEIL.

A very neat and entertaining volume, giving beautiful descriptions of life, occupations, etc., in the Spirit World. Dictated by the spirit of Percy B. Randolph, through the mediumship of Mrs. Francis H. McDougal and Mrs. Luna Hutchinson of California. With a steel-plate engraving of Dr. Randolph.

Price $1.50, post-paid by mail.

D. M. BENNETT
141 Eighth St., N. Y.

Christianity and Infidelity

A JOINT DISCUSSION BETWEEN

REV. G. H. HUMPHREY, Presb't'n. Clergyman,

OF NEW YORK, AND

D. M. BENNETT, Editor of The Truth Seeker.

It was conducted in the columns of The Truth Seeker, a letter alternately from each contestant appearing each week, beginning April 7, 1877, and closing Sept. 29, 1877, thus continuing just six months, giving thirteen letters from Humphrey and thirteen replies by Bennett.

The subjects discussed were as follows:

PART I.—The relative services of Christianity and Infidelity to American Liberty.

PART II.—The relative services of Christianity and Infidelity to Learning and Science.

PART III.—Is there a stronger probability that the Bible is divine than that Infidelity is true?

The discussion has excited a large share of interest, both among believers and unbelievers; and as both sides are fairly presented, it is suited to readers of all shades of opinion.

The New York Advocate, a paper having a very extensive circulation, in speaking of the volume, says, "Perhaps a more able and exhaustive presentation of both sides of the great questions which have agitated the civilized world for centuries has never been made. At any rate, in this volume will be found a perfect magazine or storehouse of arguments, pro and con, which every intelligent man and woman should peruse with candor and with an earnest desire to arrive at sound conclusions on themes of the highest importance to all mankind. . . Light is what we need. Let the controversies proceed. Let the blows descend upon the error-dispelling anvil. Let the sparks fly in all directions from the heated steel. The truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, is what the people demand on all the great questions of the day, whether of Finance, Science, Politics, or Religion, and discussion will elicit it." Let every person who feels the slightest interest in theological questions, whether on one side or the other, read the Humphrey-Bennett Discussion.

A thick 12mo volume of 550 pages, well bound sent, post-paid, to any address, for the low price of one dollar.

Address D. M. BENNETT, Publisher
141 Eighth St., New York.

Works of Thomas Paine.

COMMON SENSE. His first and most important political work. Clear type. Paper, 15 cts.

THE CRISIS. Containing Nos. I. to XVI., inclusive. Written in the "times that tried men's souls" during the American Revolution. 12mo. Full, clear type. Paper, 50 cents; cloth 80 cts.

THE RIGHTS OF MAN. Written in defense of his fellow man. A work almost without a peer in the world. On full, bold type. 12mo. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

THE AGE OF REASON. On large, clear type. Paper, 25 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

THE AGE OF REASON AND AN EXAMINATION OF THE PROPHECIES. Full, bold type. 12mo. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

PAINE'S POLITICAL WORKS. Complete in one volume, on full, bold type. Containing "Common Sense," "The Crisis" (sixteen numbers), and "The Rights of Man," with a fine steel portrait. Cloth, $1.50.

PAINE'S THEOLOGICAL WORKS. Complete. 12mo. Composed of the "Age of Reason," "Examination of the Prophecies," "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," "Letter to Mr. Erskine," "Letter to Camille Jordan," "An Essay on Dreams," "Of the Religion of Deism," etc., etc., with a life and fine steel portrait of Paine. Cloth, $1.50.

THOMAS PAINE'S GREAT WORKS. Complete. New edition. The cheapest and best ever sold. Containing a Life of Paine, his POLITICAL WRITINGS—"Common Sense," "The Crisis," "Rights of Man"—his THEOLOGICAL WRITINGS—"Age of Reason," "Examination of the Prophecies," "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," "Letter to Mr. Erskine," "An Essay on Dreams," "Letter to Camile Jordan," "Of the Religion of Deism"—all in one large volume, crown-octavo, of THE TRUTH SEEKER LIBRARY, with a fine steel portrait of Paine. Cloth, $3.00; colored leather, red burnished edges, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

LIFE OF THOMAS PAINE. By Calvin Blanchard. 12mo. Large, clear type, with a fine steel portrait of Paine. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents. Published by

D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth st., New York.

ASTROLOGY.

PROF. LISTER, Astrologer, 505 W. 23d st., New York, 44 years' practice, 27 in Boston. Can be consulted by letter. Send for Circular. Address all letters 505 West 23d st., New York City.

THE OUTCAST.

By WINWOOD READE author of "Martyrdom of Man."

This is his last work. Mr. Reade was unquestionably one of the ablest writers of the present century. His "Martyrdom of Man" attracted extraordinary attention in Europe and in this country, for its ability, brilliancy and boldness. This last work is regarded with equal favor. The English edition was published at two dollars. We give it entire for

THIRTY CENTS IN PAPER.

READER, that little cottage contains one of the choicest libraries in the country. I buy my books of J. FRANCIS RUGGLES, Bibliopole, Bronson, Mich. Rare O. P. works a specialty. Lists for stamp. 3m1

The Priest in Absolution,

The first Number of the "HOLY CROSS SERIES," is from the abridged London edition of the same work, which created so much excitement in England. The original volume was issued by the "High Church" authorities as a guide to the clergy in the confessional, and was designed to be introduced into the English Church. Price 25 cents.

D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth St., New York.

☞ The other twenty-five numbers of the "Holy Cross Series" are being brought out as rapidly as possible.

The Career of Religious Ideas;

THEIR ULTIMATE,

The Religion of Science.

BY HUDSON TUTTLE.

An able examination of the Religions of the World—the subjects treated as follows: Chap. I.—Introductory; Chap. II.—What is Religion? Chap. III.—Fetishism; Chap. IV.—Polytheism; Chap. V.—Monotheism; Chap. VI.—Value of Ancient Bibles; Chap. VII.—Man's Moral Progress Dependent upon his Intellectual Growth; Chap. VIII.—Theological Problems; Chap. IX.—Man's Fall; Chap. X.—Free Will, Necessity, Responsibility; Chap. XI.—Duties and Obligations of Man to God; Chap. XII.—The Ultimate of Religious Ideas.

Price, in paper, 50 cents; in cloth, 75 cents. Postage prepaid. D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth St. N. Y.

ANOTHER OF J. D. BELL'S GREAT Reviews.—Cook on God and Evolution in THE EVOLUTION, No. 16.

ATTENTION, LADIES!

THE BEST THING OUT.

An Excellent, non-Rusting, Durable Galvanized Iron Plater,

with directions for using the same, will be sent, post-paid, on receipt of $1.25, with order and address. E. D. BLAKEMAN,
Circleville, O.

The Evolution One Year Free

To any one ordering of me $5.00 worth of the works of A. B. Alcott, Louisa M. Alcott, Alger, Antoninus, Bagshot, Bain, Bartol, Bastian, C. T. Brooks, Buckle, Carpenter, W. E. Channing, E. D. Cheney, Clodd, Coulanges, Dali, Darwin, Emerson, Epictetus, Fish, Goethe, Gregg, Gibbon, Higginson, Howells, Huxley, International Scientific Series, S. Johnson, Lecky, Lessing, Lewes, Lubbock, Martineau, Mivart, Parton, Reade, Herbert Spencer, Tyndall, Weiss, and others. For further particulars, send 15 cents to THE EVOLUTION, 34 Dey street, New York.

TRUTH IS MIGHTY! Professor Martinez, the great Spanish Seer and Wizard, will for 25c. Coins, with your age, height, color of eyes and lock of hair, send to you a correct picture of your future husband or wife, initials of real name, the time and place where you will first meet, and the date of marriage. Address, Prof. MARTINEZ, 42 Province St., Boston, Mass. This is no humbug!

LIST OF PHOTOGRAPHS

For Sale at The Truth Seeker Office.

Thomas Paine.	F. E. Abbot,
Paine's Bust.	Frothingham.
Paine's Monument.	Wendell Phillips.
Voltaire.	Emerson,
Rousseau,	Garrison,
Humboldt,	Henry Bergh,
Goethe,	Peter Cooper,
Schiller,	D. R. Burt,
Aug. Comte,	S. P. Andrews,
Heine.	Walt Whitman,
Alex. Pope.	Froude,
John Milton,	Max Muller,
Goldsmith,	Warren Chase,
Shelley,	Jas. Parton,
Byron.	Wm. Denton,
Burns,	Dr. Slade,
Washington,	A. J. Davis,
Franklin.	Foster,
Jefferson.	J. M. Peebles,
John Adams,	Frances Wright.
J. Q. Adams,	E. V. Wilson,
Madison,	G. L. Henderson,
Jackson.	Prof. Fiske,
Lincoln,	Fred Douglas,
Lincoln's Monument,	N. P. Banks,
Gerrit Smith,	P. V. Nasby,
Henry C. Wright.	Beecher,
J. S. Mill,	Tilton,
Sumner.	Moulton,
Edgar A. Poe,	G. W. Curtis.
Greeley.	Th. Nast,
Castellar,	J. G. Bennett,
Tennyson.	Chas. A. Dana,
Darwin	Phoebe Carey,
Tyndall,	Alice Carey.
H. Spencer,	Elizabeth C. Stanton,
Huxley,	Susan B. Anthony.
Proctor,	Lucy Stone,
Draper,	Julia Ward Howe,
Bradlaugh,	Chas. Cheney,
Holyoake,	Paulina Davis,
Ingersoll.	Mary F. Davis.
Underwood,	Emma H. Britten,
Mendum,	Lizzie Fowler,
Seaver,	Mrs. Slenker.
L. Colby,	Susan H. Wixon.
Dr. Hare,	D. M. Bennett.
Judge J. W. Edwards.	W. S. Bell.
Lizzie Doten.	J. C. Bundy.
Mrs. J. Conant.	S. S. Jones.
Dr. Mary E. Walker (full figure).	Asa K. Butts.
	W. F. Jamieson.
Geo. Francis Train.

and hundreds of others, including generals, statesmen, poets, actors, actresses, etc, at 15 cents each singly, or eight for one dollar.

Neat Albums, by mail, to hold 80 photos., 80 cts., to hold 50, $1.

D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St, New York.

FOR MASTERLY CRITICISM READ EDGAR FAWCETT'S articles in THE EVOLUTION.

Gems of Thought.

PURITY is the feminine, truth the masculine of honor.—Hare.

SOME that smile have in their heart, I fear, millions of mischief.—Shakspere.

IF we still require grace to live virtuously, of what use was the death of Jesus Christ?—Diderot.

BE not ashamed of thy virtues; honor is a good brooch to wear in a man's hat at all times.—Ben Jonson.

IF God who gave us our reason requires the sacrifice of it, he is neither more nor less than a trickster who juggles away what he has given.—Diderot.

IF there are a hundred thousand souls damned for one saved, the devil has still the advantage, without having delivered his son to death.—Diderot.

HONOR is like the eye, which cannot suffer the least impurity without damage; it is a precious stone, the price of which is lessened by the least flaw.—Bossuet.

WHERE the meekness of self-knowledge veileth the front of self-respect, there look thou for the man whose name none may know but they will honor.—Tupper.

ILL-HUMOR is nothing more than an inward feeling of our own want of merit, a dissatisfaction with ourselves, which is always united with an envy that foolish vanity excites.—Goethe.

LET none presume to wear an undeserved dignity. O that estates, degrees, and offices were not derived corruptly! and that clear honor were purchased by the merit of the wearer.—Shakspere.

THERE are hopes, the blossom of whose beauty would be spoiled by the trammels of description; too lovely, too delicate, too sacred, for words, they should be only known through the sympathy of hearts.—Dickens.

EVERY man's nature is concealed with many folds of disguise, and covered, as it were, with various veils. His brows, his eyes, and very often his countenance, are deceitful, and his speech is most commonly a lie.—Cicero.

THE bridge of logical arrangements by which the metaphysician attempts to span from knowledge to the unknown is often, so far as words go, beautiful as the rainbow, while in character it is only a rainbow, for it begins and ends nowhere.—W. S. Bell.

IT is more disgraceful for men in high life to improve their private fortune by specious fraud than by open violence. Might makes right in one case, while in the other, man throws over his proceedings the cloak of despicable cunning.—Thucydides.

THE most natural beauty in the world is honesty and moral truth. For all beauty is truth. True features make the beauty of a face, and true proportions the beauty of architecture; as true measure that of harmony and music. In poetry which is all fable, truth is still perfection.—Shaftesbury.

DOES this soul within me, this spirit of thought and love and infinite desire, dissolve as well as the body? Has Nature, who quenches our bodily thirst, who rests our weariness, and perpetually encourages us to endeavor onwards, prepared no food for this appetite for immortality?—Leigh Hunt.

EVERY man has at times in his mind the ideal of what he should be but is not. The ideal may be high and complete, or it may be quite low and insignificant; yet, in all men that really seek to improve, it is better than the actual character. Perhaps no one is so satisfied with himself that he never wishes to be wiser, better, and more holy.—Theo. Parker.

ALL those with whom we live are like actors on a stage: they assume whatever dress and appearance may suit their present purpose, and they speak and act in strict keeping with this character. In this way we find it difficult to get at their real sentiments, or to bring into clear day the truth which they have hid in a cloud of darkness.—Polybius.

THE greatest of all power is thought power. That it may multiply most rapidly and produce its greatest effects it is essential that there should be no barrier placed in the way of free speech. The right of free speech rests on simple justice. Free speech is the basis of progress in knowledge, the guaranty of liberty, the antidote of revolution, and the corner-stone of religious freedom. The churches ought to be the first to rally in defense of free speech, for they are its children.—Dr. E. B. Foote.

THE objectors to free speech are those who profit by fraud or ignorance; those who lack faith in truth, but have perfect faith in human depravity; "proper people," who are really nice people, but who have a false view of life and of what goes to make up real manhood and womanhood; vulgar people, who object to a scientific lecture upon medical subjects before a mixed audience of men and women, but who do not hesitate to use the lowest kind of obscene language when alone with those of their own sex—heaven help them.—Anon.

EVERY good thing may be abused: so with free speech. It is abused when, under the guise of free speech, men indulge in free spite. It is in vain to try to change a man's opinion after you have insulted his manhood by treating him as a knave or an idiot. Moderation wins where violence and inconsiderate speech fails. Free speech is abused when men lacking discretion, however honest they may be, undertake to handle delicate subjects. A bull in a china shop may have the best intentions, but being a bull he cannot turn around without smashing a delicate piece of porcelain.—S. S. Nash.

Odds and Ends.

"NO SHOOTEN aloud here" is the warning which confronts the sportsman at the gate of a suburban park.

"IF it wasn't for hope, the heart would break," as the old lady said when she buried her seventh husband.

IT is right for young people to use a license to get married, but they shouldn't use too much license afterwards.

HORNE TOOKE being asked by George III, whether he played at cards, replied, "No, your Majesty; the fact is, I cannot tell a king from a knave."

WHAT is the difference between the swallow and the cat?—It is an admitted fact that "one swallow does not make a Summer, but one cat can make a spring.

A LITTLE fellow, four years old, the other day, nonplused his mother by making the inquiry: "Mother, if a man is a mister, ain't a woman a mystery?"

A GENTLEMAN lately from the West says, "How happy a man must feel who has a wagon to draw his salary home from market on a Saturday afternoon."

WHILE growling at her husband last summer, a woman was struck by lightning and instantly killed. If you wish your wife to see this paragraph, cut it out and paste it on the looking-glass.

A PROMINENT public office in Nashville has this notice posted up: "Don't open this door," under which some wag wrote the query, "Why?" and another responded, "Because you can't; its locked."

A KANSAS widow writes to one of our contemporaries that almost the last thing her beloved husband did was to renew his subscription to the paper. Sharp woman that. All her early admirers will know that her youth and beauty are again in the market.

"Do you think that souls separated here are united hereafter?" asked a pale, emaciated pietist of his friend. "I hope not," was the chilling reply. "It cost me a pretty good figure to get a divorce, and when I invested that money I invested it for time and eternity too."

AN EXCUSABLE MISTAKE.—At one of the lectures recently delivered by Dr. Banning, "for ladies only," Dr. Mary Walker, dressed as usual, and handling a cane in masculine style, made her appearance as one of the auditors. Dr. Banning had never met Dr. Mary, and when the bifurcated garments, accompanied by the cane, came into view, he remarked, "Sir, I think you have made a mistake. This lecture is for ladies only." The audience burst into a roar of laughter, and the little Doctor was permitted to remain, after an explanation that the only masculine part about her was her breeches and cane.

NEED CORRECTION.—A correspondent of The New England Journal has collected the following specimens of false syntax:

An Iowa editor thus acknowledges a present of grapes: "We have received a basket of fine grapes from our friend W., for which he will please accept our compliments, some of which are nearly two inches in diameter."

A newspaper advertisement reads thus: "Wanted: A saddle horse for a lady weighing about 950 pounds." Another reads: "Wanted: A young man to take charge of a pair of horses of a religious turn of mind."

A widow at the west intending to succeed her husband in the management of a hotel, advertises that the hotel will be kept by the widow of Mr. Brown, who died last summer on a new and improved plan."

A steamboat captain, in advertising for an excursion, closes thus: "Tickets 25 cents, children half price, to be had at the captain's office."

One of Sir Boyle Roche's invitations to an Irish nobleman was rather equivocal. He writes: "I hope, my lord, if you ever come within a mile of my house you will stay there all night."

A coroner's verdict reads thus: "The deceased came to his death by excessive drinking, producing apoplexy in the minds of the jury."

A clergyman says: "A young woman died in my neighborhood, yesterday, while I was preaching the gospel in a beastly state of intoxication."

A correspondent in writing of a recent convention in the city of Cleveland, says: "The procession was very fine, and nearly two miles long, as was also the report of Dr. Perry, the chaplain."

In the annual report of a town in Massachusetts, we find the following: "The town farmhouse and almshouse have been carried on the past year to our reasonable satisfaction, especially the almshouse, at which there has been an unusual amount of sickness and three deaths."

A few years ago the following resolution was passed by the common council of a Connecticut city: "Resolved, that hereafter the churches that have bells that are rung, be rung at the same hour for morning and afternoon service."

A western paper says: "A child was run over by a wagon three year old, and crosseyed, with pantalets on, which never spoke afterwards."

A member of a local school committee writes: "We have two school-rooms sufficiently large to accommodate three hundred pupils one above the other."

Truth Seeker Tracts.

No.	(REVISED LIST.)	Cts.
1.	Discussion on Prayer. D. M. Bennett and two Clergymen,	5
2.	Oration on the Gods. Ingersoll.	10
3.	Thomas Paine.	5
4.	Arraignment of the Church. Ingersoll.	5
5.	Heretics and Heresies. "	5
6.	Humboldt, "	5
7.	The Story of Creation. Bennett.	5
8.	The Old Snake Story. "	2
9.	The Story of the Flood. "	5
10.	The Plagues of Egypt. "	2
11.	Korah, Datham, and Abiram. nnett.	2
12.	Balaam and his Ass. "	2
13.	Arraignment of Priestcraft. "	8
14.	Old Abe and Little Ike. Syphers.	3
15.	Come to Dinner. "	2
16.	Fog Horn Documents. "	2
17.	The Devil Still Ahead. "
18.	Slipped Up Again. "
19.	Joshua Stopping the Sun and Moon. D. M. Bennett,	2
20.	Samson and his Exploits. Bennett.	2
21.	The Great Wrestling Match. "	2
22.	Discussion with Elder Shelton. "	10
23.	Reply to Elder Shelton's Fourth Letter. D. M. Bennett.	3
24.	Christians at Work. Wm. McDonnell.	5
25.	Discussion with Geo. Snode. Bennett.	5
26.	Underwood's Prayer.	1
27.	Honest Questions and Honest Answers. D. M. Bennett.	5
28.	Alessandro di Cagliostro. C. Sotheran.	10
29.	Paine Hall Dedication Address. B. F. Underwood.	2
30.	Woman's Rights & Man's Wrongs. Syphers.	2
31.	Gods and God-houses. "	2
32.	The God's of Superstition and the God of the Universe. D. M. Bennett.	3
33.	What has Christianity Done? Preston.	3
34.	Tribute to Thomas Paine. "	2
35.	Moving the Ark. D. M. Bennett.	1
36.	Bennett's Prayer to the Devil.	2
37.	Short Sermon. Rev. Theologicus, D.D.	1
38.	Christianity not a Moral System. X. Y. Z.	3
39.	The True Saint. S. P. Putnam.	3
40.	Bible of Nature vs. The Bible of Men. J. Syphers.	3
41.	Our Ecclesiastical Gentry. Bennett.	2
42.	Elijah the Tishbite. "	3
43.	Christianity a Borrowed System. "	3
44.	Design Argument Refuted. Underwood.	2
45.	Elisha the Prophet. Bennett.	3
46.	Did Jesus Really Exist? "	3
47.	Cruelty and Credulity of the Human Race. Dr. Daniel Arter.	5
48.	Freethought in the West. G. L. Henderson.	5
49.	Sensible Conclusions. E. E. Guild.	3
50.	Jonah and the Big Fish. D. M. Bennett.	1
51.	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 1.	5
52.	Marples-Underwood Debate. Underwood.	3
53.	Questions for Bible Worshipers. B. F. Underwood.	2
54.	An Open Letter to Jesus Christ. Bennett.	5
55.	The Bible God Disproved by Nature. W. E. Coleman.	3
56.	Bible Contradictions.	1
57.	Jesus Not a Perfect Character. Underwood.	2
58.	Prophecies.	2
59.	Bible Prophecies Concerning Babylon. B. F. Underwood.	2
60.	Ezekiel's Prophecies Concerning Tyre. B. F. Underwood.	2
61.	History of the Devil. Isaac Paden.	5
62.	The Jews and their God. "	10
63.	The Devils Due-Bills. John Syphers.	3
64.	The Ills we Endure—their Cause and Cure. D. M. Bennett.	2
65.	Short Sermon No. 2. Rev. Theologicus, D.D.	5
66.	God Idea in History. H. B. Brown.	5
67.	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets No. 2.	5
68.	Ruth's Idea of Heaven and Mine. Susan H. Wixon.	2
69.	Missionaries. Mrs. E. D. Slenker.	2
70.	Vicarious Atonement. J. S. Lyon.	3
71.	Paine's Anniversary. C. A. Codman.	3
72.	Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego. D. M. Bennett.	2
73.	Foundations. John Syphers.	3
74.	Daniel in the Lion's Den. Bennett.	2
75.	An Hour with the Devil. "	10
76.	Reply to Erastus F. Brown. D. M. Bennett.	3
77.	The Fear of Death. D. M. Bennett.	5
78.	Christmas and Christianity. D.M.Bennett.	5
79.	The Relationship of Jesus, Jehovah, and the Virgin Mary. W. E. Coleman.	2
80.	Address on Paine's 139th Birthday. Bennett.	5
81.	Hereafter, or the Half-way House. John Syphers.	1
82.	Christian Courtesy. Bennett.	2
83.	Revivalism Examined. Dr. A. G. Humphrey.	5
84.	Moody's Sermon on Hell. Rev. J. P. Hopps, London.	2
85.	Matter, Motion, Life and Mind. Bennett.	10
86.	An Enquiry about God's Sons. "	2
87.	Freethought Judged by its Fruits. B. F. Underwood.	1
88.	David, God's Peculiar Favorite. Mrs. E. D. Slenker.	3
89.	Logic of Prayer. Charles Stephenson.	3
90.	Biblo-Mania. Otter Cordates.	2
91.	Our Ideas of God. B. F. Underwood.	1
92.	The Bible; is it Divinely Inspired? Dr. D. Arter.	5
93.	Obtaining Pardon for Sins. Hudson Tuttle.	1
94.	The New Raven. Will Cooper.	5
95.	Jesus Christ. D. M. Bennett.	10
96.	Ichabod Crane Papers.	10
97.	Special Providences. W. S. Bell.	2
98.	Snakes. Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker.	2
99.	Do the Works of Nature prove a Creator? Sciota.	5
100.	The Old and the New. R. G. Ingersoll.	5
101.	110th Anniversary of Thomas Paine's Birthday. Bennett et als.	5
102.	The Old Religion and the New. W. S. Bell.	1
103.	Does the Bible Teach us all we Know. Bennet.	2
104.	Evolution of Isrsel's God. A. L. Rawson.	10
105.	Decadence of Christianity. Capphro.	2
106.	Franklin, Washington and Jefferson Unbelievers. Bennett.	2
107.	The Safe Side. H. B. Brown.	5
108.	The Holy Bible a Historical Humbug. S. H. Preston.	1
109.	Ghosts. Ingersoll, 4 pp.	1
110.	Materialistic Prayer. Bennett, 4 pp.	1
111.	Reply to Scientific American. Bennett,	1
112.	Sensible Sermon. Savage, 8 pp.	2
113.	Come to Jesus. Bennett, 8 pp.	2

SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

1.	Hereditary Transmission. Prof. Louis Elsberg, M.D.	5
2.	Evolution; from the Homogeneous to the Heterogeneous. B. F. Underwood.	3
3.	Darwinism. B. F. Underwood.	3
4.	Literature of the Insane. F. B. Marvin.	5
5.	Responsibility of Sex. Mrs. Chase, M.D.	3
6.	Graduated Atmospheres. J. McCarroll.	2
7.	Death. Frederic R. Marvin, M.D.	5
8.	How do Marsupial Animals Propagate their kind? A. B. Bradford.	5
9.	The Unseen World. Prof. John Fiske.	10
10.	The Evolution Theory — Huxley's Three Lectures.	10
11.	Is America the New World? L. L. Dawson.	10

Discount on one dollar's worth 10 per ct. off; on two dollars' worth 20 off; on five dollars' worth 40 off; on ten dollars' worth 50 off.

As few or as many of any given kind may be ordered as desired.

RADICAL BOOKS.

SENT POST PAID AT THE PRICES ANNEXED.

By D. M. BENNETT.

Age of Reason. Paine. Paper covers.	25
" " " Cloth "	50
" " and Ex. of Proph. Paper 50; cl.	75
A Few Days in Athens: Frances Wright.	75
Apocryphal New Testament.	1 25
An Eye Opener. Paper, 50; cloth,	75
Antiquity of Christianity. Alberger.	25
Analysis of Religious Belief. Viscount Amberly. $3.00, 4.00, and	4 50
Apples of Gold. Susan H. Wixon.	1 50
Anti-Theological Lectures. Rev. R. Taylor.	2 00
Antiquity and Duration of the World.	25
Astronomy and Worship of the Ancients.	25
A. J. Davis' Entire Works.	27,00
Adventures of Elder Triptolemus Tub.	15
Bible in India. Jacolliot.	2 00
Buckle's History of Civilization. 2 Vols., 8vo.	4 00
Burgess-Underwood Debate. 50 and	80
Bible in the Balance. Fish.	1 00
Bacon's Novum Organum.	2 00
Bhagvad-Gita, or Dialogues of Christna and Arjuna.	1 75
Buechner's Man, Present and Future.	4 00
Christianity before Christ. Craven.	25
Chapters from the Bibles of the Ages.	1 50
Criticism on the Theoligical Idea of Deity.	1 00
Childhood of Religion. Clodd.	1 25
Childhood of the World. Clodd, 40 and	60
Christianity and Materialism. Underwood.	15
Cause of Religious Ideas. Tuttle.	1 00
Conway's Sacred Anthology.	4 00
Colenso on the Pentateuch. Abstract of.	25
Devil's Pulpit, Rev. Robt. Taylor.	2 00
Diegesis " "	2 00
Denton's Irreconcilable Records.	50
" Our Planet, Past, Present, and Future,	1 50
" Radical Rhymes.	1 25
" Who are Christians. Deluge.
Denton's Common Sense Thoughts, Be Thyself, What is Right? Man's True Saviors. Sermon from Shakspere's Text, God Proposed. Spiritualism True, Orthodoxy False, 10 cents each.
Draper's Conflict between Religion and Science,	1 75
" Intellectual Development of Europe, 2 vols.,	3 00
Darwin's Origin of Species,	2 00
" Descent of Man, (Impr'd Ed.)	3 00
Descent and Darwinism, Schmidt,	1 50
Einstein's Origin of Religious Ideas.	1 00
Exeter Hall. Wm. McDonnell.	60 & 80
Errors of the Bible. Wright,	35 & 60
Essence of Religion. Fuerbach, 40 and	80
Eight Scientific Tracts.	20
Frothingham's Religion of Humanity,	1 50
" Child's Book of Religion,	1 00
" Stories of the Patriarchs,	1 00
" Safest Creed,	1 50
" Transcendentalism in New England,	2 50
Faraday's Various Forces of Nature.	2 00
Fiske's Myths and Myth-Makers.	2 00
God Idea in History. Tuttle,	1 25
Good Sense, D'Holbach,	1 00
Gould's Curious Myths of the Middle Ages.	2 50
" Lost and Hostile Gospels.	3 25
Graves' Sixteen Crucified Saviors.	2 00
" Biography of Satan.	60
Grey's Enigmas of Life.	2 00
" Creeds of Christendom. 2 Vols.	7 50
Heroines of Freethought, Mrs. Underwood,	1 75
Heathens of the Heath, McDonnell,	1 00 & 150
Hume's Essays and Treatises,	1 50
Huxley's Lay Sermons,	1 75
" Man's Place in Nature,	1 25
" Critiques and Addresses,	1 50
History of all Religions Sects. Evans.	1 00
Haeckel's History of Creation. 2 Vols.	5 00
Hollick's Nerves and the Nervous.	1 00
Humboldt's Works.
Ingersoll's Gods and other Lectures. 30 and	50
" " etc., Large Edition.	1 25
Influence of Christianity on Civilization.	25
Infidels' Text Book, Cooper.	1 00
Jehovah Unveiled.	35
Jamieson's Clergy a Source of Danger.	1 00
Josephus' Complete Works.	2 50
Johnson's Oriental Religions. 8vo.	5 00
John's Way.	15
Kneeland's Review.	1 00
" Hymns.	35
Koran, with Notes and Life of Mahomet.	2 75
Lecky's Rationalism in Europe. 2 Vols.	4 00
" History of European Morals.	6 00
Life of Thomas Paine. Blanchard. p 50; cl	75
Lewes' Biographical History of Philosophy.	3 50
" Problems of Life and Mind.	3 00
Lizzie Doten's Poems of Progress, and Inner Life, each	150
Lubbock's Origin of Civilization,	2 00
" Pre-Historic Times Illustrated,	6 00
Lyell's Elements of Geology, 770 cuts,	3 40
" Principles " 2 vols. and maps,	3 00
Monks and Popes. Alberger.	1 00
Morley's Life of Voltaire,	2 00
Martyrdom of Man. Winwood Reade.	3 00
Peeble's All Around the World,	2 50
" Seers of the Ages,	2 50
Plato's Divine and Moral Works,	2 20
Pro and Con of Supernatural Religion.	30 & 50
Physical Man, Tuttle.	1 50
Paine's Common Sense,	12
" Crisis. Paper, 50; cloth	80
" Rights of Man. Paper, 50; cloth	80
" Theological Works, with portrait	1 50
" " " paper,	1 00
" Political Works, cloth,	1 50
" Great Works Complete. Crown octavo, with life and portrait.	3
" Political Works, steel portrait,	1
" Life, by Calvin Blanchard with portrait Paper, 50; cloth	75
Parturition without Pain,	1 00
Plain Home Talk and Medical Common Sense, E. B. Foote, M.D.,	1 50
Proctor's Six Lectures on Astronomy,	20
Reason, the only Oracle of Man, Ethan Allen	60
Syntagma, Taylor,	1 00
System of Nature, D'Holbach,	2 00
Self-Contradictions of the Bible.	25
Studying the Bible, Mrs. Slenker,	75
Spencer's (Herbert) Entire Work,
Strauss' Old Faith and New,	2 00
" New Life of Jesus, 2 vols.,	12 00
Supernatural Religion, 2 Vols., 8vo.,	8 00
Sexual Physiology, Trall,	2 00
Talleyrand's Letter to Pope Pius vii,	25
Tyndall' (Prof. John) Entire Works,
The Christ of Paul,	2 00
The Case against the Church,	75
The Relations of the Sexes. Mrs. Duffey,	2 00
The Voices, Warren Sumner Barlow,	1 25
The World's Sages, Infidels, and Thinkers, Bennett. $3 00, $4 00, and	4 50
The Champions of the Church, Bennett. $3 00, $4 00, and	4 50
Thirty Discussions, Bible Stories, etc., 75 &	1 00
Truth Seeker Tracts, Vols. I, II, III, and IV., by the lot, 50 &	75
The Truth Seeker Collection of Forms, Hymns, and Recitations,	75
The Outcast, Winwood Reade,	30
Talks with My Patients, Mrs. Gleason, M.D.,	1 50
Underwood-Marples Debate.	35 & 60
Underwood's Twelve Tracts,	20
Vestiges of Creation,	75
Volney's Ruins,	1 00
Volney's New Researches in Ancient History.	1 50
Voltaire's Philosophical Dictionary,	5 00

THE TRUTHSEEKER

DEVOTED TO SCIENCE, MORALS, FREETHOUGHT AND HUMAN HAPPINESS

Vol. 5. No. 5. {PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY D. M. BENNETT.} New York, Saturday, February 2, 1878. {SCIENCE HALL, 141 8th St., NEAR BROADWAY.} $3 per Year.

Notes and Clippings.

OVER 800 ex-drunkards in Lincoln, Neb.

THE man who swore off has sworn on again.

TALMAGE is thinking better of the politicians than he was.

THERE seems to be a tirade in this city against the t'rade dollar.

THE postmaster and several prominent merchants refuse to take the trade dollar.

IT is said a little boy will never relinquish any of his cakes except his spank-aches.

SOME of the brethren seem inclined to discuss hell in a manner altogether too jocular.

THE poor of this city have a great deal of faith and hope invested in the charity of the rich.

IS THE weather not getting pretty cold when the chronometer is reported twenty degrees below Nero?

INGERSOLL is a matter-of-fact kind of man. He says he would rather have one fact than ten thousand superstitions.

THE New Orleans Picayune says that when Spaniards are forced to leave France they get Don Carlos in their habits.

A SALT LAKE newspaper contains the startling announcement that Brigham Young's widows are beginning to marry again.

JOAQUIN MILLER wants to be cremated after death; but now Beecher says there is no such place. Has the poet nothing to hope for?

COL. ROBT. G. INGERSOLL in his lecture at Chickering Hall on last Tuesday night gave his hearers quite as much pleasure as Paine.

INGERSOLL says that when a rich man looks around upon the world it is easy for him to realize the wisdom of Providence in his treatment of the poor and distressed.

A MAN in England attempted suicide the other day, and he left a written excuse for himself, that his wife was too good for him. The jury brought him in as being of unsound mind.

THERE is a great deal of truth in the statement that when a man fails in business, people say he has "gone up." But you never hear this remark from his creditors when they attend his funeral.

ON the theory of "the survival of the fittest" it is thought that tailors and dressmakers ought to possess the earth; and, again, that the epileptic should come in for his share, as well as the combatant in the prize ring.

THE New Haven Union says: "When we think of the villain who stole our umbrella, and then of the bare possibility that there is no hell, we feel as if we could bury our head in the waste-basket and smother right to death."

THE Police Gazette of several days ago had a large cut representing Anthony Comstock with his drawn pistol in the court-room at New Canaan, endeavoring to intimidate the authorities and rescue his tool and accomplice Joseph.

IN view of the vast amount of sharp shooting now going on among preachers upon the Hell question, it is proposed to have attached to our parson-producing seminaries a theological rifle-range—an Apostle's Creedmoor, as it were.

THE Rev. O. A. Brown is lecturing up in this State on "Misplaced Men." The Rome Sentinel thinks that when the father of a pretty girl goes to sleep by the parlor fire at nine o'clock Sunday night, he is about as misplaced as a man can be.

DR. J. V. MANSFIELD, the celebrated medium, will not go to the Russian capital this winter. He may visit Washington later in the season, but for the months of February and March may be found at his residence, No. 61 West 42d street, New York.

A GREAT fall in pew-rents may be looked for in the aristocratic churches of this city about the first of May. Ecclesiastically speaking, a good many people have struck aisle here of late—and if the aisles give out, of course the knaves won't pay their pew rents.

A NEW volume of religious poems contains the couplet:

He from the crowd had been detached
Because his pantaloons were patched.

Sounds like clothing-store poetry, don't it? Where is the sweet singer of Michigan?

IN overhauling the misdirected mail-matter in the Dead Letter office at Washington, it is reported that two Limburger cheeses were found. The Telegram suggests that under the existing laws for the purification of the mails those could easily have been suppressed. Where was Comstock?

DR. SCUDDER says the Oriental nations will never become converted to Christianity until their women first become Christians, and he says that the women can be converted only by the personal agency of women who go there from Christian countries. Hindoo women will not listen to male missionaries. Dr. Scudder was in India for over twenty years and ought to know.

THE sensational preachers are not all in New York or Brooklyn, as might be supposed from some of the queer subjects announced here for sermons. An eccentric London preacher announces discourses on "The Talking Donkey," "The Devil among the Pigs," "A Little Man up a Tree," and other odd titles. This sort of thing draws a crowd, who are curious to hear what the man has to talk about.

A WRITER in the Christian at Work calls attention to the horrible manner in which some clergyman mangle the hymns which they try to read, and remarks:

"Do not say, 'My soul lizzin hay stu be gawn,
Oh, stri koff this saddamant chay—Nan make me,' &c.,
But say, 'My—soul—is—in—haste—to—be—gone,
Oh, strike—off—this—ad—a—mant—chain—
And make me,'" &c,

THE British Bible Society reports an astonishing demand for Bibles among the Cossacks. Over 60,000 have been distributed within the last few weeks. The excellent linen paper makes the best of gun-wadding; and now the gallant Cossack sings,

"Spread abroad, thou mighty Gospel!"

as he rams home a fragment of Matthew or a chapter of Revelations preparatory to spreading it among the Turks. The Word of God, preached from the muzzle of a gun, should be silencing if not convincing to those Infidel Turks.

THE American Bible Society is sadly short of money, and calls aloud for $140,000. Its annual expenditures are about $250,000. Its receipts are made up of collections, and donations, also of legacies. Not so many people are dying and leaving money to the Society as there were some time ago, although it is remembered in the wills of many wealthy people who are not dead yet. Of course, the managers are not praying for the demise of any of these good people; but it is safe to say that the news of the departure of a few of the richest would be received with a decorous resignation to the will of Divine Providence.

RELIGIOUS NOTICES.—In this city on next Sunday the Rev. Mr. Miller will grind the grist of salvation at the Noble Street Baptist church Seats free, no toll; the Rev. Mr. Gunn will do some religious sharp-shooting, and hit the heavenly bull's-eye "Ninety and nine" times out of a possible "Old Hundred" at St. Ambrose church; the Rev. Mr. Deems deems the Redeemer an excellent subject for to-morrow's sermon; the Rev. Mr. Cooper, who is a staving preacher, will "whoop 'em up again" as usual; the Rev. Mr. Snow will thaw the frosty hearts of his hearers with his sermon upon "Whither are we drifting," which will doubtless be hailed with delight; the Rev. Mr. Ewer will pour forth the water of salvation at St. Ignatius' church; the Rev. Dr. Stryker will preach about Hell, and strike while the iron is hot; the Rev. Mr. Knapp will open his knapsack as usual; the Rev. Mr. Still will preach on "Christ Stilling the Tempest"; and the Rev. Mr. Rose will "rise to explain."

AN EYE AFTER THE DOLLARS.—Mrs. Hannah J. Davis, widow of the late David D. Davis, recently died in Allegan, Mich., after an illness of ten days, of typhoid pneumonia. She was worth $125,000, and was a member of the Baptist church. A short time before her death, while in a state of delirium, a will was drawn up by one of the brethren and signed by herself, bequeathing her entire property to the Baptist church without leaving a dollar to her adopted daughter, whom she idolized, and several nephews and nieces. The community feel outraged at this cruel greed evinced by the church, and strong efforts are being made to set the will aside.

BETTER BEINGS NEEDED.—Mr. Beecher very often hits the right nail on the head. When, on Sunday, the 20th ult., he bewailed the inefficiency of education to save the race, and took the ground that some influence is necessary to bring into the world beings superior intellectually and physically to those who now inhabit it, and who will be predisposed to good instead of evil, he came very near one of the most delicate and important questions of the time. We say "delicate" because the suggestions included in this remark of Mr. Beecher's refer to a subject that has generally been tabooed for public discussion among all but men and women who have incurred the odium, so to speak, of ranking among advanced thinkers. Better beings will never be born until marriage is restricted to men and women who not only deeply love one another, but who are in every other way qualified to bring healthy children into the world. The material out of which strong, good, excellent men and women—human souls that are really but little, if any, lower than the angels—are to be manufactured, must consist of sound minds and sound bodies and include a lofty spiritual element. So long as diseased natures wed, so long as people come together in the marital relation who know and care nothing of the conditions upon which healthy children are produced, so long will the earth continue to be populated by a decidedly inferior sample of humanity.—Telegram.

THE Tribune printed a few days ago the following in reference to trials in New Canaan, Conn., in which Comstock and his accomplice, Britton, are interested, as well as in answer to some misrepresentations made by Comstock in a previous issue of that paper: "There was not much excitement in New Canaan, yesterday, over the trial of C. Scott, the saloon-keeper, who, upon the testimony of the New York detective, J. A. Britton, was quietly fined $50 on each of two complaints for liquor-selling. His lawyer immediately gave notice of appeal. There are still other complaints against Scott, but it is thought that they will not be pressed, but that time will now be given to him to bring forth fruits meet for repentance. Meanwhile no liquor is sold openly in New Canaan, but a man living in another town, visits the village, takes orders from the tipplers, and fetches the liquor from Norwalk. The village showed much feeling about the letter written by Anthony Comstock, and published in yesterday's Tribune, in which he accuses Justice Bliss of running away in the first day of the trial, and leaving the Court in the hands of "roughs." The Justice said: "I had declared the case 'put off' till next day, which was equivalent to an adjournment. If Anthony had minded his own business there would have been no trouble. Most of the disturbance occurred after he jumped up and began to swing his little pistol. I did not leave the Court at all, and was perfectly competent to preserve order, if Anthony had only given me a chance. Anthony 's ambitious, you know; likes to be noticed; been readin' 'dime novels,' I calculate.' Justice Bliss is highly esteemed in the village, and his statement is borne out by many of the reputable citizens. E. L. Scofield, the prosecuting attorney, said that the crowd had reason to suppose the Court adjourned, Mr. Scofield says Mr. Comstock drew a pistol, but many of the friends of the latter say it was only a bell punch. Feeling runs high in New Canaan, and Mr. Comstock is openly blamed for all the trouble. Two complaints have been made out against him on the charge of carrying concealed weapons and of disturbing the peace. The officers went to Stamford, on Friday last, thinking he would attend the trials there. If he had visited Stamford on that day, he would have been arrested.

Events of the Week.

SEVERAL fine buildings were burned in Montclair, N. J.

AN $85,000 fire on the corner of Worth and Elm streets.

FIFTY-ONE persons were arrested on Monday for throwing dirt in the streets.

WORK is becoming brisker in the shipyards in this vicinity—which is a good omen.

P. T. BARNUM has been sued for libel. Nobody is scarcely safe from prosecution now-a-days.

THE Pope is getting very feeble again. Why doesn't he go up, and give somebody else a chance?

A BOILER explosion in an oil refinery at Constable's Point, N. Y. One man was killed, another dangerously injured.

GEORGE FRANCIS TRAIN has delivered several lectures recently in the Opera House at Newark, N. J. Opinions as to the soundness of his positions varied largely.

PETER COOPER has under consideration the establishment, near Spartanburg, S. C., of an educational institution for girls, something on the plan of his institute in this city.

REV. TIMOTHY GARDNER FREEMAN, Baptist, dropped dead of heart disease. His pious friends think his God had need of him up above and kindly took him off in that gentle manner.

FRANK LESLIE, while returning from a trip to Washington, was arrested in Philadelphia and held to bail. His arrest was doubtless influenced by spite from one Wrigley, whose arrest Leslie had previously caused.

SUIT has been begun in the Kings County Supreme Court against the Church of the Good Shepherd, Brooklyn, to foreclose their mortgages. Several churches about these days are passing through the same trying ordeal.

MR. J. HARRY SCHRACK, to all appearances, died in Philadephia a few days ago. He is now alive. He says he died and went to heaven, saw Jesus and the angels, interviewed Moses, and shook hands with Jehovah.

IN the fore part of the week heavy rains prevailed; the latter part cold with some snow. Much less snow has fallen thus far this winter than usual. In the lumbering districts of Michigan and Wisconsin great inconvenience is experienced on this account.

MRS. ELIZABETH MEYER, a beautiful young married woman, 97 East Seventieth-st., feeling greatly aggrieved at the conduct of her father-in-law and mother-in-law, took Paris green, and will probably die. She leaves a beautiful infant and a loving husband, with whose parents she resided.

JOSEPH A. BRITTON, Comstock's detective and accomplice, was complained of before Justice Duffy, of Jefferson Market Police Court for perjury at the last election for mayor. The perjury was fully proven, but the case was put over for a week. It is probable that by the influence that will be brought to bear in his favor the perjurer will be allowed to escape.

NO GREAT battles in Turkey since our last. The Russians are massing at Adrianople preparatory to going into Constantinople. Large numbers of wounded soldiers and 150,000 refugees are flocking to Constantinople. Negotiations for peace are on the tapis, and reports that fighting is over have reached our shores. England, on the other hand, is becoming very much excited, and seems burning to take a hand in the fray. If she does, the war in Europe will probably be general.

THE Society for the Suppression of Vice has held its fourth annual meeting. Subscriptions and gifts to the amount of $6975 were reported to have been received. So Comstock will be in funds again for some time. He said more obscene matter was in circulation last year than ever before. If that is true, it would seem better to dissolve his society, let him return to the shoe trade, and thus save his friends considerable expensive prosecution. Would not Congress and the legislature do well to modify those terrible laws?

Radical Romance.

The Darwins.

BY MRS. ELMINA D. SLENKER.

"But, Mr. Darwin," said Jennie, "do you really think it does no good in any case as a medicine? Why, all our doctors use it and recommend it to their patients in numerous diseases, with, as they say, beneficial results."

"Yes, my young friend; I am aware they prescribe it only too often here in the South, because they have been wrongly taught, and do not realize the evils that result from its use. I read an article not long ago about the International Medical Congress held in Philadelphia in September, 1876, that proves the medical fraternity are rapidly finding out the inutility of liquor as a health-restorer. There were four hundred and eighty delegates, and many of the ablest scientists of the profession of this and other lands were in attendance; and stronger statements against the use of alcohol were never made on the temperance platform than were uttered by those medical men. A Scotchman said he believed it would be for the best interests of humanity if every drop of alcohol in the world was cast into the midst of the sea. Dr. Hunt, of New Jersey, disputed the claim of alcohol in every important particular. A letter from the National Temperance Union was read, amid a round of applause, and the points in the reply passed almost unanimously. The official answer rules alcohol out of its long-cherished place as a tonic, for if it has no food value, how can it tone up the system? One of the delegates, speaking of this, said, 'It has the same relation to the human system that a whip has to an overworked horse; it may make him spring forward for a few moments, but it does not rest and refresh him, and reaction must follow.' A medical declaration published in London in 1872 says it is believed that the inconsiderate prescription of alcoholic liquors by medical men for their patients has given rise, in many instances, to the formation of intemperate habits; and the manifesto was signed by two hundred and fifty of the leading medical men of the United Kingdom. Indeed, the drug-shop has truly been called the parent of the dram-shop. In my old home in Connecticut, liquor has been ruled out of good society as a beverage; but here in the South I find but few families that do not keep it and use it, and many of them take it as a daily dram, and believe it to be really beneficial, and imagine they could not do without it. It seems to us Yankees, who come from a land where it is popularly tabooed, that we have gone back fifty years into the past again when we witness such a wholesale use of alcoholic stimulants as we find in many parts of the South; and we feel as if a great deal of the old work of regeneration was to be gone over again and re-done. The day will come when tea and coffee will follow alcohol into the mists of oblivion. They are all of one class as regards usefulness and health, only tea and coffee are less harmful in their effects both physically and morally, though equally worthless as real food and sustenance. But little drink of any sort should be taken with our meals. Nothing very hot or very cold. A few sips of milk, weak tea or coffee, or cool water, is all that is necessary. Ice-water is never desirable, especially in hot weather. Dr. Foote, in his 'Plain Home Talk,' says, 'The thorough lubrication of the food with the saliva is necessary to promote digestion. Saliva is an alkali and, electrically speaking, a negative, while the gastric fluid in the stomach is an acid and a positive. When, therefore, food descends into the stomach only half masticated, and lubricated with some other fluid than saliva, digestion for some time is almost suspended, because the negative fluid is wanting to attract the immediate action of the positive fluid, and the presence of other liquids tends to dilute and destroy the power of the latter. In addition to this, the labor of the jaws and teeth is thrown upon the disabled stomach. If a person eats slowly, masticates thoroughly, and omits all drinks, Nature furnishes three or four ounces of salival fluid with which to moisten his food preparatory to its entrance into the stomach. No one requires liquids at the table. This habit is the result of fast eating.' But please excuse me, ladies," said Mr. Darwin, apologetically, "I did not mean to deliver a lecture on temperance. Your questions and looks of interest drew me out farther than is really polite, I fear."

"Oh, not at all," said Mrs. May. "We are delighted to find you are such a warm advocate of a cherished theory that we have held and maintained almost in isolation for so long, and you have told us many interesting facts that bear upon the subject."

"And I've made my last pint of wine or beer," said Jennie earnestly. "Father is a preacher, and yet we make all the wine for communion purposes for our church here, and I know you do not believe it right to use wine even for that, for Mrs. May and Edith have often said they did not."

"You are right, Miss Jennie, as regards my belief in using alcoholic beverages for church purposes. I think many a reformed drunkard has had his old appetite revived by the taste of wine at the communion service. It is far better to use simple colored water, or unfermented wine, as they do at the North now in most churches."

"I think so, too, and shall use my influence with father to get him to propose it here," said Jennie.

"I wish you all success, my dear," said Mrs. Darwin, looking kindly upon the enthusiastic girl, who in her eagerness had risen to her feet and spoke with an animation and zeal that proved her every bit in earnest.

The time had flown so rapidly while engaged in discussing this interesting and important subject that it was now getting late, and the Darwins rose to take their leave. Edith and Jennie walked with them through the village, pointing out objects of interest, and telling who occupied the various houses. As they passed Dr. Scott's, Myra ran out and joined them, and her lively remarks gave variety and zest to the occasion. As they parted at the lane leading to the Forks, Edith begged Mrs. Darwin to tell Rose and Minnie to come and spend the day with her sometime during the next week.

"They will be very glad to do so," said Mrs. Darwin, "for when once the business season commences at the factory they will be too much confined to be able to go out often."

"Why, surely, they do not work in the factory!" said Myra, with surprise.

"Certainly they do," replied Mrs. Darwin; "and why not?"

"Oh, because factory girls are low and vulgar, and not fit to associate with respectable people," said Myra, bluntly.

"I trust that you will find Rose and Minnie just as agreeable, moral, and refined as if they did nothing but play upon the piano, read novels, and attend balls, parties, and sewing-circles," said Mrs. Darwin, pleasantly but earnestly.

"Oh, yes; certainly, certainly," said Myra, hastening to apologize for her rudeness. "I did not mean to say they were not real ladies, for they truly are; but you know I have always seen factory girls looked down upon and considered as unfit to be associated with by respectable people, and was therefore taken by surprise when you said Rose and Minnie worked in the mill. I do hope you will not be offended at me, for I am apt to say right out just what I think, and often hurt the feelings of my best friends in that way, though I do not mean to do so. I reverse the old adage, you see, and speak twice before I think, instead of thinking twice before I speak."

Mrs. Darwin told her she was not at all displeased at her frankness, and hoped she and Jennie and Edith would soon make them a visit.

"That we shall be sure to do," said the warm-hearted, impulsive girl, "for we all like you ever so much;" and with a cordial "good night" they parted.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Discussion.

The Bennett-Teed Discussion.

I.—JESUS CHRIST IS NOT ONLY DIVINE, BUT IS THE LORD GOD, CREATOR OF HEAVEN AND EARTH.

MR. TEED'S SEVENTH LETTER.

MORAVIA, Jan. 15, 1878.

MR. D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Modern so-called science constitutes the foundation for your belief, in common with that of all Materialists and Spiritualists of nominal Christendom. Your opposition to the claims and teachings of Jesus has its origin in modern science. If there were no great system of science, there would be no great opposition to the religion of Jesus. The system presented to the world by Jesus the Christ had its origin in the highest department of knowledge—in an all-comprehensive understanding of the human structure with its accompanying functions and their relations to the physical creation. The various systems of religion that are or have been in existence have had their foundation in knowledge or supposed knowledge of less or greater fragments of the cosmos, or in such knowledge or supposed knowledge combined with a true or false conception of the human organism, embracing both its form and functions. You cannot refer to a system of religion that has not such a source. If you will examine, compare, and classify the numerous systems, you will perceive that they have been evolved through regular and successive gradations, keeping pace with the amplification of the intellect through the increased facilities for the observation of facts and the mind's increasing receptivity to inspirational influence. There are three systems of religion which, in connection with the above thoughts, especially demand attention as exerting greater influences upon Western civilization than all others. These three are, the religion of Jesus Christ, of Mohammed, and the religion founded on the belief in a plurality of gods; the latter of which found an advanced growth in the Roman empire, and with which the declining Christian system formed an active and ready amalgamation. You will observe that in the evolution of these systems every succeeding gradation has been the outgrowth of the disintegration of the preceding ones with the introduction of new elements for the purposes of greater combinations. If you have not already grown to this consciousness, I refer you to the operation of law as manifest in the methods observed in progressive combinations, disintegrations, and recombinations in the mineral kingdom, with the simple suggestion that law is uniform, and that what is true in any phase of evolution in one department of creation is true of all phases in all departments.

The highest point attained to in the progress of unfoldment in the development of what is called science constitutes the foundation of the succeeding grade of religious faith. The Mohammedan system of religion is founded upon the Ptolemaic system of astronomy, and the religion of the Romans upon a phase of the Pythagorean system of astronomy. The present system of astronomy, and that which constitutes the basis of the infidelity now directly antagonizing Jesus and his doctrines, is a revival or resurrection of the Pythagorean system. Modern science is not new. It is as old as the history of the ages, and is simply a resurrection embodying new elements in a greater combination. Galileo, Copernicus, Kepler, and Newton simply borrowed, as you state it, or plagiarized the system of Pythagoras, and, according to your logic, never had an existence, but were myths—this being your argument that Jesus is a myth. The truth is, friend Bennett, and you ought to know it, that when old systems are completely revived or resurrected from the debris of the crumbled ruins of the past, with new combinations, the human organisms who constitute the intellectual embodiment of those systems are resurrected also. When modern science comes to its full, the old Greek and Roman gods are on the stage. Their names are Train, Andrews, Davis, Marchand, Ingersoll, D. M. Bennett, and others whom I could name, and who constitute the foci of all the psychic and spiritualistic phenomena of the present in their newly-developed strength and phase.

The religions of the past ages and of the present age are facts. They have existed and do exist. Are they the result of the operations of definite law? and do they constitute a factor in the universal economy? What, then, are their functions in connection with the processes of evolution? They are the matrices in which are gestated the unfolding systems. Without the womb of ecclesiastical Rome, modern science would never have been gestated and brought to the birth. Modern science and modern Christianity were gestated in the womb of the Roman harlot as the twin children of adultery; and their growth has culminated in modern Spiritualism and Materialism, now consorting in incestuous union as the Church and State which hope to stand when the old heavens and the old earth shall have passed away.

If modern so-called science is true, then the religion of Jesus Christ is false. In maintaining my position concerning Jesus Christ, I base my conclusions upon an exact science (knowledge)—a thorough understanding of the form and function of the cosmos and man's relation to it as having been first involved and then evolved through it.

Jesus had a thorough knowledge, in the beginning of the age now coming to its close, of all forms as embodied in the universal form, and of all functions embodied in the universal function. He was the product of all ages, forming, in the completion of the cycle of the individual Theos, the germ for the regeneration (reproduction) or evolution of the genus THEOS. While he possessed all knowledge of the physical, spiritual, and substantial, he could only transmit that knowledge and the life he possessed through extension of the processes of development, disseminating literally his own outward form to the propagation and resurrection of the new divine embodiments. That he was familiar with the laws of involution and evolution may be known from the fact that he taught them both in their highest phases, and declared that it must be through the operation of those principles that a new Church should be brought forth as the result of the planting of his body—the seed of Abraham, the promised seed, the seed man from whom should spring, as the lives of the resurrected forms, the sons of God who now stand again upon the earth to confirm the promises and declarations of Jehovah.

When the sons of God come to present themselves before the Lord, Satan will come also, and, as in the past, he will assume the position of and claim that he is a very fine gentleman.

You claim that I have not proved my position regarding the existence of an atmosphere of pure hydrogen immediately above and resting upon the sphere of common air. I will simply say that I may not have demonstrated it to the satisfaction of your mind. I can also say of the law of evolution that its existence is not proven to thousands of stupid minds—no insinuation—who may rank as high in the world's estimation as yourself. This does not disprove the fact that it exists and that it can be perceived by thousands of minds open to its influence and receptive to the truth. Nothing can be proved to a mind not open to conviction.

The law that I have presented, namely, the specific gravities and levities of primals, indicate the normal relative positions of those primals in space, cannot be gainsaid. It is a positive deduction through analogy from the observation of the phenomena manifested through the law of deposition. In my last letter I made the statement that these conclusions were reached independent of scripture, but that I am happy to see their confirmation by those great men who lived in past ages, and who interpreted nature as I am enabled to do. Of course you and our readers cannot exactly perceive the relation of the above thoughts and arguments to the proposition, and I cannot now anticipate argument beyond what I have already done to show their relation.

I have not deviated from my purpose of presenting Scripture as a witness to the truth of my proposition, but inasmuch as you reject the Bible in evidence, because, as you assert, it is not good authority, and as you fail to see that I have shown so-called science to be poorer authority; before presenting the Bible in its fullness for the purpose of comparing its teachings with true science outside of the Bible, I will continue my objections to your scientific conclusions.

The fact that there exists a stratum of hydrogen above our atmosphere contiguous to and resting upon it, I have proved, even though you fail to appreciate the argument adduced. This being true, in what way does it affect astronomical calculations and deductions?

The testimony presented in favor of the commonly received theory is no evidence of its correctness. An argument that has as much weight as any with the masses is that astronomical predictions are accurately made. This is not proof. If so, the Ptolemaic system is proven to be the true system with the same degree of certainty, for an equal accuracy obtained under the calculations made with that system as the foundation for mathematical solutions. All such testimony must be set aside. It establishes the truth of one as much as the other.

To comprehend the nature of the influence that the discovery of a stratum of hydrogen above us will exert upon the existing theory, it becomes necessary to examine the laws of refraction in their relation to the atmospheres and gases. You and your readers are aware that in studying solar, lunar, and stellar phenomena, all observations have to be made through various media. The effect of atmosphere, by its power of refraction, upon rays of light in their emanations from the centres of radiation, and their transmission to us in connection with the media through which they are transmitted, including the organs of vision and perception, are all to be considered.

No positive conclusions can be reached without a true comprehension of the laws of optics. The true theory regarding the manner of impressing the mind through its organ, the brain—the method by which the mind comes in contact or touch with the objective world—is a principal factor in the study of perception.

The study of the law of vision logically precedes the study of the principles of refraction and reflection in the objective world, and would be presented in that order to those who were made receptive to them by the operation of faith. I deviate from this order because I am presenting these views in antagonism to a system of philosophy and science, the antithesis from beginning to end of the system which is to manifest as the power of truth standing out involved and evolved by the primal centre of all being, The Word, and the power by which anti-Christ will be overthrown.

In entering upon this phase of our subject, if I am controverting these questions with a "liberal-minded" man, and the thoughts are being read by "liberal-minded" people, I may safely state some propositions, though radical and revolutionary. The "heavenly bodies" are foci of electrical force converged by the operations of the atmospheres, through the refraction and reflection of the force focalizing it, at regular and given points in space, within the atmospheres connected with the earth. These points are not great distances from us, and they constitute the windows of heaven in the material or physical domain of creation. The sun, as perceived, is an atmosphere investing a central star, an astral centre which appears by reflection to be in another point or direction in the stellar realms.

These propositions, if considered worthy of notice, would be somewhat startling; as you express it, "if true, they are wonderful; if not true, they are not so wonderful." That they are true I shall demonstrate and confirm in the course of the contest now being waged between the false and true system.

The existing and received theory supposes that there is an atmosphere of oxygen and nitrogen in definite proportions surrounding the earth. That this atmosphere is of a certain—or uncertain—depth not precisely known, and that it becomes more tenuous till reaching a given point where it abruptly ceases to exist. Beyond that there is supposed to exist an attenuated ether, just sufficiently dense to meet objections to the theory, but not enough so to encumber the operations of the great worlds and systems of worlds necessary to carry out the theory, If such a theory were true, the laws of the reflection and refraction of light must be set aside. It is not philosophic to reject known facts for speculations; we will therefore follow out in our application of these laws to that domain of the physical immediately beyond our natural observation, their operations as known to obtain under our direct inspection, You know that the common air has a specific or relative refracting power. In relation to the different gases the power of refraction and reflection varies. What is true of atmosphere, of the two gases combined, is true also of either alone, and of all the other ethers. This law applies without a deviation so far as any application has been made. If there is an exception you will be able, of course, to point it out to me.

The degree of tenuity of the ether supposed to have an existence throughout space, no scientific man claims to give, not even comparatively. If such an ether exists, its actual degree of tenuity must be known before any calculations can be made of distances, directions, or diameters of any supposed bodies in distant space. All calculations now made are founded upon certain principles, included in which is the refractive power of the earth's atmosphere. The specific refracting powers of all known diaphanous substances are determined with absolute certainty. How is it if we admit the existence of an attenuated ether incalculably tenuous as occupying all space? I call upon you to prove its existence, by the force of your own logic, through actual physical tests. I can prove the existence of mind by its operation upon matter through its organs. The attenuated ether is a mere speculation to avoid otherwise insurmountable obstacles to a false theory.

When light operates beyond the limits of our direct inspection does it obey another law? and if so, give me proof. It now becomes my turn to demand proof. If it does not obey another law; if it is uniform in its operations; if you cannot tell me the precise degree of the tenuity of the ether throughout space, how will you determine the course of a ray of light outside the atmosphere of the earth?

It is well known that light, in penetrating a dense from a tenuous substance, is refracted and reflected to the same degree as when passing into the tenuous from the dense. If light passes from our atmosphere into water, both refraction and reflection occur. An equal degree of refraction and reflection obtains inversely. A ray of light in passing through hydrogen gas into water varies in the degree of the phenomenon from that manifest in the relation of common air and water. Before you or any "scientific" man in the world can determine the direction of a ray of light as entering our atmosphere from a supposed ether beyond, you or he must be able to give its exact relative tenuity. This must be known before directions, distances, or diameters can be determined. A ray of light passing through water into common air is diverted from its course in a given direction. In passing into hydrogen, a more tenuous substance than common air, the angle is greater. A still rarer substance affords a still greater degree of refractive power. From this law we can determine with definite certainty the degree of tenuity necessary to render a substance impervious to a ray passing from a more dense substance into it. In making the application of the principle to a supposed ether beyond the atmosphere of the earth, we can calculate with mathematical precision the degree of rarefication necessary for such an ether to completely obstruct every ray of light capable of making an impression upon the retina. When that degree is reached, the specific density of the air would be such as to afford complete obstruction to rays coming from such an ether into our atmosphere. In other words we can determine with mathematical certainty the relative density or levity of air and a tenuous ether to reflect back or double upon themselves rays of light passing from either one toward the other. The appearance of an object seen through a diverted ray of light, either refracted or reflected, is as if it were in a direct line. A ray may be doubled completely upon itself, and its subjective point becomes its objective. For instance, stand before a mirror: you are the subjective and objective point of rays passing from yourself to the mirror, doubled upon themselves, and you appear to be just the distance beyond the mirror that you are in front of it. You appear to be twice the distance from yourself that you are actually from the mirror. If an object appears in the heavens in a direct line from yourself, there is no certainty that the object seen is in the direction it appears to be. If the object is beyond our own atmosphere, its direction cannot be determined without an exact knowledge of the condition beyond.

If our atmosphere terminates abruptly, and beyond it there is a tenuous substance the levity of which is greater than the greatest degree possible for rays to penetrate from our atmosphere, then all emanations from the earth upward would be thrown or reflected back, and instead of our being able to observe objects beyond the limits of the atmosphere our vision would follow the rays of light back, even penetrating beneath the surface of the earth, to the metallic strata constituting the great voltaic pile—so to speak, which actually comprises the shell of the earth and is the negative generator of all the qualities of magnetism thence emanating.

Before you attempt to maintain the absurd theory of modern astronomy, I call upon you to give the exact relative tenuity of the supposed ether beyond our atmosphere. On failing to do this, you fail to meet my arguments.

You can pass them by with ridicule, it being a plan of argumentation which takes well with a large class of our readers, and is the same to them as logic, they having become so liberal that they do not appreciate the difference. It is also the method employed by the modern Christian world to meet the various phases of opposition that are now and have been in the past rising through the skepticism of the age. You have a precedent; if the plan suits your taste, of course you are at liberty to adopt it. In relation to the doctrine of evolution, this especially has been the course pursued by the modern Christian.

I will here state, that in my estimation of the conditions existing beyond the atmosphere of common air, I do not stop with the discovery of a stratum of hydrogen. There are other and more refined strata above that, but I do not purpose to anticipate the subject. The existing conditions in the cosmical heavens storied above us are to be considered in their order as we proceed.

Do you and our readers still inquire, "Mr. Teed, what are you driving at?" As usual, at the proposition! It embraces all there is, and it is impossible to embrace the explanation of all in a few words, or to comprehend it in a few short letters.

The physical man is involved through the cosmical universe and when his evolution is complete, he must embody the entire form of the cosmical, with its laws and functions involved in his organism. We are now studying the form of the physical world with its powers and possibilities. If it can be proved that it has a center, a universal physical sensorium or positive pole of existence, then humanity, the product and creator, first involved in and then evolved through and from it, must and does embrace a corresponding sensorium or center, which is the positive pole of sentient being, and the point of positive contact or touch with the entire Universe extending from this center to the remotest boundaries of universal consciousness and cosmical existence. Each form of perception is simply a phase or quality of touch or contact. The mind's perception of a physical substance is nothing more or less than the mind through its organ, the body—or brain—coming in contact with or touching the object through its properties conveyed to the mind. The contact of the mind with that which it perceives conclusively demonstrates the mind to be very substance.

Your persistence in misrepresenting me I hope is unintentional. Nevertheless, the effect is the same upon the minds of our readers as if you purposely perverted my statement. You ask me to prove that mind exists independent of an organized form, as if I had made such a claim. I claim just the reverse. You demand of me the proof of things that I am making effort to disprove.

Your perception is blunted through bias of mind, or you are dishonest. It pains me to be forced to such an accusation; but from the begining of this discussion you have misrepresented me to our readers. When I tell you plainly that mind cannot exist independent of an organized form, as I have repeatedly done, why will you persist in urging that I make the opposite claim? Have I ever claimed that Jesus did or can exist without embodiment? If so, you have my statement; point it out to me.

I claim that the Universe has had a perpetual existence, and that creation is as constant and perpetual. Nowhere have I made a contrary claim. Integration and disintegration, both belonging to creative processes, are constant in their operations. The two terms are employed to express actualities. If the terms are inexpressive, why not dispense with them? I hope what I have said above will induce you to save your profound logical efforts for something I claim, and not waste them upon positions I never have assumed. In future, in due order I will locate for you the head, heart, lungs, liver, hands, feet, &c., and show you how these parts of the physical creation relate to the corresponding parts of man, in whom resides the Almighty, with corresponding parts. As ever yours,

CYRUS ROMULUS R. TEED.

What Religion has done for us.

BY W. S. BELL.

It has been the source of strife in families, of feuds in society, of wars among nations. It has set the father against his son, has taught the mother to believe that she must rejoice in heaven, even in the eternal torment of her daughter in hell. It has led the dominant sect to persecute all weaker ones. Extermination is the animating spirit of religion—the extermination of all weaker sects—the weaker sects always being heretical—the prevalent belief is orthodox, and is orthodox simply because it is popular and powerful. Religion has taught us to hate all who disagree with us. "Brotherly love" means the love of only those who are of our sect—and hence we must hate the ungodly with a perfect hatred. How fearfully this is pictured in the history of Christianity! War after war during the long centuries has caused rivers of blood to flow, because men have been taught "brotherly love" for those of their own sect, and unquenchable hatred of all others. The human heart, thus inflamed with a diabolical malice, has led men professing to be followers of the "meek and lowly one" to persecute, torment, torture and slay in every way that human fiendishness could invent. Men, women, children, and infants at their mother's breasts have been horribly slaughtered. Some have been burned at the stake with slow fire that their sufferings might long continue, while their murderers stood by jeering and laughing to see them writhe, and to hear them groan and to witness the innocent child fall from its mother's arms into the burning fagots at her feet. It has incited the most devilish passions in the human heart and then baptized their fruits under the sacred name of Holy Wars, Crusades, &c. It has instilled into the human mind the most deadly hostilities between man and man. It is not only compatible with Christian duty to persecute those who differ from them, but Christianity has taught that it is religious duty utterly to destroy them. Hence, in the bloody trail of Christian history, we find everywhere Christians hanging, burning, or quartering Christians. They have even tortured human ingenuity to discover the most cruel and excruciating methods of tormenting and murdering their victims.

They have sawn their victims into pieces, they have hitched horses to the feet, and thus torn the body asunder, or chained them to a horse's heels, which, when the horse was furiously driven, soon mangled the body into a horrid mass that not even a Nero could look upon without compassion. Some have had the flesh torn from thier bodies with red-hot pincers, others have had their tongues cut out, their eyes burned out with red-hot irons, their ears cut off, or filled with molten lead, or red-hot pokers forced into their bodies. Mothers have had children snatched from their arms and their brains dashed out before their eyes; then the mother's breasts have been cut off, her bowels ripped open, her heart torn out and shoved into her face. Some have been stung to death by bees, and some poisoned, or starved, or drowned, or smothered; and some have been clubbed or stabbed, or beheaded; some have been put upon the rack, stretched on the wheel, or thrown into boiling caldrons. This has not satisfied the ferocity of "brotherly love," for the dead have been dug up and their bones burned and their ashes scattered before the winds, or cast into the waters. This infernal deed has often been done to rob the widow and orphan of their daily bread.

The war-cry of the Christian in all ages has been "Exterminate the heretics!"

If any one speak or act with an elevated, pure mind, then joy follows like an unwithdrawing shadow.

Robert G. Ingersoll.

Ghosts.

A LECTURE DELIVERED BY COL. ROBT. G. INGERSOLL IN VARIOUS CITIES IN THE COUNTRY.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN: In the first place allow me to tender my sincere thanks to the clergy of this city. I feel that I am greatly indebted to them for this magnificent audience. It has been said, and I believe it myself, that there is a vast amount of intolerance in the church of to-day, but when twenty-four clergymen, three of whom I believe are bishops, act as my advance agents, without expecting any remuneration or reward in this world, I must admit that perhaps I was mistaken on the question of intolerance. And I will say further, that against those men I have not the slightest feeling in the world; every man is the product of his own surroundings; he is the product of every circumstance that has ever touched him; he is the product, to a certain degree, of the religion and creed of his day, and when men show the slightest intolerance I blame the creed, I blame the religion. I blame the superstition that forced them to do so. I do not blame those men.

Allow me to say further, that this world is not, in my judgment, yet perfect. I am doing, in a very feeble way to be sure, but I am still endeavoring according to my idea to make this world just a little better; to give a little more liberty to men, a little more liberty to women. I believe in the government of kindness; I believe in truth, in investigation, in free thought; I do not believe that the hand of want will be eternally extended in this world; I do not believe that the prison will forever scar the ground; I do not believe that the shadow of the gallows will forever curse the earth; I do not believe that it will always be true that the men who do the most work will have the least to wear and the least to eat; I do believe that the time will come when liberty, and morality, and justice, like the rings of Saturn, will surround the world; that the world will be better, and every true man and every free man will do what he can to hasten the coming of the religion of human advancement.

I understand that for the thousands and thousands of years that have gone by all questions have been settled by religion. I understand that during all this time the people have gotten their information from the sacerdotal class—from priests. I know that when India was supreme, when they worshiped Brahma and Vishnu, and that when Rome held in its hand the red sword of war, they worshiped Jove, and I know now that our religion has swept to the top. Any man living in India a few hundred or thousand years ago would have said, this is the only true religion. Why? Because here is the only true civilization. A man afterward living in Egypt would have said this is the only true religion, because we have the best civilization; a Greek in Athens would have said, this is the true religion, and a Roman would have said, we have the true religion, and now those religions all having died, although they were all true religions, we say ours is the only religion, because we are the greatest commercial nation in the world. There will come other nations; there will come other religions. Man has made every religion in this world, in my judgment, and the religion has been good or bad according as the men who made it were good or bad. If they were savages and barbarians, they made a God like the Jehovah of the Jews; if they were civilized, if they were kind and tender, they filled the Heavens with kindness and love. Every man makes his own God. Show me the God a man worships, and I will tell you what kind of a man he is. Every one makes his own God, every one worships his own God; and if you are a civilized man you will have a civilized God and we have been civilizing ours for hundreds and hundreds of years. He is getting better every day.

I am going to tell you to-night just exactly what I think. The other lecture I delivered here was my conservative lecture: this is my radical one! We even hear it suggested that our religion, our Bible, has given us all we have of prosperity and greatness and grandeur. I deny it! We have become civilized in spite of it; and I will show you to-night that the obstruction that every science has had is what we have been pleased to call our religion—or superstition. I had a conversation with a gentleman once—and these gentlemen are always mistaking something that goes along with a thing for the cause of the thing—and he stated to me that his particular religion was the cause of all advancement. I said to him, "No, sir; the causes of all advancement in my judgment, are plug hats and suspenders." And I said to him, "You go to Turkey, where they are semi-barbarians, and you won't find a pair of suspenders or a plug hat in all that country; you go to Russia, and you will find now and then a pair of suspenders at Moscow or St. Petersburg; you go on down till you strike Austria, and black hats begin; then you go on to Paris, Berlin, and New York, and you will find everybody wears suspenders and everybody wears black hats. Wherever you find education and music, there you will find black hats and suspenders." He said that any man who said to him that plug hats and suspenders had done more for mankind than the Bible and religion he would not talk to.

As a matter of fact, we are controlled to-day by men who do not exist. We are controlled to-day by phenomena that never did exist. We are controlled by ghosts and dead men, and in the grasp of death is a scepter that controls the living present. I propose that we shall govern ourselves! I propose that we shall let the past go, and let the dead past bury the dead past. I believe the American people have brains enough, and nerve enough, and courage enough, to control and govern themselves without any assistance from dust or ghosts. That is my doctrine; and I am going to do what I can while I live to increase that feeling of independence and manhood in the American people. We can control ourselves. I believe in the gospel of this world; I believe in happiness right here; I do not believe in drinking skim milk all my life with the expectation of butter beyond the clouds. I believe in the gospel, I say, in this world. This is a mighty good world. There are plenty of good people in this world. There is lots of happiness in this world; and, I say, let us, in every way we can, increase it. I envy every man who is contented with his lot, whether he is poor or whether he is rich. I tell you, the man that tries to make somebody else happy, and who owns his own soul, nobody having a mortgage or deed of trust upon his manhood or liberty—this world is a pretty good world for such a man. I do not care; I am going to say my say, whether I make money or grow poor; no matter whether I get high office or walk along the dusty highway of the common. I am going to say my say, and I had rather be a farmer and live on forty acres of land, and live in a log cabin that I built myself, and have a little grassy path going down to the spring, so that I can go there and hear the waters gurgling and know that it is coming out from the lips of the earth, like a poem whispered to the white pebbles—I would rather live there, and have some hollyhocks at the corner of the house, and the larks singing and swinging in the trees, and some lattice over the window, so that the sunlight can fall checkered on the babe in the cradle—I had rather live there, and have the freedom of my own brain; I had rather do that than live in a palace of gold, and crawl, a slimy hypocrite, through this world. Superstition has done enough harm already; every religion, nearly, suspects everything that is pleasant, everything that is joyous, and they always have a notion that God feels best when we feel worst. They have chained the Andromeda of joy to the cold rocks of ignorance and fear, there to be devoured by the dragon of superstitition. Church and State are two vultures that have fed upon the heart of chained Prometheus. I say, let the human race have a chance; let every man think for himself and express that thought. There is no wrath in the serene heavens; there is no scowl in the blue of the sky. Upon the throne of the Universe tyranny does not sit as king.

The speaker here took from his pocket a pair of spectacles and adjusted them, saying, I am sorry to admit it: I have got to come to it. I hate to put on a pair of spectacles; but the other day, as I was putting them on, a thought struck me. I see progress in this. To progress is to overcome the obstacles of nature, and in order to overcome this obstacle of the loss of sight man invented spectacles. Spectacles led men to the telescope, with which he read all the starry heavens; and had it not been for the failure of sight, we wouldn't have seen a millionth part that we have. In the first place, we owe nothing but truth to the dead. I am going to tell the truth about them. There are three theories by which men account for all phenomena—for everything that happens: First, the supernatural. In the olden time, everything that happened some deity produced, some spirit, some devil, some hobgoblin, some dryad, some fairy, some spook, something except nature. First, then, the supernatural; and a barbarian looking at the wide, mysterious sea, wandering through the depths of the forest, encountering the wild beasts, troubled by strange dreams, accounted for everything by the action of spirits, good and bad. Second, the supernatural and natural. There is where the religious world is to-day—a mingling of the supernatural and natural, the idea being that God created the world and imposed upon men certain laws, and then let them run, and if they ever got into any trouble then he would do a miracle, and accomplish any good that he desired to do. Third—and that is the grand theory—the natural. Between these theories there has been from the dawn of civilization a conflict. In this great war nearly all of the soldiers have been in the ranks of the supernatural. The believers in the supernatural insist that matter is controlled and directed entirely by powers from without; the naturalists maintain that nature acts from within; that nature is not acted upon; that the universe is all there is; that nature, with infinite arms, embraces everything that exists, and that the supposed powers beyond the limits of the materially real are simply ghosts. You say, ah! this is materialism! this is the doctrine of matter! What is matter! I take a handful of earth in my hands, and into that dust I put seeds, and arrows from the eternal quiver of the sun smite it, and the seeds grow and bud and blossom, and fill the air with perfume in my sight. Do you understand that? Do you understand how this dust and these seeds and that light and this moisture produced that bud and that flower and that perfume? Do you understand that any better than you do the production of thought? Do you understand that any better than you do a dream? Do you understand that any better than you do the thoughts of love that you see in the eyes of the one you adore? Can you explain it? Can you tell what matter is? Have you the slightest conception? Yet you talk about matter as though you were acquainted with its origin; as though you had compelled, with clenched hands, the very rocks to give up the secret of existence. Do you know what force is? Can you account for molecular action? Are you familiar with chemistry? Can you account for the loves and the hatreds of the atoms? Is there not something in matter that forever eludes you? Can you tell what matter really is? Before you cry materialism, you had better find what matter is. Can you tell of anything without a material basis? Is it possible to imagine the annihilation of a single atom? Is it possible for you to conceive of the creation of a single atom? Can you have a thought that is not suggested to you by what you call matter? Did any man or woman or child ever have a solitary thought, dream or conception, that was not suggested to them by something they had seen in nature? Can you conceive of anything the different parts of which have not been suggested to you by nature? You can conceive of an animal with the hoofs of a bison, with the pouch of a kangaroo, with the head of a buffalo, with the tail of a lion, with the scales of a fish, with the wings of a bird, and yet every part of this impossible monster has been suggested to you by nature. You say time, therefore you can think eternity. You say pain, therefore you can think hell. You say strength, therefore you can think omnipotence. You say wisdom, therefore you can think infinite wisdom. Everything you see, everything you can dream of or think of has been suggested to you by your surroundings, by nature. Man cannot rise above nature; below nature man cannot fall.

Imagine, if you please, the creation of a single atom. Can any one here imagine the creation out of nothing of one atom? Can any one here imagine the destruction of one atom? Can you imagine an atom being changed to nothing? Can you imagine nothing being changed to an atom? There is not a solitary person here with an imagination strong enough to think either of the creation of an atom or of the annihilation of an atom.

Matter and the universe are the same yesterday, to-day, and forever. There is just as much matter in the universe to-day as there ever was, and as there ever will be; there is just as much force and just as much energy as there ever was or ever will be; but it is continually taking different shapes and forms; one day it is a man, another day it is animal, another day it it earth, another day it is metal, another day it is gas, it gains nothing and it loses nothing. Our fathers denounced materialism and accounted for all phenomena how? By the caprice of gods and devils. For thousands of years it was believed, that ghosts, good ghosts, bad ghosts, benevolent and malevolent, in some mysterious way produced all phenomena; that disease and health, happiness and misery, fortune and misfortune, peace and war, life and death, success and failure, were but arrows shot by those ghosts or shadowy phantoms, to reward or punish mankind; that they were displeased or pleased by our actions, that they blessed the earth with harvest or cursed it with famine; that they fed or starved the children of men; that they crowned or uncrowned kings; that they controlled war; that they gave prosperous voyages, allowing the brave mariner to meet his wife and children inside the harbor bar, or strewed the sad shore with wrecks of ships and the bodies of men. Formerly these ghosts were believed to be almost innumerable. Earth, air, and water were filled with these phantoms, but in modern times they have greatly decreased in number, because the second proposition that I stated, the supernatural and natural, has generally been adopted, but the remaining ghosts are supposed to perform the same functions as of yore.

Let me say right here that the object of every religion ever made by man has been to get on the good side of supposed powers; has been to petition the gods to stop the earthquakes, to stop famine, to stop pestilence. It has always been something that man should do to prevent being punished by the powers of the air or to get from them some favors. It has always been believed that these ghosts could in some way be appeased; that they could be bettered by sacrifices, by prayer, by fasting, by the building of temples and cathedrals, by shedding the blood of men and beasts, by forms, by ceremonies, by kneelings, by prostrations and flagellations, by living alone in the wild desert, by the practice of celibacy, by inventing instruments of torture, by destroying men, women, and children, by covering the earth with dungeons, by burning unbelievers and by putting chains upon the thoughts and manacles upon the lips of men, by believing things without evidence, by believing things against evidence, by disbelieving and denying demonstrations, by despising facts, by hating reason, by discouraging investigation, by making an idiot of yourself—all these have been done to appease the winged monsters of the air.

In the history of our poor world no horror has been omitted, no infamy has been left undone by believers in ghosts, and all the shadows were born of cowardice and malignity; they were painted by the pencil of fear upon the canvas of ignorance by that artist called Superstition. From these ghosts our fathers received their information. These ghosts were the schoolmasters of our ancestors. They were the scientists, the philosophers, the geologists, the legislators, the astronomers, the physicians, the metaphysicians and historians of the past.

Let me give you my definition of metaphysics, that is to say, the science of the unknown, the science of guessing. Metaphysics is where two fools get together, and each one admits what neither can prove, and both say, "hence we infer." That is the science of metaphysics. For this these ghosts were supposed to have the only experience and real knowledge; they inspired men to write books, and the books were sacred. If facts were found to be inconsistent with these books, so much the worse for the facts, and especially for the discoverers of those facts. It was then and still is believed that these sacred books are the basis of the idea of immortality, and that to give up the idea that these books were inspired is to renounce the idea of immortal life. I deny it! Men existed before books; and all the books that were ever written were written, in my judgment, by men; and the idea of immortality was not born of a book, but was born of the man who wrote the book. The idea of immortality, like the great sea, has ebbed and flowed in the human heart, beating its countless waves of hope and joy against the shores of time, and was not born of any book, nor of any religion, nor of any creed; it was born of human affection, and it will continue to ebb and flow beneath the clouds and mists of doubt and darkness as long as love kisses the lips of death. It is the rainbow of hope shining upon the tears of grief. We love, therefore we wish to live, and the foundation of the idea of immortality is human affection and human love, and I have a thousand times more confidence in the affections of the human heart, in the deep and splendid feelings of the human soul than I have in any book that ever was or ever can be written by mortal man.

From the books written by those ghosts, we have at least ascertained that they knew nothing whatever of the world in which we live. Did they know anything about any other? Upon every point where contradiction is possible, the ghosts have been contradicted. By these ghosts, by these citizens of the air, by this aristocracy of the clouds, the affairs of government were administered; all authority to govern came from them. The emperors, kings and potentates, every one of them had the divine petroleum poured upon his head, the kerosene of authority.

The emperors, kings and potentates had communications from the phantoms. Man was not considered as the source of power; to rebel against the king was to rebel against the ghosts, and nothing less than the blood of the offenders could appease the invisible phantoms; and by the authority of the ghosts man was crushed and slayed and plundered. Many toiled wearily in the sun and storm that a few favorites of the ghosts might live in idleness, and many lived in huts and caves and dens that the few might dwell in palaces, and many clothed themselves with rags that a few might robe themselves in purple and gold, and many crept and cringed and crawled, that a few might tread upon their necks with feet of iron. From the ghosts men received not only authority but information. They told us the form of this earth; they informed us that eclipses were caused by the sins of man, especially the failure to pay tithes; that the universe was made in six days: that gazing at the sky with a telescope was dangerous; that trying to be wise beyond what they had written was born of a rebellious and irreverent spirit; they told us there was no virtue like belief, no crime like doubt, that investigation was simply impudence, and the punishment therefor violent torment; they not only told us all about this world but about two others, and if their statements about the other two are as true as they were about this, no one can estimate the value of their information.

For countless ages the world was governed by ghosts, and they spared no pains to change the eagle of the human intellect into a bat of darkness. To accomplish this infamous purpose; to drive the love of truth from the human heart; to prevent the advancement of mankind; to shut out from the world every ray of intellectual light; to pollute every mind with superstition, the power of kings, the cunning and cruelty of priests, and the wealth of nations were used.

In order to show you the information we got from the ghosts, and the condition of the world when the ghosts were the kings, let me call your attention to this: during these years of persecution, ignorance, superstition and slavery, nearly all the people, the kings, lawyers and doctors learned and unlearned, believed in that frightful production of ignorance of fear and faith called witchcraft. Witchcraft to-day is religion carried out. They believed that man was the sport and prey of devils; that the very air was thick with these enemies of man, and, with few exceptions, this hideous belief was universal. Under these conditions progress was almost impossible. Fear paralyzed the brain.

Progress is born of courage. Fear believes, courage doubts. Fear falls upon the earth and prays; courage stands erect and thinks. Fear retreats; courage advances. Fear is barbarianism; courage is civilization. Fear believes in witchcraft; courage in science and in eternal law. The facts upon which this terrible belief rested were proved over and over again in nearly every court in Europe. Thousands confessed themselves guilty, admitted they had sold themselves to the devil. They gave the particulars of the sale; told what they said and what the devil replied. They confessed themselves guilty when they knew that confession was death; knew that their property would be confiscated and their children left to beg their bread. This is one of the miracles of history, one of the strangest contradictions of the human mind. Without doubt they really believed themselves guilty.

In the first place, they believed in witchcraft as a fact, and when charged with it, they became insane. They had read the account of the witch of Endor calling up the dead body of Samuel. He is an old man; he has his mantle on. They had read the account of Saul stooping to the earth and conversing with the spirit that had been called from the region of space by a witch. They had read a command from the Almighty, "Thou shalt not suffer a witch to live," and they believed the world was full of witches, or else the Almighty would not have made a law against them. They believed in witchcraft, and when they were charged with it they probably became insane, and in their insanity they confessed their guilt. They found themselves abhorred and deserted, charged with a crime they could not disprove. Like a man in quicksand, every effort only sunk them deeper. Caught in this frightful web, at the mercy of the devotees of superstition, hope fled and nothing remained but the insanity of confession.

The whole world appeared insane. In the time of James I., a man was burned for causiug a storm at sea, with the intention of drowning one of the royal family; but I do not think it would have been much of a crime if he had been really guilty. How could he disprove it? How could he show that he did not cause a storm at sea? All storms were at that time supposed to be inspired by the devil; the people believed that all storms were caused by him, or by persons whom he assisted. I implore you to remember that the men who believed these things wrote our creeds and our confessions of faith, and it is by their dust that I am asked to kneel and pay implicit homage, instead of investigating; and I implore you to recollect that they wrote our creeds.

A woman was tried and convicted before Sir Matthew Hale, one of the greatest judges and lawyers of England, for having caused children to vomit crooked pins. Think of that! The learned judge charged the intelligent jury that there was no doubt as to the existence of witches, that it was established by all history and expressly taught by the Bible. The woman was hung and her body was burned. Sir Thomas Moore declared that to give up witchcraft was to throw away the sacred scriptures. John Wesley, too, was a firm believer in ghosts, and insisted upon their existence after all laws upon the subject had been repealed in England, and I beg of you to remember that John Wesley was the founder of the Methodist church. In New England a woman was charged with being a witch and with having changed herself into a fox; while in that condition she was attacked and bitten by some dogs, and a committee of three men was ordered by the Court to examine this woman. They removed her clothing, and searched for what they were pleased to call witch-spots—that is to say, spots into which a needle could be thrust without giving pain; they reported to the Court that such spots were found. She denied that she had ever changed herself into a fox. On the report of the committee she was found guilty, and she was actually executed by our Puritan fathers, the gentlemen who braved the dangers of the deep for the sake of worshiping God and persecuting their fellow men. I belong to their blood, and the best thing I can say about them, and that which rises like a white shaft to their eternal honor, is that they were in favor of education.

A man was attacked by a wolf; he defended himself and succeeded in cutting off one of the animal's paws, and the wolf ran away; he put it in his pocket and carried it home; there he found his wife with one of her hands gone, and he took that paw from his pocket and put it upon her arm, and it assumed the appearance of a human hand, and he charged his wife with being a witch. She was tried, she confessed her guilt, and she was hung and her body was burned! My! is it possible? Did not somebody say something against such an infamous proceeding? Yes, they did! There was a Young Men's Association who invited a man to come and give his ideas upon the subject.

He denounced it. He said it was outrageous, that it was nonsensical, that it was infamous; and the moment he went away the young men met and passed a resolution that he had deceived them; and the clergy at that time protested and said, of course, let the man think, if you call that kind of stuff thinking.

But there was one man belonging to this association who had the courage to stand by the truth.

Whether he believed in what the speaker said or not, he had that manliness; and I take this opportunity to thank from the bottom of my heart a man. I have no idea he agrees with me except in this: Whatever you do, do it like a man and be honest about it.

People were burned for causing frost in summer; for destroying crops with hail; for causing storms; for making cows go dry; for souring beer; for putting the devil in emptyings so that they would not rise. The life of no one was secure. To be charged was to be convicted. Every man was at the mercy of every other. This infamous belief was so firmly seated in the minds of the people, that, to express a doubt as to its existence was to be suspected yourself. They believed that animals were often taken possession of by devils, and they believed that the killing of the animal would destroy the devil. They absolutely tried, convicted and executed dumb beasts.

At Vail, in 1470, a rooster was tried upon the charge of having laid an egg, and the clergy said they had no doubt of it. Rooster eggs were used only in making witch ointment. This everybody knew. The rooster was convicted, and, with all due solemnity, he was burned in the public square.

So a hog and six pigs were tried for having killed and partially eaten a child. The hog was convicted, but the pigs, on account of their extreme youth, were acquitted.

As late as 1740, a cow, charged with being possessed of a devil, was tried and was convicted. They used to exorcise rats, snakes and vermin; they used to go through the alleys and streets and fields and warn them to leave within a certain number of days, and if they did not leave, they threatened them with certain pains and penalties which they proceeded to recount.

But let us be careful how we laugh about those things; let us not pride ourselves too much on the progress of our age. We must not forget that some of our people are yet in the same intelligent business. Only a little while ago the Governor of Minnesota appointed a day of fasting and prayer to see if the Lord could not be induced to kill the grasshoppers—or send them into some other State.

About the close of the fifteenth century was the excitement in regard to witchcraft, and Pope Innocent the Eighth issued a bull directing the inquisitors to be vigilant in searching out and punishing all guilty of this crime. Forms for the crime were regularly issued. For two hundred and fifty years the church was busy in punishing the impossible crime of witchcraft by burning, hanging, and torturing men, women, and little children.

Protestants were as active as Catholics; and in Geneva five hundred witches were burned at the stake in three months, and one thousand were executed in one year in the diocese of Couro; at least one hundred thousand victims suffered in Germany, the last execution being in Galesburgh, and taking place in 1794, and the last in Swizerland, 1780. In England statutes were passed from Henry VI. to James I., defending the crime and punishment, and the last act passed in the British Parliament was when Lord Bacon was a member of the house.

In 1716 Mrs. Hicks and daughter, nine years of age, were hung for selling their souls to the devil, and raising a storm at sea by pulling off their stockings and making a lather of soap. In England it has been estimated that at least 30,000 were hung or burned. The last victim executed in Scotland was in 1722. She was an innocent old woman who had so little idea of her condition that she rejoiced at the sight of the fire destined to consume her to ashes. She had a daughter lame in her hands, a circumstance accounted for from the fact that the witch had been used to transfer her daughter into a pony and get her shod by the devil. Intelligent ancestors!

In 1692 nineteen persons were executed in Salem, Massachusetts, for the crime of witchcraft. It was thought in those days that men and women made contracts with the devil, and that those contracts were confirmed at a meeting of witches and ghosts, over which the devil presided; these contracts in some cases were for a few years, others for life. General assemblages of witches were held once a year. To these they rode from great distances on brooms and dogs, and there they did homage to the prince of hell and offered him sacrifices.

In 1836 the populace of Holland plunged into the sea a woman reputed to be a sorceress, and as the miserable woman persisted in rising to the surface, she was pronounced guilty, and was beaten to death. It was believed that the devil could transform people into any shape he pleased, and whoever denounced this idea was denounced as an Infidel; that the believers in witchcraft appealed to the devil; that with the devil were associated innumerable spirits, who ranged over the world endeavoring to torment mankind; that these spirits possessed a power and wisdom transcending the limits of human faculties. They believed the devil could carry persons hundreds of miles in a few seconds; they believed this because they knew that Christ had been carried by the devil, in the same manner, into a high mountain, and placed upon a pinnacle. According to their account, the prince of the air had absolutely taken the God of this infinite Universe, the Creator of all its shining, wheeling stars—that he had been absolutely taken by the devil to a pinnacle of the temple, and there had been tempted by the devil to cast himself to the earth!

Take from the Church itself the threat and fear of hell and it becomes an extinct volcano. With the doctrine of hell taken from the Church, that is the end of the fall of man, that is the end of the scheme of atonement. Take from them the idea of an eternal place of torment, and the Church is thrown back simply upon facts.

And Dean Stanley, the leading ecclesiastic of Great Britain, only the other day in Westminster Abbey, said science will be the only theology of the future. Morality is the only religion of the years to come. Notwithstanding all the infamous things laid to the charge of the Church, we are told that the civilization of to-day is the child of what we are pleased to call superstition. Let me call your attention to what they received from their fears of these ghosts. Let me give you an outline of the sciences as taught by those philosophers. There is one thing that a man is interested in, if he is in anything, and that is in the science of medicine. A doctor is, so to speak, in partnership with Nature. He is a preserver if he is worthy of the name. And now I want to show what they have gotten from these ghosts upon the science of medicine.

According to them, all of the diseases were produced as a punishment by the good ghosts, or out of pure malignity by the bad ones. There were, properly speaking, no diseases; the sick were simply possessed by ghosts. The science of medicine consisted in knowing how to persuade these ghosts to vacate the premises; and for thousands of years all diseases were treated with incantations, hideous noises, with the beating of drums and gongs; everything was done to make the position of a ghost as unpleasant as possible; and they generally succeeded in making things so disagreeable that if the ghost did not leave, the patient did. These ghosts were supposed to be different in rank, power, and dignity. Now, then, a man pretended to have won the favor of some powerful ghost who gave him power over the little ones. Such a man became a very great physician. It was found that a certain kind of smoke was exceedingly offensive to the nostrils of your ordinary ghost. With this smoke the sick room would be filled until the ghost vanished or the patient died. It was also believed that certain words, when properly pronounced, were the most effective weapons; for it was for a long time supposed that Latin words were the best, I suppose because Latin was a dead language. For thousands of years medicine consisted in driving the devils out of men. In some instances bargains and promises were made with the ghosts. One case is given where a multitude of devils traded a man off for a herd of swine. In this transaction the devils were the losers, the swine having immediately drowned themselves in the sea. This idea of disease appears to have been almost universal and is not yet extinct. The contortions of the epileptic, the strange twitching of those afflicted with cholera were all seized as proof that the bodies of men were filled with vile and malignant spirits. Whoever endeavored to account for these things by natural causes; whoever endeavored to cure disease by natural means was denounced as an Infidel. To explain anything was a crime. It was to the interest of the sacerdotal class that all things should be accounted for by the will and power of God and the devil. The moment it is admitted that all phenomena are within the domain of the natural, and that all the prayers in the world cannot change one solitary fact, the necessity for the priest disappears. Religion breathes the idea of miracles. Take from the minds of men the idea of the supernatural, and superstition ceases to exist; for this reason the Church has always despised the man who explains the wonderful. The moment that it began to be apparent that prayer could do nothing for the body, the priest shifted his ground and began praying for the soul.

After the devil was substantially abandoned in the practice of medicine, and when it was admitted that God had nothing to do with ordinary coughs and colds, it was still believed that all the diseases were sent by Him as punishment for the people; it was thought to be a kind of blasphemy to even stay the ravages of pestilence. Formerly, when a pestilence fell upon a people, the arguments of the priest were boundless. He told the people that they had refused to pay their tithes, that they had doubted some of the doctrines of the church, that in their hearts they had had contempt for some of the priests of the Lord, and God was now taking his revenge, and the people, for the most part, believed this tissue of falsehood and hastened to fall upon their knees and to pour out their wealth upon the altars of hypocrisy.

The Church never wanted disease to be absolutely under the control of man. Timothy Dwight, president of Yale College, preached a sermon against vaccination. His idea was that if God had decreed that through all eternity certain men should die of small pox, it was a frightful sin to endeavor to prevent it; that plagues and pestilence were instruments in the hands of God with which to gain the love and worship of mankind; to find the cure for the disease was to take the punishment from the church. No one tries to cure the ague with prayer, because quinine has been found to be altogether more reliable. Just as soon as a specific is found for a disease, that disease is left out of the list of prayer. The number of diseases with which God from time to time afflicts mankind is continually decreasing because the number of diseases that man can cure is continually increasing. In a few years all diseases will be under the control of man. The science of medicine has but one enemy—superstition. Man was afraid to save his body for fear he would lose his soul. Is it any wonder that the people in those days believed in and taught the infamous doctrine of eternal punishment, that makes God a heartless monster and man a slimy hypocrite and slave?

The ghosts were also historians, and wrote the grossest absurdities. They wrote as though they had been eye witnesses of every occurrence. They told all the past, they predicted all the future, with an impudence that amounted to sublimity. They said that the Tartars originally came from hell; and that they were called Tartars because that was one of the names of hell. These gentlemen accounted for the red on the breasts of robins from the fact that those birds used to carry water to the unbaptized infants in hell. Other eminent historians say that Nero was in the habit of vomiting frogs. When I read that, I said some of the croakers of the present day would be better for such a vomit. Others say that the walls of a city fell down in answer to prayer. They tell us that King Arthur was not born like other mortals; that he had great luck in killing giants; that one of the giants that he killed wore clothes woven from the beards of kings that he had slain; and, to cap the climax, the authors of this history were rewarded for having written the only reliable history of their country. These are the men from whom we get our creeds and our confessions of faith.

In all the histories of those days there is hardly a truth. Facts were not considered of any importance. They wrote, and the people believed that the tracks of Pharaoh's chariots were still visible upon the sands of the Red Sea, and that they had been miraculously preserved as perpetual witnesses of the miracles that had been performed, and they said to any man who denied it, "go there and you will find the tracks still upon the sand." They accounted for everything as the work of good and evil spirits; with cause and effect they had nothing to do. Facts were in no way related to each other; God governed by infinite caprice, filled the world with miracles and disconnected events, and from his quiver came the arrows of pestilence and death. The moment the idea is abandoned that everything in this universe is natural, that all phenomena are the necessary links in the endless chain of being, the conception of history becomes impossible that the ghost of the present is not the child of the past—the present is not the mother of the future. In the domain of superstition all is accident and caprice; and do not, I pray you, forget that the writers of our creeds and confession of faith believed this to be a world of chance. Nothing happens by accident; nothing happens by chance. In the wide universe everything is necessarily produced, every effect has behind it a cause, every effect is in its turn a cause, and there is in the wide domain of the infinite not room enough for a miracle.

When I say this, I mean this is my idea. I may be wrong, but that is my idea. It was believed by our intelligent ancestors that all law derived its greatness and force from the fact that it had been communicated to man by ghosts. Of course it is not pretended that the ghosts told everybody the law; but they told it to a few, and the few told it to the people. and the people as a rule, paid them exceedingly well for their trouble. It was a long time before the people commenced making laws for themselves, and, strange as it may appear, most of their laws are vastly superior to the ghost article. Through the web and woof of human legistation gradually began to run and shine and glitter the golden thread of justice.

During these years of darkness it was believed that, rather than see an act of injustice done, rather than see the guilty triumph, some ghost would interfere; and I do wish, from the bottom of my heart, that that was the truth. There never was forced upon my heart a more frightful conviction than this—the right does not always prevail; there never was forced upon my mind a more cruel conclusion than this—innocence is not always a sufficient shield. I wish it was. I wish, too, that man suffered nothing but that which he brings upon himself; and yet, I find that in nine districts in India, between the first day of last January and the first day of June, 2,800,000 people starved to death; and that little children with their lips upon the breasts of famine died, wasted away—and why? Simply because a little while before the wind did not veer the one-hundredth part of a degree and send clouds over the country freighted with rain, freighted with love and joy. But if that wind had just turned that way, there would have been happy men, women, and children, all clad in the garments of health. I wish that I could know in my heart that there was some power that would see to it that men and women got exact justice somewhere. I do wish that I knew the right would prevail; that innocence was an infinite shield.

During these years it was believed that, rather than see an act of injustice done, some ghost would interfere. This belief, as a rule, gave great satisfaction to the victorious party, and, as the other man was dead, no complaint was ever made by him. This doctrine was a sanctification of brute force and chance. Prisoners were made to grasp hot irons, and if it burned them their guilt was established Others were tied hands and feet and cast into the sea; and if they sank, the verdict of guilty was unanimous. If they did not sink, then they said water is such a pure element that it refuses to take a guilty person, and consequently he is a witch or wizard. Why, in England persons accused of crime could appeal to the cross, and to a piece of sacramental bread. If he could swallow this without choking, he was acquitted. And this practice was continued until the time of King Edward, who was choked to death, after which it was discontinued.

Ghosts and their followers always took delight in torturing with unusual pain an infraction of their laws, and generally death was the penalty. Sometimes, when a man committed only murder, he was permitted to flee to a place of refuge—murder being only a crime against man—but for saying certain words, or denying certain doctrines, or for worshiping wrong ghosts, or for failing to pray to the right one, or for laughing at a priest, or for saying that wine was not blood, or bread was not flesh, or for failing to regard rams' horns as artillery, or for saying that a raven as a rule was a poor landlord, death, produced by all the ways that ingenuity or hatred could devise, was the penalty suffered by these men. I tell you to-night, law is a growth; law is a science. Right and wrong exist in the nature of things. Things are not right because they are commended; they are not wrong because they are prohibited. They are prohibited because we believe them wrong; they are commended because we believe them right. There are real crimes enough without creating artificial ones. All progress in legislation for a thousand years has consisted in repealing the laws of the ghosts. The idea of right and wrong is born of man's capacity to enjoy and suffer. If man could not suffer, if he could not inflict injury upon his brother, if he could neither feel nor inflict punishment, the idea of law, the idea of right, the idea of wrong, never could have entered into his brain. If man could not suffer; if he could not inflict suffering, the word conscience never would have passed the lips of men. There is one good—happiness. There is one sin—selfishness. All laws should be for the preservation of the one and the destruction of the other. Under the regime of the ghosts the laws were not understood to exist in the nature of things; they were supposed to be irresponsible commands, and these commands were not supposed to rest upon reason; they were simply the product of arbitrary will. The penalties for the violations of those laws were as cruel as the penalties were absurd. There were over two hundred offenses for which man was punished with death. Think of it! And these laws are said to have come from a most merciful God. And yet we have become civilized to that degree that in this country—that in your state of New York—there is only one crime punishable with death. Think of it! Did I not tell you that we were now civilizing our gods? The tendency of those horrible laws, the tendency of those frightful penalties was to blot the idea of justice from the human soul. Now, I want to show you how perfectly every department of human knowledge, or rather, of ignorance, was saturated with superstition. I will for a moment refer to the science of language.

It was thought by our fathers that Hebrew was the original language, that it was taught to Adam and Eve in the garden of Eden by the Almighty himself. Every fact inconsistent with that idea was thrown away. According to the ghosts, the trouble at the Tower of Babel accounted for the fact that all the people did not speak the Hebrew language. The Babel question settled all questions in the science of language. After a time so many facts were found to be so inconsistent with the Hebrew idea that it began to fall into disrepute and other languages began to be used. Andrew Kent published a work on the science of language, in which he stated that God spoke to Adam, and Adam answered in Hebrew, and that the serpent probably spoke to Eve in French. In 1580 another celebrated work was published at Antwerp, in which the whole matter was put at rest, showing, beyond a doubt, that the language spoken in Paradise was neither more nor less than plain Holland Dutch. Another celebrated writer, a contemporary of Sir Isaac Newton, discouraged the idea that all languages could be traced to one; he maintained that language was of natural growth; that we speak as naturally as we grow; we talk as naturally as sings a bird, or as blooms and blossoms a flower. Experience teaches us that this may be so; words are continually dying and continually being born; words are the garments of thought. Through the lapse of time some were as rude as the skins of wild beasts, and others pleasing and cultured like silk and gold. Words have been born of hatred and revenge, of love and self-sacrifice and fear, of agony and joy; the stars have fashioned them, and in them mingled the darkness and the dawn.

Every word that we get from the past is, so to speak, a mummy robed in the linen of the grave. They are the crystallizations of human history of all that man has enjoyed, of all that man has suffered, his victories and defeats, all that he has lost and won. Words are the shadows of all that has been; they are the mirrors of all that is. The ghosts also enlightened our fathers in astronomy and geology. According to them the world was made out of nothing, and a little more nothing having been taken than was used in the construction of the world, the stars were made out of the scraps that were left over. Cosmos, in the sixth century, taught that the stars were impelled by angels, who carried them upon their shoulders, rolled them in front of them, or drew them after. He also taught that each angel who pushed a star took great pains to observe what the other angels were doing, so that the relative distances between the stars might always remain the same.

He stated that this world was a vast body of water with a strip of land on the outside; that Adam and Eve lived on the outer strip; that their descendants were drowned on the outer strip, all except Noah and his family; he accounted for night and day by saying that on the outer strip of land was a mountain, around which the sun revolved, producing darkness when it was hidden from sight, and daylight when it emerged; he also declared the earth to be flat. This he proved by many passages from the Bible; among other reasons for believing the earth to be flat, he referred to a passage in the New Testament which says, that "Christ shall come again in glory and power and every eye shall see him," and said, now, if the world is round how are the people on the other side going to see Christ when he comes? That settled the question: and the church not only indorsed this book but declared that whoever believed either less or more was a heretic and would be dealt with as such.

In those blessed days ignorance was a king and science was an outcast. The Church knew that the moment the earth ceased to be the centre of the Universe, and became a mere speck in the starry sphere of existence, every religion would become a thing of the past. In the name and by the authority of the ghosts, men enslaved their fellow-men; they trampled upon the rights of women and children. In the name and by the authority of ghosts, they bought and sold each other. They filled heaven with tyrants and the earth with slaves. They filled the present with intolerance and the future with horror. In the name and by the authority of the ghosts, they declared superstition to be the real religion. In the name and by the authority of the ghosts, they imprisoned the human mind; they polluted the conscience; they subverted justice, and they sainted hypocrisy. I have endeavored in some degree to show you what has been and always will be when men are governed by superstition.

When they destroy the sublime standard of reason; when they take the words of others and do not investigate them themselves, even the great men of those days appear nearly as weak as the most ignorant. One of the greatest men of the world, an astronomer second to none, discoverer of the three great laws that explain the solar system, was an astrologer and believed that he could predict the career of a man by finding what star was in the ascendant at his birth. He believed in what is called the music of the spheres, and he ascribed the qualities of the music—alto, bass, tenor, and treble—to certain of the planets. Another man kept an idiot, whose words he put down and then put them together in such a manner as to make promises, and waited patiently to see that they were fulfilled. Luther believed he had actually seen the devil and discussed points of theology with him. The human mind was enchained. Every idea, almost, was a mystery. Facts were looked upon as worthless; only the wonderful was worth preserving. Devils were thought to be the most industrious beings in the Universe, and with these imps every occurrence of an unusual character was connected. There was no order, certainty; everything depended upon ghosts and phantoms, and man, for the most part, considered himself at the mercy of malevolent spirits. He protected himself as best he could with holy water, and with tapers, and wafers, and cathedrals. He made noises to frighten the ghosts and music to charm them; he fasted when he was hungry and he feasted when he was not; he believed everything unreasonable; he humbled himself; he crawled in the dust; he shut the doors and windows and excluded every ray of light from his soul; and he delayed not a day to repair the walls of his own prison; and from the garden of the human heart they plucked and trampled into the bloody dust the flowers and blossoms; they denounced man as totally depraved; they made reason blasphemy; they made pity a crime; nothing so delighted them as painting the torments and tortures of the damned. Over the worm that never dies they grew poetic. According to them, the cries ascending from hell were the perfume of heaven.

They divided the world into saints and sinners, and all the saints were going to heaven, and all the sinners yonder. Now, then, you stand in the presence of a great disaster. A house is on fire, and there is seen at a window the frightened face of a woman with a babe in her arms, appealing for help; humanity cries out, "Will some one go to the rescue?" They do not ask for a Methodist, a Baptist, or a Catholic; they ask for a man. All at once there starts from the crowd one that nobody ever suspected with being a saint; one, may be, with a bad reputation; but he goes up the ladder and is lost in the smoke and flame; and a moment after he emerges, and the great circles of flames hiss around him; in a moment more he has reached the window; in another moment, with the woman and child in his arms, he reaches the ground and gives his fainting burden to the bystanders, and the people all stand hushed for a moment, as they always do at such times, and the air is rent with acclamations. Tell me that that man is going to be sent to hell, to eternal flames, who is willing to risk his life rather than a woman and child should suffer from the fire one moment! I despise that doctrine of hell! Any man that believes in eternal hell is afflicted with at least two diseases—petrifaction of the heart and putrefication of the brain.

I have seen upon the field of battle a boy sixteen years of age struck by a fragment of a shell; I have seen him fall; I have seen him die with a curse upon his lips and the face of his mother in his heart. Tell me that his soul will be hurled from the field of battle where he lost his life that his country might live—where he lost his life for the liberties of man—tell me that he will be hurled from that field to eternal torment! I pronounce it an infamous lie. And yet according to these gentlemen that is to be the fate of nearly all the splendid fellows in this world.

I had in my possession a little while ago a piece of fresco that used to adorn a church at Stratford-upon-Avon, the place where Shakspere lived, and there was a picture representing the morning of the resurrection and people were getting out of their graves and devils were grabbing them by their heels. And there was an immense monster, with jaws open so wide that a man could walk down its throat, and the flames were issuing therefrom, and there were devils driving people in droves down the throat of this monster, and there was an immense kettle in which they had put these men, and the fire was being stirred under it, and hot pitch was being poured on top, and little devils were setting it on fire; and then on the walls there were hundreds hung up by their tongues to hooks and nails; and then the saved—there were some five or six saved—upon the horizon and they had a most self-satisfied grin of "I told you so."

At the risk of being tiresome, I have said what I have to show the direction of the human mind in slavery, the effects of widespread ignorance, and the result of fear. I want to convince you that every form of slavery, physical and mental, is a viper that will finally fill with poison the breast of any man alive. I want to show you that there should be republicanism in the domain of thought as well as in civil government. The first step toward progress is for man to cease to be the slave of the creatures of his own creation. Men found at last that the event is more valuable than the prophecy, especially if it never comes to pass. They found that diseases were not produced by spirits; that they could not be cured by frightening them away. They found that death was as natural as life. They began to study the anatomy and chemistry of the human body, and they found that all was natural, and the conjurer and the sorcerer were dismissed, and the physician and surgeon were employed. They learned that being born under a star or planet had nothing whatever to do with their luck; the astrologer was discharged and the astronomer took his place. They found that the world had swept through the constellation for millions of ages. They found that diseases were produced as easily as grass and were not sent as punishment on men for failing to believe a creed. They found that man, through intelligence, could take advantage of the affairs of nature; that he could make the waves, the winds, the flames, and the lightnings slaves at his bidding to administer to his wants; they found the ghosts knew nothing of benefit to man; that they were entirely ignorant of history; that they were bad doctors and worse surgeons; that they knew nothing of law and less of justice; that they were poor politicians; that they were tyrants, and that they were without brains and utterly destitute of hearts.

The condition of this world during the dark ages shows exactly the result of enslaving the souls of men. In those days there was no liberty. Liberty was despised, and the laborer was considered but little above the beast. Ignorance, like a vast cowl, covered the brain of the world; superstition ran riot, and credulity sat upon the throne of the soul. Murder and hypocrisy were the companions of man, and industry was a slave. Every country maintained that it was no robbery to take the property of Mohammedans by force, and no murder to kill the owner. Lord Bacon was the first man who maintained that a Christian country was bound to keep its plighted faith with a Mohammedan nation. Every man who could read or write was suspected of being a heretic in those days. Only one person in 40,000 could read or write. All thought was discouraged. The whole earth was ruled by the mitre and sceptre, by the altar and throne, by fear and force, by ignorance and faith, by ghouls and ghosts. In the 15th century the following law was in force in England: "Whosoever reads the Scriptures in the mother tongue shall forfeit land, cattle, life, and goods, from themselves and their heirs forever, and should be condemned for heretics to God, enemies to the crown, and traitors to the land."

During the period this law was in force, thirty-nine were hanged and their bodies burned. In the 16th century men were burned because they failed to kneel to a procession of monks. Even the Reformers, so-called, had no idea of liberty only when in the minority; the moment they were clothed with power, they began to exterminate with fire and sword. Castillo—and I want you to recollect it—was the first minister in the world that declared in favor of universal toleration. Castillo was pursued by John Calvin like a wild beast. Calvin said by such a monstrous doctrine he crucified Christ afresh, and they pursued that man until he died. Recollect it! They can't do that now-a-days! You don't know how splendid I feel about the liberty I have. The horizon is filled with glory and the air is filled with wings. If there is anybody in this world who think they had better not tell what they really think because it will take bread from their little children; because it will take clothing from their families—don't do it! don't make martyes of yourselves! I don't believe in martyrdom. Go right along with them; go to church and say amen as near the right place as you can. I will do your talking for you. They can't take the bread away from me. I will talk. Bodemus, a lawyer of France, wrote a few words in favor of freedom of conscience. Montaigne was the first to raise his voice against torture in France; but what was the voice of one man against the terrible cry of ignorant, infatuated, malevolent millions? I intend to do what little I can, and I am going to do it kindly. I am going to appeal to reason and to charity, to justice, to science, and to the future. For my part, I glory in the fact that in the New World, in the United States, liberty of conscience was first granted to man, and that the Constitution of the United States was the first great decree entered in the high court of human equity forever divorcing Church and State. It is the grandest step ever taken by the human race; and the Declaration of Independence was the first document that retired Ghosts from politics. It is the first document that said authority does not come from the clouds; authority does not come from the phantoms of the air; authority is not from that direction; it comes from the people themselves. The Declaration of Independence enthroned man and dethroned the phantoms. You will ask what has caused this change in three hundred years. I answer, the inventions and discoveries of the few; the brave thoughts and heroic utterances of the few; the acquisition of a few facts; getting acquainted with our mother, Nature. Besides this, you must remember that every wrong in some way tends to abolish itself. It is hard to make a lie last always. A lie will not fit the truth; it will only fit another lie told on purpose to fit it. Nothing but truth lives.

The nobles and the kings quarrelled; the priests began to dispute, and the millions began to get their rights. In 1441 printing was discovered. At that time the past was a vast cemetery without an epitaph. The ideas of men had mostly perished in the brains that had produced them. Printing gives an opening for thought; it preserves ideas; it made it possible for a man to bequeath to the world the wealth of his thoughts. About the same time, or a little before, the Moors had gone into Euope, and i can truthfully be said that science was thrust into the brain of Europe upon the point of a Moorish lance. They gave us paper, and what is printing without paper?—a bird without wings. I tell you, paper has been a splendid thing.

The discovery of America, whose shores were trod by the restless feet of adventure and the people of every nation—out of this strange mingling of facts and fancies came the great republic. Every fact has pushed a superstition from the brain and a ghost from the cloud. Every mechanical art is an educator; every loom, every reaper, every mower, every steamboat, every locomotive, every engine, every press, every telegraph is a missionary of science and an apostle of progress; every mill, every furnace with its wheels and levers, in which something is made for the convenience, for the use and the comfort and the well-being of man, is my kind of church; and every school-house is a temple. Education is the most radical thing in this world. To teach the alphabet is to inaugurate a revolution; to build a school-house is to construct a fort; every library is an arsenal filled with the weapons and ammunition of progress, every fact is a monitor with sides of iron and a turret of steel. I thank the inventors and discoverers. I thank Columbus and Magellan. I thank Locke and Hume, Bacon and Shakspere. I thank Fulton and Watts, Franklin and Morse, who made lightning the messenger of man. I thank Luther for protesting against the abuses of the church, but denounce him because he was an enemy of liberty. I thank Calvin for writing a book in favor of religious freedom, but I abhor him because he burned Servetus. I thank the Puritans for saying that resistance to tyrants is obedience to God, and yet I am compelled to admit that they were tyrants themselves. I thank Thomas Paine because he was a believer in liberty. I thank Voltaire, that great man who for half a century was the intellectual monarch of Europe and who from his throne at the foot of the Alps pointed the finger of scorn at every hypocrite in Christendom. I thank the inventors, I thank the discoverers, the thinkers, and the scientists, and I thank the honest millions who have toiled. I thank the brave men with brave thoughts. They are the Atlases upon whose broad and mighty shoulders rests the grand fabric of civilization; they are the men who have broken, and are still breaking the chains of superstition.

We are beginning to learn that to swap off a superstition for a fact, to ascertain the real is to progress. All that gives us better bodies and minds and clothes and food and pictures, grander music, better heads, better hearts, and that makes us better husbands and wives and better citizens, all these things combined produce what we call the progress of the human race. Man advances only as he overcomes the obstacles of nature; it is done by labor and thought. Labor is the foundation. Without great labor it is impossible to progress. Without labor on the part of those who conduct all the great industries of life, of those who battle with the obstacles of the sea, on the part of the inventors, the discoverers, and the brave, heroic thinkers, no surplus is produced; and from the surplus produced by labor spring the schools and universities, the painters, the sculptors, the poets, the hopes, the loves and the aspirations of the world.

The surplus has given us the books. It has given us all there is of beauty and eloquence. I am aware there is a vast difference of opinion as to what progress is, and that many denounce my ideas. I know there are many worshipers of the past. They see no beauty in anything from which they do not blow the dust of ages with the breath of praise. They see nothing like the ancients; no orators, poets, or statesmen like those which have been dust for thousands of years.

The laborer must be a free man. A free man working for his wife and child gets his head and hands in partnership, and to do the greatest amount of work in the shortest space of time is the problem of freedom. Free labor will give us wealth and free thought will give us truth. Slowly but surely man is freeing his imagination of these phantoms; slowly but surely he is rising above the superstitions of the past. He is beginning to rely upon himself, and to see that hoping, toiling, suffering men and women are of more importance than all the ghosts that ever wandered through the fields of space. The believers in ghosts claim that they are the only wise people on earth. I ask you to-night, have the churches the confidence of mankind? Does the merchant give credit to a man because he belongs to a church? Does the banker loan money to a man because he is a Methodist or a Baptist? Will a certificate of good standing in any church be taken by any banker as collateral security for one dollar? Do men usually inquire for a church member when they desire a favor, so that they may be certain not to be refused? Does the belief in ghosts and unreasonable things necessarily make a man honest? Will a man pay his debts any quicker because he thinks the world will forgive him if he does not? Is it worth while to send missionaries to other lands while every penitentiary in ours is full of criminals? Is it a source of joy to think that perdition is the destination of nearly all the children of men? Is it worth while to quarrel about original sin when we have got so much copy on hand? Does all this produce any good to man? Does it make us kinder or more charitable? We cannot wear sermons; we cannot eat creeds. I wish we could.

In a sermon on a certain evening a few weeks since, the Rev. Dr. Magee of this city (Albany, N. Y.) stated that Col. Ingersoll, referring to Jesus Christ, called him a "dirty little Jew." I denounce that as a dirty little lie.

I have as much reverence for any man who ever did what he believed was right and died in order to benefit mankind as any man in this world. Do they treat an opponent with fairness? Are they investigating? Do they pull forward, or do they hold back? Is science indebted to the church for a single fact? Let us know what it is. What church has been the asylum for a persecuted truth? What reform has been inaugurated by the church? Did the church abolish slavery? No. Who commenced it? Such men as Garrison, and Pillsbury, and Wendell Phillips. They were the Titans that attacked the monster, and not a solitary one of them even belonged to a church. Has the church raised its voice against war? No. Are men restrained by superstition? Are men restrained by what you call religion? I used to think they were not; now I admit they are. No man has ever been restrained from the commission of a real crime, but from an artificial one he has. There was a man committed murder. They got the evidence, but he confessed that he did it. "What did you do it for?" "Money." "Did you get any money?" "Yes." "How much?" Fifteen cents." "What kind of a man was he?" "A laboring man I killed." "What did you do with the money?" "I bought liquor with it." "Did he have any thing else?" "I think he had some meat and bread." "What did you do with that?" "I ate the bread and threw away the meat; it was Friday." So you see it will restrain in some things.

Just to the extent that man has freed himself from the dominion of ghosts, he has advanced; to that extent he has freed himself from the tyrant's poison. Man has found that he must give liberty to others in order to have it himself. He has found that a master is a slave, that a tyrant is also a slave. He has found that governments should be administered by men for men; that the rights of all are to be protected; that woman is at least the equal of man; that men existed before books; that all creeds were made by men; that the few have a right to contradict what the pulpit asserts; that man is responsible to himself and to others. True religion must be free; without liberty the brain is a dungeon and the mind the convict. The slave may bow and cringe and crawl, but he cannot worship, he cannot adore. True religion is the perfume of the free and grateful air. True religion is the subordination of the passions to the intellect. It is not a creed, it is a life. The theory that is afraid of investigation is not deserving of a place in the human mind.

I do not pretend to tell what all the truth is. I do not pretend to have fathomed the abyss, nor to have floated on outstretched wings level with the heights of thought. I simply plead for freedom. I denounce the cruelties and horrors of slavery. I ask for light and air for the souls of men. I say, take off those chains—break those manacles—free those limbs—release that brain. I plead for the right to think—to reason—to investigate. I ask that the future may be enriched with the honest thoughts of men. I implore every human being to be a soldier in the army of progress.

I will not invade the rights of others. You have no right to erect your toll-gate upon the highways of thought. You have no right to leap from the hedges of superstition and strike down the pioneers of the human race. You have no right to sacrifice the liberties of man upon the altars of ghosts. Believe what you may; preach what you desire; have all the forms and ceremonies you please; exercise your liberty in your own way, and extend to all others the same right.

I will not attack your doctrines nor your creeds if they accord liberty to me. If they hold thought to be dangerous—if they aver that doubt is a crime—then I attack them one and all, because they enslave the minds of men.

I attack the monsters, the phantoms of imagination that have ruled the world. I attack slavery. I ask for room—room for the human mind.

Why should we sacrifice a real world that we have for one we know not of? Why should we enslave ourselves? Why should we forge fetters for our own hands? Why should we be the slaves of phantoms—phantoms that we created ourselves? The darkness of barbarism was the womb of these shadows. In the light of science they cannot cloud the sky forever. They have reddened the hands of man with innocent blood. They made the cradle a curse and the grave a place of torment.

They blinded the eyes and stopped the ears of the human race. They subverted all the ideas of justice by promising infinite rewards for finite virtues, and threatening infinite punishment for finite offenses.

They filled the future with heavens and with hells, with the shining peaks of selfish joy and the lurid abysses of flame. For ages they kept the world in ignorance and awe, in want and misery, in fear and chains.

I plead for light, for air, for opportunity. I plead for individual independence. I plead for the rights of labor and of thought. I plead for a chainless future. Let the ghosts go—justice remains. Let them disappear—men and women and children are left. Let the monster fade away—the world remains with its hills and seas and plains, with its seasons of smiles and frowns, its springs of leaf and bud, its summer of shade and flower, its autumn with the laden boughs, when

The withered banners of the corn are still,
And gathered fields are growing strangely wan;
While death, poetic death, with hands that color what they touch,
Weaves in the Autumn wood her tapestries of gold and brown.

The world remains with its winters and homes and firesides, where grow and bloom the virtues of our race. All these are left; and music, with its sad and thrilling voice, and all there is of art, and song, and hope, and love, and aspiration high. All these remain. Let the ghosts go—we will worship them no more.

Man is greater than these phantoms. Humanity is grander than all the creeds, than all the books. Humanity is the great sea, and these creeds and books and religions are but the waves of a day. Humanity is the sky, and these religions and dogmas and theories are but the mists and clouds changing continually, destined finally to melt away.

That which is founded upon slavery and fear and ignorance cannot endure. In the religion of the future there will be men and women and children, all the aspirations of the soul, and all the tender humanities of the heart.

Let the ghosts go. We will worship them no more. Let them cover their eyeless sockets with their fleshless hands and fade forever from the imaginations of men.

Ladies and gentlemen, I thank you a thousand times.

The Truth Seeker.

D. M. BENNETT, Editor.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

The largest and cheapest Radical Journal published in Europe or America, containing nearly seven hundred square inches more of Reading Matter than any other Journal of its class.

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, FEB. 2, 1878.

Fourteen Questions.

EDITOR TRUTH SEEKER, Dear Friend: I have seen statements in a new paper, called Payne's Age of Reason, published in the same building with your own, which, to say the least, seem very singular, coming from a Liberal paper. In your last issue you disposed of the question of immense wealth which the same paper accused you of making, but allow me to ask you a few direct questions, trusting you will give direct answers, for, as one of your admirers and patrons, I wish to know what is the truth.

1. Payne says no Liberal editor has been arrested or prosecuted in your city. Were you arrested?

2. Were you simply asked to go before the U. S. Commissioner "at your convenience" and give bail, with the assurance that there the matter would stop?

3. Were you ever warned or notified, previous to your arrest, that certain tracts should not be sent through the mails?

4. Has Comstock been trying for three months to persuade the Government not to prosecute you?

5. Have you, in what you have published, made any false representations in reference to your arrest?

6. Were your liberties in jeopardy or not?

7. What does Mr. Payne mean when, in speaking of you, he uses the very offensive terms "unprincipled outlaw, anti quack"?

8. Is Comstock a Liberal or a Spiritualist?

9. Did Dr. Foote ever flood the U. S. mails with indecent literature?

10. Have you sent any obscene matter through the mails?

11. Is Dr. Foote a Christian?

12. Were you and Comstock on friendly terms previous to your arrest?

13. Have your actions in reference to your arrest, been governed by a desire to make money in an improper manner from the Liberals of the country?

14. Can you tell me what Mr. Payne's object can be in making such statements about you?

Please answer these questions in your columns, and oblige Your friend, A. E. F.

New Haven, Conn., Jan. 27, 1868.

REPLY.—Having no objections to answering these inquiries, we will proceed to do so in regular order and as briefly as possible.

1. We certainly were arrested on November 12, 1877. Anthony Comstock, accompanied by a Deputy United States marshal, visited us. A warrant from a Commissioner of the United States District Court was handed to us, and we were marched off to the Commisioner's presence. In addition, a portion of our property was forcibly seized, under a threat that if we did not give it up a search-warrant would be procured and perhaps our entire stock taken away; and the property taken has never been returned.

2. We were taken before the Commissioner precisely as though we had been a guilty culprit. We were not "asked" to go but were compelled, nolens volens. There were no assurances given that the matter would there stop. A day was set for the examination, and had we not given bail we would have been marched to Ludlow street jail. The marshal stuck as closely to us as though we had been guilty of murder.

3. We were never warned nor notified by Comstock or any of his accomplices with regard to sending matter through the mails or upon any other subject.

4. We have no reason to think that Comstock tried to prevent the Government from prosecuting us. He went before the Grand Jury and testified against us, and upon his testimony they found a bill against us. When he learned that the District Attorney had decided not to prosecute our case, he was angry and threatened to bring us to grief yet, or words to that effect. We think from what we have learned that we are far more indebted to efforts made by a distinguished Liberal that we were not prosecuted than to Anthony Comstock.

5. We have not intentionally made a misstatement in anything we have published in reference to our arrest and to the doings of Anthony Comstock, and we think every statement can be corroborated by good evidence before a court of justice or elsewhere.

6. We certainly think our liberties were in great danger. We came within an ace of being forced into Judge Benedict's court, where the fewest number of Comstock's victims have escaped. Many of our most intelligent friends, well acquainted with all the facts, considered it a great marvel that we escaped. There were large numbers who expected, from the nature of the precedents, that we would be sent to prison for a term of years. We would recommend those anxious to know whether we were in danger or not to inquire of the attorneys who had charge of our case, Abram and Thaddeus B. Wakeman.

7. We will leave it to our friend to decide for himself what is meant by such slanderous epithets as "unprincipled outlaw, and quack." They are indeed harsh names, and we can see no justice in such language being applied to us, and we are sure we have never given Mr. Payne good cause to use such language in reference to us.

8. We have no reason to suppose that Comstock is a Liberal or a Spiritualist. We have never heard that he acted with either class. We have been informed that he is a member of Dr. Buddington's church in Brooklyn (Congregationalist), and that he is a member of the Young Men's Christian Association. If he is either a Liberal or Spiritualist it is in so slight a degree as not to be known or appreciated.

9. Dr. Foote never sent an obscene book or pamphlet through the mails. His medical works are chastely written and contain nothing but what is of the highest interest to his fellow-beings. We think we have never made the acquaintance of a gentleman purer in spirit or more disinclined to arouse the animal passions of those who read his works than is Dr. Foote.

10. We have not sent anything obscene through the mails nor dealt in it, nor had aught to do with anything of the kind. Our object has been to show up the errors of theology and not to inflame the passions of any person.

11. Dr. Foote is not a Christian. He is a firm, consistent, and intelligent Liberal.

12. We were not on friendly terms with Comstock at any time. We never saw him till the day he arrested us, and have never seen him since to our knowledge.

13. Our actions in reference to our arrest have not been dictated by a desire to make money in any improper manner. Nor have we made money thereby. We have used the money sent us in making preparations for our defense and in efforts to secure the modification of the unconstitutional statutes under which we were arrested. We wish not to obtain money from any source that we do not get honestly and legitimately. We feel that our defense interested the Liberals of this country as really as it did us, and we saw no impropriety in their contributing to the defense fund. We are disposed to use all the money we receive from Liberals in returning to them such publications as they wish and at as cheap rates as possible.

14. We dislike to impute improper motives or objects to any one. Mr. Payne may feel extremely friendly towards us, but if so, he has a very singular way of showing it. We think we would prefer a manly enmity to such friendship. Mr. Payne has been a journalist for some years, and we are informed that his course has been to make abusive personal attacks upon objects of his dislike. It has been his fate to be sent to the penitentiary for libel and defamation of character. We hope he may not repeat his experience in this respect.. We cannot object to his becoming a champion and defender of Comstock if he wishes to, or to his paying visits for inspiration or information to the representative of the Young Men's Christian Association, but if he wishes to secure the approbation of the Liberal minds of the country, it will best be done by adhering to truth and honor.

An Appeal for Mr. Heywood.

FRIEND BENNETT: With your permission I wish to make an appeal to the friends of free speech and the freedom of the press, through THE TRUTH SEEKER, for E. H. Heywood, who was arrested last October by Anthony Comstock, and whose trial the past week in Boston, before a very partial and narrow-minded judge, has resulted in a verdict of guilty; and from the rulings of the judge and the bias displayed in his charge to the jury, the sentence will be very severe, though it is deferred a few days to afford an opportunity for the counsel for the defense to argue exceptions. The fine, as you know, is from $100 to $5,000, besides imprisonment. Mr. Heywood, like all reformers, has not the means to defend himself in the various courts through which he intends to carry it if his counsels' exceptions are sustained. I hope the friends who contributed so liberally to your defense may feel like adding something to his. I think it is now time that all Liberals, of whatever kind or clique, should pull together against the common enemy of religious and political freedom. Let all Freethinkers show as determined and solid a front as their opponents, and meet them with a firm and determined conviction that justice shall be done to all.

The friends are moving in the direction of a public meeting in Boston to express their disapproval of his unjust arrest and trial.

Any sums sent to me at 46 Beach st., Boston, Mass., or to Mr. Heywood, Princeton, Mass., will be promptly acknowledged by mail and through The Word and THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Hoping that this will meet with ready and hearty response from the friends, I await their reply.

46 Beach St., Boston, Mass. JOSEPH J. GURNEY.

REMARKS.—We cordially second the appeal made by our correspondent. Mr. Heywood's trial and conviction were most unjust and cruel. His only offense was in expressing his honest convictions upon the questions of social life—marriage and divorce—which, as an American citizen, he had a perfect right to do. Has it, indeed, come to this, that a man cannot discuss, in proper language, any subject in which any considerable portion of the people are interested? Shall we be obliged to submit to the supervision of a censor who shall watch our words and throw us into prison when we give utterance to anything he happens not to approve?

In Mr. Heywood's pamphlet, "Cupid's Yokes," as we have before remarked, there does not appear an improper or indecent word. It is written in a scholarly manner, and it does not affect the principle of American liberty whether his views harmonize with those held by Mrs. Grundy or not. Mrs. G. should have a perfect right to entertain her views, and the right of Mr. H. to express his should be equally as sacred.

The report first received was, that Mr. Heywood was found guilty of mailing Trall's "Sexual Physiology," and that has been declared mailable by the highest postal authorities at Washington. In view of this fact, it seemed singular that a jury in a circuit court should find him guilty of a crime for mailing it. The conviction was exclusively for mailing "Cupid's Yokes"—a pamphlet as innocent of harm as the childish story of "Old Mother Hubbard and her wonderful dog."

A retrograde step has certainly been taken in the matter of personal liberty and individual rights within the last few years. If a yawning, gloomy prison awaits one for simply discussing a legitimate subject of general interest, we had as well live in Algiers or Russia. Siberia is no more terrible or forbidding than the prisons that await the luckless wight whom Anthony Comstock adjudges guilty of too much freedom of speech.

One of the worst forms of tyranny this country groans under to-day is judicial tyranny, and the United States Courts are more tyrannical than all the others. They seem conducted far more to crush out the liberties of the people than to conserve them. How often have we seen the utmost cruelty committed by this engine of tyranny upon well-meaning citizens, with as little power to defend themselves as had a victim in the old Spanish Inquisition! How often have cases come to our knowledge in which honest and honorable citizens in the rural districts have been seized by a marshal acting under the authority of the general Government, and been dragged to jail for the most trivial offenses, put into prison from inability to procure bail, and subjected to heavy expenses they were wholly unable to bear. The judges, the marshals, and all the attaches of the U. S. Courts have seemed to have little else to do than to annoy and persecute our most deserving citizens. What has been called the adminstration of justice has been the merest farce and mockery. Officials are paid generous salaries to oppress and crush the very source of their power—the men who help to foot the bills incurred by those very officials. There are many wrongs which need to be corrected in this country, and few call more loudly for redress than the oppressions imposed in the name of justice.

Among the wrongs imposed upon the people is the denial of the right to discuss the population question and to suggest means and remedies against an overflow or an undue increase of popu' ... ll this be a subject to be touched upon only under peril of fines and imprisonment? It is a subject of great moment, and will more and more force itself upon the attention of thinking, intelligent people; and the greatest of wrongs consists in its being forbidden and made a crime. The telegraph, just a few days ago, brought us the appalling intelligence of a fearful famine in four of the northern provinces of China, where eight millions of people are upon the point of starvation, and dead children are being thrown into the streets, and starving infants are offered for sale in the markets for food. That is a most fearful state of things to contemplate, and one most undesirable to exist in this country or in any other part of the world. Would such a condition of affairs be desirable among us? Who shall say that the population of China is not too large for its resources? With the greatest efforts to make every foot of available soil produce every plant and leaf that it is capable of, still, immense numbers must inevitably starve. Are there not millions in that country leading a most miserable existence—whose lives are absolutely a curse? Had ingress into the world of many such been obviated by scientific and harmless methods, would it not have been a beneficent measure to all parties concerned?

This argument, of course, does not apply with as much force to our own expansive country, but our larger cities are too much crowded with a worthless population, and thousands of families bring more children into the world than they are able to provide for, or to take care of decently, and many men and women engage in the business of begetting offspring who are, physically and mentally, totally unfitted for the avocation. We ask, then, shall ignorance and blind passion always be the governing principles in this important business? Is not prevention the better remedy? At least, shall the American people be prohibited from discussing this momentous theme?

While we go on improving in all the appliances of knowledge and art, the races of domestic animals and fowls, as well as vegetables, flowers and fruits, shall nothing be done to improve the human race? Shall the laws governing the propagation of our race be wholly tabooed and neglected? While we are exerting every effort to procure better horses, cattle, swine, sheep, and chickens, as well as better apples, peaches, roses, tulips, potatoes, and turnips, shall not also something be done to have a better race of men and women? Shall ignorance of ourselves ever be held up as a superior to knowledge? Shall superstition always be regarded as better than truth? And shall everything be left, we again ask, to blind passion instead of the enlightened intellect?

These subjects affect our race, and they must come to the front even though Anthony Comstock and the Y. M. C. A. issue their edicts against them. Knowledge is better than ignorance, and that must not be withheld from the people.

Mr. Heywood's appeal for another hearing has been granted, and in May his case will again be opened before Judge Clark of the Circuit Court in Boston, and Justice Clifford of the U. S. Supreme Court at Washington, when the constitutionality of the Comstock laws will come under examination.

But all this will require funds. Lawing is an expensive luxury, and Mr. Heywood has been forced into it against his will. He is a poor man, and has not the means to pay the bills. Will the Liberal friends who are able to lend him a helping hand, please do so? The money sent him for this purpose will be prudently and honestly used. We commend his case to the consideration of every American Liberal.

Col. Robt. G. Ingersoll.

This most popular lecturer, delivered his discourse on "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child," on Monday evening last, at Chickering Hall, and a new lecture on Thomas Paine, on Tuesday evening. The last we had the pleasure of hearing and we thought it the grandest of anything we ever listened to. The beautiful hall was compactly filled with intelligent ladies and gentlemen who were most highly entertained. The applause of the audience was almost constant for over two hours.

On Sunday evening he will deliver, in the same hall, a new lecture on the beautiful subject of "Hell." The hall will doubtless be packed to its utmost capacity.

We had his lecture on Paine reported and hope to be able to lay a part of it before our readers next week. Great is Bob!

The Ghosts.

We doubt not our readers will welcome Col. Ingersoll's lecture on Ghosts, which we give in the columns of this issue. Its length crowds out The Radical Pulpit, his Satanic Majesty, "Answers to Inquirers" and some other matters which, for the sake of the Ghosts, we trust our readers will excuse.

BEFORE THE LIBERAL CLUB on Friday of last week, our townswoman Mrs. Clara Neyman, delivered an excellent lecture upon German Rationalism. She gave some interesting statistics and facts relative to the Radical thinkers of German birth, and of their advanced views as well as of their desire to fraternize with the Freethinkers of this country. The closing part of her lecture was especially beautiful and gave great pleasure to her large audience. Mrs. Neyman has recently entered the Liberal lecture field, and the promise of her success is most cheering. Such Liberal societies as secure her services will be sure to be pleased with the able manner in which she acquits herself. Letters addressed to Mrs. Clara Neyman, 97 Maiden Lane, will reach her.

Religious Views of a Romish Priest.

Last Will and Testament of Jean Meslier,

CURATE OF THE ROMISH CHURCH IN FRANCE, WHOSE VIEWS UPON THEOLOGY WERE NOT PUBLISHED TO THE WORLD UNTIL AFTER HIS DEATH.

Extract from the Testament of Jean Meslier, concerning some errors and abuses in general and in particular. Proof the first, as drawn from the motives that have induced mankind to establish a religion.

As there is no individual sect of religion that does not pretend to be truly founded on the authority of God, and wholly exempt from all the errors and imposture that are to be found in others, it remains for those who make such pretentions to show by real and convincing proofs that their special sect is of divine institution, failing in which proofs, it must be held of human invention, full of error and deceit; for it is not credible that an all-powerful God, of infinite bounty, would have given laws and ordinances to mankind and not have sealed them with surer and more authentic signs than those borne by the numberless impostors that are spread abroad over the face of the earth. Now, there is not one of these Christists, of whatsoever sect or creed he may be, who can show clear proofs that his religion is really of divine origin; and the proof of this is that though for so many centuries they have been quarreling among themselves, nay, even persecuting each other with fire and sword for the maintenance of their opinions, not one among them has as yet been able, by the aid of such testimony, to convince and persuade the others; which, assuredly, would not happen if there existed on any one side clear and good proofs of divine institution; for as no one of any sect whatever, who is enlightened and of good faith, pretends to hold with error or look with favor on a lie, and seeing that, on the contrary, each on his side professes to maintain the truth, the real means of doing away with all error, and of uniting men peacefully together in one common feeling and one common faith, would be to produce those convincing testimonies and proofs of the truth, and thus to demonstrate that such religion is in reality of divine institution, and that all others are false. Then every man would do homage to the truth, and none would attempt to refute these testimonies nor to take part with error or imposture, because proofs of the contrary could be advanced against such; but as these proofs are nowhere to be found in any of their creeds, impostors have full liberty to invent and maintain all sorts of lies and deception.

Again, there are still other proofs which clearly testify to the fallacy of all human creeds, especially of our own.

SECOND PROOF, DRAWN FROM THE ERRORS OF FAITH.

Any or every creed which rests the foundations of its mysteries on, and which takes for the rule of its doctrine and morality, a principle of error, and which is even a grievous source of eternal troubles and divisions among men, cannot be a true creed, nor of divine institution. Now, all human creeds, and specially the Catholic creed, resting, as they undoubtedly do, the foundations of their doctrines and their morality on a principle of error, cannot be true creeds, nor of divine institution. I cannot conceive how the first proposition of this argument could be refuted; it is too clear and too evident to admit of doubt. I pass, then, to the proof of the second proposition, which is that the Christian religion takes as the rule of its doctrines and its morality what is called faith, or, in other words, a blind belief, but none the less steadfast and assured, in certain laws, or certain revelations of divine origin, and in a certain divinity. She must of necessity suppose it to be so, for it is this belief in a certain divinity and in certain divine revelations which gives her all the credit and authority she enjoys in the eyes of man, and failing which but little heed would be taken of her prescriptions. This is why there is no religion which does not expressly enjoin on its followers to be steadfast in their faith. Hence it is that all Christians hold for a maxim that faith is the beginning and the basis of salvation, and that it is the root of all justice and holiness, as marked in the Council of Trent, session the sixth, chapter the eighth.

Now, it is clear that a blind belief in all that may be advanced as under the name and authority of God, is a principle of error and of lies. And in proof of this, there never was known an imposter in matters of religion who did not shield himself under the name and authority of God, and proclaim himself especially inspired and sent by Him. This faith and blind belief, which they lay down as the basis of their doctrines, is not only a principle of error and of lies, but a harmful source of quarrels and divisions among men for the maintainance of their respective creeds. There is no wickedness that mankind will not practise one toward the other under this specious pretext.

Now it is not to be believed that an all-powerful God, infinitely wise and good, would make using such means or take such a course to make known his will to men; for this on his part would be manifestly the desire to lead them into error and to lay snares for their footsteps, to induce them to embrace a lie and a deceit. Likewise neither is it credible that a God who loves union and peace, the welfare and the salvation of men, should have established as the basis of his religion so fatal a source of dissension and eternal division among them.

Such creeds as these, then, cannot be true creeds, nor have been instituted by God. I know very well that our Christists will here have recourse to their pretended grounds for credibility and will say that however blind their faith and belief may be in one sense, they are nevertheless supported by such clear and convincing testimonies of the truth that it would be not only imprudent but a proof of temerity and great folly not to yield to them. They usually reduce all these pretended grounds to three or four heads.

The first of these they draw from the pretended sanctity of their creed, which condemns vice and commends the practice of virtue. Its doctrine is so plain, so simple, they say, that it can evidently proceed only from the purity and holiness of a God of infinite wisdom and goodness.

Their second ground of credibility is drawn from the innocence and holiness of the lives of those who have embraced it with love and defended it even unto death, suffering the cruelest tortures rather than renounce it, it not being credible that such notable persons should have permitted themselves to have been deceived by a false creed; that they should have renounced all the pleasures and profits of this life and exposed themselves to such bitter persecutions for the maintenance solely of imposture and error.

Their third ground of credibility they take from the oracles and the prophecies, which for so many centuries have been rendered in their favor, and which they pretend have been accomplished and fufilled in a manner that does not admit of doubt.

And, finally, their fourth ground of credibility, which may be considered as the chief of all, is drawn from the grandeur and the multitude of the miracles which in all times and in all places have been wrought in favor of that creed.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Communications.

Crimes and Cruelties of Christianity.

BY B. F. UNDERWOOD.—CONTINUED.

The persecutions in New England form one of the darkest and saddest chapters in the history of America. In Massachusetts a law was passed enacting that for affirming that men are saved by works and not by faith, for opposing infant baptism, for leaving the church when infants were about to be baptized, the offender should suffer banishment; and that whoever denied the infallibility of the Bible should, for the first offense, "be openly and severely whipped by the executioner," and for the second might be put to death" (Ancient Laws and Charters of Mass. Bay; pub. in Boston by order Gen. Court, 1814).

The Puritan laws of New England against "a cursed sect of hereticks lately risen up in the world, which are commonly called Quakers" (I quote from the preamble), provided as punishment for a Quaker, on first conviction, twenty stripes; second, loss of an ear if a man, and if a woman, to be severely whipped; on the third, whether man or woman, to have the tongue bored through with a red-hot iron. If Quakers returned to the colony after banishment, they were to suffer death (Ibid, p. 121–6; date A. D. 1656–7).

How many victims suffered we do not know. We have accounts of three Quakers whose ears were cut off; a Quaker girl eleven years old who was imprisoned for her faith, and whose mother was whipped with ten stripes; of three Quaker men and one Quaker woman who were hanged on Boston Common, and of others who were publicly whipped, imprisoned, and banished. In 1662 three Quaker women were whipped through three towns, in the dead of winter, tied to a cart's tail, stripped from the waist up, and whipped with several stripes in each town. The warrant bears date Dec. 22, 1662 (Chadler's Crim. Trial, vol. i, p. 54).

We find two Quakers that landed, Mary Fisher and Ann Austin, were seized, their books burnt, and themselves imprisoned for weeks, and afterwards banished from the colony. Roger Williams, for maintaining the right of men to worship according to the dictate of conscience, was compelled to leave in the night and to seek the hospitality of the unchristianized Indians. On the records of Plymouth and Mass. Bay Colonies are laws punishing with death any child above sixteen years old that should curse or smite its parents. A boy denounced to the magistrate as stubborn or rebellious, or a girl who struck her mother was to be hanged (Laws cited, p. 59-60, A. D. 1646).

Persecution for witchcraft and sorcery was carried on by Protestants as well as by Catholics. They were generally believed in among the former as among the latter. Luther said "I should have no compassion on these witches; I would burn them all" (Table Talk p. 251). Calvin, when he remodeled the laws of Geneva, did not change those condemning witches to the stake.

"In England the establishment of the Reformation was the signal for an immediate outburst of the superstition, and there, as elsewhere, its decline was represented as the direct consequence and the exact measure of the progress of religious scepticism. In Scotland, where the Reformed ministers exercised greater influence than in any other country, and where the witch trials fell almost entirely into their hands, the persecution was proportionally atrocious. Probably the ablest defenders of the belief was Glanvil, a clergyman of the English Establishment, and one of the most influential was Baxter, the greatest of the Puritans" Hist. Rat., vol. i, p. 33).

In our own country, about one hundred and eighty years ago, thirteen women and six men were hanged, and an old man, eighty-one years of age, was pressed to death under a board loaded with heavy stones, for the crime of witchcraft. Several of the women were quite aged, and had led unblemished lives. Multitudes were thrown into prison. The ministers of Boston and Charlestown drew up an address to the Commissioners thanking them for their zeal, and expressing the hope that it would never be relaxed. (See Upham's Salem Witchcraft, vol. i, p. 393-4).

"The evils of this epidemic cast their shadow over a broad surface and darkened the condition of generations. . . The fields were neglected, fences, roads, barns, even the meeting house went into disrepair. . . Scarcity of provisions, nearly amounting to a famine, continued for some time, farms were brought under mortgage or sacrificed, and large numbers of people were dispersed. One locality in Salem village . . . bears to this day the marks of the blight. . . The ruinous results were not confined to the village but spread more or less over the country" (Upham's Salem Witchcraft, vol. ii, p. 380-1).

Lecky says: "During the years of the [English] Commonwealth there is reason to believe that more alleged witches perished in England than in the whole period before and after. Nor is this to be ascribed entirely to the judges or legislators; for the judges in former reigns never shrank from condemning witches, and Cromwell was in most respects far superior to his predecessors. It was simply the natural result of Puritanical teachings, acting on the mind, predisposing men to see Satanic influence in life, and consequently eliciting the phenomena of witchcraft" (Hist. of Rat. vol. i, p. 125).

In 1664 two women were hanged in Suffolk, England, under a sentence of the eminent Sir Mathew Hale, who availed himself of the occasion to declare the reality of the crime of witchcraft, "for first," said he "the Scriptures had affirmed so much, and secondly, the wisdom of all nations had provided laws against such persons, which is an argument of their confidence of such a crime." The last person that perished judicially for witchcraft in England was executed in 1712. The last prominent trial was that of Jane Wenham, who was prosecuted by a Hertfordshire clergyman in 1712. "The judge entirely disbelieved in witches, and accordingly charged the jury strongly in favor of the accused, and even treated with great disrespect the rector of the parish, who declared on his faith as a clergyman that he believed the woman to be a witch. The jury being ignorant and obstinate, convicted the prisoner, but a remission of sentence was obtained in spite of the efforts of the clergy." The laws relating to witchcraft were not repealed until the year 1736. The clergy still believed in it, and used the influence of their position in favor of prosecutions to the last. "In reviewing the history of witchcraft, it is impossible to avoid observing the singularly favorable contrast which the Anglican church presents, both to continental Catholicism and Puritanism. It is indeed true that her bishops contributed much to the enactment of the laws against witchcraft, that the immense majority of the clergy firmly believed in the reality of the crime, and that they continued to arrest and defend it when the great bulk of educated laymen had abandoned it. It is also true that skepticism on the subject of witches arose among those who were least governed by the Church, advanced with the decline of the influence of the clergy, and was commonly branded as a phase of, and manifestation of infidelity" (Hist. of Rat. Vol. 1, p. 141).

As late as 1768, more then thirty years after the repeal of the disgraceful laws respecting witchcraft, John Wesley, the great light of Methodism, wrote as follows:

"It is true likewise that the English in general, and indeed most of the men of learning in Europe, have given up all accounts of witches and apparitions as mere old wives' fables. I am sorry for it, and I willingly take this opportunity of entering my solemn protest against this violent compliment which so many that believe the Bible pay to those who do not believe it. I owe them no such service. I take knowledge that these are at the bottom of the outcry which has been raised, and with such insolence spread through the land, in direct opposition not only to the Bible, but to the suffrage of the wisest and best of men in all ages and nations. They well know (whether Christians know it or not) that giving up witchcraft is in effect giving up the Bible" (Journal, 1768).

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Labor.

Hunger has the right to the food it demands, limited by the right to gain that food by labor. This is the first law of right, limited in manly benevolence, for labor must not be at the expense of others. It follows that when so directed, labor has the right to its own products. The idea of ownership is inherent in being; and the deed of ownership is doing something to create or appropriate. Every law or usage which conflicts with this primary right is wrong. "Ah," it is said, "you make no exceptions; then every child when born has a right to be fed and clothed!" Certainly, as every child when born has the right to fill its lungs with air, to be nourished at its mother's breast, to water when thirsty. It is not enough that this be granted. Labor must be allowed opportunity. It is not enough to say man has the right to labor, he has the right to the opportunity to labor, and having the opportunity all that results should be his.

As the land is the primary source of supply of food, labor has the right to the land, and they who use it with greatest profit, that is, make it most productive, have the right to the land. This law is illustrated in the contest of cultured with barbarous peoples. The race that makes the land produce the greatest supply of food are its triumphant owners. "Ah! this is agrarianism!" No, for in a long period of civilization, the land does not remain in the wild. Air and water are ever the same, but the land is changeable. The forest is removed; the stagnant waters are drained away, the crust pulverized, and an ownership established by the labor expended, which has received no reward except in ownership, which is valuable for what it may yield in the future. If such land cannot be occupied by the one who has given this preparatory labor, and is by another, it is just that the products of this joint labor be equally divided in proportion to the value of each. This is rent or interest, which really are one and the same, for interest would never be paid on money if money would not procure the use of something desired. Rent, therefore, of itself, is just, and not to be regarded by labor as a grievance. But when it exacts more than its share it becomes the most unjust and oppressive power possible to conceive. Having seized the means of life, it reduces labor to a pitiable struggle for existence, granted by monopoly, with begrudging scorn. HUDSON TUTTLE.

Mr. Underwood on the Humphrey-Bennett Discussion.

THORNDIKE, MASS., Oct. 31, 1877.

DEAR MR. BENNETT: Accept thanks for copy of your discussion with "Rev." Humphrey. I read a portion of it when it was published in THE TRUTH SEEKER, and have found time to look through it in its present form.

It makes an interesting and instructive book for the mass of readers. I believe it will prove a useful contribution to our controversial literature. It contains a large number of facts and authorities which commend it to intelligent readers of all religious beliefs. In this discussion I think you sustained your positions generally in a very creditable manner. Your letters are characterized by breadth and comprehensiveness of thought, perfect frankness, the utmost good nature, and an amount of knowledge on the subjects discussed, which, with your habit of reasoning, enables you to meet your opponent at every point. Mr. Humphrey on the other hand, is quite sharp, but narrow, lacking in the power of reasoning from large generalizations; he is your superior in vigor and conciseness of expression, and evidently a man of some culture; but he seems unable to rise to a point from which he can take anything like a comprehensive view of conflicting systems of thought. He forms his ideas a priori, and then if he can find one or two facts that don't contradict them he imagines they are established.

With all his reading, he evinces unacquaintance with the advanced Liberalism of to-day. His arguments are chiefly a rehash of old authors. From them he seems to have got his inclination to disparage Infidels and offer them a pious insult on every opportunity, to discover a flaw in the character or conduct of some Liberals and appeal to that as proof of the demoralizing tendency of their views on religion. Your chapters on the amours and crimes of the clergy, called out by such argument (?) are pretty tough reading; but if the clergy will continue to pursue such a course of reasoning, I suppose it is the most effective way to meet them. On the whole, I am pleased with the book. It is a handsome volume and remarkably cheap. I hope it will have a large sale. I view with interest and satisfaction your success as a publisher of cheap Liberal literature. You are doing a much needed work. With best regards, I remain truly yours, B. F. UNDERWOOD.

Self-Righteousness vs. Sin.

A SHORT SERMON BY REV. THEOLOGICUS, D. D.

[Delivered before the High-Cockalorum Ministerial Association, of Divinity Place, New Jerusalem.]

Luke xviii, 11th and 13th verses.—"The Pharisee stood and prayed thus with himself: God, I thank thee that I am not as other men are, extortioners, unjust, adulterers, or even as this publican." . . "And the publican standing afar off would not lift up so much as his eyes unto heaven, but smote upon his breast saying, Lord be merciful to me a sinner."

My brethren of the ministry, it behooves us upon this occasion to "lay aside every weight, and the sin that doth so easily beset us," (misconstruction,) and in an honest manner scan the principles and motives of the characters in the text. It has been the common practice of the priesthood to make self-righteousness a great crime and pleading for mercy a great virtue. Ministers in all the past history of the Church have extolled this publican and condemned this Pharisee.

But, my brethren, to-day "I hew to the line and let the chips fall where they may." So you may "adjust your vests and hold your chins," while I give this publican his due, and score a few for the Pharisee.

First. Let us inquire who and what this publican was, and why the Savior should thus command him.

This publican was a mean, good-for-nothing, thieving sneak of a tax-gatherer, as he himself admits. For don't he say that he is a sinner? And don't his own consciousness tell him that he is all wrong, that he had collected two dollars where but one was due and stuck the odd dollar in his pocket to buy stocks on 'change, or get up a corner on mutton, and thus make the faithful pay two prices for a lamb for a sacrifice? What but this could make him smite upon his breast, and be ashamed to look up, and too avaricious to disgorge his ill-gotten gains, while he, like a sneak thief, pleaded with God to have mercy upon his poor, sinful soul? Ah! but you say he must have been truly penitent and all right, or the blessed Savior would not have justified him. But, my brethren, there is where you show your ignorance. For you have to disconnect and disjoint the Scriptures to make out such a case. Jesus, the mighty God and Judge of the Universe, in the commencement of this eighteenth chapter of Luke, compares himself to an unjust judge who didn't care a cuss for anybody but his own dear self, who avenged a woman of her adversary just to get rid of her. And right upon the heels of this judge story, Jesus, to show that he rightly compared himself to this unjust judge, renders this unjust judgment in favor of this thieving publican, and to the detriment of an honest, self-righteous Pharisee.

Don't get excited, my good brethren, I beg of you; but listen to me while I reconcile the Scriptures. For, unless reconciled, they are worthless, and our occupation gone, and gone forever. For, if what he commands here he condemns in another scripture, and what he condemns here he commends in another, how can it be reconciled unless by the connections and circumstances? The moods of heaven's language, as I have before shown in a previous discourse, helps to settle the difficulty.

In this case, as you will perceive by consulting the previous chapter, the Pharisees, had been bedeviling him about his kingdom, inquiring when it should come. This evidently irritated the Son of God, and threw him into a bad mood.

But if we proceed to the next, the nineteenth chapter of this blessed Gospel of Luke, where Jesus meets the chief of publicans, we shall behold the Judge of all the earth in a better mood, and giving a most righteous reversion of this former decision.

This chief of publicans was a little fellow, and as big as he was little, and as kind and generous as he was big of soul. My brethren, permit me to enlarge upon this subject, and, as is common with us divines, supply what is lacking of the story.

This self-righteous, generous-hearted little fellow had heard a great deal about Jesus, about his wise sayings and big doings. He had heard that he was a tremendous eater and drinker, and withal a friend of publicans (Luke vii, 34). Jesus himself had said, "he came eating and drinking"; and the people said, "Behold a gluttonous man and a wine-bibber." Now, Zaccheus was as rich as he was generous, and he determined that his Lord and Master should have one square meal. So he ordered the fatted calf killed, and the best barrel of wine tapped, while he went to invite his guest. The press was great, and he "little of stature." Equal to the emergency, he climbs a tree. The Master as he passes divines his intention, and says, "Zaccheus! make haste and come down, for to-day I must abide at thy house." Zaccheus received him joyfully. And as the Lord reclined at the table, picking one after another the bones of the calf, and washing it down with frequent draughts of the wine, "which cheereth God and man" (Judg. 9:13), Zaccheus "stood," brush in hand, keeping off the flies. It is unnecessary to say further of this meal than to remark that Jesus fully sustained his reputation, and just as he was picking the last bone of the calf and drinking the last of the wine "with a merry heart," Zaccheus said unto the Lord, "Behold the half of my goods I give to the poor, (but you have eaten all the calf and drank all the wine,) and if I have taken anything from any man by false acquisition, I restore him fourfold." And Jesus said unto him, "This day is salvation come to this house." Blessed old Zaccheus! who had with his own hands distributed the half of his goods to the poor—who had himself righted his every wrong to his fellow-man, and then with the abundance left had feasted his Lord. Zaccheus had imitated the self-righteous Pharisee of the former chapter, and has not only received the commendation of his Lord in his best mood, but the commendation of every enlightened and thinking mind from that day to this, despite our preaching to the contrary. Look upon this picture and then upon that, and tell me which is the just decision. See this mean, stingy, avaricious, low-lived, thieving publican of the eighteenth chapter, with the poor and defrauded around him, yet unwilling to restore what was their due, to say nothing of relieving their suffering necessities. Unwilling, in his avarice, to settle the difference with his conscience with the cash of his purse, he pleads for mercy, desiring God to pay his debts with the blood of his Only Begotten.

Once more look at this little Great Big publican of the nineteenth chapter, who like the self-righteous Pharisee, settles his own score, and puts the Master under obligation to him by feeding him from his own table.

Finally, my brethren, let us go and do likewise; for, saith the Master, "As much as ye have done it unto the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

Now hold your breath, my brethren, while I score a dozen for this Pharisee and publican number two.

Edinburg, Ind., Jan. 4th, 1878.

Stephen Pearl Andrews in New Haven.

Stephen Pearl Andrews delivered a lecture before the Liberal Society of New Haven, in Loomis' Temple of Music, Jan. 20th. The following is the report of the same given by the New Haven Daily Union:

The audience at Loomis' Temple of Music last evening was much larger than the state of the weather would have led one to expect; and Mr. Stephen Pearl Andrews of New York (author of the science of Universology) delivered an admirable lecture on the following subject: "The grand reconciliation of all religious sects and segments of humanity through science, culture, and growth." Mr. Andrews began with a statement regarding the nature of evolution. No subject, he said, is more talked about than evolution. Evolution proceeds by certain definite laws, called differentiations and integrations, or, in simpler language, dividings and unitings. In order to develop a thing, the thing to be developed must branch out into various differences—differences which tend at the same time to return into a larger unity. Hitherto this subject of evolution has been more especially discussed with reference to the origin and growth of human beings—that is to say, in respect to the vegetal and animal worlds—and less hitherto with human society. It is, however, recognized as applicable everywhere, and I shall now discuss it as it refers to the religious development of the world. Differentiation tends to individual freedom and the rights of private judgment; hence it is especially Protestant. Integration tends to unity, and unity is the one idea for which the Catholic Church stands representative. The development of sects in the Christian Church during the last three hundred years is the preëminent illustration of the tendency to differentiation and individuality. It has now in Protestantism reached its culmination and we begin to see a tendency of a return towards unity. The various reform movements, temperance, labor, etc., bringing together men of all opinions; the Young Men's Christian Association and the Evangelical Alliance are instances within the Christian Church of this tendency to a new and higher kind of catholicity. This new and third tendency, this drift toward reconciliation or unity in variety, goes, however, outside of the Church, and embraces here among you in your Free Conference the coöperation of the greatest extremes, viz.: Spiritualists, and Positivists or Materialists. Now, this Unity in Variety, this grand reconciliation of opposites in opinion in a common practical work, will be the type of the future religious organizations of the world. It would be in the line of this development if all the churches in New Haven were to grow into that degree of liberality that the pastors of all denominations should freely and continuously exchange pulpits. Something precisely like this is already happening in the American metropolis by the Monday morning reports in the Herald and other papers of the sermons preached in the various churches the day before. No people heretofore ever underwent any such all-sided religious education as the American people are now getting by that means. Reason is destined to become the governing faculty and influence in humanity; and there is nothing so reasonable as that we should seek to learn the opinions of those who differ from us most. The dull monotony of the constant repetition of the same doctrines and ideas is the most repulsive feature of our present religious culture. It would be absurd to make a bouquet or cultivate a garden stocked with nothing but marigolds, pinks, or any other single blossom. Rationality, good taste, and physical advantage all concur to demand variety and unity in the place of mere sympathetic unity or mere divergency and difference. The difference, reconciliated in the higher unity, is the higher conception, and is that towards which the evolution of society indubitably tends. A different opinion than our own is not something to be simply tolerated; toleration is not the fit word; it implies that I know that I am right and that the other person is wrong, and yet that I am so good, so kind and gracious, as to overlook and indulge the error of my opponent. This is not what is meant by an acceptance of differences. Such acceptance involves the intellectual perception that difference of opinion is normal, is intended in the character of our diverse organizations, is absolutely essential in the nature of things, as inexpugnable or incapable of being driven out of human nature; and that it is therefore philosophic to accept the equal probability that the other party may be right. My opinion becomes, then, merely my opinion, and is submitted purposely to the criticism of all other opinions. It is not, therefore, toleration which is to be the basis of the social harmony of the future, but a positive recognition of the desirableness of difference. The Evangelical Alliance has been alluded to. It has adopted a motto in very good Latin to express its idea of the basis of unity amidst differences. Translated into English, it is this: "In Essentials, Unity; in Non-essentials, Liberty; in all things, Charity." This is an approximation towards the true basis, but is still too narrow, and would fail as a universal reconciliative programme. I would propose, therefore, as the amended watch-word of progressive human development the following formula: "In all things not trenching on others' rights, Liberty; in things proved, Unity; in what can be doubted, Free Diversity; in all things, Charity."

PERSONS do not reflect, we shall speedily die. If any do thus reflect, their quarrels speedily terminate.

Currency and Finance.

The Nation's Danger.

Since the passage of the legal tender act by Congress in 1861, the people of this government have probably never experienced a more critical period in our financial affairs than the present time.

Should the Bland silver bill, making 412½ grains of silver 900 fine a standard dollar and full legal tender for all debts both public and private, become a law, its evil effects upon this country can hardly be computed. To-day the price of standard silver in London is fifty-four pence per ounce, with a downward tendency; in this country it can be purchased in vast quantities at one dollar and eight cents per ounce. The problem is not a difficult one for anybody to solve. If one dollar and eight cents will purchase 480 grains of silver 900 fine, how much silver of the same quality can be bought for one dollar? Or, to reverse the problem if 480 grains of silver can be bought for one dollar and eight cents, what will 412½ grains be worth?

To pass this bill is simply to reduce our standard for the measurement of values by eight or ten per cent, thereby repudiating so much of the indebtedness of the Government and the people.

But where is the gain to either? The shrinkage in the purchasing power of the new coin in this country would be universal. The debtor and creditor classes are so mixed up and interwoven in their business relations, the sum total of their internal debts being so nearly balanced by the entire amount of their credits, that it is hard to see how we as a people can be benefited by the reduction. The slight gain to the debtor would be lost by the creditor, a temporary advantage which could not help the people as a whole. It is an easy matter to foretell where the great loss would finally rest, for the laws of finance are as certain and unerring as the law of gravitation.

The reduction of a nation's standard for the measurement of values has invariably made the rich men richer and the poor men poorer. Capital can always meet the storm better than poverty; the capitalist who has both money and credit can take advantage of the times, he can buy with his credit alone, and pay in a reduced or depreciating currency, while the poor man who has neither money nor credit is always the victim; he cannot buy when an opportunity to protect himself from loss is offered, he has nothing to sell but his day's work, the proceeds of which are consumed at once. Labor cannot be held for better prices, but must be sold to-day or it is lost forever. Among all the devices for cheating the poor man, none is more effectual then that which deludes him with a depreciated or debased money.

The United States Government, now in debt about two thousand million dollars, could apparently save two hundred millions by reducing her monetary standard ten per cent; but is this honesty, or even policy?

More than two-thirds of this debt is owned by the people of the United States. Over two hundred million dollars in Government bonds are held by the Savings' Banks, which are in debt over eight hundred and forty-three million dollars to two million three hundred thousand depositors.

Four hundred million dollars in Government bonds are owned by two thousand and eighty National Banks, with an aggregate capital of over four hundred and eighty millions, owing depositors over six hundred million dollars. Three hundred and seventy-five million dollars in greenbacks and fractional currency are in circulation. About six hundred million dollars in Government bonds are held abroad, and the balance of the public debt is held among the people of this country. Surely, nothing can be made to the Government by depreciating these securities. As the people compose this Government, to rob them in this manner would be like taking money out of one pocket to put it into another.

The only apparent advantage in the new monetary standard would be the gain of eight or ten per cent. on the six hundred million dollars held abroad; but before crediting this anticipated profit of forty-eight to sixty millions to the Government, let us count the cost.

To-day we are owing fourteen hundred and fifty million dollars in bonds bearing an average interest of 5½ per cent. By funding these into 4½ per cent. bonds (which we were rapidly accomplishing prior to the agitation of this silver question) a clear saving to the Government could be made of fourteen million five hundred thousand dollars per annum. By paying one hundred cents on the dollar, as we do pay, the United States can save in interest alone, during the next four years, more than we could possibly gain by cheating our foreign bondholders. Reduce our monetary standard to 412½ grains of silver, and the funding process will entirely cease, the rate of interest will immediately advance to six or seven per cent., and perhaps higher. As we are not prepared to pay our debts at present, even in silver, but must borrow for many years to come, will not this Government be at the mercy of capitalists when our short bonds mature? How shall we appear in the money markets of the world, or among our own people, asking for new credit with our old credit so badly shaken?

A depreciated or short-weight metallic currency will always drive out of circulation the better currency; for who will pay one hundred cents when he can discharge the same obligation for ninety-two cents? Who will pay the price of four hundred and forty grains of silver when he can use four hundred and twelve and one-half grains for the same purpose?

Our exports to foreign nations amount in the aggregate to over five hundred million dollars per annum, every dollar of which will be measured in gold. To reduce our monetary standard to 412½ grains of silver would enable foreign nations to meet this vast obligation with four hundred and fifty to four hundred and fifty-two millions of imports, making a clear gain out of the people of the United States of forty-eight to fifty million dollars per annum. Our exporters will buy the products of this country with silver and sell them for gold. Our importers will buy abroad with gold and sell for silver.

The loss sustained by the difference in the price of the two precious metals will fall wholly upon us, for we alone will accept the short-weight silver dollar, while our foreign neighbors exact full weight in gold.

Syracuse, Jan. 18, 1878. JOHN W. TRUESDELL.

A FEW WORDS IN RESPONSE.—With all respect to our able correspondent, who presents facts and figures in a terse manner hard to refute, we nevertheless are compelled to take ground somewhat opposite to his. He presents the conservative side of the question, but the best interests of the masses of the people lie on the other side. The capitalists and bankers have a direct interest in the money question, but that of the people does not rest in that quarter. Whatever tends to raise the value of the circulating medium or that tends to restrict its volume, enhances the interests of the capitalists who hold the larger share of the money-wealth of the country and in the same ratio is against the large debtor class and working class.

If the real money of our country amounts to $2,000,000,000 and $500,000,000 is held by certain capitalists, it may be seen at once that they hold 25 per cent. of the money-wealth of the country. If by reducing the bulk of the circulating medium, or by depreciating a portion of it so that it is not taken as a legal tender, so that there is but $1,000,000,000 in use as currency, the capitalists retaining, as they would be sure to do, their $500,000,000, it is quite easy to see that their relative share of the currency of the country, with their consequent influence and power, would be exactly doubled. They would own fifty per cent. of the money of the country in place of twenty-five, and in the same ratio the share belonging to non-capitalists, producers and workers would be lessened.

The demonetization of silver had this effect—to the extent that the bulk of the circulating medium was thereby reduced so far money-holders were benefited and the money-getters injured, the remonetization of silver must of course have a reverse action.

We will not pretend to say just how many grains the silver dollar should weigh, but if we are to have a metallic currency, there seems to be no sufficient reasons why silver should not be a part of such currency, and if it is to be used as money at all, it should answer all the purposes of money, and be receivable for all classes of dues. We therefore give our vote in favor of the remonetization of silver.

Our friend's arguments are strong, and what he says on the score of justice has much weight. So far as our bonds are concerned, however, they were mainly bought with a highly reduced currency, a dollar of which was worth little more than half the value of a dollar in gold, and if in redeeming them, but 92 or 95 cents per dollar should be paid, the injustice of the transaction is not appalling. The bondholders have already bled the people and the government of this country excessively, and should five to eight cents on the dollar be saved to the people by paying them off in silver, it will not be a case of gross injustice!

There is, doubtless, some hardship to capitalists that debts due them in dollars worth one hundred cents should be paid in dollars worth ninety-two cents, but it is not so bad as the case is when reversed. It is a far greater injustice for the people to pay one hundred cents to the bondholders for what absolutely cost them but forty cents. If there is any advantage to be enjoyed by either it should inure to the poor and laboring classes. There is far less danger of the money-holders and bankers being imposed upon than the workingmen of the country. In all the legislative enactments of the last decade scarcely one act has been passed in the interest of the laboring portion of the community.

We are more in favor of an abundant circulating medium than a stickler that the country should reach a certain point in the scale of value. Give the people plenty of money and let it be of uniform value, and the best interests of the people will be conserved. If the greenback had been made a legal tender for all manner of dues, it would have been the best currency a people ever had; and, though getting on in years, we hope to live long enough to see a good national paper currency doing the entire exchange business of our country. But, if we must have a metallic basis, we say let silver help to form it. There is not gold enough to meet all the wants of trade and let not silver be cast into obloquy. In our boyhood days gold and silver ran very pleasantly together and why not again?

We are anxious that Government should issue money enough, on approved security, to meet all the demands of the country for a medium of exchange, and we wish to see the same issued at a rate of interest not exceeding three per cent. If this was carried out, all interest would be reduced to about the same rate. Excessive interest is one of the great evils of the age. On the average, it reaches ten per cent., and this is enough to crush any legitimate business in the world. Thousands of farmers, merchants, and manufacturers are yearly ruined by the excessive interest they are paying, and, unless relief is afforded, hundreds of thousands more will have to go by the board. We say, then, let Government issue money enough, on proper security, so that the general rate of interest shall not exceed three per cent.

The remonetization of silver, we think, will be a step in the right direction.—[ED. T. S.]

A Few Questions for Margaret Chappellsmith.

January 28, 1878.

I am a farmer. I am one of a large number in this immediate vicinity who purchased farms soon after our late war. Gold was then worth about twice what it is now in currency. We ran largely in debt for our farms. We received good prices for our produce. We hired a very large amount of help. We paid them liberally. All were well satisfied.

We have net yet canceled our debts for our farms, but have improved our buildings very much, etc.

Now money with us is very scarce. All our produce is very low. We can only pay our interest. We cannot hire our poorer neighbor, for we cannot pay him. This winter he is idle.

We have sold all we can spare to pay interest on our indebtedness. Gold is down to 101½.

Our poorer neighbor has nothing to eat. We have plenty for him to do but have nothing left to pay him. Who is benefited by this contraction of the currency? Those in the fire can best judge who is being burned. When gold was worth 280 we could hire all who applied. We could pay them so that they were perfectly satisfied. We could enjoy luxuries, and purchase sewing-machines for our wives and daughters, and pay our interest, and a small sum on the principal. Our land was worth almost twice what we could now get for it, were we obliged to sell.

I know that ours is not an exceptional case, as whole communities of farmers, east and west, are in the same boat with us.

The cry, "We are out of employment! We cannot get work!" is all over the land, and the telegraph brings us word that our cousins in Wales are starving.

When gold was at its highest I never knew an instance of a laboring man refusing, or being dissatisfied with greenbacks or silver.

This mawkish sympathy for the poor money lender, who would take 25 per cent. interest if the law would allow it, is sickening. Take care of the poor, and the rich will take care of themselves.

Who is most in danger of being burned?

CENTRAL NEW YORKER.

Letters from Friends.

Organization.

FLORENCE, IOWA, Jan., 1878.

FRIEND BENNETT: A Local Auxiliary Liberal League was organized at this place on Saturday evening, Jan. 19, met at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Phil Wagner, adopted a constitution declaring ourselves in "full sympathy, fellowship, and affiliation" with the National Liberal League, and elected the following officers for the ensuing year: President, Byron McQuinn; secretary, E. C. Walker; ass't secretary, Albert M. Rogers; treasurer, Mrs. R. Irena Wagner; counsellors, Charles M. Rogers, C. B. Hayden, Phil. Wagner, and Richard Merritt. We have a charter membership of nineteen. Our annual meeting for the election of officers of the League will be held on the 19th day of January. Annual meetings for the election of delegates to the annual Congress of the National Liberal League will be held at such time as the Board of Directors shall determine. Regular monthly meetings for consultation and the transaction of business on the 19th of each month. Commence our regular Sunday meetings on the 27th inst. with a discussion at Wagner Hall upon the taxation of church property. Music and other entertainments will be furnished, and we hope that it will be largely attended. We intend to institute a Children's Fraternity as soon as possible. It is what we need above all things else. Our constitution makes provisions for the establishment of a Sunday reading-room, under the auspices of the League, as soon as the Board of Directors shall deem it expedient.

Most of the Liberals here have taken hold of the enterprise in a manner and animated by a spirit which should make our League a success. May it be a most potent power for good in this community! The Methodists are holding a "revival" of superstition, and "sanctification" is all the cry. Very bitter, very intolerant are they! They heap abuse upon all who dissent from their teachings and methods. They will allow no one not believing as they do one word in their meetings, not even to correct the most outrageous misrepresentations. We shall set them a better example with our perfectly free platform.

And now, in conclusion, I would say to the Liberals of Iowa, "Go and do likewise. In organization is strength, and justice to the defamed and weak. Now is the hour to work. STAND BY YOUR COLORS! for there is nothing so disgraceful and deplorable as cowardly silence when the right is assailed. Avow and defend your principles. If you do not, you betray Truth and Right." E. C. WALKER,
Secretary Florence Liberal League.

A Woman's Thoughts.

The last TRUTH SEEKER comes loaded with the horrible transactions of Anthony Comstock. We can but ask ourselves the question over and over again, can it be possible such outrages have been committed by this man Anthony, from time to time and countenanced by our Government officials? When Mrs. Woodhull was arrested and thrown into Ludlow Street Jail and her business ruined, the leading newspapers were quite reticent. It was only a woman. She said persecution would not end with her case and boldly proclaimed that liberty of the press and free speech were in peril, that the God-in-the constitution ring were busy, and that American people would some day ere long wake up to the fact that they were robbed of the liberty our fathers fought for. I am sure the prophecy is fast approaching its fulfillment. Yet many are blind to the fact. Surely if such a man as Anthony Comstock can be suffered to run at large and wield such mighty power in the land, and fill his pockets with money wrenched by purjury from his victims, what is there in the line of injustice and tyranny that may not be looked for. Liberals! deceive not yourselves, thinking for a moment there is one thing such a man and those that support him dare not do. The leading newspapers are silent. It is only free-lovers and Infidels now who dare speak. I ask has not the honest, outspoken free-lover any rights the sneaking hypocritical de-bauchee is bound to respect? Has not the honest, outspoken Infidel any rights the long-faced, high-salaried clergy, and the Y. M. C. A. are bound to respect? In all sincerity I ask these questions and urge every Freethinker to look the matter square in the face and ponder seriously upon the subject. ZUBA.

Uselessness of the Comstock Laws.

NORWICH, CONN., Jan. 19th, 1878.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Last evening I forwarded to you, through the politeness of our esteemed friend, the eloquent young speaker and reformer L. N. Goodell, the petition to Congress for the repeal or modification of that, perhaps well-intended, statute, enacted ostensibly for the purpose of suppressing the transmission of objectionable matter through the mails, &c., and which is now being prostituted to the vile purpose of degrading purely scientific medical works on anatomy and sexual physiology, and also classical prints of statuary, &c., which are admired by all lovers of art, to the level of that pernicious trash known as "obscene literature."

I am informed by eminent clergymen, and others of this city, that the statute alluded to, as applied to that class of matter which it was specially designed to suppress, has signally failed in that respect, since, as has recently transpired, the students in our academies and female seminaries are still being supplied with that corruptive literature. It is evident that unscrupulous persons, through prospective gain, still find means of subverting or evading the law. While on the other hand, under its stringent provisions, honorable law-abiding citizens who are engaged in the laudable undertaking of disseminating useful knowledge to instruct youth in the way of truth and purity of purpose and warn them against pernicious practices and vicious habits which so surely enervate and debase the human form, are subject to arrest, heavy fines, and imprisonment under the misapplication of this law.

This indiscriminating statute seems to class the noble souls who are devoting their lives to the moral, intellectual, and physical advancement of the human race in the same category with depraved debauchees who pander to sexual vice and immorality, stigmatizes their reputation as unscrupulous traffickers in obscenity, and condemns them to prison with graceless felons to serve out the merciless sentence of an oppressive law, the operation of which has proved a disgrace to an intelligent people.

In practice, this statute seems to have stultified itself, since the legitimate result of its operation proves the reverse of its probable intention—viz: the promotion of morality—for while evidently ineffectual in its ostensible object, it has only proved successful in suppressing scientific knowledge upon the most important subject connected with human existence—physiological information, which alone can safely insure youth against the baneful influence of trashy literature which, sooner or later, is sure to be obtruded upon their attention.

I have yet to meet the man who will admit that he could be morally contaminated by the contemplation of lascivious prints or obscene publications, from the fact that he considers himself "posted" on the subject, and is well aware of the fearful consequences attendant upon immoral practices.

Then let us remove the false stigma of "obscenity" from physiological instruction, and allow children through its guileless teachings to become "wise unto salvation" that, by being forewarned they may avoid the baneful influences and degrading habits of mistaught youth, and semi-idiotic, abortive specimens of humanity who have become physically and mentally enervated—emasculated through the pernicious effects of early vices—and who seek to impress upon the plastic mind of childhood the idea that they are considered as nothing but babies until they can produce the tangible evidence of manhood, as illustrated by the demoralizing practices of older transgressors. And in the unnatural strife to emulate manhood's distinctive condition, the immature organs are prematurely excited and stimulated to abnormal growth and action which results in a precocious unfoldment of sexuality with all its concomitant evils.

The policy of withholding knowledge of these important matters from children, under the absurd impression that such a course is proper, has been pursued until, through ignorance of inevitable consequences, and the instigation of base example, the pernicious practice of sexual abuse has become alarmingly prevalent, and fond parents well may tremble while contemplating the fearful dangers which environ the pathway of their little ones.

Then let us anticipate and forestall the contaminating influence of vile publications, and the pernicious example of unfortunate victims of vicious habits, through timely instruction.

The more intelligent people desire that truth shall be set free, and allowed to besiege the grand citadel of ignorance and error—the final stronghold of "total depravity!"—and they propose to discountenance the use of obnoxious epithets as applied to classical works of art and instruction upon anatomy and sexual physiology, whose mission is to redeem a degenerate race by educating children as well as parents in the inexorable laws of their own being, and teach them to shun physiological transgression and its attendant misery, and provide the forceps of knowledge which shall deprive the vile serpent of "obscenity" of his venomous fang and neutralize its insidious poison as he seeks to enfold the innocent heart of youth in his loathsome embrace!

The petition is endorsed by one hundred and seventy-three signatures, and is a good representative list of the best citizens of this city, and could I have circulated the document a few more days, the number of signatures might have been almost limitless, since nearly all of the most intelligent people, to whom its object was explained, expressed their hearty approval of the measure.

Yours in truth, BYRON BOARDMAN.

P. S. Geo. P. Wright says, "I have signed this petition for the reason that under the provisions of the statutes to be repealed, modified, or defined, the Holy Bible would be liable to be prosecuted as an obscene book."

LISBON, IOWA, Jan. 22, 1878.

MR. BENNETT: I see in your paper of Jan. 19, that Comstock's accomplice, Joseph W. Britton, is a Jew by birth. I feel disgraced that the Jews should produce such a contemptible character, and also that he signed his name Joseph Levy. That corresponds well with my name, but happily I am a resident of Lisbon, Iowa, and I have not been in New York for thirteen years. So the readers of your paper in our vicinity will not mistake me in being Anthony Comstock's accomplice. Fraternally yours,

JOSEPH LEVY.

FORT LEE, N. J., Jan. 27, 1878.

MR. D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: J. K. Ingalls and William Rowe are right, and Margaret Chappellsmith is wrong. Macdonald's attack on the workingmen's many children is an ill-mannered insult to humanity. Shame to such an ignorant pen, insulting the producing class. Does that Macdonald not know that there is room enough for ten times more of us in our country?

Margaret Chappellsmith's sentiments are those of nearly all the city papers; what is the use of it in THE TRUTH SEEKER? There is not a single line of truth in that long epistle, "The Effect on Wages of Bland's Silver Bill." Mrs. Chappellsmith says: "There is not a demand for circulating medium." What nonsense, when the fact is proved by statistics that we have need of four times as much as is now in circulation. "The world produces more than can be sold at a profit." Bigger nonsense yet! Think of the want, misery, starvation, now in our midst. Produce markets are overstocked, dealers can't sell with a profit." Because, dear Margaret Chappellsmith, there are three million tramps. "Irredeemable paper money is mischievous." Why? Go ask the French; they tried it just now, and say, No! "The silver bill is mainly designed for the traffickers' profit." Profit, now, three times! If the dealers in produce must have profits, why are you jealous about profits for the producers of silver?

Dear Margaret Chappellsmith! you forget to mention the class taking the most profits of our country, the bondholders. They paid forty cents for a dollar, and want their interest in gold, and want gold for their paper. If our stamp is good on those bonds, will it not be the same on greenbacks? We are able to feed the hungry all over the world, if they can pay. Let those who want foreign buffoonery, fix the standard of gold by themselves. Our redeemer is only the greenback. A. SEMMENDINGER.

BURLINGTON, IOWA, Jan. 27, 1878.

FRIEND BENNETT: On receipt of my sixth number of Payne's Age of Reason, I mailed the following postal card to Seth Wilbur:

"Having been taken in and done for when I subscribed for your paper, as undoubtedly many a better man has, never suspecting that it was a Y. M. C. A. Comstock outfit, I will now swallow the humiliation the best way I can, merely requesting that you will at once strike my name off your list."

This flank movement of Comstock's is a remarkably smart trick, and if this needy ——— Payne had not been on hand, Anthony would have found some other ——— to play the part of traitor in our camp. I "smelt a mice" with Payne's second number. Yours very truly, W. B.

WEST POINT, IOWA, Jan. 22, 1878.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir and Brother: I wrote you last summer, and if my memory serves me right, I mentioned the desperate financial condition of this place on account of the floods of the past two years. We have had a third year of the same kind, which renders our condition more desperate than before. Money is very scarce; people cannot pay their debts; many are suffering, and some of us are doing what we can to keep them from suffering more. You have a few friends in this place; better friends you have nowhere, although we have not assisted you pecuniarily. But we have held our little force in reserve, with a firm and steadfast resolution to back you with every dollar we are worth, and our lives if necessary, when the worst came. Your tribulations have been our tribulations, and none rejoice more than we to see you so well out of your thraldom. We certainly hope that no Liberal will diminish his exertions until that blackest of all blots upon the escutcheon of our nation—the odious Comstock laws—shall have been forever removed.

Number two of Payne's Age of Reason was sent me. I am sorry to see the disposition of its editor towards you. The course he is pursuing is calculated to do more injury to him than his paper will ever do good to the cause. The worst mistake a man can make in business is to attempt to build up his own prosperity by breaking down his competitors. The covering with which Mr. Payne attempts to hide his designs is too thin. No one can fail to see through it. I regret that he has chosen the course he has. It will ruin his paper, and may injure the cause of Freethought. I should be glad to see every Liberal paper prosper, and would have taken the Age of Reason myself, and tried to have got others to subscribe for it, had it not taken this unwise course. On account of the hard times and the cheapness of the paper, I could have obtained several subscribers but for the objection mentioned. Enclosed find P. O. order for ten dollars with which to renew my subscription. My time is not out, but I want to begin with the year. Charles Eichhorn renews his subscription for one year, beginning with the year. A. Rabe, a new subscriber, wishes also to begin with the year. The remaining one dollar place to my credit. I wish you would also send the paper to Elias Lavee, of this place. He was the first to introduce it here. He is getting to be quite old, has had the misfortune to lose one of his legs, has a family to maintain, is poor but honest, and through the pressure of the times was obliged to give up THE TRUTH SEEKER. I will see that by the end of the year you get your money. Please send me the "Champions of the Church," "Analysis of Religious Belief," Thomas Paine's "Age of Reason," and the first number of the "Holy Cross" Series. Send bill and I will remit in a few days.

Yours truly, J. W. MOREMAN, M. D.

It is statute law that makes children "illegitimate."

"A bastard shall not enter the congregation of the Lord; to the tenth generation shall he not enter the congregation of the Lord." Deut. xxiii, 2.

What virtue in hiring ministers to save souls, when it is utterly impossible for the combined force to even save one with statute laws like our own—long ago imported—which annul even the "Divine plan of Salvation."

Under our laws, not a human being in Christendom can ever enter the congregation of the Lord; for not one can trace his title clear to the tenth generation.

Could the community realize the full import of the above, it would seem that no time would be lost in removing the disability for the protection of future generations.

M. U. F.

NEW HAVEN, Jan. 26, 1878.

DEAR BROTHER BENNETT: Enclosed please find $13.00. Three to be applied on my subscription to TRUTH SEEKER for the current year, and ten dollars to redeem my pledge made some time ago, to aid in your defense. I am happy to congratulate you on your freedom, and hope you may long live to fight the battles waged against free speech and the freedom of the press. Yours for the cause of Truth and Humanity, L. F. JOHNSON.

Laws of Life and Health.

Nursing the Sick.

Whoever has charge of a sick person should have authority to protect him from the detrimental influences of unguarded conversation. If visitors will not conduct their conversation so that it does not harm, somebody should manage for them. Physicians' efforts are often rendered unavailing, their hopes blasted, and the patient's life sacrificed by the intermeddling and unguarded conversation of visitors. Every community is blessed with several ignorant wiseacres who are always on hand with their advice when anybody is sick. They are always ready to draw upon their inexhaustible supply of knowledge, and are lavish in their prescriptions. Sometimes they wait till the medical attendant has announced the name of the disease, then they have got something "good for it." They often go so far as to furnish their own prescriptions, and force them down the patient's throat. Sometimes they will wait half an hour for the "doctor's medicine" to perform a miracle, and if it ain't done, then "I told you so." Something else must be done—they know what will do it—they have got an infallible remedy that cured old Aunt ——s sister's husband's niece's little boy when he was just so. The patient takes it, perhaps, and in all human probability "gets no better very fast;" then of course the "doctor don't know anything." These wiseacres are always on hand to interfere with whatever is being done, but are never there to take the responsibility of their acts. If the patient gets well, they cured him; but if he dies, the doctor killed him. It is a pity such individuals never get sick and have to employ a doctor, and then have the drug-clerk make a mistake in putting up the prescription.

Another set always have some discouraging story to tell for the patient's edification—how somebody died of such a disease, or that they were sick a long time before the doctors found out what was the matter, or it ran into some other disease—and all such yarns that discourage and annoy the patients, and thus retard their recovery. With all due regard to the patient, we consider that a physician is justified in abandoning any case when the friends and nurses permit such meddling, because the physician's reputation is jeopardized and the patient sacrificed; hence, we say, the nurse should be armed with proper authority to put a stop to such officiousness.

Many people will permit such meddling, even when they know it is injurious, because they don't want to offend the meddler. The question arises just here whether it is better to offend them and save the patient, or retain their friendship and lose the patient. One must be sacrificed. Which is worth the most?

PRACTICAL MEDICINE.—For lead colic, Dr. Laramie says, soak a piece of flannel in two ounces of chloroform and lay it over the bowels. Cover it with another piece wrung out of hot water. He says it relieves the pain at once, and all that is necessary after is to take a mild cathartic.

Useful Recipes.

FOUR WAYS TO MAKE YORKSHIRE PUDDING.—I. One cupful flour, pint of milk, two eggs; add a little salt, and mix into a batter; pour into the greased pan and bake under the beef; when nearly done remove the meat to brown the pudding; the eggs should be well beaten.—II. Mix five tablespoonfuls of flour with a quart of milk and three eggs well beaten; add a little salt, then pour into a buttered pan.—III. One quart of milk, six eggs, a little salt, and as much flour as will make a stiff batter; pour into a dripping-pan (meat pan,) putting a few pieces of dripping on it here and there; bake for one hour. In Yorkshire, where the meat turns on a spit in front of the fire, the pudding is placed underneath the beef, and receives the gravy as it drips.—IV. Put six heaping tablespoonfuls flour in a basin; stir in enough milk to make a smooth batter, rather stiff; add three well-beaten eggs, one teaspoonful salt, and some more milk, using in all one and a half pints; beat it well and pour it into a shallow tin rubbed with beef dripping; bake it an hour, and then place it under roasting meat to catch the dripping, or keep it in the oven for ten or fifteen minutes, basting it frequently with the beef juice and dripping which run out of the beef; a hot oven, well-beaten batter, and serving it quickly are the secrets of a good Yorkshire pudding.

RAISED BISCUIT.—Make a sponge of about a pint of milk or water, with a small piece of yeast-cake, or a penny's worth of baker's yeast at night; in the morning knead with a pint of milk, warmed, and half a cupful o butter and lard; knead very soft; let stand until light, then knead again; when light roll out, cut with a small glass, let stand for an hour in the pans; bake quickly.

TEA BISCUIT.—One quart of sifted flour, a little salt, three teaspoonfuls of royal baking powder, a small handful of powdered sugar; mix lightly through the flour; rub a large teaspoonful of lard through the dry mixture; mix with sweet milk, the colder the better, (it takes nearly a pint;) roll out soft, cut in any shape you wish, and bake in a very hot oven. If they are not white and light, the fault will be in your oven. The same receipt may be used for shortcake baked on the griddle. Another way.—One pint of sour milk or buttermilk, one teaspoonful of soda, dissolved in a very little hot water, two teaspoonfuls melted butter, flour enough to make a soft dough, but stiff enough to handle; mix, roll, and cut out rapidly with as little handling as possible. Bake in a quick oven.

The New Church Doctrine.

BY WILL CARLETON.

There's come a sing'lar doctrine, Sue,
Into our church to-day;
These cur'us words are what the new
Young preacher had to say:
That literal overlastin' fire
Was mostly in our eye;
That sinners dead, if they desire,
Can get another try;
He doubted if a warmer clime
Than this world could be proved;
The little snip—I fear some time
He'll get his doubts removed.

I've watched my duty, straight an' true,
An' tried to do it well;
Part of the time kept heaven in view,
An' part steered clear o' hell;
An' now half of this work is naught,
If I must list to him,
An' this 'ere devil I have fought
Was only just a whim;
Vain are the dangers I have braved,
The sacrifice they cost;
For what fun is it to be saved
If no one else is lost?

Just think!—Suppose, when once I view
The heaven I've toiled to win,
A lot of unsaved sinners, too,
Comes walkin' grandly in!
An' acts to home, same as if they
Had read their titles clear,
An' looks at me, as if to say,
"We're glad to see you here!"
As if to say, "While you have b'en
So fast to toe the mark,
We waited till it rained, an' then
Got tickets for the ark!"

Yet there would be some in that crowd
I'd rather like to see:
My poor boy Jack—it must be 'lowed
There was no worse than he!
I've always felt somewhat to blame,
In several different ways,
That he lay down on thorns o' shame
To end his boyhood's days;
An' I'd be willin' to endure,
If that the Lord thought best,
A minute's quite hot temperature
To clasp him to my breast.

Old Captain Barnes was evil's son—
With heterodoxy crammed;
I used to think he'd be the one
If any one was damned;
Still, when I saw a lot o' poor,
That he had clothed an' fed,
Cry desolately round his door
As soon as he was dead,
There came a thought beyond control,
That, in some neutral land,
I'd like to meet that scorched-up soul,
An' shake it by the hand.

Poor Jennie Willis, with a cry
Of hopeless, sad distress,
Sank sudden down, one night, to die,
All in her ball-room dress;
She had a precious little while
To pack up an' away;
She even left her sweet, good smile—
'Twas on the face next day;
Her soul went off unclothed by even
One stitch of saving grace;
How could she hope to get to heaven,
An' start from such a place?

But once, when I lay sick an' weak,
She came, an' begged to stay;
She kissed my faded, wrinkled cheek—
She soothed my pain away;
She brought me sweet bouquets of flowers
As fresh as her young heart—
Through many long an' tedious hours
She played a Christian part;
An' ere I long will stand aroun'
The singin' saints among,
I'll try to take some water down
To cool poor Jennie's tongue.

But tears can never quench my creed,
Nor smooth God's righteous frown,
Though all the preachers learn to read
Their Bibles upside down.
I hold mine right side up with care
To shield my eyes from sin,
An' coax the Lord, with daily prayer,
To call poor wanderers in;
But if the sinners won't draw nigh,
An' take salvations's plan,
I'll have to stand an' see 'em try
To dodge hell if they can.

Obituary.

DIED.—January 4, 1878, at the residence of EDW. NASH, in Milwaukee, of pneumonia, THOMAS PARKS, of Baraboo. Aged 73 years and 8 months.

Mr. PARKS had been for thirty years an avowed Infidel, according to the true definition of the word: A disbeliever in the Christian religion."

Though modest and unobtrusive in his demeanor in life, yet so firmly fixed was his theory that the Christian plan is altogether a vague chimera and pure hallucination that he objected to having his dead body the subject of its rites at his burial. Accordingly, he himself made provisions inhibiting his Christian interment by a compact with his friend Mr. Joseph Hawes, who consented to speak some words o'er his corpse and read a deliberate statement, written with his own hand, to assure the living that Thomas Parks died as he had lived—an honest, sincere Infidel. On his death-bed he calmly selected men of kindred views whom he desired to serve as his pall-bearers, as an earnest to those who knew him that there was no "death-bed repentance" in his case, as he had nothing to repent of.

Very many people—those attending the funeral and those who did not—have expressed a desire that the "Confession of Faith," and the remarks made in connection, be published. So this edition of the Obsequies is printed, with no apology for putting it forth among those who desire to read it.

BARABOO, WIS., Jan. 11, 1878.

EDITOR TRUTH SEEKER, Dear Sir: I enclose you pamphlet containing "Confession of Faith," funeral services, etc., of one of your subscribers and admirers, Thomas Parks. I am requested by those he left behind to say that the greatest trouble he had during his short illness was his anxiety respecting your persecution by that "man of God," Anthony Comstock. The last words that could be understood from his lips expressed the hope that you would come out all right, and that the day was not far distant when such a contemptible being as your prosecutor would be a thing of the past.

He was truly a good man, and thinking you might like to print his "Confession of Faith" some day is the reason of my sending it. J. HAWES.

P. S. Shall I be taxing your valuable time too much in asking you for a sentiment that I may read to the Liberals of Baraboo on the evening of the 29th, Thomas Paine's birthday, as we are going to celebrate it? J. H., Sec.

[We will publish the "Confession of Faith" in a future number—probably our next.—ED. T. S.]

George Francis Train.

Mr. Train holds himself responsible for the utterances here made and entirely exonerates the Editor from all responsibility therefor.

Train Tickles Himself and the Universe Laughs!

COMSTOCK'S PISTOL PRACTICING AT THE BAR!

MR. TRAIN NOT DISGUSTED.—THE TRUTH SEEKER DID NOT CUT THE WIRES.—BENNETT STILL FLIES THE FLAG OF INDEPENDENCE.—COMSTOCK RESORTETH TO REVOLVERS.—THE YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION'S AGENT FLOURISHETH FIREARMS IN OPEN COURT.—MRS. SLENKER'S APPRECIATION.—SAINT TONY, THE HYPOCRITE.—BIBLE MUNCHAUSENISM.—DEMONOLOGY SUICIDING.—GHOSTS GETTING THE GRIPES!

MADISON SQUARE, P. E. 48.

CITIZEN D. M. B.: Since cutting the wires in my postal, THE TRUTH SEEKER explains why Trainism was cut short! So I evolute again. The fact is, I thought you had gone back on me, when I had no right to think so! You were only firing your Comstock columbiad.

MADISON SQUARE, P. E 48.

CITIZEN D. M. B.: No proof Monday! No TRUTH SEEKER to-day! No note from D. M. B. Hence, I take it, it is all up with G. F. T.—at any rate we will consider it so. When my copy "goes a begging," the edge is off the knife. The cork is out the bottle. Unless it is prized more than any other except your own, the time has come to cut the wires. 'Tis always so.

Newton's dynamite burst Hell Gate! Mine has exploded Comstock!

Two papers (the Train Ligue) freed Woodhull! Five papers forced Lant out with Grant's pardon! One short talk in the Camden witness-box burst open Wilson's cell! And five articles in THE TRUTH SEEKER puts D. M. B. out of the courts! That ends it, so please send me up the ten packages of thunder-and-lightning copy you have, and consider THE TRUTH SEEKER in luck in having so good a fellow (who will always stand by you) in its columns as

G. F. T.

THE TRUTH SEEKER ON G. F. T.

"George Francis Train, it will be remembered, was arrested in 1873 by Comstock, on a charge of obscenity, and was thrown into the Tombs' damp, gloomy prison, where he lay in his close cell for six months. His offense consisted in publishing certain indecent passages from the Bible without a word of comment. It was evident that his accusers got ashamed of their conduct in arresting a highly intelligent man for publishing a limited number of extracts from the Bible in all their native purity. They wished to get him off their hands without a trial, but he refused to leave prison until duly tried and duly discharged. This they evaded. Finally, an order was issued from Albany to raze the unhealthy Tombs prison to the ground. Under this state of things, Mr. Train left the prison, after which nothing was done toward tearing down the Tombs. To keep a citizen in prison so long on so frivolous a charge is a disgrace to the Government and an outrage upon the rights of an American freeman."

True! most noble King Agrippa! But what are you going to do about it? Is anybody going to arrest the Bible Society for sending their "dung-box of legalized obscenity" through the mails for Christ's sake?

WHOLESALE COMSTOCKISM ADVERTISING.

"11. So likewise did George Francis Train sojourn for the space of six months in the Tombs of the Judges, because of the displeasure of Tony the Scarfaced, who did not like to have the epistles of Moses, Solomon, and Shakspere sent through the United States mails."—Saint Anthony, in the T. S.

What an immense amount of advertising this lilliputian Torquemada is getting through Bennettism in New York! Heywoodism in the witch-burning State! to say nothing of revolver-producing blackguardism in open court, or the Church temperance cases in the wooden-nutmeg region! But don't stop the avalanche! Don't repeal the bill! Let him pile up the agony! Comstockism is the power in Congress! The Benedict judges are more sought for than the Blatchfords! But the end is near! They have sown the wind; the whirlwind is not far off.

Mrs. Slenker says that "Train is unique, fresh, vigorous, and right, as well as prophetic and far-seeing."

True again. I do see the future. THE TRUTH SEEKERS are multiplying like mustard-seed!

THE COMSTOCK INQUISITION.

"Are the police of New York so busy keeping the dramshops closed that they cannot attend to the peddlers of obscene pictures who are driving a thriving trade among boys? They are to be found regularly on the street corners around the post-office, and their filthy pictures are shown to the young of both sexes. If Mr. Comstock is not too busily engaged in prying into private correspondence let him take a walk on Park Row, Nassau street, and Wall street. He will find plenty of legitimate and proper work to do."—N. Y. World.

What does Comstock care for polecats when he is hunting elephants? He wants Infidels, like Bennett! medical independents, like Dr. Foote! freethinking editors, like Heywood! Obscene pictures are not in his line. He is after bigger game. Now he is leading the Connecticut Church Crusaders with his little REVOLVER IN A COURT-ROOM.

"Anthony Comstock pushed Britton up on the platform, and, drawing a revolver, swung it in front of him, defying any man to arrest his detective. He was instantly confronted by a lot of determined young fellows, who ordered him to put up his weapon and be quiet. He did so. . . As Britton and Rosenthal were hurried to the train, hundreds of angry men accompanied them, but were prevented by the Sheriff and the special officers from making their meditated attempt at violence."—Sun.

Having lost the game with THE TRUTH SEEKER, he tried to prop himself up on blackguardism! Suppression of vice indeed! Drawing revolvers in presence of judges! Did Congress give him that power also in the "Obscene bill"?

THE BROBDIGNAGIAN MUNCHAUSENISM OF THE HOLY SCRIPTURES.

"The whole Christian Bible system rests upon a series of impossible miracles. The creation—making worlds, suns, and stars of nothing—was a miracle. The creation of every plant and every animal was a miracle. The formation of man from the dust of the ground and of woman from one of his ribs were miracles. The drowning of the world and all in it save one family was a huge miracle. The escape of Israel from Egypt and getting through the Red Sea were effected by wonderful miracles. The journeying of the Israelites through the wilderness, being sustained by daily showers of manna from heaven, was a continuous miracle of forty years' duration. Their entry into the promised land by the parting of the river Jordan was a miracle. The fabled stopping of the sun and moon for nearly a day was an immense miracle. So of the wars and carnage which Joshua prosecuted during his lifetime. The successes of Gideon, Jephthah, Samson, and nearly all the warrior chiefs who successively arose were the results of miracles, Unless the god of battles was with them and fought on their side, they were usually defeated. The killing of Goliah by the stripling David and his sling was a miracle."—TRUTH SEEKER Lecture.

Exactly! But why perpetuate those Bible lies by endless disputation? After a squabble of two thousand years, the miserable debate will go on so long as you keep up the discussion. Stop advertising the swindle! Drop the Anno Domini chronology. Wipe out the old fraud. Commence anew in the Psychologic Era! Are not our miracles of steam, gas, electricity, industrial exhibitions, telephones, ocean cables, big enough to talk about.

LET US SCATTER THE GHOSTS!

Man must destroy belief in another world before he can benefit this! Better eat your bread to-day than wait for meat on the morrow! Everything comes to those who wait, but no one should wait with the expectation of its coming. The workingman's wild love of humanity really means a rise in wages. If duty is happiness, why do people sigh so and wear such long faces when saying "I have done my duty"? Sin is a priestly fraud! There is no such thing as sin in nature!

Man must abolish religion, spirits, theology, soul, immortality, before he can evolute into chronic content.

Each man is a world in himself. Each woman the whole solar system! The massing of individuals constitutes public life. But each has his own orbit. Talking helps. Meetings assist. But Psychology alone controls. It took millions of years to develop steam and electricity, and now comes Psychology, which swallows both, and dwarfs all individual force in the Universe.

Dynamitic electricity is a mighty force, but Psychologic evolution discounts it. When Dom Pedro touched the Corliss engine, the sewing machine a quarter of a mile away began to use its fingers.

DEMONOLOGICAL SUICIDE.

The Vineland Independent wants "an honest man" for President in 1880. How would George Francis Train do, friend Wilbur?—Camden Post.

We are opposed to all kinds of trains except railroad trains upon which we have a free pass. By 1880 George Francis Train will be ineligible for President, as he is now a candidate for a position in all the lunatic asylums in the United States, and by that time he'll be elected without doubt. Besides, Train's honesty, like Dogberry's comparisons, is very "odorous," friend Bonsall. Lastly, we object to joking about the President business any more. We're fearfully in earnest, and are bound to elect our candidate in 1880 if it takes all summer.—Vineland Independent.

Please notice, Mr. Bennett, my evolution! This Vinelander calls me a lunatic and a thief! Yet I never injured him. The man who strikes a man's character without cause commits certain suicide. He does not mean what he says, but it kills him nevertheless. By and by it will be dangerous even to jibe on my status. The people will soon see that those who strike me strike the Universe!

G. F. T.

HE insulted me, assailed me, beat me, despoiled me—cherishing these things in the spirit, ill feeling is not allayed.

HE insulted me, assailed me, etc.—by refusing to harbor remembrance of this in the spirit, ill feeling is allayed.

THE MAGNETIC TREATMENT.

Send 25 cents to DR. ANDREW STONE, Troy, N. Y., and obtain a large, highly-illustrated book on the system of Vitalizing Treatment. Also The New Gospel of Health for $1.25, a masterly work on progressive medicine and healing by magnetism, 519 pages, illustrated with 120 cuts for personal manipulations, explanatory of the sublime science of healing without medicine. 1y5

SEEDS.

Best and Cheapest in America, or Money Refunded.

Buy direct from Grower, postage or express paid, and get fresh, true, and reliable seeds. I can and shall beat any firm in America in quality and low prices. Beautiful illustrated Seed Catalogues and Garden Guide free.

Address R. H. SHUMWAY,
1015 Seed Grower, Rockford, Ill.

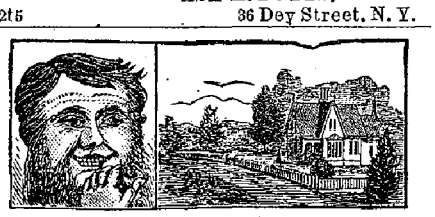
"THE STAR OF HOPE,"

A monthly paper, devoted to Liberal Communism and Labor Reform in general. Published by the Esperanza Community, Urbana, Neosha county, Kan. Specimen copy free. Send for it. 2t5

BROUGHTON'S INVIGORATING SYRUP 25 CTS

A certain cure for Headache, Constipation, Piles, Stomach, Liver or Kidney Diseases, Weakness, &c. 25 cents per bottle. Incurable cases solicited and cured or money refunded. The same ingredients put up in powders to be sent by mail. Sample bottle, circular, and 2615

Advice Free, 495 Broome St., N. Y.



MRS. ANNIE BESANT'S

FIRST LETTER TO "THE EVOLUTION" is in No. 17. A letter or an article by this gifted and beautiful Freethinker is expected for every number of The Evolution for 1878.

No. 17 also contains "Eccentricities of Genius in marriage," by Sara A. Underwood; "Sunday-schools," by T. P. Wilson, M. D.; "Law of Capital and Labor," by Prof. Watkins; "Protestantism and Science," by Prof. Grote. There are also two leaders on the Chinese Question, and other literary articles and reviews. Among the latter, "Isis Unveiled," and "The Kabbala."

The Evolution is 15 cents per number, $1.50 per year, with a $1.50 book to every new subscriber. Send 15 cents for No. 17, with list of 100 premiums. Address the publisher,

ASA K. BUTTS,
2t5 36 Dey Street, N. Y.

READER, that little cottage contains one of the choicest libraries in the country. I buy my books of J. FRANCIS RUGGLES, Bibliopole, Bronson, Mich. Rare O. P. works a specialty. Lists for stamp. 3m1

The Priest in Absolution,

The first Number of the "HOLY CROSS SERIES," is from the abridged London edition of the same work, which created so much excitement in England. The original volume was issued by the "High Church" authorities as a guide to the clergy in the confessional, and was designed to be introduced into the English Church. Price 25 cents.

D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth St., New York.

☞ The other twenty-five numbers of the "Holy Cross Series" are being brought out as rapidly as possible.

The Career of Religious Ideas;

THEIR ULTIMATE,

The Religion of Science.

BY HUDSON TUTTLE.

An able examination of the Religions of the World—the subjects treated as follows: Chap. I.—Introductory; Chap. II.—What is Religion? Chap. III.—Fetishism; Chap. IV.—Polytheism; Chap. V.—Monotheism; Chap. VI.—Value of Ancient Bibles; Chap. VII.—Man's Moral Progress Dependent upon his Intellectual Growth; Chap. VIII.—Theological Problems; Chap. IX.—Man's Fall; Chap. X.—Free Will, Necessity, Responsibility; Chap. XI.—Duties and Obligations of Man to God; Chap. XII.—The Ultimate of Religious Ideas.

Price, in paper, 50 cents; in cloth, 75 cents. Postage prepaid. D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth St. N. Y.

ATTENTION, LADIES!

THE BEST THING OUT.

An Excellent, non-Rusting, Durable Galvanized Iron Plater,

with directions for using the same, will be sent, post-paid, on receipt of $1.25, with order and address. E. D. BLAKEMAN,
Circleville, O.

Just Issued!

ANALYSIS OF RELIGIOUS BELIEF

BY VISCOUNT AMBERLEY.

Son of Lord John Russell, late Premier of England. A work of profound research, and just the thing for enquiring, thinking people. The lengthy and able article on

"JESUS CHRIST"

is worth four times the price of the work.

Republished, complete in one volume, from the London edition (2 vols., 8vo.), and at one-fifth the price. Cloth, $3 00; Leather, $4 00; Morocco, gilt edges, $4 50. Sent by mail at these prices.

D. M. BENNETT, Publisher,
141 Eighth st., New York.

BOOKS FOR THINKERS,

PUBLISHED BY

CHARLES P. SOMERBY, No. 139 Eighth Street, New York,
(A few doors East of Broadway.)

NATHANIEL VAUGHAN:

Priest and Man.

A NOVEL.

BY FREDERIKA MACDONALD,

Author of the "Iliad of the East," etc., etc.

1 Vol. Extra Cloth, beveled; 12mo, 400 pp. $1.50.

"An independent and respectable study of character in the law of circumstance such as even George Eliot might not have been ashamed to own as her first novel. . . A more vigorous presentment of the mischievous nature of modern Christianity, in its most honest and consistent form, need not be desired."—Westminster Review.

"There is much of power and of interest in this novel. The characters are set before us by a few graphic and able touches, not as puppets, but as living beings."—Pall-Mall Gazette.

"Power, eloquence and originality characterize 'Nathaniel Vaughan' to a degree very unusual among modern novels. The shipwreck of a noble nature has seldom been more tragically portrayed, while the painfulness of the situation is relieved by the exquisite attractiveness and ultimate felicity of the heroine, and the humor of the scenes of village life."—Illustrated London News.

"It is a really artistic composition, with a sound moral expressed, though not obtruded, on the canvas. . . . A very bold and trenchant attack on Orthodoxy, and the earnestness with which it is made throughout is not marred by the grace and humor with which its lighter passages are told."—Westminster Review.

Good Discounts on Orders of $5 and Upward, according to quantity. Send 10 cents for Prometheus containing 28 pp. [choice reading matter and a Full List of Liberal Publications; or for List only, Free.

CHARLES P. SOMERBY,
PUBLISHER, BOOKSELLER, IMPORTER, AND PRINTER,
139 EIGHTH ST., Bet. Broadway and Fourth Ave., NEW YORK.

FULL DESCRIPTION OF OTHER LIBERAL WORKS FROM TIME TO TIME. SEND FOR LIST.

READ OUR ADVERTISEMENTS EVERY WEEK, AS FREQUENT CHANGES WILL BE MADE.

JUST ISSUED.

BEYOND THE VEIL.

A very neat and entertaining volume, giving beautiful descriptions of life, occupations, etc., in the Spirit World. Dictated by the spirit of Percy B. Randolph, through the mediumship of Mrs. Francis H. McDougal and Mrs. Luna Hutchinson of California. With a steel-plate engraving of Dr. Randolph.

Price $1.50, post-paid by mail.

D. M. BENNETT
141 Eighth St., N. Y.

Christianity and Infidelity

A JOINT DISCUSSION BETWEEN

REV. G. H. HUMPHREY, Presb't'n. Clergyman,

OF NEW YORK. AND

D. M. BENNETT, Editor of The Truth Seeker.

It was conducted in the columns of The Truth Seeker, a letter alternately from each contestant appearing each week, beginning April 7, 1877, and closing Sept. 29, 1877, thus continuing just six months, giving thirteen letters from Humphrey and thirteen replies by Bennett.

The subjects discussed were as follows:

PART I.—The relative services of Christianity and Infidelity to American Liberty.

PART II.—The relative services of Christianity and Infidelity to Learning and Science.

PART III.—Is there a stronger probability that the Bible is divine than that Infidelity is true?

The discussion has excited a large share of interest, both among believers and unbelievers: and as both sides are fairly presented, it is suited to readers of all shades of opinion.

The New York Advocate, a paper having a very extensive circulation, in speaking of the volume, says, "Perhaps a more able and exhaustive presentation of both sides of the great questions which have agitated the civilized world for centuries has never been made. At any rate, in this volume will be found a perfect magazine or storehouse of arguments, pro and con, which every intelligent man and woman should peruse with candor and with an earnest desire to arrive at sound conclusions on themes of the highest importance to all mankind. . . Light is what we need. Let the controversies proceed. Let the blows descend upon the error-dispelling anvil. Let the sparks fly in all directions from the heated steel. The truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, is what the people demand on all the great questions of the day, whether of Finance, Science, Politics, or Religion, and discussion will elicit it." Let every person who feels the slightest interest in theological questions, whether on one side or the other, read the Humphrey-Bennett Discussion.

A thick 12mo volume of 580 pages, well bound sent, post-paid, to any address, for the low price of one dollar.

Address D. M. BENNETT, Publisher
141 Eighth St., New York.

ASTROLOGY.

PROF. LISTER, Astrologer, 505 W. 23d st., New York. 44 years' practice, 27 in Boston. Can be consulted by letter. Send for Circular. Address all letters 505 West 23d st., New York City.

THE OUTCAST.

By WINWOOD READE author of "Martyrdom of Man."

This is his last work. Mr. Reade was unquestionably one of the ablest writers of the present century. His "Martyrdom of Man" attracted extraordinary attention in Europe and in this country, for its ability, brilliancy and boldness. This last work is regarded with equal favor. The English edition was published at two dollars. We give it entire for

THIRTY CENTS IN PAPER.

DR. R. P. FELLOWS'

TRADE MARK

WARRANTED

CURE FOR SPERMATORRHŒA

should be in the hands of those suffering from this LIFE-WASTING DISEASE. It is an external application, and has thoroughly and permanently cured over one thousand cases, and some of them were in a terribly shattered condition; had been in the insane asylums, many had falling-sickness-fits; others on the verge of consumption, while others again had become foolish and hardly able to take care of themselves. For further information, address, with stamp, Vineland, N. J., where DR. FELLOWS is permanently located, and obtain his private circular, with cures sworn to, which is unimpeachable testimony to the doctor's skill and reliability as a physician in treating this prevalent and most dangerous of all diseases. SPERMATORRHŒA. 1tf

☞ TERMS WITHIN THE REACH OF ALL. ☜

BOOK BUYERS,

And all who wish to subscribe to periodicals should send 15 cents for No. 16 of The Evolution. Address

THE EVOLUTION, 34 Dey Street, N. Y.

THE COUNCIL FIRE.

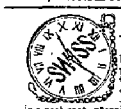
Furnished with fuel by both White Men and Red. A paper of intense interest—History, Legend, Tradition, Indian Policies, Causes of Wars, Massacres, etc. Only paper of the kind. Hon. A. B. Meacham, ex-Supt. Indian Affairs, Editor. Monthly, 16 pages; $1.00 per year. Samples 10 cents. Address Council Fire, Box 1949, Philadelphia, Pa. 3t2

DO YOU WANT Books, Cards, Prints, Chromos, Photographs, Albums, Gold Pens, Pencils, Paper, Stationery, Knick-knacks, Notions, Novelties of every description? Beware of unreliable dealers—avoid risk—send only to the old, original and only "HEADQUARTERS." Established, 1850. We originated what is now an enormous trade. We import books weekly. Supply all Scientific, Legal, Medical, scarce, foreign and other books not often to be obtained—in fact, supply ANYTHING AND EVERYTHING in the Book or any other line. Our large store has four floors crowded with cords of books on every known subject, and all offered very low. CATALOGUES FREE. Information given. Send stamp, and send now. Address, HUNTER & CO., PUBLISHERS, HINSDALE, N. H.

THE TRUTH SEEKER COLLECTION

OF

FORMS, HYMNS, AND RECITATIONS.



Forms for organizing Societies, Forms for Constitutions and By-laws, for Funeral Services, Marriage Services, Naming of Infants, Obituary Notices, Epitaphs, Wills, etc. Also, nearly 500 Liberal and Spiritualistic Hymns, original and selected; for Public Meetings, Funerals, Social Gatherings, etc., etc. The whole supplemented by a fine selection of Recitations, comprising many of the finest poetical gems in the language. Nearly 600 pages, at the extremely low price of 75 cents in cloth. The price is made low, so that every family can have a copy. Let none fail to have it. D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth St., New York.

YES YES WE WANT an agent in every town. Easy work at home. Write now and we will start you. $3 a day sure to all. SIMPSON & SMITH, 60 Cortlandt St., N. Y. 3t5

RIFLES, SHOT-GUNS, REVOLVERS, sent C. O. D. for examination, all charges paid. No risk; no humbug. Write for catalogue. Address GREAT WESTERN GUN WORKS, Pittsburgh, Pa. 6mo27

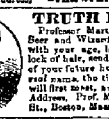
$12 A DAY at home. Agents wanted. Outfit and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Maine. 1y50

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. H. HALLELT & CO., Portland, Maine. 1y50

TRUE 10,000 SOLD. The GENUINE Swiss Magnetic COMPASS, INDICATOR AND TIME-KEEPER. TIME. A perfect GEM for the pocket of every traveller, sailor, boy, farmer, and for EVERYBODY desiring a reliable Time-Keeper and also a superior Compass. Usual watch size, steel works, glass crystal, all in a neat CHROME case. Perfection guaranteed. WARRANTED to denote correct time and to keep in order—if fairly used—for two years. Nothing like it! This perfect triumph of mechanism will be sent in a neat case, prepaid to any address, for only $1.00; 2 for $2.00. Circulars sent free. BEWARE of a "bogus" article offered as a "premium." —Get the BEST.—Get the Genuine. Send all orders to the sole Agents, J. J. KING & CO., Brattleboro', Vt.

HISTORY OF THE CONFLICT BETWEEN RELIGION AND SCIENCE. Truly one of the most valuable works that have appeare within the last ten years. By PROF. DRAPER. Price, $1.75.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. STINSON & CO., Portland, Maine. 11



PRO AND CON OF SUPERNATURAL RELIGION; or an answer to the question, Have we a Supernaturally-Revealed, Divinely-Inspired and Miraculously-Attested Religion in the World? By E. E. GUILD, ex-Universalist clergyman. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

"IT STILL WAVES!" The old, original, and only "STAR SPANGLED BANNER," the "FAMILY FAVORITE" and home paper for THE MILLION. Established, 1865. There's nothing like it. Old and young, rich and poor, saint and sinner,—it wears for ALL. It is a large 40-column, 8 page paper, crowded with charming Tales, Sketches, Stories, Poems, Wit, Humor, Fun, Recipes, Puzzles, Humorous Poems, etc., etc. In it "ROGUE'S CORNER," every Swindler, Quack, Humbug, and Fraud is fully, freely, and truthfully exposed. No one can be swindled who reads the "BANNER." 100,000 people read and rely upon this National Paper. TRY IT ONCE AND NOW. Only 75 cents a year, or with Premium of SIX Charming Chromos, or a fine Dictionary, 768 pages, only $1. Trial Trip, three months, 15 cents. Specimens FREE. Don't put it off but SEND NOW. Address, "STAR SPANGLED BANNER," Hinsdale, N. H.

TRUTH IS MIGHTY! Professor Martinez, the great Spanish Seer and Wizard, will for 25c. (coin), with your age, height, color of eyes and lock of hair, send to you a correct picture of your future husband or wife, initials of real name, the time and place where you will first meet, and the date of marriage. Address, Prof. MARTINEZ, 42 Province St., Boston, Mass. This is no humbug!

THE POSITIVE THINKER,

Owned and published by the New York Liberal Publishing Company, in Science Hall Building, No. 141 Eighth street, near Broadway. G. L. Henderson and H. B. Brown, editors, is an eight-page family newspaper, devoted to the three greatest human interests—True or Positive Thought, Industry, Improved and Happy Homes. It will advocate the Religion of Humanity, showing that, though there are many churches and sects, there is but One Religion; that, when separated from Superstition and based on the solid rock of Science—leaving the barren fields of negation, doubt, the unknown and the unknowable to metaphysicians and theologians—will, when properly presented, unite mankind everywhere, furnish instruction to young and old, teaching the true, in order to do the right—giving instruction and guidance from the cradle to the grave. The "Positive Thinker" is not the organ of any society, sect or party. It assumes the responsibility of all its utterances. It hopes to find many readers within as well as outside the churches. It will do more to present what is true than to ridicule what is false; to affirm rather than deny; build than destroy; to replace faith by convictions—and particularly labor to make this world better and man happier. The first few numbers will appear monthly, until our subscribers learn its value, after which it will be issued weekly. Price per annum $1.50; six months 75 cents; three months 40 cents. To clubs of five $5; to clubs of ten, and one to getter up of club, $10, postage free. Send for sample numbers. Address the POSITIVE THINKER, Science Hall Building, No. 141 Eighth St., New York. 3-t-4

WILL BE READY IN A FEW DAYS,

The Popes and Their Doings.

NO. 3 OF THE "HOLY CROSS SERIES."

Being brief stories of fully one hundred and fifty of the conspicuous and sinful Popes—the Vicars of Christ and Vicegerents of God—who filled the chair of the Holy See in Rome during several centuries. The cheapest and most popular history of the Popes ever written. A friend styles it "rich, rare and racy." 273 pp., 12mo. Sent by mail at the very low price of 50 cents in paper; 75 cents in cloth.

Address D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth St., N. Y.

COOKE UPON COOK.—Rev. GEORGE vs. REV. JOSEPH. An Exhaustive Review of the Sensation Lectures. See THE EVOLUTION. No. 16.

Gems of Thought.

BETTER to be unborn, than untaught; for ignorance is the root of misfortune.—Plato.

IGNORANCE is the night of the mind, but a night without moon or stars.—Confucius.

MANHOOD is the attainment of knowledge of self-helpfulness and the power and disposition to help others.—W. S. Bell.

FEAR inspires men with religious sentiments and manhood delivers him from his fears, and also from his religion.—W. S. Bell.

WHOSOEVER is out of patience is out of possession of his soul. Men must not turn bees, and kill themselves in stinging others.—Bacon.

I FEEL my immortality oversweep all pains, all tears, all time, all fears,—and peal, like the eternal thunders of the deep, this truth,—thou livest forever!—Byron.

THERE is something very sublime, though very fanciful, in Plato's description of the Supreme Being; that "truth is his body and light his shadow."—Addison.

FROM prehistoric times the human race has been under the control of ignorance and fear; but science has given knowledge, and knowledge has given courage.—W. S. Bell.

THE faults of others are easily seen, one's own difficult to see: other's faults one lays open as much as possible, his own he hides, as a cheat hideth the bad die from the gambler.—Buddha.

GOD the Father judges mankind worthy of his eternal wrath; God the Son judges them worthy of infinite mercy, and God the Holy Ghost remains neutral. How does this Catholic verbiage agree with the unity of the divine will.

PLATO considered the Divinity under three aspects, those of goodness, wisdom, and power. We must shut our eyes not to see in these the Trinity of the Christians. It was more than three thousand years back that the philosopher of Athens had called Logos, what we now call the verb.

IGNORANCE lies at the bottom of all human knowledge, and the deeper we penetrate, the nearer we arrive unto it. For what do we truly know, or what can we clearly affirm, of any one of those important things upon which all our reasonings must necessarily be built—time and space, life and death, matter and mind?—Cotton.

IT is no more possible for an idle man to keep together a certain stock of knowledge than it is possible to keep together a stock of ice exposed to the meridian sun. Every day destroys a fact, a relation or an influence: and the only method of preserving the bulk and value of the pile is by constantly adding to it.—Sydney Smith.

I CAN wonder at nothing more than how a man can be idle,—but of all others, a scholar,—in so many improvements of reason, in such variety of studies, in such importunity of thoughts. To find wit in poetry; in philosophy, profoundness; in history, wonder of events; in oratory, sweet eloquence,—and so many rich metals in their proper mines—whom would it not ravish with delight.—Hall.

WHEN the stiffened body goes down into the tomb, sad, silent, remorseless,—I feel there is no death for the man. That clod which yonder dust shall cover is not my brother. The dust goes to its place, man to his own. It is then I feel my immortality. I look through the grave into heaven. I ask no miracle, no proof, no reasoning for me. I ask no risen dust to teach me immortality. I am conscious of eternal life.—Theodore Parker.

WOMAN, your mission is the loftiest which belongs to humanity. In the capacity of mother alone you have more influence than you can measure; for "she that rocks the cradle rocks the world." Thine it is to achieve victories in comparison with which those of Semiramis, Xenobia, and Joan D'Arc are small. Laurels are thine in comparison with which those of Cæsar and Alexander fade away. It is thine to preside over the destiny of gems in comparison with which those of Golconda and Peru lose their lustre. Thrones may crumble, crowns will fade, and the lofty pillars and monuments of ancient grandeur must wither and decay, but the monuments ye rear shall stand when the proud cities that man's hand hath reared shall be the abode of the vampire and the noisome reptile. Woman, your mission is a glorious one, and I beseech of you, struggle to free yourselves from the silken meshes which have so long entangled your aspiring souls.—Dr. Sara. B. Chase.

DEATH is just as natural as life, and just as simple, beautiful, and painless. The disease that sometimes foreruns it may cause pain, but at the last death seems like a sweet, gentle sleep, and for us all is ended and we are not! Very few dread death when they realize what it actually is. The false teachings concerning it, and the uncertain future which was supposed to be our lot, made it terrible to many, but to the thinker, in the idea of death there is nothing to fear or dread. He grieves to part from dear ones, to give up the precious and beautiful things he loves; but knowing it must be, he does not mourn or repine at the inevitable. He feels that he has lived a happy and useful life, enjoyed his days in all the fulness and completeness possible for him, and is willing to "step down and out" when the great flat comes, and make room for those who are to follow after and succeed him. Our only future is the future of our race.—Elmina D. Slenker.

Odds and Ends.

SPRING openings: rat-traps. Fall openings: chestnut-burrs.

A MAN born to command is different from one made to order.

RED CLOUD wants the pockets of his tribe to have a silver lining.

THE stove dealers ought to fetch out a Creedmoor range for this winter's market.

SOMEBODY advertises in a daily paper for a servant girl "who would not be above placing herself on an equality with the rest of the family."

A MAN declares that it is impossible for him to keep out of trouble, for in the best of times his business drives him to the wall. He is a bill poster.

"WHAT will become of the last man?" says a scientific exchange. Why, manufacturing shoes by machinery is knocking him out of the business.

ON being asked what he thought fire-flies were made for, a little boy answered, "I think God made them for candles to light the little frogs to bed."

A LADY has just been appointed principal of a high school we know of. From which it is fair to assume that the motto of the trustees is "Principals, not men."

MR. SMITH, who has to lug a scuttle of coal up stairs three times a day, reads with prospective joy the announcement that the coal fields of the world will be exhausted in two thousand years.

"How much are those tearful bulbs by the quart?" asked a maiden of a tradesman the other morning. He stared at her for a moment as if bewildered, but soon recovered himself, and bluffly answered: "Oh, them inyuns? Ten cents."

A FARMER having cattle trespassing upon his grass fields posted up the following: "Notis—If any man's or woman's cows or oxen gets in these here otes, his or her tail will be cut off as the case may be. I am a Christian and pa mi taxes, but darn a man who lets his critters run luse, say I."

A ST. LOUIS paper tells a story of a disconsolate widower who, on seeing all that was mortal of his late wife lowered into the grave, exclaimed, with tears in his eyes: "Well, I've lost gloves, I've lost umberellas—yes even colts and horses; but I never—no, never—had anything cut me like this."

"CAPTAIN," said a fashionable lady to an old-fashioned naval officer who stood up to go through a country dance with her without gloves, "Captain, perhaps you are not aware that you have no gloves on?" "O, never mind, ma'am," answered the Captain; "never mind, I can wash my hands when we've done."

TWO FRIENDS, just married, were discussing rapturously, as they congratulated each other, the merits and charms of their spouses. Said one: "My wife has got the loveliest head of hair I ever saw, even on the hair-renovator labels. When she lets her hair down the ends fall to the floor." "That's nothing," replied the other; "when my wife lets her hair down it all falls to the floor."

A HOUSEKEEPER'S TRAGEDY.

One day as I wandered, I heard a complaining.
And saw a poor woman, the picture of gloom;
She glared at the mud on her doorstep ('twas raining),
And this was her wail as she wielded the broom:

"Oh! life is a toil, and love is a trouble,
And beauty will fade and riches will flee;
And pleasures they dwindle, and prices they double,
And nothing is what I could wish it to be.

"There's too much of worriment goes to a bonnet;
There's too much of ironing goes to a shirt;
There's nothing that pays for the time you waste on it;
There's nothing that lasts but trouble and dirt.

"In March it is mud; it's slush in December;
The midsummer breezes are loaded with dust;
In fall the leaves litter; in muggy September
The wall-paper rots and the candlesticks rust.

"There are worms in the cherries, and slugs in the roses,
And ants in the sugar and mice in the pies,
The rubbish of spiders no mortal supposes,
And ravaging roaches and damaging flies.

"It's sweeping at six, and dusting at seven;
It's victuals at eight, and dishes at nine;
It's potting and panning from ten to eleven;
We scarce break our fast ere we plan how to dine.

"With grease and with grime, from corner to centre,
Forever at war and forever alert,
No rest for a day, lest the enemy enter—
I spend my whole life in a struggle with dirt.

"Last night, in my dreams, I was stationed forever
On a bare little isle in the midst of the sea;
My one chance of life was a ceaseless endeavor
To sweep off the waves ere they swept over me.

"Alas, 'twas no dream! Again I behold it!
I yield; I am helpless my fate to avert!"
She rolled down her sleeves, her apron she folded,
Then laid down and died, and was buried in dirt!

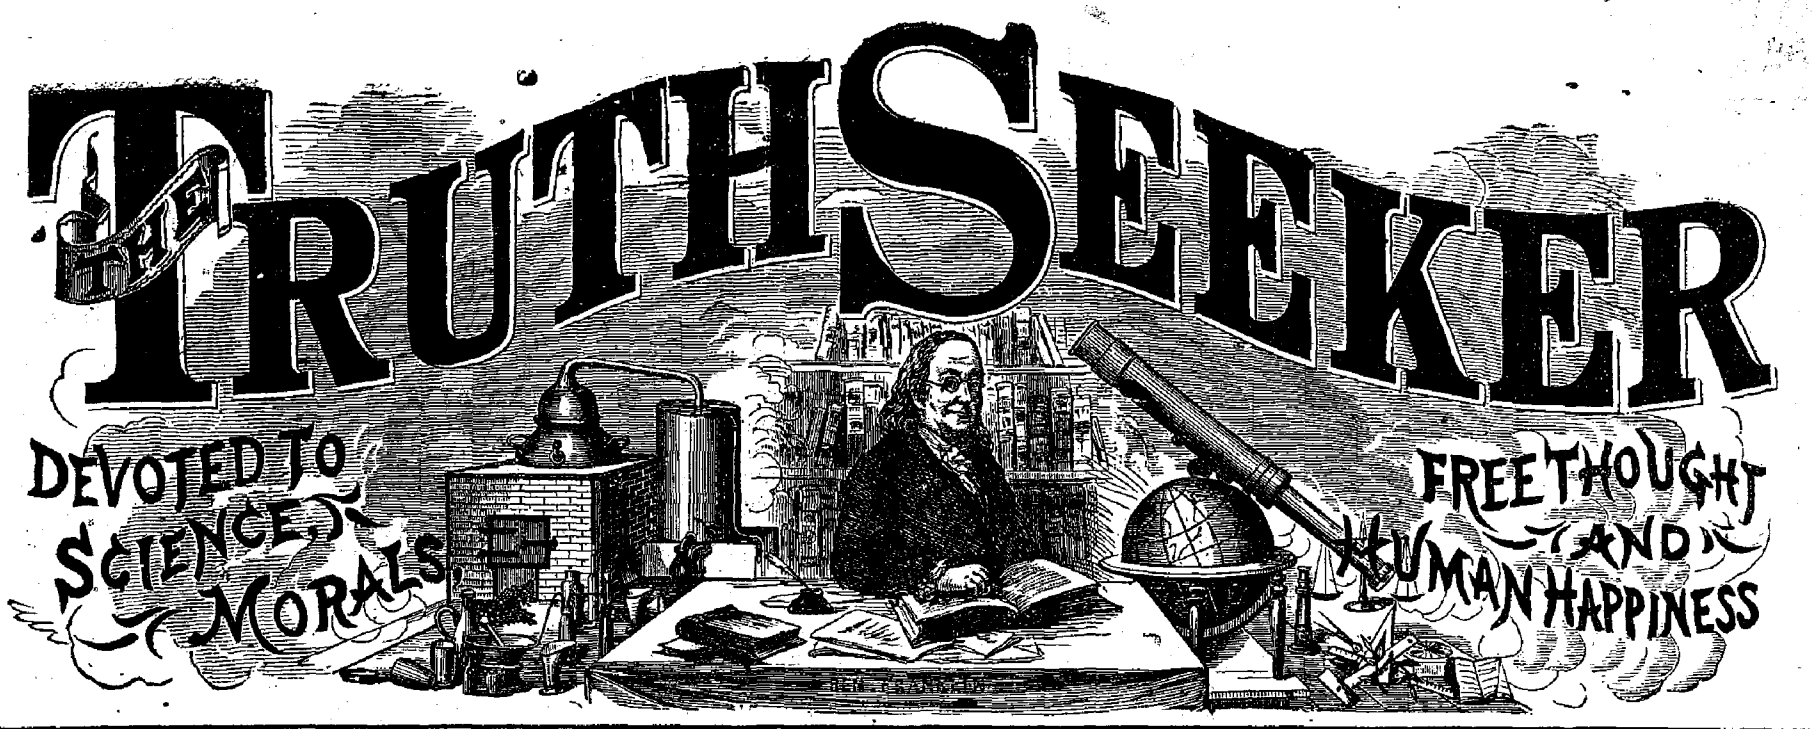
Truth Seeker Tracts.

No.	(REVISED LIST.)	Cts.
1.	Discussion on Prayer. D. M. Bennett and two Clergymen.	5
2.	Oration on the Gods. Ingersoll.	10
3.	Thomas Paine. "	5
4.	Arraignment of the Church. Ingersoll.	5
5.	Heretics and Heresies. "	5
6.	Humboldt. "	5
7.	The Story of Creation. Bennett.	5
8.	The Old Snake Story.	2
9.	The Story of the Flood.	5
10.	The Plagues of Egypt.	2
11.	Korah, Datham, and Abiram. nnett.	2
12.	Balaam and his Ass. "	2
13.	Arraignment of Priestcraft. "	3
14.	Old Abe and Little Ike. Syphers.	3
15.	Come to Dinner. "	2
16.	Fog Horn Documents. "	2
17.	The Devil Still Ahead. "	2
18.	Slipped Up Again. "
19.	Joshua Stopping the Sun and Moon. D. M. Bennett.	5
20.	Samson and his Exploits. Bennett.	2
21.	The Great Wrestling Match. "	2
22.	Discussion with Elder Shelton. "	10
23.	Reply to Elder Shelton's Fourth Letter. D. M. Bennett.	3
24.	Christians at Work. Wm. McDonnell.	5
25.	Discussion with Geo. Snode. Bennett.	5
26.	Underwood's Prayer.	1
27.	Honest Questions and Honest Answers. D. M. Bennett.	5
28.	Alessandro di Cagliostro. C. Sotheran.	10
29.	Paine Hall Dedication Address. B. F. Underwood.	2
30.	Woman's Rights & Man's Wrongs. Syphers.	2
31.	Gods and God-houses. "	2
32.	The God's of Superstition and the God of the Universe. D. M. Bennett.	3
33.	What has Christianity Done? Preston.	3
34.	Tribute to Thomas Paine. "	2
35.	Moving the Ark. D. M. Bennett.	1
36.	Bennett's Prayer to the Devil.	2
37.	Short Sermon. Rev. Theologicus. D.D.	1
38.	Christianity not a Moral System. X. Y. Z.	3
39.	The True Saint. S. P. Putnam.	3
40.	Bible of Nature vs. The Bible of Men. J. Syphers.	3
41.	Our Ecclesiastical Gentry. Bennett.	1
42.	Elijah the Tishbite. "	3
43.	Christianity a Borrowed System. "	3
44.	Design Argument Refuted. Underwood.	2
45.	Elisha the Prophet. Bennett.	3
46.	Did Jesus Really Exist? "	3
47.	Cruelty and Credulity of the Human Race, Dr. Daniel Arter.	5
48.	Freethought in the West. G. L. Henderson.	5
49.	Sensible Conclusions. E. E. Guild.	3
50.	Jonah and the Big Fish. D. M. Bennett.	1
51.	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 1.	5
52.	Marples-Underwood Debate, Underwood.	3
53.	Questions for Bible Worshipers. B. F. Underwood.	2
54.	An Open Letter to Jesus Christ, Bennett.	5
55.	The Bible God Disproved by Nature. W. E. Coleman.	3
56.	Bible Contradictions.	1
57.	Jesus Not a Perfect Character. Underwood.	2
58.	Prophecies.	2
59.	Bible Prophecies Concerning Babylon. B. F. Underwood.	2
60.	Ezekiel's Prophecies Concerning Tyre. B. F. Underwood.	2
61.	History of the Devil. Isaac Paden.	5
62.	The Jews and their God. "	10
63.	The Devils Due-Bills. John Syphers.	3
64.	The Ills we Endure—their Cause and Cure. D. M. Bennett.	2
65.	Short Sermon No. 2. Rev. Theologicus. D.D.	2
66.	God Idea in History. H. B. Brown.	5
67.	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets No. 2.	5
68.	Ruth's Idea of Heaven and Mine. Susan H. Wixon.	2
69.	Missionaries. Mrs. E. D. Slenker.	2
70.	Vicarious Atonement. J. S. Lyon.	3
71.	Paine's Anniversary. C. A. Codman.	3
72.	Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego. D. M. Bennett.	2
73.	Foundations. John Syphers.	3
74.	Daniel in the Lion's Den. Bennett.	2
75.	An Hour with the Devil. "	10
76.	Reply to Erastus F. Brown. D. M. Bennett.	3
77.	The Fear of Death. D. M. Bennett.	5
78.	Christmas and Christianity. D.M.Bennett.	5
79.	The Relationship of Jesus, Jehovah, and the Virgin Mary. W. E. Coleman.	2
80.	Address on Paine's 139th Birthday. Bennett.	5
81.	Hereafter, or the Half-way House. John Syphers.	1
82.	Christian Courtesy. Bennett.	2
83.	Revivalism Examined. Dr. A. G. Humphrey.	5
84.	Moody's Sermon on Hell. Rev. J. P. Hoppa, London.	2
85.	Matter, Motion, Life and Mind. Bennett.	10
86.	An Enquiry about God's Sons. "	2
87.	Freethought Judged by its Fruits. B. F. Underwood.	1
88.	David, God's Peculiar Favorite. Mrs. E. D. Slenker.	3
89.	Logic of Prayer. Charles Stephenson.	3
90.	Bible-Mania. Otter Cordates.	2
91.	Our Ideas of God. B. F. Underwood.	1
92.	The Bible; is it Divinely Inspired? Dr. D. Arter.	5
93.	Obtaining Pardon for Sins. Hudson Tuttle.	1
94.	The New Raven. Will Cooper.	5
95.	Jesus Christ. D. M. Bennett.	10
96.	Ichabod Crane Papers.	10
97.	Special Providences' W. S. Bell.	2
98.	Snakes. Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker.	2
99.	Do the Works of Nature prove a Creator? Sciota.	5
100.	The Old and the New. R. G. Ingersoll.	5
101.	110th Anniversary of Thomas Paine's Birthday. Bennett et als.	5
102.	The Old Religion and the New. W. S. Bell.	1
103.	Does the Bible Teach us all we Know. Bennet.	2
104.	Evolution of Isrsel's God. A. L. Rawson.	10
105.	Decadence of Christianity. Capphro.	2
106.	Franklin, Washington and Jefferson Unbelievers. Bennett.	2
107.	The Safe Side. H. B. Brown.	5
108.	The Holy Bible a Historical Humbug. S. H. Preston.	1
109.	Ghosts. Ingersoll, 4 pp.	5
110.	Materialistic Prayer. Bennett. 4 pp.	1
111.	Reply to Scientific American. Bennett.	1
112.	Sensible Sermon. Savage, 8 pp.	2
113.	Come to Jesus. Bennett. 8 pp.	2

SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

1.	Hereditary Transmission. Prof. Louis Elsberg, M.D.	5
2.	Evolution; from the Homogeneous to the Heterogeneous. B. F. Underwood.	3
3.	Darwinism. B. F. Underwood.	3
4.	Literature of the Insane. F. R. Marvin.	5
5.	Responsibility of Sex. Mrs. Chase, M.D.	3
6.	Graduated Atmospheres. J. McCarroll.	2
7.	Death. Frederic R. Marvin, M.D.	5
8.	How do Marsupial Animals Propagate their kind? A. B. Bradford.	5
9.	The Unseen World. Prof. John Fiske.	10
10.	The Evolution Theory — Huxley's Three Lectures.	10
11.	Is America the New World? L. L. Dawson.	10

Discount on one dollar's worth 10 per ct. off; on two dollars' worth 20 off; on five dollars' worth 40 off; on ten dollars' worth 50 off.



As few or as many of any given kind may be ordered as desired.

RADICAL BOOKS.

SENT POST PAID AT THE PRICES ANNEXED.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

Age of Reason. Paine. Paper covers.	25
" " " Cloth "	50
" " and Ex. of Proph. Paper 50; cl.	75
A Few Days in Athens. Frances Wright.	75
Apocryphal New Testament.	1 25
An Eye Opener. Paper, 50; cloth,	75
Antiquity of Christianity. Alberger.	25
Analysis of Religious Belief. Viscount Amberly. $3.00, 4.00, and	4 50
Apples of Gold. Susan H. Wixon.	1 50
Anti-Theological Lectures. Rev. R. Taylor.	2 00
Antiquity and Duration of the World.	25
Astronomy and Worship of the Ancients.	25
A. J. Davis' Entire Works,	27,00
Adventures of Elder Triptolemus Tub.	15
Bible in India. Jacolliot.	2 00
Buckle's History of Civilization. 2 Vols., 8vo.	4 00
Burgess-Underwood Debate. 50 and	80
Bible in the Balance. Fish.	1 00
Bacon's Novum Organum.	2 00
Bhagvad-Gita, or Dialogues of Christna and Arjuna.	1 75
Buechner's Man, Present and Future.	4 00
Christianity before Christ. Craven.	25
Chapters from the Bibles of the Ages.	2 50
Criticism on the Theological Idea of Deity.	1 00
Childhood of Religion. Clodd.	1 25
Childhood of the World. Clodd, 40 and	60
Christianity and Materialism. Underwood.	15
Cause of Religious Ideas. Tuttle.	1 00
Conway's Sacred Anthology.	4 00
Colenso on the Pentateuch, Abstract of.	25
Devil's Pulpit, Rev. Robt. Taylor.	2 00
Diegesis " "	2 00
Denton's Irreconcilable Records,	50
" Our Planet, Past, Present, and Future,	1 50
" Radical Rhymes.	1 25
" Who are Christians. Deluge,
Denton's Common Sense Thoughts, Be Thyself, What is Right? Man's True Saviors, Sermon from Shakspere's Text, God Proposed, Spiritualism True, Orthodoxy False, 10 cents each.
Draper's Conflict between Religion and Science,	1 75
" Intellectual Development of Europe, 2 vols.,	3 00
Darwin's Origin of Species,	2 00
" Descent of Man, (Impr'd Ed.)	3 00
Descent and Darwinism, Schmidt.	1 50
Einstein's Origin of Religious Ideas.	1 00
Exeter Hall, Wm. McDonnell.	60 & 80
Errors of the Bible, Wright.	35 & 60
Essence of Religion. Fuerbach. 40 and	80
Eight Scientific Tracts.	20
Frothingham's I. ion of Humanity,	1 50
" Ol... 's Book of Religion,	1 00
" Stories of the Patriarchs,	1 00
" Safest Creed,	1 50
" Transcendentalism in New England,	2 5[illegible]
Faraday's Various Forces of Nature,	2 0[illegible]
Fiske's Myths and Myth-Makers.	2 0[illegible]
God Idea in History, Tuttle,	1 25
Good Sense, D'Holbach,	1 00
Gould's Curious Myths of the Middle Ages.	2 50
" Lost and Hostile Gospels.	3 25
Graves' Sixteen Crucified Saviors.	2 00
" Biography of Satan.	60
Grey's Enigmas of Life.	2 00
" Creeds of Christendom. 2 Vols.	7 50
Heroines of Freethought, Mrs. Underwood.	1 75
Heathens of the Heath. McDonnell.	1 00 & 150
Hume's Essays and Treatises,	1 50
Huxley's Lay Sermons,	1 75
" Man's Place in Nature,	1 25
" Critiques and Addresses.	1 50
History of all Religions Sects. Evans.	1 00
Haeckel's History of Creation. 2 Vols.	5 00
Hollick's Nerves and the Nervous.	1 00
Humboldt's Works.
Ingersoll's Gods and other Lectures. 50 and	50
" " etc., Large Edition.	1 25
Influence of Christianity on Civilization.	25
Infidels' Text Book, Cooper,	1 00
Jehovah Unveiled.	35
Jamieson's Clergy a Source of Danger.	1 00
Josephus' Complete Works.	2 50
Johnson's Oriental Religions. 8vo.	5 00
John's Way.	15
Kneeland's Review.	1 00
" Hymns.	35
Koran, with Notes and Life of Mahomet.	2 75
Lecky's Rationalism in Europe. 2 Vols.	4 00
" History of European Morals.	6 00
Life of Thomas Paine, Blanchard, p 50; cl	75
Lewes' Biographical History of Philosophy.	3 50
" Problems of Life and Mind.	3 00
Lizzie Doten's Poems of Progress, and Inner Life, each	150
Lubbock's Origin of Civilization.	2 00
" Pre-Historic Times Illustrated.	6 00
Lyell's Elements of Geology, 770 cuts.	3 40
" Principles " " 2 vols. and maps,	8 00
Monks and Popes. Alberger.	1 00
Morley's Life of Voltaire.	2 00
Martyrdom of Man. Winwood Reade.	3 00
Peeble's All Around the World,	2 50
" Seers of the Ages.	2 50
Plato's Divine and Moral Works,	2 20
Pro and Con of Supernatural Religion.	80 & 50
Physical Man. Tuttle.	1 50
Paine's Common Sense.	12
" Crisis. Paper, 50; cloth	80
" Rights of Man. Paper, 50; cloth	80
" Theological Works, with portrait	1 50
" " " paper.	1 00
" Political Works, cloth.	1 50
" Great Works Complete. Crown octavo, with life and portrait.	3
" Political Works, steel portrait.	1
" Life, by Calvin Blanchard with portrait Paper, 50; cloth	75
Parturition without Pain.	1 00
Plain Home Talk and Medical Common Sense, E. B. Foote, M.D.,	1 50
Proctor's Six Lectures on Astronomy,	20
Reason, the only Oracle of Man, Ethan Allen	60
Syntagma, Taylor,	1 00
System of Nature, D'Holbach,	2 00
Self-Contradictions of the Bible,	25
Studying the Bible, Mrs. Slenker.	75
Spencer's (Herbert) Entire Work.
Strauss' Old Faith and New,	2 00
" New Life of Jesus, 2 vols.,	12 00
Supernatural Religion, 2 Vols., 8vo.,	8 00
Sexual Physiology, Trall,	2 00
Talleyrand's Letter to Pope Pius vii,	25
Tyndall' (Prof. John) Entire Works,
The Christ of Paul,	2 00
The Case against the Church,	75
The Relations of the Sexes. Mrs. Duffey,	2 00
The Voices, Warren Sumner Barlow,	1 25
The World's Sages, Infidels, and Thinkers, Bennett. $3 00, $4 00, and	4 50
The Champions of the Church. Bennett $3 00, $4 00, and	4 50
Thirty Discussions, Bible Stories, etc., 75 &	1 00
Truth Seeker Tracts. Vols. I, II, III. and IV., by the lot, 50 &	75
The Truth Seeker Collection of Forms, Hymns, and Recitations.	75
The Outcast, Winwood Reade,	30
Talks with My Patients, Mrs. Gleason, M.D.,	1 50
Underwood-Marples Debate.	35 & 60
Underwood's Twelve Tracts.	20
Vestiges of Creation.	75
Volney's Ruins,	1 00
Volney's New Researches in Ancient History.	1 50
Voltaire's Philosophical Dictionary.	5 00

Vol. 5. No. 6. {PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY D. M. BENNETT.} New York, Saturday, February 9, 1878. {SCIENCE HALL, 141 8th St., NEAR BROADWAY.} $3 per Year.

Notes and Clippings.

THE Beautiful Snow has slipped its moorings and gone adrift.

THE Quaker meeting-houses in this city are entirely free from debt.

MOODY and Sankey will open fire on the sinners of Boston during the present month.

THE great question—"Does it hurt to hang a man?" is answered thus: "Yes, it hurts his reputation."

LAST words of Methuselah—"This is untimely. Why could I not have lived out my days in the land?"

ONE hundred California ministers who have been interviewed express doubts about a state of future punishment.

BISHOP CHENEY says that "the evangelical element in the Protestant Episcopal Church is as dead as the mummies of the pyramids."

A WRITER in the Christian Register severely criticises Joseph Cook, calls him a sciolist and compares him with George, the Count Joannes.

EVANGELIST Bristol ceases from his evangelistic travels and settles down as pastor of a church at Rochester. He was formerly a merchant.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Church Review considers family prayers a "device of Satan, and calculated to keep the family from attending church."

THE Ames Methodist Episcopal Church of New Orleans says it must have $7,000 or go under. It asks the Northern Methodists to pay this amount.

THE Catholic churches in this city are worth eleven millions and a quarter, or nearly that. Their total indebtedness amounts to about $3,000,000.

JOB may have spoken many words of wisdom during the days of his sore affliction, but it is quite unlikely that he sent any funny squibs to the newspapers.

PROF. SWING says in his paper, the Alliance, that the recent raid on hell has proved a failure, having left us exactly where we were before, namely, in the dark.

PROVIDENCE may be all-wise, but it is curious how it always piles the snow deepest right where the people want to travel, and blows it off the field where the winter wheat was sowed and the young clover field.

THE great number of conflagrations resulting from defective chimneys suggest an addition to a familiar Bible quotation, as follows: "The wicked flee when no man pursueth," but the wicked flue is as bold as a lion.

THE Methodist ministers of Chicago are said to be discussing the question, "How shall we teach the doctrine of future punishment?" This answer has been suggested: Induce the young men of the city to practice on the flute.

QUESTION for Western debating societies this winter—After the sea voyage from Joppa to Tarshish, had Jonah the most reason to be fond of fish or the fish to be fond of Jonah? The chairman can at least do as the fish did—give it up.

AN English paper gives the origin of the word "damn." It says the oath is a corruption of the French exclamation dame. This may be so, but we always thought it originated with the man who stepped on a large hoop in the dark when it flew up and hit him in the face.

IT is doubtful whether any human being, if his life was insured for three centuries and free warrant given him of the Bodleain, the British Museum, and the French National Library, could learn as much as Joseph Cook appears to know about things in general."—N. Y. World.

"DO YOU know," remarked a rather fast Newark youth the other day to a stuttering friend to whom he was slightly indebted, "do you know I intend to marry and settle down?" "I d-don't know anything ab-b-bout it," was the reply, "b-b-but I think you had b-b-better stay single and s-s-settle up."

IT is, perhaps, to be regretted that the men of this country will be obliged to again endure occasional glimpses of those red flannel skirts this winter. It is almost astonishing how much endurance some of us have. Tough as it is, let 'em dazzle.

IF THE railway train in Connecticut, carrying passengers from Moody's meeting, which fell through a bridge, had been running on Sunday, we should have been told that running it on Sunday was the cause of the fatality. At present it is attributed to the insufficiency of the trestle-work.—N. Y. Sun.

A SPRINGFIELD evangelist recently announced that he would preach on the following Sunday on the subject, "Ought a Methodist to dance?" It might be well to add to the series, "Ought a Baptist to lie?" "Should a Presbyterian steal?" "Is it right for an Episcopalian to attend horse races?" "Should a Congregationalist love his neighbor's wife better than his own?"

BUSINESS and religion are combined in the sign on the side of a big wagon which is kept for hire in Philadelphia. The lettering is thus:

TO HIRE.
HOLINESS TO THE LORD.

Whether the owner most greatly desires to hire out his wagon or his holiness does not appear.

THE members of the bankrupt Seventh Avenue Methodist Church of Brooklyn have reorganized, the new concern bearing the pleasant title of "Grace Church." The Epistle to the Romans contains a passage which might serve for the text of the opening sermon of "Grace Church." "Not reckoned of grace, but of debt." However gracious the new organization may succeed in becoming, the creditors of the old one will probably hold in long and grievous recollection the debts thereof.

TRUSTWORTHY statistics regarding the recent famine in India show that out of 1,668,000 inhabitants in the district of Bellary, 14,005 died of starvation in March 1877, alone. In that of Cydarah, out of 1,300,000, there died in February 11,442; in Kurnaul, out of 959,640, those that starved in January numbered 6,263. Out of 29,000,000 in Madras there died in February 105,175, and by the end of June over 500,000. Bombay lost over 165,000 in the first three months of the year, and it was anticipated that before relief came a total of 2,000,0000 would die.

DR. ARMITAGE replied to Col. Ingersoll, and made some good points. But one of his defensive blows was struck below the belt. He said: "Show me where, in the whole history of the civilized world, $3,000 has been raised for charity by a band of acknowledged skeptics." Now this does not amount to much as an argument even if it were true. But it is not true. Hundreds of thousands of dollars are disbursed in charity by acknowledged sceptics every year. Col. Ingersoll himself is noted for his charities in the West, and a lady in this city whose skepticism is as "acknowledged" as his gives from $10,000 to $30,000 in charity every year. A benevolent tendency depends much on natural temperament, and may be possessed by a person of little or no belief. Such archheretics as Ingersoll can be answered only by replying to what they say, not by trying to show that they are personally immoral or unsympathetic.—Daily Graphic.

A NEW RELIGIOUS ENTERPRISE.—Grace Reformed Church in Pittsburgh introduced a novelty at its recent fair. Young ladies, or ladies supposed to be young, were put up by auction, the successful bidders obtaining them as partners for the evening. To promote the fun of the occasion, the ladies were robed in sheets from head to foot while being auctioned off. The prices ranged from two to five dollars, and there was hearty merriment when the sheets were removed from the ladies, as each lady was knocked down to a successful bidder. Some of the gentlemen were delighted with their luck, and others were badly bored by finding themselves compelled to be attentive for a whole evening to some lady not eminent for personal or mental attractiveness. It was an open question which of two young men was most badly taken in, the one to whom his own maiden aunt was auctioned, or he whose partner for the evening proved to be a neighbor's mother-in-law. The Banner, which is a sort of censor of the morals and manners of the Pittsburgh churches, says of the auction: "The adoption of this mode of raising money is not among the desirable things."

ORTHODOXY.

Orthodoxy 's getting shaky.
  Hell is losing half its charms;
Beecher stole the devil's brimstone;
  Churches all are in alarm.

Hell was once a lake infernal,
  Past description, past all names,
Where the damned must roast eternal
  In those lurid brimstone flames.

Hell, of late, though, 's getting shorter,
  Cooling off, too—beats the deuce;
Likewise brimstone, once so plenty,
  Now is nearly out of use.

Not long since hell swarmed with infants,
  Doomed to burn by God's decree,
Just because old Eve stole apples
  Off the devil's knowledge tree.

Later still, divines went searching
  Hell all through with anxious care,
Gave the hunt up quite discouraged—
  Not the first damned baby there.

Fact is, hell 's a grand old humbug:
  Poor old Satan 's most played out:
Orthodoxy 's out of brimstone;
  Hell is fast going "up the spout."
—Ungodly Exchange.

HERE is a chance for all good little Methodist boys. The Christian Advocate says in one of its urgent appeals for subscribers: "One little boy walks to school once a week, and saves his car fare that his mother may have the Christian Advocate. God is certain to honor that lad in time, and almost certain to glorify him in eternity." If such grace and glory are to reward one day's juvenile pedestrianism, what shall be the portion of the Methodist lad who keeps out of the street cars all the time, and every day saves money towards supplying all his neighbors and relations with Christian Advocates? Were it not for the probability of his being cut off in the flower of his youth, that boy might look forward to being made a Bishop, like brother Gilbert Haven. But as his days are probably numbered, he can be rewarded by having his biography made the basis of a nice little Sunday-school library book, and by having an obituary notice from the pen of Childs, A. M. This obituary might read thus:

This little lad, so early called,
  Walked both early and late
In order that his mother might have
  The Christain Advocate.

THE DEEPEST ARTESIAN WELL.—The deepest artesian well in the world is being bored at Pesth, Hungary, and has reached already a depth of 951 metres. The well at Paris, which measures 547 metres, has hitherto been the first. The work is undertaken by the brothers Zsigmondy, partially at the expense of the city, which has granted £40,000 for the purpose, with the intention of obtaining an unlimited supply of warm water for the municipal establishments and public baths. A temperature of 161° F. is shown by the water at present issuing from the well, and the work will be prosecuted until water of 178° is obtained. About 175,000 gallons of warm water stream out daily, rising to a height of thirty-five feet. This amount will not only supply all the wants of the city, but convert the surrounding region into a tropical garden. Since last June the boring has penetrated through two hundred feet of dolomite. The preceding strata have supplied a number of interesting facts for geologists, which have been recorded from time to time in the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. Among some of the ingenious engineering devices invented during the course of the boring are especially noteworthy the arrangements for driving in nails at the enormous depth mentioned above, for pulling them out (with magnets), for cutting off and pulling up broken tubes, and above all, a valuable mechanical apparatus by means of which the water rising from the well is used as a motive power, driving the drills at a rate of speed double that previously imparted from the mouth of the well.—Nature.

Events of the Week.

BEN WADE is very ill.

MRS. LUCY DENALT dropped dead on Third Avenue.

FAILURES are still taking place among the merchants of this city.

JOHN ROSSEAU of 216 West Thirteenth St., fell from his cart, and was instantly killed.

CANADA has given birth to a new pair of Siamese twins connected by a ligament.

TWO CHILDREN were suffocated by smoke from burning bedding at 354 Sixth street.

THE silver question is the question of the day. Everybody is getting ready for silver to be remonetized.

THE Rev. Justin Fulton had a call to go to Boston, but he has concluded to stay and preach up "hell" in Brooklyn.

A TWELVE-year-old girl in Pottsville, Pa., mixed and drank a quantity of vinegar and soda and died from the effects.

SATURDAY and Sunday last, were very cold in parts of the country. In the north part of this State the mercury sank to 21° below zero.

TWO MORE small planets have been discovered. If this business is continued, the solar system will become quite a respectable affair.

A GREAT Silver Mass Meeting was held at the large hall of Cooper Union on Friday evening of last week. Gen. Ewing was the principal speaker.

INSANITY among millionaires appears to be a growing complaint. The will of Mr. Dickie the druggist is now being contested on the ground of insanity.

THE Postmaster-General has forbidden the trade dollar being taken at par. Some bankers are doing the same, but the majority of the retailers in the city are glad to get them, and are not overstocked with money at that.

EIGHTEEN hundred revolutionary ladies have recently been flogged in Russia. Not much respect for the sex there. The female revolutionists are made to see stars and feel stripes there.

ARCHBISHOP WOOD of Philadelphia denounces Father Heinan's miracle of raising a dead person at Mauch Chunk. Mulford says it is a bad practice raising persons from the dead when it is such hard times for the living

THE white savages of the North Carolina coast, in the late shipwreck, showed the utmost inhumanity in their treatment of the unfortunate wretches who were washed ashore. They robbed the living and dead indiscriminately.

AN armistice has been signed between the Russians and the Turks. The former were most exacting in their terms. The Turks are weak and exhausted, and they have to submit to the will of their masters who are not remarkable for the quality of mercy.

OLD Mr. Lord, aged eighty-four, and his new wife near fifty, have been receiving a large share of public attention of late. The old man felt lonely and took a notion to take a companion to see him well through the world. Being very wealthy, his sons were opposed to such a match, fearing some of his wealth might escape them, whereupon they declared the old man insane or non compos mentis. Other good judges pronounce the old man sound in body and mind. Thus the fight stands. Why cannot a man marry in peace when he wants to?

WEATHER cool, but pleasant. We had a very severe storm on Thursday of last week attended with heavy snow. The wind was terrific, and several hotels at Rockaway were prostrated. Many shipwrecks took place. The Metropolis, bound from Philadelphia to Brazil laden with railroad iron and other material, went ashore on the Carolina coast, where one hundred persons were drowned, and their bodies washed ashore. The tide in this city, caused in part by the water being thrown into the bay by the wind, was higher than ever known before. The damage in many places was fearful.

Robert G. Ingersoll.

Thomas Paine Glorified.

BY COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

[A lecture delivered at Chickering Hall, Jan. 29, 1878, the 141st anniversary of the birth of Thomas Paine.]

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN: In the first place I ask you to divest yourselves of any prejudices you may have. Prejudice has been denominated by Thomas Paine to be the spider of the mind. You know that in an old building the spider will weave his web over every chink and crevice through which light can possibly come into his dwelling; and so it is with prejudice in the mind of man, it keeps out the light, and for that reason it has aptly been called the spider of the soul.

We ought at least to deal fairly with the dead. A great man, Voltaire, has said that to the dead we owe nothing but truth. We do not owe flattery to the dead; we certainly should not be guilty of heaping upon their graves vituperation and slander. And allow me to say further about this question of this man's fame, with regard to those who have talked against him, that I have no malice towards any of them. I think it has generally been done through ignorance; they have echoed the cry of others without knowing the facts. But the time has come when the American people should have the manliness and the honor to do justice to the memory of Thomas Paine.

Thomas Paine was an Englishman. His parents were poor people. He ate the bread of poverty, and necessity was his schoolmaster. He was not very well acquainted in his youth with books. He never had the advantage of having what little individuality he had crushed out of him by a collegiate education of that day. He never had the happiness of attending one of those institutions which are built for the more general diffusion of useless knowledge. He became acquainted with men, and he examined things to the very bottom. He was not satisfied unless he reached what he considered bed-rock. He took no man's statements, but investigated for himself. He did not believe a thing simply because it had been printed in a book. He had the sense to know that a man who could tell a lie would write a lie, and that the printing of a lie was no additional evidence of its truth. He had the sense to know that humanity has been substantially the same through all historic ages. When he reached manhood he first turned his attention to politics. He had been engaged in selling tobacco. I admit it; and have sometimes thought that it was through that tobacco-shop he saw that there was no necessity of sneezing because somebody else had taken snuff. He was poor; but had he been rich he would have been satisfied with the order of things as he found them. The rich man is generally contented with affairs. When you have enough of the world's goods it is easy to see the wisdom of God in the punishment of your neighbor.

When a man is young, when he is full of ambition and has everything to win, then he is in favor of liberty; he is a radical. He says, "I want a chance, freedom, equality, opportunity to compete for things." He gets a chance, and he gets gold, and builds a magnificent house on Murray Hill. And he gets a carriage and a coat-of-arms; though only a little while before he had arms without a coat. He gets rich and he is no longer a radical; he is a conservative gentleman. You hear no more of liberty—he wants police. He wants somebody to secure him, to guard what he has got, and he laughs at want, and holds poverty to be somewhat criminal, and looks upon liberty with fear or contempt. And these poor devils whom he scorns would hold him in the same contempt to-morrow if the wheel of fortune in its turning should happen to change them around. When a man is young and full of inspiration and hope and ambition he is naturally a radical. When he has succeeded he as naturally becomes a conservative. No man wants to put cash against promises. Now, let us be fair with each other. We are all children of nature; we have been invited to this feast that we call life. You are invited to a feast and you go there and find one man occupying a hundred seats—not occupying, but owning them and occupying one, and he won't let another sit down in any of the ninety and nine. Another man owns fifty, another a thousand, and another none; and the man who stands objects! He becomes a radical.

A man finds himself in a monarchial government, of hereditary nobility and hereditary serfs—and the two are inseparable—without acres and without honor, and he finds he has rights in equity as well as the man who holds the titles; he is dissatisfied, and he is the gentleman who finds fault.

Now, it seems to me that this world ought to be so that there should be an equal chance for every human being. It seems to me that this world should be so managed that the men of to-day could not take the rights and means of subsistence from those who are to come after them. And it seems to me that every man who is strong ought to lift up and protect the weak; that every man who has wealth should use it to make the world happier and better than it is. This country is struggling under a weight of poverty and crime to-day; but I believe it will sometime be better. I do not believe that the withered hand of want is forever to be extended asking alms. I do not believe it will always have to be said that the men who do the most work have the least. I do not believe that poverty will always hold the masses of men in its iron grasp nor the shadow of the gallows forever fall upon them. I do believe that mankind will continue to grow greater and grander and sublimer, that prejudice and superstition and legalized cruelty will continue to give way before the light of reason until justice will rule this world.

Thomas Paine looked about him and found he could do nothing in England; the land had all been taken up before he arrived. He saw he could do nothing in that country where those two vultures, Church and State, had been feeding upon the heart of the chained Prometheus, Justice. So he made up his mind to come to America, and at the age of thirty-seven he landed on our shores. He had nothing in the world except a letter signed by another Infidel, signed by another name that shines through our history with all the serenity of a star—Benjamin Franklin. Franklin become acquainted with him in England and saw that he was, in one sense, a dead and wasted genius. One of the divine thoughts of Plato was his description of genius. He said that when wisdom drank at the fountain of enthusiasm, then was genius born. Paine was a thinker, a radical and an enthusiast, and in America he found a more congenial field.

What was the condition of the Colonies when he arrived here? There was not one man in twenty, not one in fifty in favor of separating this country from Great Britain when Thomas Paine arrived in America. The colonists were busy writing petitions and laying them at the foot of the throne on which sat that idiot, George III., king "by the grace of God." They were imploring that sovereign for the privilege to be men. They were like the Israelites in Egypt, who were willing to make bricks if the Egyptians would furnish the straw. They were down on their knees begging to be recognized by their gracious sovereign as having the right to live. Now, I want you to recollect to-night, and understand that Thomas Paine was the first man in the history of the world who wrote these words: "The Free and Independent States of America." I think that this is enough to immortalize this man. It is certainly enough to compel every honest American to say that justice, at least, should be done to the memory of Thomas Paine.

The Colonies were in that condition when he wrote the little book called "Common Sense." In that pamphlet he took the ground that America not only should have her rights as against the British Crown, but that we ought to be free and independent States; and he said, "I can think of no better argument than to commence as a boy to be a man." And he not only said that we should be separated from Great Britain, but he denounced the British form of government, a hereditary monarchy of nobility and serfs.

He denied that all power to reign comes from on high. He was among the first who said that all power to govern comes from the people; that every government should be a government by the people; that the people are the source of all political power. It was his object to retire ghosts from politics and allow a man to govern himself. His object was to say to the priests, you attend to the next world—you attend to the soul and we will attend to the body—we will attend to the affairs of this world. No pamphlet ever published had as much effect upon the minds of men as Thomas Paine's "Common Sense." In only a few months after its publication it was over the whole country, and its bold principles became a fixed idea among the people who had been accustomed to say "please grant us our rights;" and then was issued the immortal Declaration of Independence, declaring these to be free and independent States. And I say here that there is not a solitary argument or splendid statement in the Declaration of Independence that is not also to be found in that pamphlet, "Common Sense."

I regard Thomas Paine as the best political writer this country has ever produced, in the age in which he lived. And why? Because he believed in the humanity of man and in the equality of the human race. He hated tyranny and slavery with every drop of his noble blood, and his principal tracts were for revolution. Thomas Paine was the foremost man in lighting the fires of liberty in the hearts of our fathers, and in the midnight of Valley Forge his "Crisis" was the only star that glittered in the wide horizon of despair. That was a pillar of fire by night. He believed in the glory of the future, and he said as tender a thing as ever was said to those who wished to put off the war, "if this struggle must come, let it come now, that our children may live and dwell in peace."

No man did more to gain for us the liberty we enjoy to-night than Thomas Paine.

I would hold myself in contempt if I were afraid to say honestly and fairly what I thought of the memory of this man. If Thomas Paine had stopped there, and ended his work with his services in the Revolution, his name would have been on the lips of every American citizen of all parties from that day to this. He would have stood the peer of Washington, and Jefferson, and Franklin, and Adams.

If he had only suppressed his ideas about religion he would have had salvos of artillery fired over his grave; ministers would have done him honor, and would have described minutely his reception in the heavenly world. He would have had a monument erected to his memory to-day, covered, it may be, with lies, but he would have had a monument. But the work of Thomas Paine was not finished. He had examined the claims of kings, looked into the principles of hereditary government and found that these kings were grand robbers who lived upon the fruit of honest industry. He saw that these kings were pretentious shams, without hearts or brains, who were covering the world with blood. He found that they were taking to themselves the heritage of the people. He wrote then a book called, "The Rights of Man." And I want to say that in my judgment it is the best political document ever written. It is as clear as light, and every word is honest. It comes from the heart, warm and sweet. For writing that book he was indicted in England for libel and a price set upon his head. I have got here the original report of that trial, and I want to read just one word of it. (Mr. Ingersoll got out his eyeglasses). I am sorry I have to put on spectacles, but I have often said that man never progresses except as he overcomes the obstructions of nature. If men's eyes had never failed, men never would have made spectacles; and if they never had made spectacles, they never would have made the telescope. So that the failure of the eye has added almost infinitely to human sight, for when we found we could not read our bibles at a foot or two distant, we invented that with which we see and measure the starry heavens.

I want to show you what were the ideas prevalent in England at that time. Here is the indictment, and here is what the Attorney-General says upon it. In this indictment the offence charged is the publishing of these axioms:

"All hereditary government is in its nature tyranny. An heritable crown, or heritable throne, or by what other fanciful name such things may be called, have no other significant explanation than that mankind are heritable property."

In other words, if there is an hereditary master there must be an hereditary serf; if there must be an hereditary thief there must be an hereditary gentleman to steal from. The indictment goes on to recite: "To inherit a government is to inherit the people, as if they were flocks and herds."

The Attorney-General stated that this language was odious to the Sovereign, and designed to incite disorder and prevent submission and respect for the law. So much as to the king's right of heritage.

"The Convention met at Philadelphia, in May, 1787, of which George Washington was elected President. He was not at that time connected with any of the State governments or with Congress. He delivered up his commission when the war ended, and since then had lived a private citizen. The convention went deeply into all the subjects, and agreed upon a Federal Constitution; and by this Constitution it was declared that all authority to govern must come from the people themselves."

And it was for saying that that Thomas Paine was indicted for libel, convicted, and a price set upon his head; for saying that which not one of you here will for a moment dispute; that all power to govern rightfully comes from the people themselves. And now in this country they echo the slanders that were invented in England against that man because he preached democracy to the subjects of an imbecile king. As soon as he wrote that book, then they heaped upon his head their calumnies, and every one of them has found an echo here among the orthodox whom his religious opinions offended. But I think that every American ought to be willing to do justice to this man who did so much for them.

After looking into the pretensions of kings, he thought he would investigate the authority of priests; and he wrote a book called the "Age of Reason." That was his crime. For that the church shut the door in his face and emptied slops on him from the window. And some of the principal slop-throwers edit religious newspapers in this city of New York.

He made up his mind that he would give his ideas upon the subject of religion, and this he did in the "Age of Reason." And I may say here that I do not entirely agree with Mr. Paine in the matter of religion; he is altogether more orthodox than I am. Compared with Thomas Paine I am an Infidel. So don't imagine that I am claiming to be as respectable in my belief as he was. Some people have most excellent beliefs and act very badly; and some people have very poor theories and act like angels. The right way to judge a man is, not by what he thinks, but by what he does. He who divides his food with his fellow-man, no matter what he believes, is a good man. He who loves his wife and children and endeavors to fill their lives with joy—I don't care whether he believes in baptism or not—he is a good man. The man who finds a pleasure in helping the helpless and lightening the burthen of the overweighted, that man, though he be Pagan, Mahometan, or Christian, even though he don't believe in hell—he is a mighty good man. And I tell you that the woman that loves her children, that cares for them tenderly, that sits up with them night after night, holds them in her tireless arms and covers their faces with kisses, I don't care whether she believes in predestination, transubstantiation, the thirty-nine articles, or any book on this earth—she is a good woman. Humanity is grander than all the creeds in the world. Men lived before books were made. Humanity is the great, grand, and mighty sea, and these little creeds and these little religions are but the waves that agitate the surface. Humanity is the great expansive sky, and these petty dogmas and doctrines, and theories and opinions, are but mists and fogs, continually changing, and destined to pass forever away. The man who can look back upon his life and see in every step some flower blossoming, some good deed marking the pathway, and that the world is better for his having lived in it—he is a good man. And when finally he comes to that gate, the keys of which are supposed to be kept by Saint Peter, I can only say that if such men are kept out there will be very little good society in heaven.

I don't know that I have the power of language to express my utter contempt for theories that have no foundation in fact. What earthly difference does it make to me whether such a man as Moses lived or not? Admitting that he never lived or wrote the Decalogue, still I ought to tell the truth. What difference does it make to me whether he turned his stick into a snake? I ought anyway to be honest.

I do not see how it can affect my honesty or truthfulness whether Moses or Isaac lived or Daniel had dreams. I take it for granted that there is virtue in hell, if there is one; in heaven, if there is one; and justice is a good thing whether any of these stories are true or not.

From the moment of the publication of the "Age of Reason," Thomas Paine became infamous. The Church was not then what it is now. The Church is better than it used to be. Paine helped to make it so. The Infidels have made the Church decent. The Infidels have had the same effect upon the orthodox church that homeopathy had upon the old-school physicians—it made them give smaller doses. The moment he wrote that book he became infamous. To slander him was to receive the thanks of the Church. All his former services were forgotten, and he was shunned like a moral pestilence. At every mention of his name the bloody hands of the Church were raised in holy horror. They pursued him after he was dead, and raked up the supposed horrors of his death-bed. They gloated like demons over what they supposed to be the remorse and terror of his lonely death.

Why should all the men that made the ingenious implements of the Inquisition, that built racks, and invented pincers and heated them red-hot to tear men's flesh—why should they all have died in peace? Why should those who instigated the massacre of St. Bartholemew have all passed away in peace? Why should those eminent Christians who have tortured and torn and crucified their fellow-creatures for presuming to have an opinion—why should they have all passed away in the odor of sanctity, while the breakers of chains, the battlers for human rights, the champions of human liberty, have been hissed at in the hour of death by the snakes of conscience?

I would rather take my chances of dying an honest Atheist than to take the chances of John Calvin. I would rather doubt the authenticity of the five books of Moses—which he never wrote—than to imprison and torture people for differing from me on the subject of infant baptism. It is a wonder that Americans should be so ready to repeat the slanders against this man, and that they did not remember his zeal in contending for the rights of his fellow-man, and his great services in their behalf. Thomas Paine made it impossible to write the history of human liberty with his name left out. He was one of the creators of light. He was one of the heralds of the dawn. He hated slavery in the name of God with every drop of his noble blood. He believed in the great doctrine of human equality; he was the great champion of universal freedom; and yet the Church has violated even his grave.

I would despise myself if I thought I merited any special consideration simply because I belonged, or did not belong to a church. I would despise myself if I tried to prove the doctrines of the Church were wrong simply because some of its members had proved false, or because some minister had committed a crime. Suppose it turned out that Euclid was a rascal, that would have nothing to do with the truth of geometry.

Nothing seems to be more natural than for men to crucify their benefactors; at least every champion of reason and common sense has been persecuted and outlawed. And whoever asks a king to show his commission, or questions the authority of the priests, will be denounced by men. In all ages reason has been denounced in the name of religion. Self-reliance has been thought to be a deadly sin, and the idea of living and dying without the aid of superstition was too horrifying to contemplate. All religions have been based upon the idea that God will favor the true believer in some way and eternally damn a doubter. To practice justice, love, and mercy and do good in this world is not enough. You must believe in some creed though it may be incomprehensible to you. You must bring yourself to believe that three are one and one is three, and that two and two make nothing.

When Paine was outlawed the world was religious. The churches were making every effort to crush out the idea that people had a right to think; for intellectual liberty was dangerous to the power of the clergy. Paine saw that as long as the Bible was considered to be inspired this doctrine would be preached. He examined the creeds and came to the conclusion that they were not inspired; and he said so. Suppose I examine those writings carefully, and prayerfully, if you can imagine me doing anything like praying, and come to the conclusion they were not inspired, ought I to tell the truth? Ought I to lose my self-respect by lying; or lose your respect and preserve my own? I was talking with a minister once, an excellent man, now dead. He said to me: "Ingersoll, if you don't believe in the Bible you ought not to say so." I said: "Do you believe it?" He said: "Yes, certainly." I said: "I don't know whether you do or not; maybe you are following the advice you give to me." Now, it is hard work to find out what the clergy really do believe. If, when his sermon gets into the newspaper, it is found to be a little too strong, then the reporter has made a mistake. I don't say anything against the reporters.

Thomas Paine said that "Every system of religion that has anything in it that shocks the mind of a child is not a true system."

Could you think of a better test than that? "Any system of religion that shocks the mind of a child is not a true system." I am willing to stand upon that. And when you read in the Old Testament of the horrid butcheries in the name of God, of the killing of thousands of poor Canaanites, and the firing of their cities and the murder of their wives and children, it shocks the mind of every one that has a heart. They tell me that God had selected the Jews for his special favor and wished to civilize them. Well; he civilized them to that degree that they crucified him at the first opportunity they had.

Thomas Paine believed in one God, and no more; yet thousands of people will tell you that he was an Atheist. He was not. He believed in one God, and no more. Not one of three or three of one, but one God. He took the ground that one infinite being was enough for all practical purposes. He believed in a God, and he hoped for happiness beyond this life. And here let me say that the idea of eternal life, of immortality, is not based upon any book or religion or creed. It is based upon human affection. The idea of the immortality of humanity is a great sea, forever ebbing and flowing in countless waves against the shores of time—that was not born of any book, did not spring from any religion; it was born of that tender human affection which is not broken by death, and it will continue to shine through the mists and clouds that envelop the future in darkness as long as love shall kiss the cold lips of its dead and hope still shines through the tears of grief. We love; therefore we wish to live.

Paine believed that "true religion"—hear this from the man who has been maligned, slandered, and hunted as though he were a wild beast—that "true religion consists in doing justice, loving mercy, and endeavoring to make our fellow-creatures happy." Pretty good creed, that. But he denied the inspiration of the Scripture; that was his crime. He denied that they were entitled to be called a revelation—it was a contradiction to call anything a revelation that does not come at first hands. What we get from Moses is at second hand. Moses may not have told the truth about it. He may have forgotten it. He has been dead a great while; and I don't know what his reputation was for truth and veracity. He was a very good man, maybe, but I don't know much about him. He may have had God's word for it, but you have only that man's word. A revelation is a direct, first communication; after that it is only what some man says. Paine denied the divine origin of the Savior, yet he believed that Christ was a virtuous, humble, and sincere man; that the morality that he practised was of the most lofty and the purest character, and that he had never been exceeded by any mortal man.

At the time Paine denied the inspiration of the Bible that book was held in greater reverence than it is held to-day. Then people contended that it was literally and absolutely true, that it was astronomically, geographically, and geometrically true—punctuation and spelling included. Since then it has turned out that it is false astronomically, at least. The orthodox idea of the creation is that the world was made out of nothing, and that there was something left over that was cut up into stars and pinned up on the roof so that we could see what time it was. But we have found out that the world was not made to order in six days, and is not so young as the Bible record tells us. We have found out that the Gulf of Mexico used to come up to Southern Illinois, and we know that it took millions of years, instead of six thousand, to bring about the many changes in its conformation which have left their record too plain to be mistaken. We have found that the world has swept around the sun for billions of years. In fact, wherever the Bible is capable of being contradicted it has been contradicted. Who on earth now will undertake to settle any question by the scientific texts of the Bible? There was a man in the sixteenth century who proved that the world was flat by the Bible. And the Pope and Cardinals certified that his book was true. He took the passage in Revelations, which says, that "the Son of Man shall come in power and glory, and every eye shall see him." Now, he says, if the earth is round, how are the fellows on the other side to see him? That settled it. The world moves, and in time the Christian world will be driven to occupy the position of Thomas Paine. You are no longer required to swallow the Bible, whale, Jonah, and all; but to believe in God and pay your pew rent. These fallacies have passed away. The only reason that the religious world abuses Paine is that they have been compelled to adopt so many of his theories. Paine believed that murder and indiscriminate slaughter had never been commanded by the Father above. He attacked the Bible in the same spirit in which he attacked the pretensions of kings. It was accepted by the people as true as a matter of course. No one thought of disputing its doctrines. To doubt it was to court the damnation of the soul. Paine had the boldness to think before accepting it. Now, can you believe what you want to? You could if you could control your own mind. I think there are some people whose minds control them. For if you could control your own mind you would be able to tell me what you are going to think of at ten o'clock to-morrow. Whatever you really believe is a result over which you have no control. And, therefore, to hold a man accountable for that belief, and to punish him eternally for believing what he could not help believing, is infamous beyond expression. If God wanted us all to think alike, why didn't he give us all heads alike? Why, if it is so necessary to believe the Bible that we are going to be eternally damned and roasted if we doubt it—why didn't they give us the evidence? If we can only be saved by the blood of Christ and believing it, give us the evidence and do not damn a man for not believing when he has no evidence to compel him to believe. Reason is our natural guide. Should the sailor throw aside his compass and depend entirely on the fog? What would he think should he be told that if he didn't throw overboard his compass and depend entirely on the fog he should be wrecked? Yet it is the same for a man to say, "I believe something that is ridiculous, therefore I will be happy; you believe something that is reasonable, therefore you will be eternally tormented." If the Bible is absolutely true, why don't we live up to it? If the laws delivered to Moses upon Mount Sinai were sufficient, why do we pass any new ones—why do you go up to Albany every winter for additional legislation?

If a man should tell you that he had the most beautiful picture in the world, and yet tell you to shut your eyes when you asked to see it, you would think either that he had no picture, or that it was a daub. Or if he should show you a miserable canvass and say: "Don't you think it is a gem? Mr. Smith was in here just now and said it was a daub, and I kicked him down stairs—I want your honest opinion!" But would his conduct be more unreasonable than that of the religionists who say: "If you examine our creed, you must keep your ears and eyes shut when you do it; away with your reason! All we want is belief."

I believe that most Christians are honest! I believe that most ministers are sincere. You may think I am giving myself away. I don't like their creeds, though those who accept them be sincere. I don't like sectarianism; it don't give us liberty. What light is to the eye, what love is to the heart, liberty is to the soul of man. I think their doctrines hurt them. I speak now of that text: "He that believeth shall be saved; he that believeth not shall be damned." In every word of it is a dungeon; every word of it has covered the cheeks of the world with tears, and the face of this earth with blood. The man that attempts to take my life, or the life of my child—every one says I have a right to kill him. How much more would I have the right to kill him if he was endeavoring to lead my wife from the true faith to be damned eternally! Yet men are no longer burned at the stake for speaking against creeds. The reason the churches do not now persecute men is because they do not believe their doctrines as they used to believe them. We are converting them day by day, and no man, in my judgment, can hear me without going away a little better. I don't pretend to be a reformer.

The churchmen said that Paine had no right to attack their doctrines because he had no knowledge of the dead languages. Is it necessary, is it really essential, to be able to conjugate a Greek verb before you can make up your mind as to the probability of the dead coming out of their graves? Common sense belongs to no language; logic is not confined to any tongue. There has been a great improvement since Paine wrote his "Age of Reason." One hundred and fifty years ago most of our preachers of to-day would have been burned at the stake. The Universalists would have found themselves in the stocks, to be pelted by the rabble with dead cats. That is the religion that Thomas Paine attacked. Would not every one of you have attacked that religion had you lived in that day? Less than one hundred and fifty years ago the following law was in force in Maryland:

"Be it enacted by the Right Honorable, the Lord Proprietor, by and with the advice and consent of his Lordship's Governor, and the upper and lower Houses of this Assembly, and the authority of the same:

"That if any person shall hereafter, within this Province, wittingly, maliciously, and advisedly, by writing or speaking, blaspheme or curse God, or deny our Savior Jesus Christ to be the son of God, or shall deny the Holy Trinity, the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, or the God-head, or shall utter any profane words concerning the Holy Trinity, or any of the persons thereof, and shall thereof be convict by verdict, shall, for the first offense, be bored through the tongue, and be fined twenty pounds to be levied off his body. And for the second offense, the offender shall be stigmatized by burning in the forehead with the letter B, and fined forty pounds. And that for the third offense, the offender shall suffer death without the benefit of clergy."

Under that law every Unitarian in the United States would have had his tongue bored, his forehead branded and been executed like a criminal. In old times the death penalty was attached to a hundred offenses. They used to burn a man or stone him to death for picking up sticks on Sunday; if he only committed murder, they allowed him to flee to some city of refuge. To-day capital punishment is attached to but two offenses, murder and treason, and not much to treason. And I glory in the fact that after we had put down our rebellion we did not disgrace our victory by shedding one drop of blood.

In the days of Thomas Paine, the Church was bloody and relentless, and they denounced the man who said: "The world is my country; to do good, my religion." At that time nothing so delighted the Church as the beauties of endless torment, and listening to the weak wailings of infants struggling in the slimy coils and poisonous folds of the worm that never dies.

Among other things, it was proved against a boy in Edinburgh that he wished he was in hell that he might get warm. He recanted, yet he was hanged, and his body was thrown into a hole at the foot of the gallows and covered with stones. His mother pleaded for his body and it was denied to her. This was common in every country. No wonder the Church hated the author of the "Age of Reason," who said that all religions, without an exception, were a curse.

Milton clothed Christianity with the finery of the gods. He turned all the angels into soldiers, made heavenly battle-fields, put Christ in uniform and caricatured God as a militia general. At the judgment day God was supposed to sit on a throne and tell the angels to thrust the goats into the fire on the left and send the orthodox sheep to gambol eternally on perennial slopes covered with daisies and dandelions. Did you know that the pilgrims left Holland not to get religious liberty, but to escape it? When they got to Holland they found so much liberty there that their preacher, Robinson, said: "Our sons and daughters will be debauched here by this freedom." So they left Holland for America, not to get religious liberty, but to get away from it. Under such conditions progress was almost impossible. Some one had to lead the way. The Church is incapable of improvement. Progress leans forward and not backward. Religion cannot advance because it looks backward; it is not in its nature progressive. On the contrary the Church has already reduced Spain to a guitar, Italy to a hand-organ, and Ireland to a harp. In our century the Church, though divided into many sects, was always unitied against a common foe. Paine was read and understood by the average mind. He gave his candid thought and argument into the mouths of the people. Just in proportion as men advance in reason and science the Church has lost power. No nation ever advanced that held strictly to the religion of its founders. Every Church pretends to have found the true religion, and tells you that all the others are false; and I believe they tell the truth. In music every man wants harmony. In religion he insists upon an immediate answer to every question. Every religion that cannot answer every question is not worth anything. The grand flight of the eagle of reason is nothing to them; they want the nest in which he was hatched. Do you know I have noticed that the people who have the smallest souls make the most fuss about getting them saved?

Paine denied the authority of bibles and creeds. This was his crime. I challenge the world to show that he ever wrote one word against justice, or charity, or liberty; yet he has been treated as though he had murdered some Uriah for his wife, or driven some Hagar into the wilderness to starve with his own child, as though he were some Solomon keeping a harem of seven hundred wives, as though he had persecuted Christians even unto strange cities.

Ever since the death of that great man, the Church has been endeavoring to spoil his reputation. All his splendid services in behalf of our liberties during the Revolution amount to nothing in their eyes. I will read you some letters to show in what estimation he was held by the other founders of our political freedom. Most of them were written before he had excited the malice of the people who have maligned him.

"ROCKY HILL, September 16, 1783.

"I have learned since I have been at this place that you are at Bordentown. Whether for the sake of retirement or economy I know not. Be it for either or both, or whatever it may, if you will come to this place and partake with me, I shall be exceedingly happy to see you at it. Your presence may remind Congress of your past services to this country; and if it is in my power to impress them, command my best exertions with freedom, as they will be rendered cheerfully by one who entertains a lively sense of the importance of your works, and with much pleasure subscribes himself Your Sincere Friend,

"GEORGE WASHINGTON."

I want to show you what the great men of that day thought of this wretch upon whose devoted head have been poured the vilest calumnies. This man did me a favor; I like him. If it had not been for him, I would not have had the liberty to speak here to-night. I enjoy myself when I think how free I am, and I thank this man for it. When I think of that, the whole horizon is full of glory, and joy comes to me in every ray of sunshine and every rustle of the winds. What is the opinion of our great men of the man who wrote the pamphlet, "Rights of Man?"

"It has been very generally propagated through the continent that I wrote the pamphlet 'Common Sense.' I could not have written anything in so manly and striking a style. JOHN ADAMS."

Here is a good one:

"It is not necessary for me to tell you how much all your countrymen—I speak of the great mass of the people—are interested in your welfare. They have not forgotten the history of their own Revolution and the difficult scenes through which they passed; nor do they review its several stages without reviving in their bosoms a due sensibility of the merits of those who served them in that great and arduous conflict. The crime of ingratitude has not yet stained, and I trust never will stain, our national character. You are considered by them as not only having rendered important service in our own Revolution, but as being on a more extensive scale the friend of human rights, and a distinguished and able defender of public liberty. To the welfare of Thomas Paine the Americans are not, nor can they be indifferent. . . JAMES MONROE."

Another writes:

"You express a wish in your letter to return to America in a national ship; Mr. Dawson, who brings over the treaty, and who will present you with this letter, is charged with orders to the captain of the Maryland to receive and accomodate you back, if you can be ready to depart at such a short warning. You will in general find us returned to sentiments worthy of former times; in these it will be your glory to have steadily labored, and with as much effect as any man living. That you may live long to continue your useful labors, and reap the reward in the thankfulness of nations, is my sincere prayer. Accept the assurances of my high esteem and affectionate attachment. THOMAS JEFFERSON."

I wish I could read such letters about my ancestors. I wish posterity could read such letters about us.

Although that man received the cordial thanks, and enjoyed the friendship and esteem of four Presidents of the United States, he is attacked, vilified, and his memory blackened by men who are not fit to black his shoes. They say he was a bad man. Do you know what an ordinary clergyman calls a bad man? It is one who won't hear him preach.

"I believe in the equality of man, and I believe that religious duties consist in doing justice, loving mercy and making our fellow-creatures happy. My own mind is my own church." That is what Thomas Paine said.

It is necessary to the happiness of man that he be a man, faithful to himself. I believe a cruel God makes a cruel man, and in turn a cruel man believes in a cruel God. Men make their religions, and they make their gods. As man becomes civilized, he civilizes his religions and reforms his gods.

"No man should make a living by religion." "One good schoolmaster is of more use than a hundred priests." Good. "I believe in the gospel of this world." Good again. That is what I preach, and I have had a call. Every railroad, every steamboat, every telegraph, every invention that lessens toil and makes man more of a man, and less a slave, is an apostle in my religion. Every building in which these things are made is a temple; every schoolhouse is a church. Every man that finds out an absolute fact—not a theory, but a fact—adds a new page to my bible. And I think one fact is worth a thousand superstitions. Just as fast as we can trade off superstitions for facts, we are getting ahead. The key of heaven is not in the keeping of any sect. My religion is universal philanthropy. I have yet some years in store, for I have been a happy man.

There are thousands of men that Presbyterianism surrounds like a wall a thousand feet high. They can't get over or look over, and so they swear that that is all there is of this world. "To do good is my religion." Is it not a wonder that the man who wrote that has been treated as though he were a wild beast? Why? Because his mind was not so constructed that he could believe the Bible, and he was not hypocrite enough to say he did believe. If he had said he did believe it, he would have been a liar, and have had their highest respect.

I could tell you by the hour, by the week, what has been said about this great and splendid man by the best intellects of the world. I could talk to you by the hour, by the week, of what has been said about this man by the meanest men in the world.

They have said that when he came to die he got scared and recanted. A little while ago I offered a thousand dollars in gold to anybody who would prove it. That offer was accepted by a paper in this city. Then it backed out. Then it said it never accepted the offer. Then it tried to prove that the charge was true. Then they backed down, and said they never believed it was true. Then I said: "Why did you try to prove it if you didn't believe it?" That paper finally said: "We did not believe he did recant; he died a blaspheming Infidel."

I don't think there is half so much responsibility attached to dying as there is to living. When you come to die you can't do anything except die. You can't help a friend, except to remember him in your will. The question is not to die right; the question is to live right; but it has been a favorite idea with all religionists that when a man comes to die, if he lived without the aid of religion, the snakes of conscience will come to him. I think that when a man comes to die he goes back to the scenes of youth, to his childhood and his mother, and the innocence of the time when the world was an unread volume. And I think that the Mohammedan who has been converted to Christianity, when he comes to die, in nine cases out of ten is a Mohammedan again.

These things prove nothing. But I wish to say that Thomas Paine, when he came to die, said: "I have nothing to take back; I believe the doctrines I have preached." And although he was surrounded by ministers and harassed by the orthodox, he was true to his own soul. He was seventy-three years of age; he was dying almost friendless; but he was true to himself, and he was unpopular. There are very few who will stay by a man through unpopularity. When the storm strikes you, the timid fly, and if a friend stays, he is a friend indeed.

He died almost alone, under a flag that he, as much as any other man, gave to the skies. He died surrounded by those who hated and despised him; who endeavored to wring from the lips of death a recantation. But, dying as he was, his soul stood erect to the last moment. And here I have got the witnesses, and I took their depositions myself. I am going to take plenty more of them. I am going to settle this thing forever in this country. These men must stop lying about Thomas Paine, or at the bar of public conscience I will convict them as common liars.

When that wretched Infidel was dying, the emissaries of the Church gathered about him to bring home the wandering sheep, and even his physician joined in the cry. The victim lay helpless before them in the agonies of death. But nothing like a recantation could be wrung from the brave lips of Thomas Paine. I think there is enough evidence that this man was an Infidel to the last moment of his natural life. Whenever you want the proof that he did not recant, you will find it in the N. Y. Observer of Dec. 1, 1877, which says: "We have never said, nor have we ever supposed, that Paine recanted his infidelity. The accounts agree in stating that he died a blaspheming Infidel." When he was dying he was infested by the orthodox, eager to obtain a recantation; like unclean birds of prey crouching in the darkness, these jackals of superstition, these unclean beasts, are the witnesses that orthodoxy has produced to malign the character of this generous man. They have said that he was a defaulter in England, and I have offered one thousand dollars for the proof. If it is so, the records there will show it, and I will pay one thousand dollars in gold for the proof. They have said that his wife was divorced from him on account of his cruel treatment of her. If it is so the records of the parish will show it, and I will pay one thousand dollars to any man if he will produce the proof. In the meantime I denounce it as an infamous lie. Let me say that there is not one word of truth in the statements they have made that detracts from the courage, the manhood, or the honor of Thomas Paine; not one word.

They have pursued Paine to deter others from opposing the Church. They have said to me, "Recollect the fate of Thomas Paine." I am recollecting it. No, there has been no energy spared to degrade Thomas Paine. I want to tell you what I have against the Church. They have imprisoned the human mind; in the name of God they have burned us at the stake and consigned our souls to hell fire. They have confiscated our property and denied us the right to testify in courts of justice. Until the new Constitution of the state of Illinois was adopted I could not have testified in any court of justice in that State. If my wife and children had been murdered, and I had the proofs to convict the murderers, I would not have been permitted to state who did the murder. We have a Constitution now that allows me to tell my story in the courts, and I helped to get it. You have refused us burial; you have robbed us of every right and inflicted every possible wrong, and then you have fallen upon your knees and asked God to finish by roasting us in hell. Can you wonder that we have denounced the tyranny and superstition that comes to us with hands stained with human blood?

I deny that religion is the end of this life. Happiness is the thing—happiness, not in some other world or life, but now and here.

Virtue is the subjection of passion to intellect; it is to act in accordance with your highest convictions. This truth Infidels have in all ages preached. They have handed the torch from one to the other; they have kept the fire of truth burning upon the altar.

There can be no adoration without absolute liberty. True religion is the perfume of a grateful heart. Science is liberty; ignorance and superstition is slavery; knowledge is freedom. What do you want in exchange for a lie? If you get a fact for a lie, ought you not to be satisfied? We propose to give for falsehood and superstition facts, truth; in exchange for slavery of the mind we offer you liberty. That is all. Is not that enough? I say again, we want this life to be happy. Everything that gives us better houses, better food, better husbands and wives and children—all these things constitute what I call progress; they go to make us happy here with our wives and children and those we love now. Is there not some way to rescue the people from this superstition?

It seems to me that whoever cares to think about it must have some doubts as to the divine origin of the Scriptures. For 1800 years they have been on trial, and what has been accomplished? Will you lend a man money simply because he is a Christian and belongs to a church? Is there any bank in New York that will take a certificate of good standing in any church as collateral security for one dollar?

The principal business of the day with great nations is to destroy one another. Millions of men have been killed in the name of religion. Every nation is groaning under the burthen of debt incurred in carrying on wars against other Christian nations. The world is covered with forts to keep Christians from killing Christians, and every sea is covered with iron monsters made to blow Christian brains into froth. Verily, it is sweet to see brethren dwell together in unity. There must be some other way to civilize and humanize man. We have tried creed and dogma and superstition, and they have failed miserably. Let us try liberty. We need free thought, men of moral courage. We need have no fear of being ridiculed. On every hand the people are advancing. The men of science—exploring the heavens and the earth and the gloomy caverns peopled with the demons of the past—are the angels of to-day. Science digs a clod from the earth and makes it into some great giant that turns with tireless arms the countless wheels of toil.

Thomas Paine lived a long, laborious, and useful life, and the world is better for his having lived. His friends were untrue to him because he had been true to himself. He lost the respect of society by deserving it. If to be in advance of your time is to be great, he was great; if to discharge your duty in the presence of death is to be a hero, he was a hero. Slander cannot touch him; hatred cannot touch him. A few more years, a few more brave men, a few more steps in the path of progress, and mankind will venerate and love the memory of the man who said, "Any system of religion that shocks the mind of a child cannot be a true system." A few more years, a few brave men, and the world will do justice to the man who also said, "The world is my country; to do good is my religion." A few more years, and every city of the great republic will learn to love the memory of the man who first wrote, "The Free and Independent States of America."

Ladies and gentlemen, I thank you again.

THE SPIRITUAL SCIENTIST is advertised to soon reappear in magazine form. May its re-advent and renewed life be auspicious and prosperous.

Informers.

MR. EDITOR:—The business of an informer has always been considered by every one possessed of any decent self-respect to be a very disreputable one, but the manner in which this Anthony Comstock seems to be conducting it should merit the most righteous indignation of every decent, law-abiding citizen of our community. I am ingrained with that old-fashioned notion that the man that induces another to commit a crime is by far the greater offender. I send you some of Mr. Comstock's wholesale transactions in this his manner of doing what he claims to be a legitimate business, but which I think to be far more mean and contemptible than robbing the dead of their grave-clothes. Perhaps I may be told that those are harsh words, for Comstock is considered to be a most eminent Christian, imbued with all the faith and graces of orthodoxy. Theoretically he may be, but as it regards putting into practice some of the sublime precepts of the New Testament, the veriest Atheist is by far his superior. His depraved nature seems to be in such a harmonious condition with obscene literature that he cannot appreciate the command, "Cause not they brother to offend" Had I not exercised very considerable caution I might myself have been caught with his alluring and seductive bait. I received a letter last summer from a country post-office in New Jersey, in which the writer offers some very complimentary sayings to myself, stated that there was a considerable demand among the young men in the village and surrounding neighborhood for "French pictures," and that he could dispose of a large number at a good profit; could I render him any assistance in procuring such goods? If so, I might send him a few samples with the prices. To pay for those samples $1 was enclosed. I sent in answer a postal card stating that I was not in the obscene literature business and that his dollar would be returned to him whenever he choose to call or send for it. The dollar is still in my possession ready to be returned at any time to the rightful owner; but not to be sent to Post Office Box 49, Squan Village, N. J., or any other post-office in the United States. Now suppose "God's grace" had not been given me in sufficient measure to withstand the temptation of this crafty emissary of Satan? The readers of the Eagle would have read of my arrest as a dealer in obscene literature, and nothing I could have said or done would have prevented the statute punishment for so doing from being inflicted on me.

Will the Eagle please inform me under what clause of the Constitution the Government gets the authority for giving such great discretionary power to this Anthony Comstock? I have re-read the Articles of the Constitution very carefully, and I can only find that in the seventh clause the States delegated to the General Governmentthe right to establish "post offices and post-roads." But this surely does not give the Government the right to say as to my dealing in literature of any kind whatever. Then who is to decide as to what is obscene? I heard Dr. Talmage say in his Tabernacle that "Childe Harold was gemmed with obscenity like a May queen." So under the Doctor's ruling, I should be debarred from selling a copy of Lord Byron. Comstock claims that Dr. Trall's "Sexual Physiology" is an obscene book, and that he has the power to arrest all who sell it. My attention was first directed to this work by a very favorable notice of it in the New York Tribune, at the time it had an able editor in the person of Horace Greely. Since then I have sold many a copy. Has the Government the right by the Constitution to authorize Comstock to arrest me for so doing? But of one thing we may feel assured, that a Government which finds it necessary to employ such spies and informers as this Anthony Comstock and his assistants cannot long retain the confidence and support of any rightly constituted citizen. Yours for decency, good order and good morals, but not according to the gospel of Anthony Comstock. W. W.

Brooklyn Eagle.

Mr. Teed Explains.

MORAVIA, N. Y., Feb. 4, 1878.

MR. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Some one takes exception to my statement concerning hydrogen. He says it is well known that water is composed of oxygen and hydrogen in certain definite proportions. To say that hydrogen is the water producer is untrue. He hopes that I am sufficiently open to conviction to believe the evidence of my senses, and then proceeds to instance a simple chemical experiment, which he believes upsets my position completely. The fact that the word hydrogen rendered into English is "water-producer," he does not dare to question. Is it scientific to call the substance in question water-producer (hydrogen) when it is actually something else? Every time he or any other person employs the term in that relation, he calls the substance water-producer. But with the same consistency of all so-called scientists, he says hydrogen—water-producer—is not hydrogen-water-producer. Why does he not, like a true scientist, give it its proper name and communicate to the world his discovery. If it is not hydrogen-water-producer, what is it?

In giving the constituent elements of water I see he has forgotten some things. Mr. Bennett says the Universe is here, matter is here, force is here. These he claims to be tangible, appreciable substances.

In the disintegration of water, we obtain two parts hydrogen, one part oxygen. $^2H.\ O.$ are the symbols of the supposed formula of water. I can assure the correspondent who is disturbed at my declaration that there is at least one quality of force in a definite proportion exhausted in the process of disintegration. I, of course, allude to the heat the gentleman employs to heat his gun-barrel. Heat is employed to disengage the two substances. Heat is also liberated, but not of the same degree of tension as that used for its disintegration. What has become of the force employed to disengage—as he would term it—the oxygen and hydrogen? Has the force used been converted through the process of incubation to oxygen and hydrogen? and has the water all been converted to another degree of intensity, and to magnetic and electric force and dissipated? Who will tell? Your correspondent is a fossil of the old school, and don't know that the evolutionists have completely set aside the effete chemistry of the past three hundred years. If he is an evolutionist, he is such on the principle that a parrot is a talkist. If I were an evolutionist, I would be a whole one, if not, I would be the other kind of a scientist. I would not be both, mixed. The truth is that in decomposing water, enough heat has been exhausted to account for all the oxygen and hydrogen produced. In quantity they are exact equivalents. I challenge him to prove that the oxygen and hydrogen is the substance that composed the water and not the substance comprising the force. He can't do it. His position is a mere theory. If it can be sustained, well and good; if not, my theorizing is at least as valuable as the effete theory he has presented.

If I take two parts hydrogen and one of oxygen, I can produce water if I employ enough fire-light and heat to account for the water produced. I cannot evolve the water except I fecundate the light and heat employed with hydrogen, the male element. By fecundating the force, by the forces obtained from the dissolution of the hydrogen, water is incubated.

Now sir, what do I claim? simply that water is composed of light and heat on one octave, and that hydrogen is light and heat on another octave, and that one is male, and the other is female.

There is no substance in the Universe that cannot be converted to some other and all other substances.

The law of evolution is the law of transmutation, and in the process described by your correspondent, oxygen and hydrogen are evolved (created) not from nothing, but from the force by which the water is fecundated. I am sorry the world is so full of fools, but in my sorrow I do not forget that they are an essential factor in God's economy.

Yours as ever, CYRUS ROMULUS.

Answers to Inquirers.

QUESTION.—Which is the best history of the Crimean War? Answer.—Kinglake's "History of the Crimean War" is accounted the best.

QUES. 2.—Where was the ship Alabama built and equipped with men and ammunition? Ans.—The "Alabama" was built and equipped in England.

QUES. 3.—Which is the most reliable history of Ireland? Ans.—Sullivan's "History of Ireland" and "New Ireland" are accounted the most reliable.

QUES. 4.—At what time was the Immaculate Conception of the Virgin Mary made an article of faith? Ans.—The formal definition of the dogma of the Immaculate Conception (which had already been a "floating" article of faith for several centuries) took place in December, 1854, and was confirmed by the Ecumenical Council of 1869–70.

W. H. C.—I wish you would in your next issue give a catalogue of all the writings you know of that are older than the Bible; also the names of the authors, together with dates. Ans.—Colenso and other scholarly and patient investigators fix the era of the very oldest Bible writers at from 1100 to 1060 before Christ, with the possibility that the dates were considerably later than that. It is simple nonsense to-day to call Moses the author of the Pentateuch, or even a historical character. Usher's Chronology is nothing but the bosh of credulous pedantry, and no respectable Bibliologist now gives it the least credence. But whoever wrote the ancient Hebrew books, their antiquity is far inferior to a huge mass of other old writings, as will be seen from the following:—

1. "No nation has ever equalled them (the Egyptians) in their love for recording all human events and transactions. . . . . Every year, month, and day had its record, and thus Egypt is the monumental land of the earth. Bunsen says that 'the genuine Egyptian writing is at least as old as Menes, the founder of the Empire; perhaps three thousand years before Christ.' No other human records, whether of India or China, go back so far." Clarke's "Ten Great Religions," p. 210.

2. "The Hindoos have sacred books of great antiquity and a rich literature extending back twenty or thirty centuries." Ibid, p. 85.

3. "The authentic history of China commences some two thousand years before Christ, and a thousand years in this history is like a century in that of any other people. The oral language of China has continued the same that it is now for thirty centuries." Ibid, p. 34.

4. Zoroaster, the writer of the Zend-Avesta, must have lived about 1300 or 1250 before Christ. Ibid, p. 180.

5. The late Assyrian discoveries of George Smith abundantly prove that the oldest portion of the oldest book of the "Old Testament" is a mere after-thought of the "tile-writing account of creation" which he brought to light.

Where is now the consummate antiquity of the poor Bible?

W. C. G.—A friend of mine and myself disagree. I affirm that Edison's Phonograph is a reality; he denies it, saying it is nothing but a myth. We leave it to you. Please answer. Ans.—Since the appearance of our article on "A Trinity of Inventions," Mr. Edison has exhibited his Phonograph to a large assembly in the Cooper Institute, of this city, and every one who was present will readily testify to its satisfactorily performing all that we have claimed for it. Mr. Edison is, however, engaged in still further perfecting it. Its possibilities are almost incalculable. Your friend will have to stand the oysters.

Currency and Finance.

Margaret Chappellsmith and her Political Economy.

BRO. BENNETT: I am very much surprised at the position and arguments of Mrs. Chappellsmith, as I would have bet (if I had been in the business) ten dinners for a poor family that she would have been on the other side of the house, and in favor of the laborer, whereas she is on the side of the millionaire and his oppressive agents, the moneyed class.

She quotes: "The interest of the poor man, and of those in moderate circumstances lies in a plentiful supply of money," (at a low rate of interest) "which will pay every variety of debt. TRUTH SEEKER, Jan. 5, 1878." To which I add the italics, and cry amen, amen, loud and long.

I quote from Mrs. C.: "How can any increase of paper money, or any substitution of silver coin for gold rectify this? Our manufactories and other seats of industry do not now sustain the number of laborers which they formerly did; but this is not caused by a want of what passes for money. We have abundant evidence that such circulating medium is being lessened in amount by those who issue it, because there is not a demand for the supply there is of it! If there were more of it, it could pass into the hands of the poor men only if they could obtain employment; and to replace the workingman in the condition he has been used to, his wages must have a nominal increase in proportion to the increase of the currency; and that could only be if the demand for laborers was somewhat equal to, or in excess of the number of laborers that need employment."

I am sorry that such erroneous philosophy should gain the credence it does with people who, we would suppose, could reason deeper and see clearer. The poor of the country have this same idea in various forms. They say there is too much money, but if you ask if they ever had too much, the answer is no! They say there is too much labor-saving machinery, it throws the laborer out of work. Ask them, if on the whole the price of labor has not been constantly rising ever since labor-saving was introduced? They will answer, yes, which contradicts their other assertion flatly! They are just like a flock of sheep which the dogs have raided upon, and scattered in all directions, and are perfectly bewildered and know not what to do, and so sit down alone with their miserable solace of rum and tobacco, instead of uniting together and driving the dogs out, who in this case are represented by the small capitalists who are driven to the wall and crushed to death by the great capitalists who control Congress and make money plenty or scarce as best suits their whims.

Now let me state a few facts, and see if they agree with Mrs. Chappellsmith's theories. In 1865, there was in round numbers $2,100,000,000 of circulating money in the United States, besides the circulation of gold and silver west of the Rocky Mountains, which is not reckoned in the account. Does anybody remember to have heard it said that money was over-abundant in 1865, 66, 67, or 68? We only had then about forty to forty-five dollars per head, whereas it is said France has sixty dollars per head now.

In 1865 it is well remembered that labor was all employed and well paid. Yes, and the money was all employed and well paid also at that time. Then why did the money kings (for such they are) reduce the volume and stop the wheels of manufacture, trade and commerce, as they did? Mrs. C. tells us there was, or is now no demand for labor. I say she is most terribly mistaken! I will tell you why! It is a statistical fact that the real wealth of a nation only increases at the annual rate of three per cent. What becomes of all the other ninety-seven per cent? It is consumed by the laborers, the wear and tear of machinery, the losses by fire, and a thousand ways. Did you ever think that human beings consume so near all they produce? This being a fact, then, let me ask the over-productionists how soon we can produce enough a head to last even one year?

Will Mrs. C. please explain?

Remember, this is the case now, with all our too much machinery and too much labor. The Monetary Commission on this point very aptly remarks that "without constant reproduction, mankind would soon be stripped of all their moveable possessions."

Agreeing that it requires the constant employment of all the labor of the country to supply the necessaries, exclusive of the enjoyments, pleasures, and luxuries of life which all would indulge in if they could obtain them even by labor, now, where are your idle laborers? And why are they idle?

I will tell you! Although I must upset all Mrs. C.'s sophistry by doing so, it is a conscientious duty to do it.

I have proven there is no need to be idle, even to earn a fair living for all. I have shown that all would live somewhat extravagantly if they had the opportunity! Then, in the name of humanity, why preach enforced idleness while so much remains undone?

Another crying need for all the labor and labor-saving machinery that can be introduced for the next centennial exhibition is urgently called for, to enable us to produce enough to live on, even economically, and save a portion of the above three per cent., to reduce the awful debts that stare us out of countenance on all sides.

You must remember the real wealth, which only gathers at the rate of three per cent. per annum, is all we have to reduce debt with, and debt is being increased fearfully fast. I just read a statement to-day, showing that the debt of 180 cities of this country, where we daily hear the cry of over-abunndance, aggregates the enormous sum of $644,000,000, and that of this amount $420,000,000 has been contracted during the last ten years.

Do you think it necessary to go to work soon to earn the interest and principal of that frightful sum, seeing that labor must earn every dollar of it, and that labor consumes ninety-seven per cent. of all her products, machinery and all, in their production?

Will you talk such utter fallacy any more, as too many laborers, too much machinery, too much money?

When labor is well paid it consumes a much greater amount than when not earning anything; but when idle, it will soon strip the country of "all its moveable possessions."

Stop all labor, and it would be but a short time before the Vanderbilts and the Rothschilds would be first-class tramps. So, continue the present stagnation by the contraction and resumption curses, and the well-to-do of all classes must eat up all they have, and turn out beggars.

How can we stay the fearful scourge?

Simply by returning to the policy which we had in 1865. Every one disposed to do well could then do so; we had plenty of cash and no inflated currency. As the contractionist and gold-dealer tell us, this is a plot of the bondholders, who were the only persons who demanded contraction in 1866 and resumption in 1873. These cursed acts reduced the volume of currency to less than $700,000,000 at this time, and have put it out of the power of enterprising men to employ capital, and so cannot employ labor. The cause of idle money now, of which there is far more talk than reality, is because the contraction of money years ago almost stopped the business of the country; this threw laborers out of employment by millions; this made tramps, beggars, and criminals by thousands, where all would have had employment if it had not been for the accursed and beggar-making policy of contraction, uncalled for by the people and unneeded by the financial condition of the country. So it is true, and will remain true to the end of time, that "the interest of the poor man and those in moderate circumstances lies in a plentiful supply of money which will pay every variety of debt," and that money so plentiful and cheap that every man who has property to pledge can get the use of his fair proportion of it—say fifty per cent. of the value of his real estate—and pay not more than three per cent. for it.

It would be like a genial summer shower upon the parched ground; the employer, consumer, and laborer would all be blessed, and the tramps could again return homeward, be employed, and happy.

Too much money!

Mrs. C. says: "As the money now waiting for use cannot find profitable employment, any addition to it could be used only by rash or dishonest speculators, who would rush into schemes that wiser and honest men would avoid."

If Mrs. C. were a banker, or large bondholder, which her arguments either show her to be, or at least to be in sympathy with them, I would not wonder at her. But supposing her to be in sympathy with the laborers, whose bleeding feet leave their tracks upon the dusty road, I do not conceive what she does mean.

Two years ago I met a gentleman who resided in Iowa. We conversed on finance. He said that money was worth whatever it would command in the market, and frequently mentioned fifteen per cent. I asked if fifteen was common to pay in Iowa. "Oh," he exclaimed, "that is nothing; I have plenty loaned at thirty per cent. per annum."

Now, mark, that was since the depression of business, and the consequent over-abundance of money, as Mrs. C. tells us.

I had a circular put in my hand the other day, which was issued by a responsible broker of this city, offering the best of landed security for money, and ten per cent. per annum for it. Now, if the broker pays me ten per cent., what will it cost the man who borrows it? Will Mrs. C. solve that, and afterward tell us what is the cause of money demanding from ten to seventy-five per cent. in the West, which is well known to be true?

No! this cry of too much money is one of the most terrible blinds and frauds that are used to make the poor sit in starvation and misery to-day.

I have been told that a savings bank in our town had more money than it could loan. I went to a director to inquire for it and he told me they had none to loan, although I had a first mortgage on the best kind of property to offer. I was up in the rich county of Chester, Pa., last fall, and was told that fifty dollars in bonds and six per cent interest was paid for $1,000.

And this is the testimony all the time.

Well then, say you, is there really no money idle? Yes, always some idle, some times all night, and over Sunday.

By the last Comptroller's report of the U. S. Treasury, we have a little statement throwing light on this dark question of too much money.

October 1st, 1877, the National Treasury held $336,000,000 of Government bonds, to secure the notes of the National Banks. The people, the labor of the country, pay $16,000,000 interest for those same bonds, on which the banks issue $291,000,000 for circulation as money, and on that money the labor of the country pays interest for $891,000,000. Hence the labor of the country pays interest on, first, $336,000,000 worth of bonds as security for bank notes, then pays interest on $891,000,000 of loans from the banks to the people, which makes the labor of the country pay interest at six per cent, to the banks for $936,000,000, more than there is in existence.

Does that look like too much money? Does that show abundance of idle money?

You are paying to bankers for the use of one dollar the interest on four dollars, which makes the interest to the banks about twenty-four per cent. for the money invested.

Mrs. C., these are awful and most ruinous facts to the labor of the country. Our banking system is one of the grandest bonanzas for the bankers and one of the direst woes for the people that ever fattened a tyrant.

It is time the people knew who their oppressors are, that they might throw them off and get a fair share of the fruits of their labor. But this can not be done while we are forced to pay twenty or thirty per cent. for the use of money to exchange values with, and pay labor. You might as well say a water mill will run without water as to say there is plenty of money at this time.

I quote: "Then in what are farmers to be benefited by their obtaining a higher nominal price for their products?" The above is another piece of blinding sophistry, through which the poor laborers can't see, and so are cheated again out of their share, and go to bed hungry. It means, as they often put it, what difference if wages are fifty cents a day, if everything else is low in proportion? It looks very plausible at first sight, like the fabled apples, which on tasting proved to be ashes and gall. Wages are very low just now, but are all other things low in proportion? No! I think not. The utter fallacy of the above idea and fraud is shown by the following incident:

Many years ago a son of the land of potatoes was in the market in Philadelphia, and he asked the price of a pair of fine fowls. The market-woman said they were fifty cents. "Och! my good lady," exclaimed the man, "I can buy them in Ireland for six cents." With natural indignation, the woman asked him why he did not stay in Ireland? "Why, be jabers," said he, "I had no six cents to buy them with!"

And this is true when there is no labor. The poor man can buy nothing, though houses are a penny a piece. Make money plenty, that makes labor plenty, then the man can buy plenty at good prices, and it is better for everybody.

S. MARSHALL.

Wilmington, Del., Jan. 18, 1878.

The Labor Question.

Hard Times—The Cause and Cure.

EDITOR TRUTH SEEKER: In your issue of Jan. 5, appeared an article on the "Labor Question" by Mr. Eugene Macdonald. That gentleman's views on the subject blend harmoniously with those of my friends—who are also readers of your matchless sheet—with whom I rigorously disagree. I therefore desire, if you will do me the honor to permit me, to call their attention, and the attention of your readers to the article above referred to, believing I can in this manner convince many of them of the erroneous fallacies to which many writers attribute the hard times.

Thinkers are the lights of progress; where these lights shine not, the world is dark, and phantoms supply the place of realities. Writers are supposed to be thinkers, and assertions from the popular ones are gulped by the masses as facts. Thus credulity invites its own ruin, and the fall of nations. Writers, then, should think when they write, and readers should think when they read.

When we know where the root of an evil is, we may apply the remedy, and not till then, for pruning the branches gives strength to the tree—and that is what hundreds of writers are doing to-day. It probably might relieve some of us from protracted thought if Mr. Macdonald will give an explanation of that sentence which he thinks conveys a fact that "no one can successfully dispute," but which appears to me as something that amounts to nothing. It reads thus: "A country where every person had a moderate competence could not suffer from hard times."

If by that he means that a country where every person in it had an everlasting, ever-renewing supply of all things necessary for their comfort, could not suffer from hard times, he is clearly understood; but where is such a country? Does any one know? I wish I knew; I'd surely emigrate there, post haste, and take the oath of allegiance. Is it not just as true to say that in a country where it is always light no one can suffer from darkness; for as darkness is the absence of light, is not want, in this case, the absence of plenty?

Again, he says: "Another statement which our learned political economists will not question, is, that there are more men in this country than there is work for." That, in one sense, is true, and, in every sense a shame to American intelligence.

As a proof of the above statement, Mr. Macdonald tells us, like hundreds of others, that "the market at present is glutted." True, and our bellies are stinted, and our rags whip us nearly to death.

Another surface fact the gentleman puts forth is, that "a man with two children can live cheaper than a man with seven." We can reverse the proposition by saying, a man with seven children creates more demand in market than a man with two, for while the one calls for only two pairs of shoes, the other calls for seven, and all other things likewise in proportion.

It is unfair to accuse parents for having more children than they can support before you give them a fair trial by way of steady employment. That the world can only support a certain number of inhabitants, and that its numbers are daily increasing, are facts which it is high time to consider. But before we assert that the present state of affairs is in consequence of an over-population in the world, we ought to first make the best use of its productive resources.

Mr. Macdonald asserts that the causes of the present state of society are to be found in rum, religion, and tobacco. Since he previously asserted that there are more men in the country than there is work for, I fail to see wherein he can expect a cure for the disease by stopping the manufacture of tobacco and the distilling of liquor. Where would the tobacconists and all those engaged in the rum traffic find employment?

The cause is not there, nor in the other part of his argument—the begetting too many children through the religion taught by the priests, nor yet in the building of costly churches, magnificent cathedrals, etc. Had all our laboring people been constantly employed, failing then to produce the wants of all the people, we might with some certainty have attributed the hard times to that cause—the building of costly churches, etc.—by neglecting the production of our more immediate wants. But such is not the case.

Rum, religion, and tobacco are poisonous vines, but not the great tree of evil that overshadows our beautiful land. The proper cure for these, I fear, lies in a very slow process of evolution; they can be uprooted only by education and a practical endorsement of the proper laws of propagation.

The universal advancement of all truth is the universal cure for all evil. Truth is apparently stern, but it is grand and beautiful, for in it abides the prince of peace and the queen of harmonies, and if we would find truth we must search for it. Find out what has stopped the demand for all manner of produce, and you find the cause of our people's affliction. The people, as well as being the producing, are the consuming element, and the people are deprived of the means of purchasing their requirements.

In the truth of that last sentence lies the cause of the idle millions who are daily increasing, and surely will, if relief comes not soon, teach the world the lesson that the bees must not be abused, or tampered with too much, or they will swarm and sting. The fact that the people cannot, through being deprived of the means, purchase their requirements, is the true interpretation of our over-production.

By an idle bench sits the ragged shoemaker; by a motionless loom sits the shoeless weaver; the manufacturers and producers of everything are at a standstill, and everybody is in need of everything; transportation has greatly decreased and political wise men cry out, over-speculation in railroad building.

Give us a plentiful medium of exchange; a paper money fills the bill. Get it into circulation by means of internal improvements, for until it gets into the hands of the people, the masses, a cure is impossible. Greenbacks will cost the Government nothing, not even for the paper to stamp. Internal improvements will be all clear gain to the nation; for when Government, which is the people, says greenbacks shall be the money of the country, everything will be paid in them, and everybody will accept it.

The sooner this is brought about, the sooner will everything become prosperous and everybody happy. The longer the present financial system runs, the less prosperous we shall become, the more failures will take place in every interprise, and every branch of industry; the more men will be thrown out of employment, the more hunger and cold will continue to make drear and desolate the sunny homes of "this delicious land."

Does not everybody tell us that the market is glutted with every kind of production? Does not everybody admit that the producers are thrown idle on that account? And does not common sense teach us that this glut must be removed by the people? We are compelled to cease purchasing because we have no money; and we are compelled to remain idle because we cannot purchase; then why don't the people command their servants to issue money, and get it into the hands of the purchasing element—the masses.

When that is done, the whole machinery will be set in motion. Merchants will begin to sell their goods, calling for more from the manufactories. Manufactories will be set in motion to supply the demand, and men be employed again. Transportation will increase, and railroads prove a good investment. Iron will be in demand once more, and coal to smelt it. Everybody will again be employed, and songs of joy will rise on every breeze, a cheerful word will fall from every tongue, a happy smile illumine every face, and our land become a perfect paradise.

ROBERT CUMMING.

Judson, Kansas, Jan. 15, 1878.

Communications.

Bob Ingersoll's Inconsistencies.

MR. EDITOR: As Mr. Ingersoll persists in being inconsistent, let me persist a little in pointing out some of his inconsistencies:

1. He styles himself a "Liberal," or "Free-thinker," advocating "free-thought," and then places a barrier of seventy-five cents between every man in the universe and the sound of his voice.

2. He says he respects every man who thinks for himself, though he may differ from him, while with almost the same breath he declares he has no respect for any man who believes in a Hell.

3. He flourishes the title of "Colonel," when it does not appear from Greeley's, Headley's, Lossing's, or Draper's History of the late Civil War, that he led or even followed anybody to victory.

4. He articulates fast and furiously about the "liberty of man, woman, and child." This would come from him with more grace if he had not been on the pro-slavery side in the campaign of 1860.

5. He has gone over the usual stock-in-trade about Paine's services to the cause of Independence. But why was he so anxious to ignore the fact that during the period of the Revolution, Paine pretended to be a believer in the Christian religion, and that his infidelity did not break out until about the time when he called Washington a "hypocrite," "an apostate or an impostor," and when he took to the bottle and Mrs. Bonneville?

G. H. HUMPHREY.

New York, February 4th, 1878.

Crimes and Cruelties of Christianity.

BY B. F. UNDERWOOD.—CONTINUED.

Skepticism advanced more slowly in Scotland than in England, and Captain Burt, in his "letters from the North of Scotland," observes that in that country the belief in witchcraft was quite common at a time when it was abandoned by the educated classes of England. He visited the country in 1730, and speaks of a woman who was burnt as late as 1727 (vol. i. p. 227-77). "In 1773," says Macaulay, "the Divines of the Associated Presbytery passed a resolution declaring their belief in witchcraft, and expressing deep regret at the skepticism that was common" (Hist. of England, vol. iii, p. 706).

The history of persecution for witchcraft in Scotland is terrible.

"In other lands the superstition was mixed with much of imposture; in Scotland it appears to have been entirely undiluted. It was produced by the teachings of the clergy, and it was everywhere fostered by their persecutions. Eagerly, passionately, with a thirst for blood that knew no mercy, with a zeal that never tired, did they accomplish their task. Assembled in solemn synod, the college of Aberdeen in 1603 enjoined every minister to take two of the elders of his parish and make a subtle and privy inquisition" and to question all the parishioners upon oath as to their knowledge of witches. Boxes were placed in the churches for the express purpose of receiving accusations. When a woman had fallen under suspicion the minister from the pulpit denounced her by name, exhorted the parishioners to give evidence against her, and prohibited any one from sheltering her. In the same spirit he exerted a power which was given him by a parochial organization elaborated perhaps more skillfully then any other in Europe. Under these circumstances the witch cases seem to have fallen almost entirely into the hands of the clergy; they were the leading Commissioners, before them confessions were taken. They were the acquiescing witnesses or the directors of the torture by which those confessions were elicited" (Hist. Rat. vol. i, p. 145).

These tortures were of the worst possible character. "If the witch was obdurate, the first, and it was said, the most effectual method of obtaining confession was by what was termed 'waking her.' An iron bridle or hoop was bound across her face, with four prongs, which were thrust into her mouth. It was fastened behind to the wall by a chain, in such a manner that the victim was unable to lie down; and in this position, she was sometimes kept for several days while men were constantly with her to prevent her from closing her eyes for a moment in sleep. Partly in order to effect this object and partly to discover the universal mark which was the sure sign of a witch, long pins were thrust into her body. At the same time, as it was a saying in Scotland that a witch would never confess while she could drink, excessive thirst was often added to her tortures. Some prisoners have been 'waked' for five nights, one it is said even for nine. But other and perhaps worse tortures were in reserve. The principal that were habitually applied were the pennywinkles, the boots and the caschielawis. The first was a kind of thumbscrew; the second was a frame in which the leg was inserted, and in which it was broken by wedges, driven in by a hammer; the third was also an iron frame for the leg, which was from time to time heated over a brazier. Fire-matches were sometimes applied to the body of the victim. We read in a contemporary legal register of one who was kept in 'vehement torture' in the caschielawis, and of another who remained in the same frightful machine for eleven days, and eleven nights, whose legs were broken daily for fourteen days in the boots, and who was so scourged that the whole skin was torn from the body. This was, it is true, an extreme case, but it was only an excessive application of the common torture."

How many confessions were extorted, and how many victims perished by these means, it is now impossible to say. A vast number of depositions have been preserved, but they were only taken before a single court, and many others took cognizance of the crime. We know that in 1662, more than a hundred and fifty persons were accused of witchcraft, and that in the preceding year no less than fourteen commissioners had been issued for the trials. After these facts it is scarcely necessary to notice how one traveler casually mentions having seen nine women burning together at Leith, in 1664, or how in 1678 nine others were condemned in a single day. . . An Earl of Mar, (who appears to have been the only person sensible of the inhumanity of the proceedings), tells us how, with a piercing yell, some women once broke, half burnt, from the slow fire that consumed them, struggled for a moment with despairing energy among the spectators, but soon with shrieks of blasphemy and wild protestations of innocence, sank writhing in agony amid the flames (Ibid, p. p. 145, 148).

The clergy, all over Scotland, applauded and stimulated the persecution. The ascendency they had obtained was boundless, and in this respect their power was entirely undisputed. One word from them might have arrested the tortures, but that word was never spoken. Their conduct cited, implies not merely a mental aberration, but also a callousness of feeling which has rarely been attained in a long career of vice. Yet these were men who had often shown, in the most trying circumstances, the highest and the most heroic virtues. . . . It is not on them our blame should fall, it is on the system that made them what they were. They were but illustrations of the great truth, that when men have come to regard a certain class of their fellow-creatures as doomed by the Almighty to eternal and excruciating agonies, and when their theology directs their minds with intense and realizing earnestness to the contemplation of such agonies, the result will be an indifference to the suffering of those whom they deem the enemies of their God, as absolute as it is perhaps possible for human nature to attain (Ibid, p. 149, 150).

It is probable that no class of victims endured sufferings so unalloyed and so intense. Not for them the wild fanaticism that nerves the soul against danger, and almost steels the body against torments. Not for them the assurance of a glorious eternity that has made the martyr look with exultation on the rising flame, as on the Elijah's chariot that is to bear his soul to heaven. Not for them the solace of lamenting friends, or the consciousnes that their memories would be cherished and honored by posterity. They died alone, hated and unpitied. They were deemed by all mankind the worst of criminals. Their very kinsmen shrank from them as tainted and accused. The superstition they had imbibed in childhood, blending with the illusions of age, and with the horrors of their position, persuaded them in many cases that they were indeed the bond slaves of Satan, and were about to exchange their torments upon earth for an agony that was as excruciating, and was eternal. And besides all this, we have to consider the terrors which the belief must have spread through the people at large; we have to picture the anguish of the mother as she imagined it was in the power of one she offended to blast in a moment every object of her affection; we have to conceive, above all, the awful shadow that the dread of accusation must have thrown on the enfeebled faculties of age, and the bitterness it must have added to desertion and to solitude. All these sufferings were the result of a single superstition which the spirit of Rationalism has destroyed (Ibid, p. p. 153-4).

That this superstition is taught in the Bible, and that all these tortures and executions, together with thousands of which no record is preserved, were in obedience to the command, "Thou shalt not suffer a witch to live," do not admit of doubt and cannot be denied by any candid mind.

If we would attempt to form an adequate idea of the evil effects of the persecuting spirit of Christianity; we must not forget the sad fate of the thousands of the Freethinkers who within the past two hundred years have been tortured, hanged, beheaded, impaled, and burned alive for their opinions; men like Giordano Bruno, who was hunted for his Infidelity from Italy, Geneva, Paris, England, and Germany, imprisoned and afterwards burned at Rome, for Atheism, February 17, 1600; Julius Vanini, who was burned at Toulouse in 1619, as "an impious and obstinate Atheist"; Casimir Leszynski, a Polish knight, who was burned at Warsaw, "for denying the being and providence of God"; Stephen Dolet, a printer and bookseller, who was burnt at Paris for Atheism in 1546; Matthew Hamount, who was burnt at Norwich, England, for denying Christ was a Savior, in 1579. Nor should we forget the multitude of Infidels who have languished in prisons on account of their views: men like Woolston, who was fined and put in prison, where he died in 1732, for writing "Four Discourses on the Miracles of our Savior"; Richard Carlile, who in the second quarter of the present century was imprisoned in England over nine years for delivering Liberal lectures and publishing the writings of Thomas Paine; Robert Taylor, who was heavily fined and imprisoned one year in England, in 1831, for delivering lectures against Christianity; and Abner Kneeland, who was imprisoned three months in Boston, as late as 1838, for offering, as it was falsely charged, disbelief in God. These are but a few of the hundreds whose names could be given, and whose experiences have been described by him in stating the facts of his own case:

"Christians set watch upon me; Christians defamed, falsified and slandered me; Christians informed against me; Christians surrounded me with a mock trial governed by mock laws and legal fictions; by Christian pay were the hireling lawyers retained; by Christian witnesses, was I confounded; by Christian newspapers misrepresented; by Christian juries found guilty; by Christian judges condemned; and a Christian public stood by and never interceded during my long, cruel, and humiliating imprisonment."

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

MR. GOSS, the eminent geologist, in a recent paper on the fossil insects of the secondary period, has shown that these are rarely met with in British strata, and the principal specimens of the Continent of Europe have been taken from the Swiss Alps or from the Solenhofen slate of Bavaria. No new forms have been met with differing so much from those of existing insects as to require a new order for their classification, such as had to be done in the case of the fossils of vertebrate animals, for example.

IN districts of the country where the cold is neither long nor intense, a suggestion of a Danish journal may be found useful in obtaining a supply of ice for summer use. When the ice is formed on a suitable stream, pond, or lake, make holes in the ice and insert portable pumps in them. From time to time pump up as much water as will cover the surface of the ice. The thin strata of water will soon freeze, and ice a foot thick can be harvested, where otherwise only cakes of about two inches in thickness could be gath-

The Truth Seeker.

D. M. BENNETT, Editor.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

The largest and cheapest Radical Journal published in Europe or America, containing nearly seven hundred square inches more of Reading Matter than any other Journal of its class.

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, FEB. 9, 1878.

Indexes.

It is probably as unpleasant for us to refer to personal matters as for the average of editors, but if our readers will bear with us this time we will endeavor not to annoy them again in the same way unless it is forced upon us, as now.

We had the misfortune to be arrested as a violator of United States laws, not because we had circulated anything obscene, nor because our life had been impure, but because our outspoken expressions were offensive to our pious opponents. We certainly were not to blame for being arrested, for we had only exercised the right which the Constitution of our country guarantees to every citizen. When placed in this unpleasant position, with a prison and heavy fines staring us in the face, we were peculiarly able to realize the unjustness of the laws under which we were apprehended. We were made acquainted with the fact that numerous persons had been arrested and cruelly wronged under those terrible statutes. It was very natural that we came to the conclusion that those laws ought to be repealed, or modified, and it can easily be imagined how unfraternal and how illiberal it was in some of our contemporaries, which claim to be Liberal papers, just at the moment when an effort was being made to induce the Liberals of this country to sign the petitions sent broadcast over the land, asking for a repeal or a modification of the laws aforesaid, to throw cold water on the enterprise, to stab us in the back, and even to accuse us of fraud, dishonesty, and conspiracy! It is lamentably true that all this has been done, and, too, in the name of Liberalism.

The only sheets that exhibited this spirit toward us were The Index, a misnomer in St. Louis called Common Sense, and a new aspirant for Liberal patronage in this building called Payne's Age of Reason (another misnomer). The Boston sheet led off, seeing great wrongs and dangers in the petition we sent out, and warned its readers not to sign it. It also discovered that we had been guilty of forgery, and with alacrity gave the information to its readers, and saw in this appalling fact additional reasons why the petition should not be signed. It, however, made itself most conspicious in its urgent appeals for purity. It cared little for personal liberty, if purity was preserved. Its utterances were gladly echoed by the Anthony Comstock organ here, and by the misnomer in St. Louis. In this great work they proved themselves a worthy trio—a trinity of purity-lovers who did not object to inflicting personal injury upon a brother. "Anything to beat Bennett," seemed to be the rallying cry. If this is Liberalism, the less the country has of it the better.

THE INDEX.

The great zeal of The Index for purity was as unnecessary as its opposition to the petition was futile; for nobody, in this quarter at any rate, had been impure, nobody wanted to be impure, nobody had sent out obscenity, and nobody, that we know of, had the slightest wish to touch obscenity. We only wanted to have the right to express our honest convictions and to enjoy the privileges which our fathers fought for and obtained. Notwithstanding the labored efforts of The Index to show the iniquity lurking in that inoffensive petition, we have been unable to see it. Mr. Abbot claims, now, to be in favor of the modification of the unconstitutional laws, and that is what the petition calls for. Its language, in closing, is this: "Wherefore, your petitioners pray, that the statutes aforesaid may be repealed, or materially modified, so that they cannot be used to abridge the freedom of the press, or of conscience, or to destroy the liberty and equality of the people before the law, and departments of the Government, on account of any religious, moral, political, medical, or commercial grounds or pretexts whatsoever." Is there anything very wrong in that? If Mr. Abbot really desires a modification of those statutes, why should he object to this reasonable language?

The urgent wish of The Index editor seems to be that the laws should not be changed, so far as the right to set up a censorship of the mails is concerned. He is most anxious that second and third class mail matter should be supervised; but why second and third class more than the first? No one questions the right that citizens possess to write what they please and send it in sealed letters through the mail, whether it is love-making, obscenity, conspiracy, or treason. No one questions the right of persons to write what they please in a letter and send it by mail where they please. This is regarded as a Constitutional right. And will Mr. Abbot please show wherein the Constitution gives the right to interfere in the second and third class of mail matter more than the first? Will he also point out where the Constitution gives Congress the right to legislate in reference to the morality or decency of the people, especially in connection with the mail service?

In The Index of Jan. 31, Mr. Abbot bewails the inability which exists in understanding his position. We think that we, at all events, understood him when he undertook to head off the petition, to show us up as a forger, and impliedly guilty of impurity, while with true pharisaical unction, he says, I am holier than thou. "The cause of Liberalism is the cause of purity, of truthfulness, of common kindness; of a noble morality in the very best sense of that word, and it only can be served by methods as high and noble as its objects." In other words, by The Index standard, and not THE TRUTH SEEKER'S.

Mr. Abbot was kind enough to print our explanation in reference to his charge of forgery, for which we thank him; but we think he uses special pleading, or something worse, when he attempts to show that we have changed ground, and that we have been forced to take his ground. In proof of this he quotes our language thus: "So far as real obscene books and prints which are calculated to inflame the passions are concerned, their circulation should be prohibited by mail and all other modes of transportation; but the main provisions of the section are far too sweeping and indefinite;" and then he congratulates us for coming on to his ground. Now, we have not changed at all. We have all the time been opposed to obscenity, both in the mails and out of the mails. We are as much opposed to it when sent by express, ordinary freight, or when passed from hand to hand. We think real obscenity ought to be suppressed everywhere; but we contend that it is not within the Constitutional power of Congress to legislate respecting it. We repeat the question, Where in the Constitution is power granted to the General Government to say what matter may and what may not be sent through the mails, and what may be sent as first class and not as second or third class? We insist that lewd, indecent prints and pictures are just as bad when sent by express as by mail, and it is the province of the various State governments to look after the immoralities of its subjects, but not of the General Government.

Great stress is laid upon the danger that awaits school children by improper mail matter being delivered to them. If this evil is of one-fourth the magnitude represented, why is not the expedient resorted to of having second and third class mail matter subject to the examination of tutors, guardians and parents, before it is passed over to pupils or children? The evil can easily be remedied in this simple way without violating the Constitution and suppressing the rights of the people. Why do not the sticklers for purity recommend this rational remedy? The evil, is however, greatly exaggerated. There is not one-tenth of the indecent matter sent to schools and children that is represented. It costs money to get up printed matter of any kind and mail it all over the country; and it is very unreasonable to suppose any person will long publish vile trash and send it gratuitously over the land for the vile purpose of debauching the minds of innocent children. The thing is wholly improbable.

This state of things is as much over-estimated as in regard to the production of lewd, indecent publications. Comstock is in the habit of showing to congressmen, legislators, editors, clergymen and others, samples of the vile stuff which he seized years ago, and represents that that sort of stuff is still being extensively sent through the mails. It is perfectly false. Nothing of the kind occurs. If it is true, as Comstock asserted in the meeting of his Suppression-of-Vice Society, which met in the Y. M. C. A. Hall on the evening of the 5th, that more indecent matter is now being sent through the mails than ever before—if with all the sacrifice that has been made of Constitutional rights and personal liberty, with the thousands of dollars that have been paid Anthony Comstock, and the hundreds of thousands that he has been empowered to deprive others of, with all the unjust fines, and imprisonments worse than death that have been inflicted upon well-disposed people—if with all this the circulation of indecent literature has increased, it is time for a change of tactics, time for Comstock to be dethroned, time for the unconstitutional laws passed for his benefit to be repealed, and time to return to the good old ways when the punishment of the citizens of the several States for crimes and misdemeanors was left with the States themselves. If the tyrannous rule of Comstockism has no better effect, in the name of all justice and decency let it be abolished! Those villainous books, which ten years ago were sold by half the book dealers in this city, are not now published at all. A man may seek diligently from the Battery to High Bridge, and spend weeks in the search, and he will scarcely find a copy. Great misrepresentations are made in regard to this thing for the sake of exciting the holy horror of intense lovers of purity, and inducing the belief that Comstock and Comstockism is a prime necessity in this country. Comstock has monopolized about all the indecent publications in the land, and these he is very fond of exhibiting to his special friends and occasionally sending through the mails, a sample of which conduct we called attention to in a previous issue, and which we can easily prove, if proof is called for. The publishing of vile prints and books can be detected, punished, and broken up without the aid of the General Government, and we are in favor of its being done. It is no more the business of the General Government to busy itself about what a man may publish, than it is to punish people for getting drunk, being disorderly, committing assault and battery, stealing chickens, picking pockets, breaking the peace, etc., etc., etc.

The effort Mr. Abbot makes to show that we have changed ground, and that we now oppose our petition, is dishonesty—or special pleading and hedging, to say the least. We stand by the petition as firmly as ever. The petition calls for modification as strongly as it does for repeal, and as Mr. Abbot now professes himself to be in favor of a radical modification, it is clearly he who has changed ground; it is he who ought to be congratulated for the change he has made, and it is he who "ought to be ashamed of the miserable insinuations" he has uttered. The petition asks for the repeal or material modification of the obnoxious laws, leaving it to the wisdom of Congress which it shall be. Mr. Abbot, after writing five columns in praise of Comstock and his labors, and in condemnation of the petition and its signers, distinctly said that he should not sign it and advised others not to sign it. Now he says the laws are wrong, and that he is in favor of a "radical and jealous revision and even of material modification" of them. Who, then, we repeat, has changed ground? Who, then, has at last come around to the position occupied by the other? If he is honest now in his profession that he wants the laws materially modified, was he honest in violently opposing the petition which asked for that? If he was honest then, why his carping and hair-splitting efforts to kill the petition? Was it because it was supposed to have some indirect bearing upon us? or was it because he was not consulted in framing it? What, then, was it? When he says we have abandoned any position that we have occupied in reference to those Comstock laws he says what is not true. We are opposed to obscenity everywhere; no more in the mails than in the express or in the freight cars. We are in favor of the General Government leaving with the State government the crimes and improprieties of the people. It has no Constitutional right to resolve itself into a police court to ferret out crimes not committed against itself.

We still hold that the passage of those Comstock laws was unconstitutional; that it was brought about by improper means, and that the same was a disgrace to the Congress which enacted the back-pay, the salary grab, the doubling of salaries, the demonetizing of silver, and many other similar acts, which were rushed through, pell-mell, during the closing hours of the forty-second Congress, when it presented the aspect of an insane asylum far more than that of a deliberative legislative body. Many of the acts of that Congress were a disgrace to the nation, as well as an outrage upon the principles of American liberty, and we are honestly, earnestly, and persistently in favor of their repeal or material modification, precisely what the hated petition asks for. We wish it could have pleased the editors of The Index, Common Sense, and The Age of Reason to have coöperated with us in what seems to us a good work, and which is really the duty of the Liberals of the country; but inasmuch as it has seemed proper to them to decry our efforts, to accuse us of fraud, dishonesty, conspiracy, etc., it was our humble course to do what we could, without their valuable aid—to accomplish the little that lay in our power, despite their unfriendly opposition and misrepresentation.

We have regarded Mr. Abbot as an earnest laborer in the cause of Liberalism, as a gentleman and a scholar, but we have felt pained at the unfraternal way in which he has treated us, and the opposition he has manifested to what thousands regard as the vital issue presented to the Liberals of the country. We hope we may hereafter be able to work in accord and concord with him.

"COMMON SENSE."

When this little sheet made its appearance, we greeted it kindly and frequently alluded to it in complimentary terms. Its editor acknowledged this in private notes. We thought we were on friendly terms with him until we published an obituary notice from a friend, concerning a departed one whom we respected, in which a slight reference was made to a pamphlet bearing upon Mr. Peterson. We had not the slightest wrong motive in publishing the article, nor the least wish to wrong Mr. Peterson, but for it we have been berated, vilified and slandered without stint by this supporter of Comstock, until it seemed he could hardly find epithets mean enough and harsh enough to apply to us. This is the man who loudly praises Anthony Comstock and his oppressive laws. This is one who shouts for purity, and wishes to do all in his power to crush us and wrong us. We consider him beneath our notice, and hope not to be under the necessity of again alluding to him and his malicious, unmanly course. We are still content to let him go his way, while we pursue ours. We prefer that he would not mention us, but, if it does him any good to slander us and spit out his venom, we shall try to be content. We yield him up to Comstock and to purity.

THE "AGE OF REASON."

In real meanness, this young organ of Anthony Comstock has undoubtedly excelled his two coadjutors. We were on friendly terms with Mr. Payne. We cheerfully announced his paper before it appeared; we advertised it; we gave it a courteous notice when it came out; we lent him our back bound volumes, the bound volumes of our exchanges, from which large numbers of names were copied; we lent him books of reference, etc., and were disposed to maintain amicable relations with him, but this we have been unable to do. Every reference he made to us in his paper was at the expense of truth. He began by representing that we had made an enormous sum of money in Liberal publishing—that in four years, from starting without a dollar, we had made $200,000. Upon demurring at this false representation, he nearly reiterated it, and said we did not want Liberals to know how wealthy we were lest they would cease to make donations to us, etc. He has accused us of fraud; of being a professional beggar; of making repeated appeals to Liberals for money on the score of being arrested; that Comstock and ourselves had been very good friends, and that Comstock, at the earnest and repeated remonstrances of others, had simply invited us to go before a commisioner and give bail; that then Comstock was disposed to let the matter drop, and that he even worked upon the government for months to prevent it from prosecuting us. In connection with us he has used the opprobrious epithets of "scheming, unprincipled outlaw and quack." Perhaps the meanest thing he has done was to say that "one Foote has flooded the mails with indecent literature, greatly to the detriment of the good morals and well being of the people of this country;" that Foote was a Christian, and Comstock a Liberal. To persons in private, he stated that Comstock and ourselves had entered into a conspiracy to make money off the Liberals of the country; that the arrest was a sham; that we then wrote letters all over the country, asking for aid to fight Comstock; that we had received $2,500, and that the money thus received we were dividing with Comstock, etc., etc.

It is surprising how any person who makes the least pretension to honor and truthfulness, can make such utterly false statements. He has proved himself wholly unlike George Washington, who, when a boy, used his hatchet too freely on the cherry tree. His biographer said he (Washington) "could not tell a lie." Payne was evidently not cut out for a Washington. Mr. Paine may possibly be able to tell the truth, but if so he has yet to show it in his paper.

This is the man who traduces us in the most shameful manner, and at the same time lauds Comstock and purity. He echoes Abbot's appeals for purity and his insinuations upon our motives and actions. This is the man of whom a prominent Western Liberal writes: "I cannot account for Payne's conduct. I never saw a more cowardly, infamous performance in my life. Notice his contemptible tricky allusion to one Foot. He out-Abbots Abbot and out-Petersons Peterson."

It is of this man an old friend in South Carolina writes thus:—"What ails your neighbor Payne? Does he think that by the most malicious and ungentlemanly attacks upon you he can succeed in tearing down THE TRUTH SEEKER, and building himself up in the estimation of Liberals upon its ruins? If so he is greatly mistaken. He seems to be pursuing about as mean a course towards you as that Common Sense (?) in St. Louis. They are both a disgrace to the Liberal cause." In reference to this man, a Liberal editor thus writes: "The attacks upon you by Payne in the Age of Reason, and Peterson in Common Sense are despicably mean and ungentlemanly."

It was to this man that a worthy Liberal in Burlington, Iowa wrote thus: "Mr. Payne: Having been taken in and done for when I subscribed for your paper, as undoubtedly many a better man has, never suspecting that it was a Y. M. C. A. Comstock outfit, I will now swallow the humiliation the best way I can, hereby requesting that you will at once strike my name off your list."

It is in reference to this man that we have received many letters in a similar vein from good Liberals in various parts of the country, which we could lay before our readers were it desirable. We care nothing for his insinuations about the "thinness" of our editorial efforts. He is perfectly welcome to regard them as thin and light if it affords him pleasure. We will continue to attend to the "thin" and light, and leave him to attend to the thick and heavy, the dirty and false.

It is hardly necessary to point out his numerous falsehoods. So far from our having made $200,000, we will gladly sell out for $10,000, and leave the field to himself, to Abbot, and Peterson, and we don't believe a man can be found who will give us $5,000. So far as being friendly with Comstock is concerned, or conspiring with him, we never saw him except when he arrested us; and a word, written or verbal, at any other time never passed between us. Notwithstanding what Payne asserts, we were as really arrested as ever a man was, and had we not had a friend who was willing to stand security for us we would have laid in Ludlow Street prison for weeks. Who ever heard of a man being required to give bail who had not first been arrested? If the statements we have made in reference to Comstock are false, why does not the gentleman show it or give us a chance to prove them in Court? Every charge can be substantiated. So far from Comstock working upon the Government to induce it not to prosecute us, it was another and a different man entirely. Comstock did all he could to get us into Judge Benedict's Court, but Col. Robert G. Ingersoll, after receiving copies of the tracts upon which we were arrested and indicted, wrote to the Postmaster-General and to other government dignitaries, and soon a hint came on here from Washington to the District Attorney that he had better not prosecute Bennett. It was not Comstock who did it.

As for our begging repeatedly and sending begging letters over the country asking for money, it is as false as the rest of it. Once only did we state that money for a defense fund would be acceptable. We did not ask for it, and in no case did we send begging letters. We did not send one asking for money, but wrote several, declining sums that were proffered, until they were needed. Several friends wrote us, "Draw on us at sight for twenty-five or fifty dollars," but we did not thus draw in a single instance. Had we been trying to bleed our friends for Comstock's and our own benefit, we should have been likely to take it when thus offered.

Our friends were generous and responded nobly to our one modest appeal, and their kindness we can never forget, but we did not get in $2,500, nor did Comstock get any part of it. Mr. Payne has made himself very uneasy about the money we have received as donations and as to what we did with it. We do not consider it any of his business what we do with the money that is donated to us; but for the satisfaction of our friends, donors, and others, we will make an exhibit of receipts and expenditures. We have kept an account of the money received from donors, and from the hundreds who sent us each from 30 cents to $25—and nearly all of which has been acknowledged in these columns—we have received $1,187,00.

DISBURSEMENTS FOR DEFENSE.

Retaining Lawyer, No. 1 for our defense,	$ 50.00
Paid to Lawyers No. 2, " "	250.00
Fifteen thousand petitions (writing paper)	85.00
Accompanying Documents,	82.00
Fifteen thousand envelopes for petitions,	30.00
Postage stamps for same and other mailing,	250.00
Labor in folding, enveloping, and directing,	67.00
Labor on returned petitions,	25.00
Cost of reel for petition and box to ship in,	10.00
Express on same to Washington,	3.50
2,000 papers and documents to Washington,	100.00
Time and money used in collecting facts,	50.00
Papers, etc., sent to donors,	50.00
Books, " "	50.00
Books still to be sent,	100.00
Total,	1,202.50

Thus showing that our expenditures have been $15.50 more than our receipts. Does this exhibit prove that we ought to be denounced as a fraud, a professional beggar, a swindler, and a conspirator? We cannot see that it does. We may not have used all the money discreetly, but we acted upon our best judgment. We deemed a repeal or modification of the unjust laws the most effectual defense we could make, and to this end we labored. We sent thousands of blanks to parties who have not responded, but this we could not foresee. We have tried to do the best we could. Others would doubtless have done better.

Why the three contemporaries here alluded to should pursue the course towards us that they have, we cannot say. We are not conscious of doing aught to injure either of them, and have indulged in no feeling save to treat them well. We have all the fighting we want in opposing the falsities of theology and the Church, the miserable persecutor, Comstock, and the societies that employ him, without wishing also to keep up a quarrel with those who profess to march in Liberal ranks. We have not sought this quarrel, but it has been forced upon us. We could not rest in silence under the base charges that have so often been unjustly made against us, without responding. We beg the trio to be a little patient with us. We are far older than either of them, and in a very few years will be entirely out of their way, when they can have the field to themselves, despite any impediment we can place in their way.

Our only object is to perform the duty that devolves upon us according to the best judgment we possess. We greatly prefer to dwell together in unity with brethren if they will allow us to do so, and hope we shall not again be under the painful necessity of making a personal defense of our course, motives, or actions.

The Suppression of Vice.

Anthony Comstock's Society for the Suppression of Vice held its yearly meeting at the hall of the Young Men's Christian Association, on the evening of the 5th, the President, Samuel Colgate, acting as chairman. Anthony spoke his little piece, and told how many arrests he had made, how many had been prosecuted, how many tons of obscene matter he had captured (some years ago), and considerable more that was interesting to the distinguished clergymen who graced the occasion. Comstock reported that he has suppressed the worst forms of obscenity, excepting that found in boys' papers and the journals of Freelovers and Freethinkers. He considers his duty now lies principally in crushing out that class of literature. One of the most discouraging features of the meeting was Comstock's announcement that after all this efficient society has done there is now more indecent matter passing through the mails than ever before. This does not speak loudly in favor of the continuance of Comstockism in our midst.

The President, in his speech, made some allusion to us though not calling us by name. He urged the brethren not to believe what had been printed against Brother Anthony, for he is too good to have such things true. He also expressed himself as being greatly dissatisfied with the blasphemy he deemed us guilty of, and declared himself in favor of its being put down. So we need not be surprised if another attempt is made to stop our mouth and our pen and to squelch our blasphemy.

Brother Tyng attended to the business part of the meeting. He said $8,000 must be raised for Brother Anthony this year, and he thought the audience should be Kimballized until they would shell out freely. $83.00 was collected and cards were handed around among the audience for each person to put down what he was willing to give. $950 are said to have been put down in this way, but some portion of this sum we know to be bogus and will not be collected. Last year $1,600 was subscribed at the meeting of the Sociery, and two years ago over $16,000 was subscribed. At this rate of going backward, Anthony will soon find his labors closed, and he will cease to be chief ruler of this country. It looks now as though Anthony will have difficulty in getting funds enough to prosecute his angelic labors through the year, and bring scores of unsuspecting persons to sorrow and to prison The brethren will have to "shell out."

Col. R. G. Ingersoll.

This brilliant orator gave another lecture last Sunday evening to an overflowing audience at Chickering Hall. His subject was "Hell," and he showed up the old brimstone lake in vivid colors. It is a thing worthy of note that one of the most radical discourses ever uttered should be listened to with rapt attention by a highly intellectual audience, on a Sunday evening, even where seventy-five cents were charged for admission, and that almost every sentence should be applauded to the echo. It shows what progress has been made within a quarter of a century. Then such a discourse would hardly have been tolerated. The Hall was filled compactly, and hundreds were compelled to turn away unable to gain an entrance. As high as five dollars was offered for admission. He lectures at the same place on Sunday, the 10th, and also on the evening of the 9th, at Gilmore's Garden.

We doubt not our readers will appreciate the lecture of Ingersoll on Thomas Paine give in this issue, though it inevitably crowds out the Devil and much other interesting matter. Next week we will give you "Hell."

THE POPES AND THEIR DOINGS.—Those who wish to read an interesting recital of the most disgraceful characters that have filled the Papal Chair, should send for a copy of it. It will surely give satisfaction to those who peruse it. 275 pages. In paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75; postage included.

THE MAMMOTH PETITION, containing 500 yards and some 50,000 signatures, was sent to Washington two weeks ago. It is to be hoped it may have some influence upon the powers that be. Other petitions that are coming in day by day will be duly forwarded.

FRIEND A. B. BROWN, of Worcester, Mass., called upon us a few days ago while on his way to fill lecture engagements in the West. He is willing to devote himself to the dissemination of Liberalism, and would be glad to find steady work in that direction.

IN NO WAY can the cause of THE TRUTH SEEKER be better promoted than by sending in the names of new subscribers and in ordering our Liberal books.

PHOTOGRAPHS of George Francis Train for sale at this office. Price 15 cents.

B. F. UNDERWOOD will lecture at Albany, N. Y., Feb. 10; Utica, 11; Urbana, Ohio, 13, 14, 15; London, Ohio, 17.

PERSONAL.—W. F. Jamieson is re-engaged to speak in Kansas City, Mo., the Sundays of February. Will hold a debate with Elder W. J. Orem (Adventist) in Pleasanton, Kansas, Feb. 5, 6, 7, 8, 11, 12, 13, 14. A course of lectures in Girard, Kansas, Feb. 18, 19, 20, 21, 22.

Selections.

Demonetizing Liberty.

IT IS ATTEMPTED UNDER THE GUISE OE SUPPRESSING OBSCENE LITEATURE.

The Protestant church in this conntry extends all the way, theologically and spiritually, from Romanism and rationalism—from Dr, Ireneus Prime, of The New York Observer, to Dr. H. W. Thomas, of Chicago. The vanguard is led by progressive, liberal culture, while the rear is made up of men who are altogether out of place in the nineteenth century, or in a republic. One branch of the church is tolerant and free, with fresh young blood, and vigorous brain, and a humane and sympathetic heart; the other branch is composed of fossils, Catholic in spirit, but Protestant in fellowship; men who love liberty of thought and speech only for themselves; men who would drag back this age three hundred years, and place the Spanish Inqnisition by the side of every school-house, college, newspaper office, publishing house, and lecture platform in the land. That this is sober truth, will appear in the tendency and drift of the facts hereinafter stated.

A few years ago the World's Evangelical Alliance was held in New York, and from that time the Church of England sentiment, in favor of the state fostering and upholding the church, has been actively and openly preached and propagated by the fossil element of the Protestant church in this country, to which reference has been made. A delegation from that august conclave, official or otherwise, visited Washington, and formally proposed the subject to President Grant and his cabinet. Soon after, a national society of fossils was organized, with the avowed object of bringing about a union of church and state, by putting God, or a god into the godless constitution of the United States, and liberty out of it. The endorsement of leading and influential statesmen and divines in all parts of the country was obtained in aid of the movement, and the "big job" of getting a god into the constitution was begun in earnest. This organization has been in existence several years, and has been actively engaged in circulating pamphlets, sending out lecturers, printing newspapers, and petitioning Congress, and in all possible ways creating public opinion in favor of its God-in-the-Constitution project, the proposed deity, of course, being the trifold mixture of heathen, Jewish, and Christian conceptions—a god who always loved power and cruelty, and always hated liberty; a god of besotted sensualism and unreasoning superstition; a god who delights in burning heretics in this world as a sort of apprenticeship to the grand holocaust of hell in the next.

The God-in-the-Constitution society has always found an active co-worker in the Young Men's Christian Association, or at least plenty of the Moody and Sankey stripe of men belonging to that organization are willing to join hands with that society in the good work. This powerful confederation of inquisition-lovers and liberty-haters have been doing more than print tracts and distribute them; they have been giving wicked heretics, from time to time, during the past year or two, a foretaste of what may be expected when their god is fairly domiciled on his throne, in the organic law, and liberty has been fully and finally dispossessed and driven out.

"Eternal vigilance," said Jefferson, "is the price of liberty." This article is written in the spirit of that patriotic, truly religious, and justice-loving vigilance to which Jefferson referred, and every thoughtful and patriotic citizen, every truly religious man, and every lover of liberty, cannot heed the warning and act upon it too constantly. The god of the Jesuitical conspirators against religious liberty in this country has not yet been put into the constitution, but he has secured a foothold, at least, in the federal statute-book. The assailants of religious freedom being wise as serpents, and quite as sly and still, concluded that a direct and open assault upon the constitution would not, in the present state of the public mind, be likely to succeed, and have been secretly attempting to repeal the constitutional guaranty of personal liberty, and liberty of speech, and of the press, by congressional act; well knowing that before the act can be declared unconstitutional and void (which it would be without doubt if the question could be got before the supreme court), many a heretic, by vigorous prosecution, could be made to bite the dust, and the public mind made familiar with persecution. In this indirect manner, these pious and mistaken zealots have partially succeeded in "demonetizing" liberty. It is a curious coincidence, that the legislation referred to by which it is attempted to repeal the constitution—which demonetized liberty, was obtained in the same month, in the same secret manner, at the hands of the same Congress, and was approved by the same president who approved the bill demonetizing the silver dollar, and on the same day. Our ancient money and our ancient liberty both stricken down at the same moment by the same hands, and both by unconstitutional acts. Thus the god of mammon, and the god of these old fossils of the church, seem to be one and the same, or at least lovingly united. The act striking down the freedom of speech and of the press was not only secretly obtained, but it was fraudulently obtained, obtained under false pretenses. The crafty agents of the "God-in-the-constitution society," who lobbied the act through Congress, urged it upon false pretenses, and the few who knew of its existence when the act was passed in which the section referred to was concealed never dreamed of its real intent. In fact the section is innocent enough on its face. It was secreted in the amendment of the post-office act of 1872, a very unsuspicious place indeed: and it passed both houses of Congress and became a law March 1, 1873. The section may be found in the Revised Statutes, page 673, section 148, and is pretendedly aimed at obscene literature, and provides a penalty of not less than $100 nor more than $5000, or imprisonment at hard labor, not less than one year nor more than ten years—this is the penalty for sending through the mails "indecent" or "obscene" literature.

That there exists obscene literature, and plenty of it which ought to be burned, is conceded; but that Congress has any business furnishing municipal regulations for all the states, cities, towns and villages in the country on the subject is preposterous. And that Congress has any constitutional power to establish a censorship of the press in time of peace is palpably absurd. All out-spoken infidelity being "indecent," of course, in the estimation of dyspeptic Christians and God-in-the-constitution people, it is very easy, indeed, under this law, to convict an Infidel of indecency for sending an Infidel paper through the mails. For the purpose of executing this law, a special agent of the post-office department was appointed. It could not be left to ordinary officials, prosecuting attorneys, judges, and juries; they might not have any sympathy with its real purpose. For this reason Anthony Comstock of New York city, a dry-goods clerk, and a member of the Young Men's Christian Association, who helped to lobby the act through Congress, was appointed by a Postmaster-General who was also a member of the Young Men's Christian Association, to look after the execution of the law at a salary of $5,000 a year. By what authority of law such an appointment could be made and this money taken out of the United States treasury for the benefit of the God-in-the-Constitution society, has never transpired. To quicken Comstock's zeal in his new business, and to sharpen his wits for the detection and punishment of violators of the law, and that he might be able to discriminate closely and certainly between orthodox "obscenity" and Infidel "obscenity," and enable him to act with perfect fairness and impartiality, the Young Men's Christian association appointed him its agent at a salary of $4,000 a year. That your readers may form some idea what a nice Christian gentleman this nine thousand dollar joint agent of the United States post-office department and the Young Men's Christian Association is, I will quote from a letter which he wrote to Hon. C. L. Morrison, M. C., dated Brooklyn, N. Y., January, 1873. This letter must be a good certificate of character for Mr. Comstock to all discerning people. It is as follows: "There were four publishers on the 2d of last March; today three of these are in their graves, and it is charged by their friends that I worried them to death. Be that as it may, I am sure that the world is better off without them."

This special agent of the post-office department, and agent of the Young Men's Christian Association, evidently thinks that he can tell whether the world would be better off without a man, and if so, he goes to work with zeal to "worry him to death." If this is not an exhibition of the genuine spirit of the inquisitorial spy of the fifteenth century, acting under orders and pay of Torquemada, "Grand Inquisitor General of Spain and Confessor of Sovereigns," what, pray, is wanting to make the likeness perfect? Is not Mr. Comstock a most fitting representative of this first attempted union of church and state in this republic—the union of the Y. M. C. A., and the P. O. D.? Since his appointment by Postmaster-General Jewell, he has held his offices and, it is said, has drawn his $9,000 a year, half from the church and half from the state, and has performed the function of censor of the press and prosecutor and persecutor of Infidels and heretics, under the statute passed to guard the mails from indecent and obscene literature. No doubt he has prosecuted some bad men, but he has certainly prosecuted some half a dozen good and pure men. No doubt he has destroyed some bawdy pictures, but he has attempted to destroy a number of useful though Infidel publications, and perhaps to "worry to death" the owners and publishers. This has been done in the interest and by the prompting of somebody or something. Comstock certainly has not acted from individual malice and personal hatred of his fellow-men. If he has not acted in the interest of what he supposed to be religion, and the God-in-the-Constitution society, in what interest or in whose behalf has he acted?

His first conspicuous official act was the prosecution of Mrs. Woodhull. Mrs. W. was arrested and thrust into jail and prosecuted to the extent of the law, and acquitted, for publishing a little in advance what other newspapers all over the country were soon filled with for months—the Beecher scandal. A jury acquitted her, but her business was broken up. If she was not "worried to death" and into her grave, she was ruined financially. Her claim for $100,000 damage is now pending against the United States, and will probably be allowed, as it is manifestly just, whatever the character of Mrs. Woodhull may be. Why was not The Independent prosecuted for the same thing? Because what was Infidel "obscenity" in Mrs. Woodhull's paper was orthodox "obscenity" in The Independent. The Beecher scandal was purity itself in the mouth of a church communicant. George Francis Train was next arrested and imprisoned for seven months in Ludlow Street jail for sending such obscenity as he selected from the Bible through the mails. The Bible is all fit for litte girls to read in Sunday-schools, but obscenity when published in a newspaper and sent through the mails to such readers as Train could secure. Train may be sane or insane, but he is a heretic, and therefore must be crushed. John A. Lant, a conscientious heretic who could not keep still, was the next victim, for the sending through the mails of some criticisms of clerical sensualisms. He was convicted and sent to the Albany penitentiary, and there served out his long sentence. His fine and costs were upwards of $500. The next man was Dr. E. B. Foote, of New York, who was found technically guilty of violating the law, by publishing important and useful physiological facts in a little pamphlet entitled "Words of Pearl." His fine was $3,500, which his patients and friends and the subscribers to his Health Monthly have made up to him by voluntary contributions. Dr. Foote is a prominent physician in regular standing in New York city, but he is a heretic. His obscenity was Infidel. E. H. Heywood, of Princeton, Mass., editor of a little monthly publication called The Word, and D. M. Bennett, of New York, editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, were next arrested and indicted, the former for circulating "obscene" literature, and the latter for circulating "obscene" and "blasphemous" literature. Mr. Heywood was formerly a prominent anti-slavery orator, but latterly a distinguished workingman's advocate and social reformer. The charge against Mr. Heywood is that he has circulated through the mails a pamphlet entitled "Cupid's Yokes," written by himself, and a work on physiology written by Dr. Trall. "Cupid's Yokes" is an able, carefully written pamphlet, wholly unobjectionable in style, the object of which is to illustrate and enforce the law of hereditary descent; that parents are responsible for the qualities of body and mind of children. This work is pronounced very able and unobjectionable by such men as Elizur Wright, who writes to Mr. Heywood: "As well indict God as such a work;" the distinguished Boston lawyer, H. W. Paine, who writes: "I can give the moral tone of the book my entire approval." Geo. F. Hoar, United States Senator from Massachusetts, Prof. Denton, S. H. Morse, the sculptor, Parker Pillsbury, the old abolitionist, the Hon. Charles W. Slack, the editor of The Boston Commonwealth, the venerable Samuel E. Sewall, and many other equally well-known and cultivated persons, are named among the defenders of Mr. Heywood's book against the charges of Comstock. Mr. Heywood has been indicted, tried, and convicted. He has appealed his case, but if finally acquitted, he will have spent all his means in defending himself, and the alleged object of his prosecutors will have been accomplished all the same, perhaps, to wit, that of silencing him and of putting him down. Mr. Heywood has concluded to fight back, however, and has had Mr. Comstock arrested for false imprisonment, and he has been compelled to give bail for his appearance to answer any indictment which may be found. The question of the right of free speech is, therefore, in a fair way to be reconsidered in New England, after more than a hundred years have elapsed since it has been legally called in question. The Word, of which Mr. H. is editor, is published at Princeton, Mass., by the Co-operative Publishing Company, and will scarcely be suppressed by these proceedings. And "Cupid's Yokes" will get pretty thoroughly advertised at the hands of the foolish agents of the Young Men's Christian Association, and at the expense of the United States Treasury and the taxpayers of the country, by the insane efforts of a few fifteenth century fanatics, to make their little intolerant and intolerable sectarian god the theocratic ruler of this republic. Mr. D. M. Bennett's paper, THE TRUTH SEEKER, is, like The Boston Investigator, an avowedly infidel paper, but a very conscientious, able, and vigorous advocate of what its editor believes. The charge against Mr. Bennett is "obscenity" and "blasphemy," for publishing and circulating a document entitled, "An Open Letter to Jesus Christ," in which the writer, it is said, regards him as a man, and not as a god, or in any special sense a savior. It must be admitted that the title of the document is rather sensational, but not much more so than the words of Rev. Dr. Fowler, of The Methodist Christian Advocate, who is said to have recently written the following paragraph:

"If Christ made alcoholic wine, he must be put on trial, not as a sot, but as a moderate drinker, who, according to the laws of human nature, with so many million illustrations, was possibly saved from becoming an example for sots, by being crucified in early manhood."

If the letter of Mr. Bennett, for which he stands indicted for blasphemy and indecency, is really indecent and blasphemous, then is the paragraph quoted from Dr. Fowler, and he should also be indicted. But he is only guilty of "orthodox" obscenity, and will probably escape Mr. Comstock's compliments. There seems to be an unexorcised devil in the tail end of the church, who, or which dies hard. Like the portress which Milton saw at the gate of hell, the head and upper part of the body of the church seems fair and lovely, but ends in a scaly serpent, with a "mortal sting" in her tail. Anthony Comstock seems to represent the tail, or the sting, and, as he almost boasts in the letter above quoted, he has used it effectually and to the death, in three instances. It is time the better portion of the church was taking care of its venomous tail. If it does not, the head and body will erelong be held responsible for the acts of the tail.

It is alleged that these prosecutions and persecutions are put forth as feelers, to test the temper of the people—to familiarize the public mind with the proposed theocracy that is sought to be established; with the persecution of heretics; the subversion of the constitution by sapping and mining; the repeal of the organic law by Congress; with a sectarian deity in the statute book; with the intimation of the coming legal marriage of church and state: and if the people don't object to these things or the hints of them thus thrown out, then an advance will be made "all along the lines," and the proposed change in the constitution itself will be boldly demanded: and, in political parlance, if the tail wags the dog in the church, as it is confident it does, then the God of John Calvin and Dr. Patton will be enthroned in the Constitution. Liberty will be ignominiously thrown out; a complete censorship of the press will be decreed; Protestant Jesuitism will sit supreme on the ruins of the republic; and the union of church and state will be complete. That this is the hope and dream, and most absurd delusion of the God-in-the-Constitution society, there can be no doubt. It is possible that history can repeat itself to such an extent? Is it possible that the spirit of the fifteenth century is to succeed the freedom of the nineteenth, and that the republic of Jefferson is to end in a Protestant theocracy? Stranger things have happened than this. "Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty."

Chicago Times. A. J. GROVER.

The Morality of the Sermon on the Mount.

The following able criticisms are from the pen of Prof. Francis W. Newman, of England, a gentleman of great erudition, and clearness and force as a writer. He is a brother of a distinguished Catholic clergyman, also distinguished as an able writer. The extract here given is from a pamphlet entitled "Religion not History," recently published in London, and is something a little out of the ordinary line of argument upon this subject. By common consent the morality of the teachings ascribed to Jesus has been lauded to the skies. Even Liberals are in the habit of admitting that the morals inculcated by Jesus were almost faultless, especially of what is called the "Sermon on the Mount." Prof. Newman, it will be seen, takes a very different view of the subject. His criticisms are most just, and the exposition he makes of the doubtfulness and unreliability of the disagreeing statements by Matthew and Luke, are deserving of special attention:

"In the precepts presented to us as those of Jesus, of course there is much that is right: (what else could be, from any one trained under Hebrew wisdom?) yet the unselfish precepts are the rare exception, the appeal to selfishness is ordinary. The 'Sermon on the Mount' (Matt. v, 7) is generally referred to as a gem of excellence, yet it is full of flaws: not even the Beatitudes stand criticism. Indeed, first of all, we have to settle the text: is Luke right or Matthew? Luke, instead of 'Blessed are the poor in spirit,' has, 'Blessed are ye poor;' and 'Woe unto you that are rich, for ye have received your consolation;' which is a miserable sentiment: also instead of hungering after righteousness, he makes Jesus bless those who hunger (i. e. are starving), and curse those who are full. The difference is startling and scandalous. Shall we suppose that Luke is right and Matthew wrong? or that Luke trusted to parchments which wretchedly garbled the words of Jesus? If the latter be the case before us, how untrustworthy in a moral and spiritual and not in a mere historical view is this gospel of Luke! what a trap to a pious disciple! Yet it may be observed that Luke is consistent with himself. As here he makes Jesus cry Woe on those who are rich and comfortable, but Blessing on those that are poor and hungry, without reference to the moral state of either, so is it in the parable of Dives and Lazarus. To this I must afterwards return.

"But in the last Beatitudes of Matthew, Jesus touches his key-note, Reward (wages, pay). Those who are persecuted for his sake shall have a great reward in heaven; let them therefore rejoice and be exceedingly glad. A Stoic philosopher would have replied, that if to be persecuted for his sake be a virtue, it brings its own 'recompense' with it: and surely that is a nobler doctrine than to fix the eye on a future reward, which must nurture egotism. In fact, hence arose among Christians a vicious mania for voluntary martyrdom. In their current language, they aspired to attain 'the crown.' That future reward was so taught by the Jesus of the three gospels as to engender intense egotism, is mournfully shown by the callousness with which collective Christendom for long ages together have acquiesced in the belief of eternal torture for those who are not saints. Danger of 'the judgment,' of 'the council,' and of 'hell-fire'—(a most obscure triplet)—is to restrain us from angry and light words against a brother. Juvenal tells us,

> 'Bad men hate sin through fear of punishment:
> Good men hate sin through very love of virtue.'

Jesus here teaches secondary motives, a lower morality than that of Juvenal.

"He proceeds to another prudential precept: 'Compromise with thy legal opponent quickly, lest he prosecute thee and get thee cast into prison.' It does not seem to need a messenger from heaven to inculcate such wisdom. But is he perhaps propounding an allegory? Is the God of all mercies the legal opponent intended? Or is possibly Satan pointed at? Hardly; for how are we to agree, to compromise, or be reconciled to him? God himself must be the adversary alluded to: another appeal to our fears. In any case the solemn declaration, 'Thou shalt not come out of prison until thou hast paid the last farthing,' is strange if it be literal; too obscure to instruct, if it be metaphorical.

"Presently we have the prudential advice to cut off a limb or pluck out an eye, rather than have one's whole body cast into hell. Thus again he appeals to our lower nature, our fears. It may be doubted whether any passionate and brave soul is thus turned away from sin: indeed, whether fear of hell has ever cured even a wretched drunkard.

"We next find a positive prohibition of swearing. The reasons assigned are wholly unsatisfactory: no definition of swearing is given, nor any explanation whether he means to forbid an oath taken at the command of a magistrate and an oath in sanction of international treaties. Paul more than once swears what may seem to be a full round oath (Rom. ix, 1; 2 Cor. i, 23; Gal. i, 20), he surely must have been profoundly ignorant that Jesus forbade it.

"After an excellent precept, if somewhat overstated, of kindliness to enemies, Jesus in Matthew damages it by the idea of reward. 'If ye love them which love you, what reward have ye? do not even the tax-gatherers the same?' As if to respond to love without an extra recompense were folly and unthrift; and as if no one who gathered taxes for Cæsar could be other than a reprobate soul, wholly unfit for rewards.

"The command to be perfect as God is perfect, shoots as much too high as other precepts too low. It not only commands a simple impossibility, but it propounds nothing tangible or intelligible. Most of our virtues belong only to a being who is finite, frail, and member of a community. We do not praise God for his bravery, for his chastity, for his contentedness, and freedom from covetousness, for his modesty or humility. He cannot be our pattern for imitation in such things; and the argument used by Jesus is purely delusive.

"'As God sends rain on the just and unjust indifferently, so we are to love the just and the unjust indifferently.' Is this indeed perfection? Moreover, the tragic argument—that in the necessary slaughter of enemies we need not spare women and children, inasmuch as God's earthquakes and hurricanes spare neither sex nor age—is hardly a caricature of that which is here put forward as sacred wisdom. It may be added that such argument implies the very opposite to that noble utterance: 'Blessed are the pure in heart, for THEY have vision of God.' The speaker had not thought his subject out. At one moment he follows the higher and Hebrew inspiration, which sees the heart of God not in the whirlwind or the earthquake, but in the still, small voice within; at another moment he is carried into the lower Pagan idea, which, like our modern Agnostics, judging of God solely by facts which the outward senses attest, logically finds nothing of him but a Huge Power, reckless of moral considerations, careless of the difference between the just and the unjust.

"Next, we are not to do our alms before men, else we shall have no reward in heaven; but if we do our alms in secret, we shall be rewarded by God in public! Is then desire of reward the only or the chief reason for kindness to the needy? Similarly we must pray in secret to get a reward in public!! We are to forgive men's trespasses in order to get forgiveness of our own trespasses from God. Did such a motive ever produce real virtue? When we fast, we must not show any neglect of our appearance: then our Father in heaven will reward us. Is then fasting in itself a virtue deserving heavenly wages? Surely it deserves not even human esteem, if presented as a meritorious act; but is delusive and dangerous. Further, we are to abstain from judging, in order to escape being judged; a very mean reason.

"In this rapid review we are not comparing the doctrine with any new lights of modern times, but with those of 'Pagans,' so called; with Aristotle, Zeno, Cicero. But besides, while the motives suggested by Jesus are constantly too low, the deeds commanded may be called too high; that is, the precepts are simply extravagant, and thereby pernicious. It is indeed extravagant and false to say that a lustful look is equivalent to adultery: for out of twenty men who might wrongfully indulge the eye, which does not hurt one's neighbor, there might not be so much as one who would guiltily wrong a woman or her husband. Overstrained doctrine can only have morbid results. Surely he overstrains hurtfully in commanding us, if struck on the cheek, to court a second blow; a thing which, according to our narrators, neither Jesus nor Paul did. (John xviii, 23; Acts xxiii, 3, xvi. 37). Such precepts in fact tend to insincerity and an evil conscience, because we cannot wholly lay aside good sense. Those which range from Matt. vi, 19 to 34, never have been obeyed, except in a socialistic community which disowns private property: even there it is a virtue and a necessity, in the interest of all, for each to take earnest thought for the morrow, and to lay up stores for future need.

"The argument drawn from the lilies and the birds is as unwise as it is pretentious. 'Birds do not sow or reap or gather into barns:' true; and therefore they perish in a hard winter. Civilized man lays up stores of food, and thereby generally escapes the worst horrors of famine. Rude men live by hunting and fishing, use up the fruits, roots and game which they find ready to their hand, but make no effort to bring food into existence, whereby forethought is taken for time to come. Does Jesus recommend us to go back into savage unconcern for the future, and to trust that God will care for us, when we become imitators of lilies and birds? On birds the Creator has not bestowed our faculties of mind. Justly then he might feed them and leave us to starve. What can be more delusive than such argument? In fact, with the vast mass of mankind the danger is not in Avarice. The danger is Recklessness of the future; neglect to provide while provision is possible; recklessness in spending and wasting while things are abundant."

Is it a Safe Power?

The following is from an editorial in the Boston Daily Globe, of Wednesday, January 16, 1878:

There are two prolific sources of evil which affect the moral, mental and physical well-being of society, and produce deplorable results which are fully realized by very few people. Only those who have had exceptional means of observation, or have given the matter special attention and study, are aware of the demoralization that comes from these sources of pollution. One of them is the circulation of reading matter and pictorial representations of one kind and another appealing to the sensual instincts, and debauching the character of the young. It is a hard task for human beings to purify themselves and exalt their thoughts and actions at all times to the standard of rigid virtue. There is enough of the beast in them to be all the time dragging them down into the mire, and it is only by proper culture and discipline that they can bring the senses into subjection. To keep the young from a tendency to vice is especially a matter of difficulty, which is greatly enhanced by the demon of all uncleanness that is actively trying to poison their thoughts and stimulate their passions until they lose all self-control. The iniquity of a clandestine circulation of obscene books and pictures, and the importance of putting a stop to it by every proper means, can hardly be overrated.

The other source of evil, even more prolific and destructive than this, and one that gives it most of its potency, is ignorance. The lack of knowledge among human beings of some of the most important functions of their nature, and of the duties which they owe to themselves, is simply appalling. From it comes the fostering of sensuality and all the secret abominations which have already sapped society of its moral stamina and degraded whole nations, physically and mentally. There has been an eager suppression of knowledge, from false views of delicacy, that has done more to degrade mankind than all the churches and Sunday-schools can undo. Every child as it comes to an age when such knowledge is important to it, should be educated to know itself thoroughly, and unless it is so educated, it cannot know how to govern itself. This education should be judiciously conducted, but in the present state of ignorance among all classes and all ages, any means intended for enlightenment and the dissemination of needed information is better than none. There is the very widest distinction to be made between writings intended to debauch the mind and incite to vice and those intended to produce the opposite result by the dissemination of knowledge and of sound ideas regarding the sexual nature. Classing the two together is a monstrous misjudgment. The suppression of any sober, candid discussion of questions that concern the well-being of society is not only mistaken as a matter of policy, but it abridges the freedom of speech and of the press which is guaranteed by the Constitution of the country.

There is upon the statute books of this country a law designed to prevent the dissemination through the mails of those publications, prints, etc., of which we have spoken as an agency of evil. We cannot believe that it was intended at the same time to aid in the suppression of knowledge or the smothering of discussion on questions that affect the welfare of individuals, of families and of society at large. Under that law an agent has been appointed, with a degree of discretion that we do not believe it is safe to put in the hands of any man, however well-meaning. He has the power to overhaul the mails in search of suspected matter, to arrest men for depositing in the mails or taking therefrom anything which in his individual opinion is improper, and to act as a spy and detective upon the whole postal service of the country. He can make arrests on his own discretion, and use the courts of the United States for prosecutions begun by his sole authority. It is more than questionable whether such power should be given for any purpose, however well defined; but when it is exercised at the discretion or caprice of the man clothed with it, it may become an instrument of oppression and evil to which it is not easy to place the limit. Interference with individual liberty should be sparingly permitted, and not at all at the discretion of some irresponsible man with more zeal than judgment. We want, by every possible means, to promote virtue and purity, and prevent vice and pollution, but the work is only hindered by sweeping legal enactments, the execution of which is given into the hands of the officious agent of some private association, with all the powers of the Government at his command to use or abuse. Of course he can inflict no penalty without a conviction, and the court may revise his judgment as to what is improper, but he can interfere very seriously with the rights and liberties of innocent men.

"Inundate the Country with Good Literature."

When Pius IX. was asked, "How shall we fight the non-Catholic press?" he replied: "Inundate the country with good literature." Cannot Freethinkers take a lesson from the Holy Father? If Freethinkers are not aware of the enormous advantages which they possess, their opponents certainly are. Christians are becoming aware that "a literature is being circulated over the country like a mist that envelops everything that comes before it." There is, no doubt, much exaggeration in this view, but with them "to be forewarned is to be forearmed." Seeing the enormous facility open to the Freethought party through the post-office department, they are becoming alarmed and resort to high-handed outrages. Comstockism is but a development of this fear. It therefore behooves every Liberal to come forward and show his colors by helping to sustain a free press as well as free speech.

There are many Liberals who claim that their means do not permit them to furnish material aid to sustain the cause. Others there are whose position does not permit them to openly work for our cause. Being of this latter number, the course I have pursued has been as follows: I have always kept a lot of tracts, papers and catalogues on hand for distribution through the mail. Having an acquaintanceship in various places, I have carefully selected my material to suit various cases. I always enclose catalogues of Liberal publications.

I well recollect what great difficulty I had to procure my first copy of "Tom Paine" years ago. To receive a package of "incendiarism" by mail will set the person receiving it to thinking as to its source. About the time that his curiosity has abated send him another package, and he will become interested by and by. No fear need be entertained that our tracts, etc., will not be read. On the contrary, they very often make the rounds of a whole neighborhood.

I have known several instances of clergymen becoming skeptics and even making first-class propagandists. A single convert made to our cause in this manner—his value is often incalculable. Then again such a means of propagandism has its value. While a more open form may at-tagonize and defeat its own object, this measure will prepare the way for more organized efforts. Then again the expense is trifling, its requirements are within the reach of all.

There are many readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER who never spread abroad its blessing. Let them send out copies of the paper with tracts and catalogues, and it will produce results which, if they could be always seen, would be astonishing to them. In all this work they need not take an open position. They will thus be sowing seed that in due time will yield good fruits.

Not having seen this method of propagandism noted in your paper must be my excuse for calling attention to its great importance at this time. INCOGNITO.

Letters from Friends.

Notes from the Lecture Field.

IONIA, MICHIGAN, Jan. 30, 1878.

BROTHER BENNETT: You will excuse me for not writing before when I tell you that this is a new lecture field to me, and it has taken me some time to get hold and adapt myself to an order of things so different to California and the upper coast. I have just seen your TRUTH SEEKER of Jan. 5, and I am highly pleased with its beautiful pages and your increased facilities for doing good.

You have my hearfelt sympathy in your trials and labor in the cause of truth. But my heart is glad when I see the long list of pledges for the defense fund in your behalf. I wish I had money to add to the substantial support of a champion so fearless and brave.

The modern watchword of the Christian church—"Stand up for Jesus"—is a burlesque on the man of Nazareth, and were he here to-day to feel the cruel force of this modern despotism, that like a upas tree of death seeks to overshadow and crush out human freedom, his soul, as in the days of early Judaism, would cry out against the grey-headed lies and hypocrisy of modern theology passing under the name of religion.

Jesus died to make men free: Christianity lives to-day to make men slaves to churchism, priestcraft, and creed. The religion of Jesus, like that of Thomas Paine, consisted in doing good and trying to make his fellow-creatures happy. Jesus lost his life in denouncing priests, creeds, rites, and ceremonies which laid such cruel burdens on the hearts and shoulders of the people.

Thomas Paine lost his reputation, "but thank God, not his character," in standing up for truth against the combined forces of priestcraft and fashionable religion. So, I can say to you, Bro. Bennett, and to the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER, to stand up for right and truth is to appropriate Jesus in the highest and best sense, and also to be in full sympathy with all true reformers in every age; and, as for me, I would rather be in hell with Voltaire, Paine, Franklin, and Col. Ingersoll, than to bow down to anything that stultifies reason—God's only light and voice in the human soul. But, Friend Bennett, we may take courage and find an inspiration of hope in the fact that this ancient institution, hell, is soon to be dismissed and take its place in the region of myth with all time-honored lies of the past.

I am on the war-path; my face is towards the enemy; my headquarters at Ionia. Since I reached this State I have lectured at Ionia, Grand Rapids, East Saginaw, Battle Creek, and various other points in this vicinity, and if large and increasing audiences make complete success, then my cup is full. I like these Michigan people, and, although struggling with financial depression, they are quite alive to the interests of Freethought and the gospel of Nature. I have just closed a course of lectures at Lowell with a grand celebration of the 141st anniversary of Thomas Paine's birthday, which was something new for this part of the country, but conceded by all, saint and sinner, to be a complete success. The secretary of the Lowell Liberal Society will send you some account of the meeting.

I am under engagement during February and March to give a course of lectures at Saranac, Smyrna, Rockford, Plainwell, Sturgis, Kalamazoo, and Jackson, on "Common sense," "Evolution," "Science and Religion," "Church and State," "Labor and Capital," "Matter and Spirit," and other reform topics.

Liberal League Notes.

EDITOR TRUTH SEEKER: I have just returned home from two Liberal conventions. The first was held at Linesville, Pa., Jan. 27, 28, and 29; the other at Corry, Pa., Jan. 30, and 31.

The first one was called by the Linesville Liberal League, as a celebration of Paine's birthday, and it proved a great success. Linesville is probably the most Liberal town in the United States. I was surprised when I arrived there to notice a large showbill advertising the meeting, posted in the front window of nearly every business house in the village, and the explanation was, that the proprietors were all Freethinkers. G. W. Baldwin, Esq., our N. L. L. Committee-man for Pennsylvania, is the editor of the paper of the place, and is also the President of the League. The meeting was held in the Opera Hall, which was well filled at every session with an audience of from five to six hundred people. On the last evening, when the hall was crowded, on motion of Dr. Brown, of Binghamton, the audience, by a unanimous vote, adopted the resolutions and platform of the National League. And the Linesville League has voted to apply for a charter from the N. L. L.

Your space will not allow of my giving any report of the able and earnest speeches delivered on the occasion. Everybody was delighted with our eloquent young friend, Rev. S. W. Sample, of Meadville, and I am pleased to learn that he is speaking very often in behalf of the principles of the Liberal League. There are but few more able defenders of our platform. Mr. O. P. Kellogg, a Freethought and Spiritualist lecturer from Ohio, delivered, on the last evening, an eloquent, interesting, and instructive lecture, entitled "Justice to Paine." He is an interesting speaker and is doing what he can for the League movement. Mr. A. B. Brown, of Worcester, gave a scholarly and well-written address on Evolution. He is lecturing in that vicinity. Dr. Brown, of Binghamton, enlivened the audience with his wit and humor.

The ladies of the League did themselves great credit in serving up a supper on the last evening in the Universalist church, which was partaken of by the multitude; after which a large and intelligent party enjoyed a grand dance. From Linesville, the two Browns, Mr. Sample, and myself went to Corry, Pa., where a Freethinker's convention was held which was well attended and passed off to the entire satisfaction of all present. Mr. William Barnsdell, President of the Titusville Liberal League, presided, assisted by Mrs. Dr. Arter, of Oil City. This lady proved an important accession to the meeting. She is an intelligent woman and a fine speaker, and is preparing to take the lecture field in behalf of the Liberal cause. She proposes to get up a Liberal league in Oil City at once. At this meeting the Congregational minister attended and took part in the discussions to the great satisfaction of our Liberal friends!

This Congregational minister is evidently not far from the "Kingdom." He insisted that your correspondent was a Christian, and I insisted he was not one. He concluded I was good enough for one, and I thought him too far advanced to be one. I was thankful for his good opinion. Mr. Barnsdell made some very pertinent remarks in relation to the League movement, and says the Titusville League is to have a large meeting soon. And I must not forget to say that the meeting at Corry was gotten up by two Spiritualist ladies who are entitled to great credit. They went around town before the meeting and raised money enough to pay for the Hall. And it was as good a meeting as I ever attended.

On my arrival home yesterday, I found many letters giving encouraging information in relation to the League movement. Allow me to quote some short extracts therefrom:

Edgar M. Sellon writes from Buffalo, New York, that the Liberals of that city are to meet the third Sunday in February to organize a League. He invites your correspondent to attend and address the meeting. Mr. Henry Steiniske, President of the Buffalo Freethinker's Association, writes to me that that Society will unite with the new organization.

Mr. E. C. Walker writes from Florence, Iowa: "It is proposed to hold a State Convention of the Liberals of Iowa, at DesMoines, probably about the 7th of March. We hope to organize a State League, and should have had a call out before now, but Dr. J. C. Michener, Chairman of our State Committee, seems to think that we need be in no particular hurry. Our local League is a live one, and we hold our first regular Sunday meeting the 27th inst." Mr. Walker appears to be in dead earnest in this movement, and I wish he could be kept constantly in the field.

Mr. Jesse B. Barry, a disabled soldier, writes that the inmates of the "National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers" in Montgomery County, Ohio, propose to organize a League at once. That, it appears to me, is a very appropriate work for those who have been disabled in a warfare for liberty.

Dr. C. R. Nutt, of Houston, Texas, is in hopes an auxiliary Liberal League may be established there soon.

Mr. H. Butterfield of Salem, Kansas, informs me that, "the prospects are favorable to organize a League here. No trouble to get forty or more names."

Mr. M. B. Chambers of Marshallton, Pa., is moving for a League in that place. Miss Gibson, of Philadelphia, is lecturing there in favor of our cause. Mr. D. Boynton, of Sandstone, Jackson Co., Mich., writes for some instructions in relation to forming Leagues, and says a meeting will be called there soon to organize one.

Mr. E. D. Strong, of San Bernardino, Cal., sends word that a League is to be formed soon in that Western town. Mr. A. B. Register, of Granite Falls, Minn., is moving in behalf of a Liberal League in that, town. He says: "That such a movement has become a necessity, no thinking man or woman can doubt. The churches are making a desperate effort to crush out Freethought and Liberal expression in every possible direction, while we, without organization, are powerless to defend ourselves."

Mr. F. R. Stagg, of Parkersbury, W. Va., is confident a League can be organized in that town. He says the revivalist Hammond has been holding a "revival" there, and a League will be organized as the result of his labors. I wish wherever Hammond goes he might produce such a result.

Mr. W. T. Kirby, of Sabattus, Maine, has had his attention called to the League movement by the Banner of Light, and thinks a League can be organized in Sabattus.

Mr. T. F. Enslow, of Derby, says that he is a Spiritualist and endorses the League movement, and says an effort will be made to organize immediately.

But, Mr. Editor, I will not further trespass upon your space, but only add that I am pleased to see that Miss Emily J. Leonard, of West Meriden, Conn., has succeeded in getting a League organized there. I hope other Liberal women will follow her noble example. H. L. GREEN.

P. S.—In a private letter just received, I learn a new League has just been organized at Adel, Iowa. The officers are Hon. Benjamin Green, President; J. C. Michener, M.D., Secretary; and Miss J. Perkins, Treasurer. The Liberals of that State appear to be wide awake.

"Follow me and I will make you fishers of men" (Matthew iv, 19).

Just so! This is a little scene behind the curtain, and was not intended for the general audience, but only for the players. So those who preach the Gospel are fishers of men! And those who listen to them sustain the same relation to them that fish do to those who catch them! A sweet relationship, truly! Jesus no doubt fulfilled his promise, for one of his preachers, some years later, was candid enough to tell some of his men-fish—after they were caught—that he was crafty and had caught them with guile (2 Cor., xii, 16). Yes, fishermen always beguile or deceive the fish before they catch them. They make the poor innocent fish believe they are the kindest men alive. The fish thinks it is going to get a precious morsel—a splendid dinner. But the fisherman simply fools it, deceives it, and in place of its getting a good dinner, it goes to make one for the fisherman. So the men-fishermen were taught by Jesus to catch men. They were taught to bait the hook with a kingdom away up in the skies—the Kingdom of God—the Kingdom of Heaven. They were to make a display of bogus titles to real estate, and to many mansions up there. They were to hold out great inducements to the men-fish to invest in this heavenly stock. Thousands of poor simpletons have bitten at this shining bait, and in this way have fed the fishermen instead of getting what they so anxiously looked for.

It is well, therefore, to remember that preachers are fishermen; and we know that the wisest thing for a fish to do is to get as far away from the fisherman as possible; so let us men-fish take the hint, lest we be fooled by our fishermen and get caught on their hooks or in their nets. They pretend to be our best friends, but according to the analogy they are our worst enemies, and are simply trying to fool us so they can live upon us. They are watching their chance to pick our very flesh from our bones, and then cast us to the dogs. MEMPHIS.

ENON VALLEY, PENN., Feb. 2, 1878.

MY DEAR MR. BENNETT:—I have read and paid for every number of THE TRUTH SEEKER, from its first issue in an obscure Western village till its last in the great City of New York. What a contrast between the first number and the last?

There are some things in the paper which I like exceedingly. I like the ring of your editorials. They seem to be written by a man who is in earnest, who knows his rights as a man, and an American citizen, and is determined to maintain them at all hazards. Besides courage, they are written with ability that surprises both friend and foe. Very few editors write so much original matter for their columns, and write so well. I like the plan of publishing Mr. Frothingham's and Prof. Adler's discourses, especially in a large, clear type so comfortable for those who cannot read fine print. The discourses of the gentlemen named not only give character to your paper by their didactic importance, but ballast also. They cause the reader to wish that the day of the week when THE TRUTH SEEKER comes were already here.

There are some things in the paper which I dislike. But as it was not started to please me, and as many people like what I dislike in it, I ought not to insist, or even ask, that you conform your taste to mine. Your readers and supporters are found among all sorts of people.

It is one of the most melancholy things in the world to contemplate, that reformers, although always in the beginning of their work a mere handful, will misunderstand and quarrel with one another, then divide, and instead of battling the common enemy, will turn their weapons against each other. It was so with anti-slavery men in 1833. The Garrison party wanted the co-operation of women, the opposite, or Tappan party, were opposed to it. Then the Garrisonians deemed it wise to attack the National Constitution as a pro-slavery document, putting the nation in league with the devil. The opposite party believed that the Constitution had powers which a correct interpretation could bring out, that would abolish slavery by law. To-day, when slavery is abolished, I know a most excellent man who will not go to hear Parker Pillsbury lecture, because of the bitter things he said thirty years ago of the party with which my friend acted.

Now, I see the germ of a quarrel among the Radicals which must be crushed out of existence before it is permitted to send down a root, or put up a stem. It grows out of diverse views taken of the obscenity subject, and the best method of effecting the repeal of the present laws relating thereto. There is no real difference between you and Mr. Abbot on this point. You both loathe and abhor that which is immodest and corrupting to youth. All Radicals do. There are no doubt a few scallawags among us, but take the Radicals as a class, and there is not now on the face of the earth, and never was, a set of people, men and women, for their numbers, so intelligent and refined, so heroic, and so pure in their lives as they are. I read the weekly receipts of money in the Index with great interest, and always feel proud to see how many noble women are readers and supporters of that paper in their own name. I am sure that a cause which enlists the sympathies and efforts of intelligent and good women cannot be either a bad, or an unsuccessful one. It is conceded, even by their enemies, that the Radicals are people of high character. Their chief fault is their excessive individualism, which makes it so difficult to marshal them into battle array for their principles and policy. If they were only leagued and consolidated like the Church, and were fired with enthusiasm worthy of the cause, and were organized into boards of effort, with such an armory of weapons as we have in science, history, logic, philosophy, and humanity, they could make the hosts of superstition run back into the regions of darkness and moral miasm from which they issued forth to deceive and curse the world.

If I understand the mission of the American Radicals it is twofold. First, to secularize the Government, and the public schools, and to complete the divorce between the State and the Church, proclaimed in the Constitution, and required by its provisions. This is simply a defensive measure. Secondly, to enlighten and emancipate the people from the bondage of a false and superstitious church. This is an offensive measure; but the weapons of their warfare in this department of action, as intimated above, are all intellectual and spiritual, and therefore mighty through the God of Truth to the pulling down of the strongholds of ignorance and superstition. We repudiate the use of all carnal weapons, and all unfair and dishonest methods upon the principle that the end sanctifies the means. If we did not, we would be as faulty as the Church, which originated the doctrine of pious frauds and has practiced it for hundreds of years of her bloody history. The Church, now and always, has denounced Freethought as Infidelity, as the prolific fountain of all kinds of evil, and Infidels as the agents of evil. It is now proposed that the Radicals, out of self-respect, organize themselves into associations, print and circulate tracts which discuss the issues between them and the Church, send out able and judicious lecturers like Underwood, promote the circulation of Radical newspapers and periodicals, and thus, by revolutionizing the public sentiment, open up the way for faint-hearted, money-loving and popularity-seeking editors to speak their sentiments without loss, and bring out their lights from under the bushel where they are now hid, and to inspire them with hope that they will at all events be in at the death of superstition. The Radicals and their press are the forlorn hope in the enterprize of storming the citadel of the Church and her systems of false doctrines. They have counted the cost, and like the Roman Gladiators before they entered the arena, salute the spectators as those who are about to die in the conflict. What more worthy enterprize could a man engage in than this? In what more inviting field can women of high character for intelligence and goodness evince their heroism, and their patriotism?

The idea then, that the Generals who lead such a Spartan band as this, should fall out by the way, and in the very presence of a defiant and taunting enemy, criminate and recriminate each other! The thought is not to be harbored for a moment. It would be treason to the cause, and a crime not to be forgiven. I deem Radicalism, embracing of course, the co-operation of the Spiritualists, one of the most religious and philanthropic efforts ever made on earth, and hence this sparring between you and Mr. Abbot is very grievous to my soul. You are both noble, able, self-denying and good men. But for God's sake, and the sake of the Republic which is pregnant with such weal or woe for the human race, do not quarrel and hamstring yourselves so that you can no longer serve the cause. Read once a week the closing part of the quarrel scene between Brutus and Cassius, in "Julius Cæsar." And for fear you forget it I will give it to you now.

BRUTUS. Oh Cassius! you are yoked with a lamb,
That carries anger as a flint bears fire;
Who, much enforced, shows a hasty spark,
And straight is cold again.

CASSIUS. Hath Cassius lived
To be but mirth and laughter to his Brutus,
When grief, and blood, ill-tempered, vexeth him?

BRUTUS. When I spoke that I was ill-tempered too.

CASSIUS. Do you confess so much? Give me your hand.

BRUTUS. And my heart too.

CASSIUS. Oh Brutus!—

BRUTUS. What's the matter?

CASSIUS. Have you not love enough to bear with me
When that rash humor which my mother gave me
Makes me forgetful?

BRUTUS. Yes, Cassius, and from henceforth,
When you are over earnest with your Brutus,
He'll think your mother chides, and leave you so.

The suit against you for blasphemy and obscenity before the United States authorities has terminated precisely as I supposed it would. I did not send you on my contribution for defense, because, while it was ready in my pocket, I could not believe it would be needed. Your tract being a mere theological discussion not one whit more objectionable on the score of harshness than many of the controversial writing between the Christian sects, could never be made out blasphemy unless the judge were another Jeffreys. And as for my innocent little possum tract, which was designed to call the attention of naturalists and farmers' boys to the enigma of the modus propagandi of implacental animals, who, with a solar microscope showing upon a screen animalcules six feet long, in a drop of water, could discern anything obscene in it? Goodness gracious! If the pure, etherial and heavenly atmosphere of the city of New York gives the people who live there such exquisitely refined sensibilities in regard to natural objects and subjects, we plain people who live on farms in the West had better keep the Allegheny mountains between us and them. Congratulating both you and myself that we have escaped the bite of one of the meanest dogs that ever barked at any decent body's heels,

I remain your friend and well-wisher,
A. B. BRADFORD.

SNOWVILLE, VA., Feb. 1st, 1878.

DEAR FRIEND BENNETT: Snowville has had a sensation! Mr. J. M. Barnes (of Lafayette, Va.), came here last evening and delivered a free lecture on Universal Taxation, and Universal Education. He obtained permission to use the school-room (Snowville never had a schoolhouse), upon his promise not to mix up any Infidelity in his discourse, lest the young people should be contaminated (?) thereby! The audience consisted mostly of young men, and women, and boys. Very few prominent citizens of the place attended—being all Campbellites. No doubt they were afraid to countenance the lecturer, lest it might be the "entering of the thin edge of the wedge," which would in time result in the taxation of their splendid church-edifice upon the hill. One Rev. was present, and judging from the tenor of his remarks at the close of the lecture, it is presumable that he merely came to see if Mr. Barnes kept to the letter of his promise, for he accused him of speaking of Heaven and God when he believed in neither. "But," said Mr. B., "I do believe in a supreme power, and in many heavens. When a man is good and kind, and does what is right, he finds a heaven of happiness in his heart, and also creates heavens for those around him; and when he injures his neighbors, and does bad, evil things, he creates little hells for himself and others." "But," said the preacher, "you do not believe in the Bible!" "Oh, yes," replied Mr. B., "I do; just the same as I do in Josephus, and many other books," then fearing the discussion would draw forth something pernicious (?) and objectionable that might be swallowed by the eager, listening crowd, the Rev. subsided, and the audience was dismissed. The lecture was far more interesting than we had expected it would be, and notwithstanding the cautious proceedings of the pious, it will awaken ideas, arguments and reflections in the minds of many who never thought upon these subjects before. Every well-spoken utterance of truth creates waves of thought whose undulations widen out till the outermost circlings thereof can never be ascertained. Several, who were of a more than usually inquisitive turn of mind, inquired of Mr. Barnes concerning the truth of the statements he made about the immense amount of property owned by Trinity church, and the vile and objectionable usages to which it is said to be devoted; and to these were given the name and address of the editor of the Index, and the number of that paper in which the statement was published. All this may result in investigation and inquiries, which will spread light and knowledge, who shall say how far or how wide. "Tall oaks from little acorns grow." Respectfully,

ELMINA DRAKE SLENKER.

MORGAN CITY, UTAH, Jan., 30, 1878.

DEAR BROTHER BENNETT: I must relate to you a few of my experiences as a laborer here in Utah for the downfall of priestcraft and superstition. I am happy to inform you that a spirit of intellectual advancement is increasing fast here. Here, as anywhere else, the priests are trying their best to keep their infernal machines, persecution and bigotry, at work against reason and common sense. But every honest observer is willing to acknowledge that their power over blind obedience is losing ground fast.

This little spot (Utah) of free American soil has been for nearly thirty years ruled over by a despotic tyrant, who by the cant phrase of all prophets, ruled in the name of the "Lord,"—and a dreadful Lord it was. He did all in his power to banish education from the midst of his people. But the aggrieved child Education will not be strangled in its growth; it will attain to manhood, and here as elsewhere will proclaim shame and disgrace upon the monument of its aggressors. Free schools are rapidly increasing and the tree of knowledge flourishes in the midst of the people.

I have in this first month of the new year visited quarters of Morgan, Summit, and Davis counties, and am pleased to say that so far I have met with success more than I expected. I have been treated kindly by the people, and have in some places had the privilege of speaking to the residents in their school-houses—a rare chance in Utah for a disbeliever in the Bible.

Last week I visited Farmington, Davis county, a little town of about two hundred inhabitants. There the school trustees treated me with cordiality and extended to me the privilege of speaking in one of their ward school-houses; and I can but say that in that place I had a good time. I met many friends there—good and honest supporters of Freethought—who glory in the name Infidel. Such are Bros. H. W. Southworth, L. P. Anderson, Alfred Wharton, H. C. Haigth, and many more, whose kindness and cordiality I shall never forget.

I must not forget to let you know that the Liberals here in Morgan county had a good time last night. Our friends, the Liberals of Milton, gave a cordial invitation to all the lovers of liberty in Morgan county to come to Bro. N. O. Hauseus' residence at Milton, to celebrate the anniversary of the birth of our long-departed but ever-remembered and great champion of Freethought, Thomas Paine; and I am proud to state that the arrangements of our friends for the celebration were a success. Quite a number were present, and the time was well spent. We had speeches to the honor of our hero, Paine, recitations, songs, etc., and after that our good brothers Joseph and E. Holbrook struck in with the violin, and everything went lively for a couple of hours. A good supper was then partaken of, and dancing continued till five o'clock in the morning.

The greatest troubles here at present are hard times and depression financially and commercially. "No money!" is the cry wherever you go. THE TRUTH SEEKER is hailed with pleasure by its readers in its new form, and the letters from Bro. Splitfoot are doing a great deal more to banish superstition from the enslaved minds of men than all the Christian Bibles. Your readers are all rejoicing at your freedom from the grasp of the howling wolves of Christianity. Brother Bennett, may you long live as our champion editor of freedom and our standard-bearer for the cause of intellectual advancement and the downfall of tyranny of every shape and form in this nineteenth century—the sincere wish of your brother and fellow-laborer for the emancipation of the race, ANDREW LARSEN.

ALBERT LEA, MINN., Feb. 1, 1878.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Herewith enclosed I send you postal order of three dollars for one year's subscription to your paper. I presume my subscription will soon be run out, so please credit my acct. for another year. I regret very much the unpleasantness between you and Mr. Abbot of the Index. It ought to have been avoided by all means, as we Liberals are largely in the minority, hence the importance of unity of action and harmony in our ranks. Mr. Abbot is an indefatigable worker in the Liberal cause in his way and manner, and none the less are you, dealing rather harder blows for truth and right than he does, yet both of you must see the absolute necessity of pulling together in order to compel our enemies to respect and grant us our rights. We must not for a moment think of being divided. I hope for the sake of harmony and good feeling you and Mr. Abbot will refrain from any further remarks (between yourselves) upon the subject, as it certainly will do the cause no good.

Your arrest and the attempt to punish you for seeking to enlighten and elevate mankind, and have them shake off the yoke of priestcraft and superstition was an outrageous violation of human rights, and can not be too severely condemned by all and every true lover of the race.

I am glad that you are making public the shameful doings and misdeeds of the pious, cowardly, and sneaking skunk "Anthony," but allow me to make a suggestion: Ought not the public to know the names of the different individuals who composed the Grand Juries that found indictments against those parties Comstock had arrested during his years of dirty work? They are, in my opinion, as mean and dirty as Comstock himself, for they allowed themselves to be the tools to carry his dastardly work to success. I, for one, would like to know who some of them are, so I could remember them in future time. I tell you, Mr. Bennett, we Liberals must bid farewell to all party ties (political) and work and vote only for men that we know are with us and willing to fight for equal rights, and if need be, die for it.

Party prejudices and bigotry is doing about as much to enslave men, and make them tyrannical as religious fanaticism and bigotry. It is useless to expect any good results in our favor unless we can get men in authority from a county officer up to the President, that are with us, and willing to do battle for the right. I for one will never vote for a man that is a religious bigot if I know it. They are dangerous. Yours, etc., E. P. HASSINGER.

SILVER CITY, IDAHO, Dec. 25, 1877.

MR. D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: This is the alleged anniversary of the birth of Mr. Jesus Christ, the same individual who got you into trouble, so I cannot celebrate it in any better manner than to write to you and renew my subscription, for which find greenbacks enclosed. I am happy to see that you have pluck enough to begin the new volume when our dear Christian brothers are trying the hardest to subject you to the most inconvenience they can.

Verily, this is Christian charity they are showing you! Mr. Comstock was born one hundred and fifty years too late. What an ornament to the Inquisition he would have been!

Your trouble with Anthony is water on the wheels of the Christians around here. They all pray you may get ten years. You never knew how bitterly your dear friends in Christ hate you until now. How they exult, and roll it under their tongues as a sweet morsel, that "Bennett, the hoary blasphemer," is about to get his dues.

At first the news disheartened us a great deal, the more timid ones prophesied a total collapse of THE TRUTH SEEKER, and I began to think so myself until I read your article, "The Time has Come." That was a glorious article, Bro. Bennett, worthy of the one who built up THE TRUTH SEEKER from obscurity to be the leading Liberal paper in the country—for it is that without a doubt.

It is and has been a source of bitter sorrow to us Liberals here that we have been and are utterly unable to aid you. By this I mean, of course, a certain class of us who are permanent residents here. It seems as if the Lord had taken up the Christians' fight, for I never saw more hopeless "dead times" than we are now having. Business is at a complete standstill, and no money in the country. We have to do some terrible rustling to get along. It has been so now for over two years, and it is very favorable for as many more. I am completely ruined in business, and my property is mortgaged; have also had much sickness in my family, and to add to my misfortune, my Christian rival in business here in town—though unmarried and "well-heeled," as we say out here—this fall began a ruinous competition by putting the price down one-third and getting better workmen. His only reason for this was that he wanted to "give the Infidel a benefit." It has nearly ruined me, but I intend to hold on and hope for better days. I know I have lost friends and made many enemies by my apostacy from the church (Roman Catholic), but I do most sincerely think I am right. I could not be a hypocrite, nor could I go through what I considered a nonsensical farce. So I left the Church, and since then I have been very unfortunate. I know my Christian friends are at the bottom of some of it; natural laws the remainder.

I can say without self-laudation that I have had about as rough a time as ever an apostate had; but it has only made my faith stronger in the religion of common sense, and I sincerely hope that as long as I retain my reason I shall be called an Infidel.

So, Brother Bennett, though I cannot aid you in a pecuniary way, be assured that I kindly sympathize with you and most earnestly hope you may emerge from this crucible of Christian hate, even as refined gold, and to the confusion of the anointed. I wish I could send you a thousand dollars instead of these words, for I know in time of trouble a dollar is worth a volume of sympathy. The best I can do is to renew my subscription, for I can't get along without my favorite paper. The enlarged T. S. should be well patronized. I glory in your pluck. You could not have chosen a better time to enlarge, as the lambs of the fold will not be winners to any great extent, even if through gross injustice you are immured in a Bastile for a few months—which the "saints" forbid!

Hoping that your enlarged paper will prove a great success, worthy of its gallant editor, I draw this to a close, assuring you I will do everything in my power for you.

Fraternally, FRANK LESSMANN.

NEW YORK, Jan. 20, 1878.

"Mr. Anthony Comstock, the U. S. mail detective of this city, has succeeded in his efforts to induce the United States Government not to prosecute the editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER for sending objectionable matter through the mails. To this end Mr. C. has labored faithfully with the Government authorities for several months, and last Saturday all charges against Mr. Bennett were withdrawn.—Payne's Aye of Reason, No. 4.

FRIEND BENNETT: Is the above statement true? It seems to me if it is, THE TRUTH SEEKER has withheld the facts from its readers. In fact it makes THE TRUTH SEEKER seem a sort of a humbug. I do not believe it.

"Last week, in an editorial encouraging Freethought publications, we incidently alluded to the wealth of D. M. Bennett, who states that the valuation is over estimated, and says he will sell his Freethought publishing business for twenty thousand dollars, or less. Without D. M. B. the business perhaps might not be worth above from twenty-five to fifty thousand dollars, but as Mr. B. is now situated, we, with many others, think that there is not a business in this city so profitable which could be purchased for two hundred thousand dollars. Generally, people take it as a compliment to be called wealthy, if it be also stated that the wealth comes from honest industry; but Mr. B. is of the opinion that should the Liberals of the country cease to think him poor they would cease to send him donations. In this we think him far from reason. It is human nature to give to him who already has, and to withhold from one who hath not. We think had Mr. B. adopted the plan of letting his wealth be known, the Liberals of the country would have responded to his numerous appeals for assistance with far more alacrity. Because, if he is rich, they know that he is capable of taking care of the money they give him. We have often thought that begging Christian priests overdid the poverty dodge very often. They are always poor, very poor, in mouth, but generally when sat on a while by an executor or two, they turn out to be very rich in pocket. This has been so often the case that even unsuspecting followers of the "Lamb" are becoming mistrustful of begging priests with a poverty face. In the rural districts people are more charitable to pauper begging than in New York. Here, we have learned by long and careful observation that the honest poor never beg for alms, and that the professional beggar is invariably a fraud. No, we are convinced that Bro. Bennett makes a mistake in supposing the Liberals of this country will give him more, thinking that he is poor, than they would if they knew him to be rich." Payne's Age of Reason, No. 4.

I do not see why the Age of Reason wanted to publish this last. If you have made some money after working night and day I am glad of it. It is your business and no one else's. This great trial was not yours alone but ours, mine, every Liberal's in the country, and the mites we threw in were on our own account. No donation at all. You have supplied us with liberal reading, rich and spicy at a low price and I hope it is a success financially. I have occasionally seen an expression that I should have wished left out: saw a few such in the "Open Letter," but they were of so much higher tone than the story itself, that the "Open Letter" seemed immaculate purity in comparison.

If, as the Age of Reason says, Scarfaced Tony has been at work for months trying to induce the United States Government not to prosecute you, we ought know it. ***

PLUM HOLLOW, IOWA, Jan. 29, 1878.

D. M. BENNETT. Dear Sir: Your analysis of the workings of the Comstock laws in THE TRUTH SEEKER of Jan. 19, is enough to rouse the indignation of all the liberty-loving people of the country. And still, Congress lets these laws remain on record and in full force, well-knowing that many pure and upright men have been made to suffer, innocent of any crime, to ease the cravings of a bigot of the Y. M. C. A. I heartily congratulate you upon your escape from the unjust punishment which Comstock would have placed upon you. You are right, Friend Bennett; never let up until the law is repealed or so modified that no innocent man can be made to suffer. I cannot see why Comstock cannot be made to suffer for the course he has taken in this matter. He has caused nearly all the books he complains of to be placed in the mail. I have been a reader of your valuable paper for more than two years and am still ready and willing to help it along, and to that end enclose three dollars for its continuance. W. B. MEEK.

In inflammation of the lungs many physicians employ warm or hot wet compresses to the chest, the object being to get heat and moisture. This necessitates a frequent change, and it is questionable if the cold air striking the chest when the change is made does not do more harm than the application does good. A far better way is to apply a mush jacket or poultice, making it large enough to envelop the part of the body occupied by the lungs. Make the mush of corn-meal, cooking it in the usual way, and if used as a poultice apply as warm as can be borne, between two cloths, spreading at least an inch thick, and you need not change it more than two or three times in 24 hours, when it will become sour. If there is great muscular weakness, such a weight cannot be well borne; and dry, hot cloths and bottles of water, or irons, will be preferred.

(From the New Haven Register.)

No Devotional Exercises in our Public Schools.

"Ring out the old; ring in the new;"
Let men of every station
With ballot and with voice sustain
Our Board of Education,
Which first, in the old Nutmeg State,
In cheerless, cold December,
A noted resolution passed,
We ever should remember.

'Twas this: That in our public schools
(Abolishing old notions,)
No old religions should be taught,
Dispensing with devotions;
But, as a "send-off" in their stead—
Not pleasing saint or noodle—
They should sing our nation's song,
That good old Yankee Doodle.

That there was no more need for prayer
The pupil's good enhancing
Than in the workshop, field, or store,
Or in a hall for dancing;
That secular should be the schools;
That sect or Bible teaching
Belongs not to the common school,
But to the parsons' preaching.

"The greatest curse that e'er befell
A people or a nation
Was union of the Church and State,"
In whatsoe'er relation.
Then thanks to Tyler, Walker, Earle;
To Watrous, Welch, and Zunder;
To every one who voted "Yea"—
Let others stand from under.

Our schools can now their course pursue
As was their sole intention,
And no sect, Christian, Greek, or Jew,
May offer intervention.
Our schools are free, and may they be,
Long ages in succession.
Let legislatures follow suit,
And Yale show like progression.

And let our Congress, too, dispense
With prayer and quarrel blending,
And to their business be confined,
The nation's wants attending.
Our Board of Education have Set each a bright example;
Nor Church nor sect may interfere,
On others' rights to trample.

In the Elm City have they raised
The ladder of progression;
Themselves upon the first round stand;
No fear of retrogression.
When Young America steps out,
The people's rights defending,
Then bigots quail and groan and wail,
The world to Hades sending.

All honor, then, to those brave men
Who passed this resolution!
Trusty are they, and will sustain
Our good old Constitution.
"Ring out the old; ring in the new;"
Let men of every station
With ballot and with voice sustain
Our Board of Education.

New Haven, Dec. 8, 1877. L. F. J.

(From the New Haven Palladium.)

Reply to L. F. J. in the Register of Dec. 8, 1877.

"Ring out the old; ring in the new,"
Does very well for talking;
But when we've rung the old God out,
The devil will be stalking.
Our Board, within the Nutmeg State,
Did pass, in one December,
A fatal resolution that
The voters will remember.

For while, by voice and vote, they say,
"No prayers in schools are needed,"
Such talk will by their masters hence
Forever go unheeded.
We want no better schools than where
The Golden Rule they're teaching;
It would be well if this wise Board
Should listen to such preaching.

This Board of Education have Shown by their late exclusion
That Walker, Earle, and Zunder, too,
Are in a strange delusion.
And Tyler, Watrous, Welch, as well,
Each has outlived his mission.
The sooner all resign, step out,
The better their position.

That some do wish no prayers said
In Congress, church, or school-room
Is true, as it has ever been;
They are not fit to rule them.
Such may not think the Bible true,
Or heed the gladsome tidings
Brought by the Babe of Bethlehem,
In all the good abiding.

What! make no recognition of
A God in any station!
We need his aid and presence, too,
In every situation;
And when we leave him out of schools,
Our systems once thus shaken,
The first we know, in courts, also,
They'll wish no oaths be taken.

'Tis time the good, of every name
Within our land, united
To show the world our flag's unfurled
Whose God is never slighted,
Then, to the people of the earth,
Of every name and nation,
"Welcome to our shores," we say;
"Accept the situation!"

The children of our truant schools,
With souls by God created,
What know they of the heavenly home,
Except what there is stated?
"Ring out the old; ring in the new,"
Does very well for talking;
But when we've rung the old God out,
The devil will be stalking.

New Haven, December, 1877. W. S. S.

A Criticism Criticised.

REPLY TO W. S. S. IN THE PALLADIUM, JAN. 3, 1878.

W. S. S., Dear Sir, or Ma'am:
Your lines we've been perusing:
Without replying to our lines.
To us they're quite amusing.
Designed were they our muse to give
No very serious clipping;
But over all, with tonguy lash,
To give our Board a whipping.

But, ere you had appeared in print,
And made such bolsterous clamor,
You should have taken one month more
Correcting your bad grammar;
Which shows one pupil's time, at least,
Once ran to silly notions—
Of more account than useful lore
Were his or her "devotions."

You say, "When ruling old God out,
The devil will be stalking."
We ask you now by facts to prove
Your very pious "talking;"
To prove, and to us mortals show,
By facts of good or evil,
We can ring out or you stalk in Either a God or devil.

"We want no better schools than where
The Golden Rule they're teaching."
Do you not know this same good Rule
Is from old pagan teaching?
For so taught Sextus, Hillel, Thales;
While history is teeming
With names of those who taught the same
Ere Jesus had a being.

Then morality, as all may see,
Is of old pagan sowing—
A social tie 'twixt man and man,
Nor God nor Christ bestowing,
Which on the earth would live and thrive,
From grand to good outvieing,
If creeds and dogmas, all man-made,
At once were dead or dying.

Next comes the Babe of Bethlehem,
Our adoration craving.
The world has had sixteen just such,
And yet the world wants saving;
Not from old Adam's fabled sins,
As taught by Christian college,
But from the sins of ignorance,
By universal knowledge.

Such is the object of our schools—
Scholastic acquisition—
Not idol-worship, devil, ghost,
Of by-gone superstition,
But knowledge, fitting boys and girls
For every useful station;
For statesmen, teachers, cititzens,
By public education.

The Church may have its rites and myths,
Its fossilized old notions;
One day in seven is quite enough
For mythical devotions.
But Church and State keep separate,
The patriot's resolution,
Nor let sectarian hand e'er place
God in the Constitution.

"To show the world our flag's unfurled
Whose God is never slighted."
Pray who is he—God of our flag?
Our writer seems short-sighted;
Our country and our country's flag
Own no God to be slighted,
For only to humanity
Those sacred vows are plighted.

So, to all peoples would we say,
Of whatsoever region,
Here you may worship as you please,
We have no State religion.
Our Constitution all protects
Without a Church dictation;
The Christian, Greek, and Jew must here
"Accept the situation."

"Ring out the old; ring in the new"—
For weeks' and months' duration
All secular have been our schools,
Yet no contamination.
The sun doth rise and set the same,
And, though there's been much talking,
No God 's rang out, no Babe 's rang in,
And no big devil's stalking.

New Haven, Jan. 8, 1878. L. F. J.

From J. M. PEEBLES, Human Nature, London, England.

Hudson Tuttle is a guest so welcome to the readers of this magazine, that no apologies are necessary to prepare the way for his introduction, however frequent his visits. Whenever he makes his appearance he is laden with rich presents; indeed the man himself, is an intellectual phenomenon, and one of the many fruits of the present wave of inspiration is a production of incalculable value—the "Career of Religious Ideas."

The work is so succinctly written that it would be impossible to give a fair notice of its contents without a thorough perusal. It is one of the most instructive books that has yet appeared in the whole realm of progressive literature, and most valuable to the reformer. It is indeed a hand-book of natural religion, exploding as it proceeds all the absurdities contained in the antiquated priestly systems.

Aerial Exploration.

MR. EDITOR: My article in the Eagle, some time since, in relation to using balloons in searching for the North Pole, and making explorations and discoveries in the Arctic regions, is stirring up the minds of people in various parts of the world. An expedition, a few months since, sailed out of New London for the Northern country with balloons; and now in Europe they are devising plans for using balloons in making arctic discoveries.

Perhaps one of the greatest difficulties in the way of using these aerial machines in high latitudes is in obtaining gas with which to inflate the balloon; but possibly the method might be somewhat improved. As hydrogen gas has seven times the lifting power of the gas commonly used for aerial flight, volume for volume, it would seem preferable to make use of it in the frigid zone. This gas might be compressed in a very small compass, perhaps, and thus be made very convenient for transportation, and be used as most advisable. No doubt the arctic world will be quite extensively explored by the aid of balloons. J. B. POOL.

West Pittsfield, Mass.

George Francis Train.

Mr. Train holds himself responsible for the utterances here made and entirely exonerates the Editor from all responsibility therefor.

The Poverty of Wealth and the Pleasure of Pain.

TRAIN RUNS OVER AN UNTRUTH SEEKER!

Mr. Train Diagnoses The Truth Seeker.—Bennettism Criticised.—A Two-Hundred-Thousand-Dollar Infidel.—A Psychological Bull in an Evangelical China Shop.—Evolutionary Opinions on Religion.—G. F. T's Suggestions to D. M. B. to Stop the Debate on the Gods.—A Dictator's Immaculate Conceptions. Everybody Advised to Invest in Bennett's Tracts and Subscribe to The Truth Seeker.

A MIDWINTER DAY.
MADISON SQUARE, P. E. 48.

CITIZEN D. M. B.: Bennettism is a power in the land! How funny that I never knew you, and yet psychologically we have been floating down the stream of evolution together! The Park is lovely to-day. Hear the sparrows chirp! See those children romp! Notice how warm the sun shines upon the bench! A midsummer's day in midwinter! What am I reading? Why, another instalment of Bennettism just brought me by Nichols, who seems to diet on your penny tracts—and then brings them to me for my literary banquet!

I admit the treat. You have exhausted the fountain! What use in starting other Infidel papers? You have not only epitomized all skeptical thought of every Infidel mind, but you have Bennettized the Bible and digested all free opinions for everybody's capacity.

What immense research in these little tracts! What grand rhetoric! What a broad grasp of a thousand free books! But broad as is your grasp, you must not be offended if I criticise you with a caustic pen. Living as you do in the Anno Domini chronology, you must bear the censure of the Psychologic Era! But before I take up your literary children, let me say a word about this millionaire report.

IS THE TRUTH SEEKER A MILLIONAIRE!

D. M. Bennett to-day is estimated by competent judges to be worth two hundred thousand dollars. That he is a very rich man, no one, not even himself, can deny; and every dollar has been made out of Infidelity in these four years. Of course, he has worked early and late, published a great number of books, and eminently deserves this great success.—Age of Reason.

This, of course, is a back-handed crook to head off the Comstock defense fund. But as the Young Men's Concubine Association squad have backed down, the point is lost! Bennett's money frightens Comstock. He only goes for the poor, or those he thinks cannot defend themselves! He stabs in the dark. He uses his "Obscene" stiletto in dark lanes. The idea of a man's rolling up this sum in fighting God is simply absurd, but why deny it?

You say I am to-day estimated by competent judges to be worth two hundred thousand dollars. Allow me to say your judges are very wide of the truth. I am not worth near one-tenth part of it. I will give you and your judges a good chance to make one hundred and eighty thousand dollars; if you will procure a party who will give me twenty thousand dollars, I will sell him all I have in the world, good-will, right and title, and everything else, and quit the publishing business forever, and give you a thousand dollars of the sum for finding the customer.—D. M. B.

POVERTY IS WEALTH!

Never deny or defend! Always assert and attack! When they called me a millionaire, I gave up my five thousand debt-burdened lots to Omaha for taxes! allowed the Woodhull and Lant judgments to go by default! took a two-dollar room, and lived on a bowl of oatmeal and an apple a day, and yet everybody swears I am more than a millionaire! Who cares? As you only live for the hour, why correct falsehoods? Why deny exaggerations? You should evolute out of such sensitiveness! Soon nobody will have anything, then everybody will be rich! The coming crash will shake the whole world. Everybody then will be seeking THE TRUTH SEEKER, and Bennettism will be the sensation of the age! The poor are growing richer as the rich grow poorer! The poverty of the pauper is confiscation to the hordings of the wealthy! After the holocaust of millionairism, you will luxuriate in the rainbow of the good time coming.

DOWN WITH THE BIBLE!

There is no book to-day in the English language which contains so much that is indecent and unfit for the rising generation to read, or which is so much an apology and authority for incest, bigamy, polygamy, and excessive sexual intercourse as the Holy Bible. In these regards, the Puranas, the Vedas, the Bhagvad-Gita, the Shaster, the Koran, the Talmud, and thousands of other books are superior to it.

As an illustration of the immoral character of the Bible, we have only to state the case of George Francis Train, who was imprisoned six months in a damp, gloomy, noisome prison in this city, called the Tombs, for no other offense than publishing a few quotations, without a word of comment, from that book. What other book is there in existence, which is recognized by decent people, for quoting which a man, in this nineteenth century, would be confined six months in a foul, unhealthy prison, to the great injury of health, comfort, and business?—D. M. B., in Tract No. 27.

Why not, then, stop its obscene breath? Why discuss its rotten, pestilential history? How odd that we should not have met, when it seems that you have often crossed my track! Did not Comstock-Hammond-Phelps-Beecher-Noah Davis prove the Holy Scriptures obscene in my case? Does anybody doubt its obscenity? Then, stamp it out!

Imagine Comstock arresting Thomas Paine for saying:—

Whenever we read the obscene stories, the voluptuous debaucheries, the cruel and torturing executions, the unrelenting vindictiveness, with which more than half the Bible is filled, it would be more consistent that we called it the word of a demon than word of God. It is a history of wickedness that has served to corrupt and brutalize mankind; and for my own part, I sincerely detest it as I detest everything that is cruel.

And yet Paine believed in God! and Mendum is calling for funds to build a monument for a man who in his will admitted that he believed in one God!

A WONDERFUL PEOPLE!

The Chinese are probably not equal in all respects to the Anglo-Saxon race, but they are peaceful, intelligent, industrious, and law-abiding. There is not half the crime among them, no, scarcely ten per cent. the crime there that exists in the same amount of population in Christian nations—400,000,000. Their religion is as good as the Christian religion, and the morals which Confucius handed down to them are equally as pure as those taught later by Jesus; and they have not taken one life in war and bloodshed where Christians have taken thousands. So much for China.—D. M. B., Tract No. 29.

Yes; they are equal. They are superior. They set us an example in all things. My several visits to China are the pleasantest of my memories. No such people exist as these Chinese and Japanese! They only pay their doctors when they are well! They make their josses out of wood and metal! They pay their debts every New Year's Day! They are the authors of the Golden Rule! They are not constitutional liars like the Anglo Saxons! They are not meat eaters, tobacco smokers, nor alcohol bibbers! They are not gluttons nor whoremongers! They are men of peace! No wonder they call the bloody Christians "outside barbarians!"

But pagans are as big frauds as Christians! Jews as gentiles! Infidels as believers! Money is the base of the swindle! History was a sand-marsh of ghosts! a chaotic mass of gods! a Dismal Swamp of hobgoblins! The ancient world was macadamized with Comstockism, Beecherism, and Tweedism! We must commence anew!

In the language of a Western poet:

There are gods of wood and gods of stone;
There are gods of ivory and gods of bone;
There are gods of iron and gods of brass;
There are gods of porcelain and gods of glass.
Some gods have fins, some gods have scales;
Some gods have horns, some gods have tails;
Some gods drink wine, some feed on grass;
Some gods ride clouds, some ride an ass.

You should ride up Mount Calvary, as I have, on a Jerusalem jackass, and compare the turn-out with that of a Roman pope, an English archbishop of London, or an American cardinal, to appeciate who is the servant, who is the master! G. F. T.

Geo. Francis Train organizing R-evolution! Psychology checkmating Demonology. Immense audiences proclaiming Dictatorship. Down with Hayes! Cromwellize Congress! Death to Thieves! See the Dictator! (different speech each number; six nos. out; 2c; 6 nos., 10c; 20 nos., 25c; 62 nos., 50c.) Remit THE DICTATOR, Phœnix House, Broadway and 12th st., New York. 1t6

GHOSTS! GHOSTS!! GHOSTS!!

Send five cents for COL. INGERSOLL'S lecture on "Ghosts," as delivered at Albany, N. Y., Jan. 14, 1878. Just out, flashing with wit and genius. It is crammed with logic, arguments, sarcasms and facts. It is beautiful, it is grand, and more, it is true. Only five cents. With a photograph of its eloquent author for fifteen cents. With cabinet size of the same, thirty cents.

"Ghosts and other Lectures." A new work by Col. Ingersoll, soon to be issued. Send me stamp, and as soon as the book is out, will send you descriptive circular and price thereof. Send three-cent stamp for Catalogue of Books, Tracts, Photographs, etc.; also, club rates for Liberal and scientific newspapers and periodicals. Address, E. C. WALKER,
6t6 Lock Box B. Florence, Iowa.

LECTURES,

BY MRS. CLARA NEYMAN.

This talented lecturess will give the following lectures, at a reasonable compensation, before Liberal audiences, as may be desired:

1. German Skepticism.
2. What is True Religion?
3. Woman's Reform Work in Europe.

Address MRS. CLARA NEYMAN,
97 Maiden Lane, New York.

THE MAGNETIC TREATMENT.

Send 25 cents to DR. ANDREW STONE, Troy, N. Y., and obtain a large, highly-illustrated book on the system of Vitalizing Treatment. Also The New Gospel of Health for $1.25, a masterly work on progressive medicine and healing by magnetism, 519 pages, illustrated with 120 cuts for personal manipulations, explanatory of the sublime science of healing without medicine. 1y5

SEEDS.

Best and Cheapest in America, or Money Refunded.

Buy direct from Grower, postage or express paid, and get fresh, true, and reliable seeds. I can and shall beat any firm in America in quality and low prices. Beautiful illustrated Seed Catalogues and Garden Guide free.

Address R. H. SHUMWAY,
10t5 Seed Grower, Rockford, Ill.

BROUGHTONS INVIGORATING SYRUP. 25 CTS.

A certain cure for Headache, Constipation, Piles, Stomach, Liver or Kidney Diseases, Weakness, &c. 25 cents per bottle. Incurable cases solicited and cured or money refunded. The same ingredients put up in powders to be sent by mail. Sample bottle, circular, and 26t5

Advice Free, 495 Broome St., N. Y.

MRS. ANNIE BESANT'S

FIRST LETTER TO "THE EVOLUTION" is in No. 17. A letter or an article by this gifted and beautiful Freethinker is expected for every number of The Evolution for 1878.

No. 17 also contains "Eccentricities of Genius in marriage," by Sara A. Underwood; "Sunday-schools," by T. P. Wilson, M. D.; "Law of Capital and Labor," by Prof. Watkins; "Protestantism and Science," by Prof. Grote. There are also two leaders on the Chinese Question, and other literary articles and reviews. Among the latter, "Isis Unveiled," and "The Kabbala."

The Evolution is 15 cents per number, $1.50 per year, with a $1.50 book to every new subscriber. Send 15 cents for No. 17, with list of 100 premiums. Address the publisher,

ASA K. BUTTS,
2t5 36 Dey Street, N. Y.

READER, that little cottage contains one of the choicest libraries in the country. I buy my books of J. FRANCIS RUGGLES, Bibliopole, Bronson, Mich. Rare O. P. works a specialty. Lists for stamp. 8m1

ATTENTION, LADIES!

THE BEST THING OUT.

An Excellent, non-Rusting, Durable Galvanized Iron Plater,

with directions for using the same, will be sent, post-paid, on receipt of $1.25, with order and address. E. D. BLAKEMAN,
Circleville, O.

The Priest in Absolution,

The first Number of the "HOLY CROSS SERIES," is from the abridged London edition of the same work, which created so much excitement in England. The original volume was issued by the "High Church" authorities as a guide to the clergy in the confessional, and was designed to be introduced into the English Church. Price 25 cents.

D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth St., New York.

☞ The other twenty-five numbers of the "Holy Cross Series" are being brought out as rapidly as possible.

$12 A DAY at home. Agents wanted. Outfit and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Maine. 1y50

THE COUNCIL FIRE.

Furnished with fuel by both White Men and Red. A paper of intense interest—History, Legend, Tradition, Indian Policies, Causes of Wars, Massacres, etc. Only paper of the kind. Hon. A. B. Meacham, ex-Supt. Indian Affairs, Editor. Monthly, 16 pages; $1.00 per year. Samples 10 cents. Address Council Fire, Box 1949, Philadelphia, Pa. 3t2

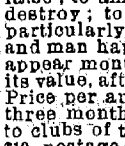
DO YOU WANT Photographs, Chromos, Transparencies, Frames, Chromos, Photographs, Albums, Gold Pens, Pencils, Paper, Stationery, Knick-knacks, Notions, Novelties of every description? Beware of novelists dealers—avoid risk—send only to the old, original and only "HEADQUARTERS." Established, 1868. We originated what is now an enormous trade. We import books weekly. Supply all Scientific, Legal, Medical, scarce, foreign and other books not often to be obtained—in fact, supply ANYTHING AND EVERYTHING in the Book or any other line. Our large store has four floors crowded with cards of books on every known subject, and all offered very low. CATALOGUES FREE. Information given. Send stamp, and send now. Address, HUNTER & CO., PUBLISHERS, HINSDALE, N. H.

THE TRUTH SEEKER COLLECTION

OF

FORMS, HYMNS, AND RECITATIONS.

Forms for organizing Societies, Forms for Constitutions and By-laws, for Funeral Services, Marriage Services, Naming of Infants, Obituary Notices, Epitaphs, Wills, etc. Also, nearly 500 Liberal and Spiritualistic Hymns, original and selected; for Public Meetings, Funerals, Social Gatherings, etc., etc. The whole supplemented by a fine selection of Recitations, comprising many of the finest poetical gems in the language. Nearly 600 pages, at the extremely low price of 75 cents in cloth. The price is made low, so that every family can have a copy. Let none fail to have it. D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth St., New York.



YES | WE WANT an agent in every town. Easy work at home. Write now and we
YES | will start you. $8 a day sure to all. SIMPSON & SMITH, 60 Cortlandt St., N. Y. 3t

---

RIFLES, SHOT-GUNS, REVOLVERS, sent C. O. D. for examination, all charges paid. No risk; no humbug. Write for catalogue. Address GREAT WESTERN GUN WORKS, Pittsburgh, Pa. 6mo27

"THE STAR OF HOPE,"

A monthly paper, devoted to Liberal Communism and Labor Reform in general. Published by the Esperanza Community, Urbana, Neosha county, Kan. Specimen copy free. Send for it. 2t5

TRUE TIME. 50,000 SOLD. The GENUINE Swiss Magnetic COMPASS, INDICATOR AND TIME-KEEPER. A perfect GEM for the pocket of every traveller, tourist, boy, farmer, and the EVERY-BODY desiring a reliable Time-Keeper and also a superior Compass. Usual watch size, steel works, glass crystal, all in a neat ORONIDE case. Perfection warranted. WARRANTED to denote correct time and to keep in order—if fairly used—for two years. Nothing like it! This perfect triumph of mechanism will be sent in neat case, prepaid to any address, for only $1.00; 3 for $2.50. Circulars sent free. BEWARE of a "bogus" article offered as a "premium!"—Get the BEST.—Get the Genuine. Send all orders to the sole Agents, J. J. KING & CO., Brattleboro', Vt.

HISTORY OF THE CONFLICT BETWEEN RELIGION AND SCIENCE. Truly one of the most valuable works that have appeare within the last ten years. By PROF. DRAPER. Price, $1.75.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine. 11

PRO AND CON OF SUPERNATURAL RELIGION; or an answer to the question, Have we a Supernaturally-Revealed, Divinely-Inspired and Miraculously-Attested Religion in the World? By E. E. GUILD, ex-Universalist clergyman. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

"IT STILL WAVES!" The old, original, and only "STAR SPANGLED BANNER," the "FAMILY FAVORITE" and home paper for THE MILLION. Established, 1865. There's nothing like it. All and young, rich and poor, adult and minor,—"it waves for ALL." It is a large 6-column, 8 page paper, loaded with charming Tales, Sketches, Stories, Poems, Wit, Humor, Fun, Recipes, Puzzles, Humorous Poems, etc., etc. In its "ROGUE'S CORNER," every Swindler, Fraud, Humbug, and Fraud is fully, freely, and truthfully exposed. No one can be swindled who reads the "BANNER." 100,000 people read and rely upon this National Paper. TRY IT ONCE AND NOW. Only 75 cents a year, or with Premium of SIX Charming Chromos, or a fine Dictionary, cloth, 251 pages, only $1. Trial Trip, three months, 15 cents. Specimen FREE. Don't put it off but SEND NOW. Address, "STAR SPANGLED BANNER," Hinsdale, N. H.

THE POSITIVE THINKER,

Owned and published by the New York Liberal Publishing Company in Science Hall Building, No. 141 Eighth street, near Broadway, G. L. Henderson and H. B. Brown, editors, is an eight-page family newspaper, devoted to the three great human interests—True or Positive Theology, Industry, Improved and Happy Home. It will advocate the Religion of Humanity, showing that, though there are many churches and sects, there is but One Religion; that, when separated from Superstition and based on the solid rock of Science—leaving the barren fields of negation, doubt, the unknown and the unknowable to metaphysicians and theologians—will, when properly presented, unite mankind everywhere, furnish instruction to young and old, teaching the true, in order to do the right—giving instruction and guidance from the cradle to the grave. The "Positive Thinker" is not the organ of any society, sect or party. It assumes the responsibility of all its utterances. It hopes to find many readers within as well as outside the churches. It will do more to present what is true than to ridicule what is false; to affirm rather than deny; build than destroy; to replace faith by convictions—and particularly labor to make this world better and man happier. The first few numbers will appear monthly, until our subscribers learn its value, after which it will be issued weekly. Price per annum $1.50; six months 75 cents; three months 40 cents. To clubs of five $5; to clubs of ten, and one to getter up of club, $10, postage free. Send for sample numbers. Address the POSITIVE THINKER, Science Hall Building, No. 141 Eighth St., New York. 3-t-4

TRUTH IS MIGHTY! Professor Marillon, the great Spanish Seer and Wizard, will for 25 cts. with your age, height, color of eyes and look of hair, send to you a correct picture of your future husband or wife, initials of real name, the time and place where you will first meet, and the date of marriage. Address, Prof. MARILLON, 42 Province St., Boston, Mass. There is no humbug!

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. H. HALLETT & CO., Portland, Maine. 1y50

WILL BE READY IN A FEW DAYS,

The Popes and Their Doings.

NO. 3 OF THE "HOLY CROSS SERIES."

Being brief stories of fully one hundred and fifty of the conspicuous and sinful Popes—the Vicars of Christ and Vicegerents of God—who filled the chair of the Holy See in Rome during several centuries. The cheapest and most popular history of the Popes ever written. A friend styles it "rich, rare and racy." 278 pp., 12mo. Sent by mail at the very low price of 50 cents in paper; 75 cents in cloth.

Address D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth St., N. Y.

Christianity and Infidelity

A JOINT DISCUSSION BETWEEN

REV. G. H. HUMPHREY, Presb't'n. Clergyman,

OF NEW YORK, AND

D. M. BENNETT, Editor of The Truth Seeker.

It was conducted in the columns of The Truth Seeker, a letter alternately from each contestant appearing each week, beginning April 7, 1877, and closing Sept. 29, 1877, thus continuing just six months, giving thirteen letters from Humphrey and thirteen replies by Bennett.

The subjects discussed were as follows:

PART I.—The relative services of Christianity and Infidelity to American Liberty.

PART II.—The relative services of Christianity and Infidelity to Learning and Science.

PART III.—Is there a stronger probability that the Bible is divine than that Infidelity is true?

The discussion has excited a large share of interest, both among believers and unbelievers: and as both sides are fairly presented, it is suited to readers of all shades of opinion.

The New York Advocate, a paper having a very extensive circulation, in speaking of the volume, says, "Perhaps a more able and exhaustive presentation of both sides of the great questions which have agitated the civilized world for centuries has never been made. At any rate, in this volume will be found a perfect magazine or storehouse of arguments, pro and con, which every intelligent man and woman should peruse with candor and with an earnest desire to arrive at sound conclusions on themes of the highest importance to all mankind. . . Light is what we need. Let the controversies proceed. Let the blows descend upon the error-dispelling anvil. Let the sparks fly in all directions from the heated steel. The truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, is what the people demand on all the great questions of the day, whether of Finance, Science, Politics, or Religion, and discussion will elicit it." Let every person who feels the slightest interest in theological questions, whether on one side or the other, read the Humphrey-Bennett Discussion.

A thick 12mo volume of 550 pages, well bound sent, post-paid, to any address, for the low price of one dollar.

Address D. M. BENNETT, Publisher
141 Eighth St., New York.

JUST ISSUED.

BEYOND THE VEIL.

A very neat and entertaining volume, giving beautiful descriptions of life, occupations, etc., in the Spirit World. Dictated by the spirit of Percy B. Randolph, through the mediumship of Mrs. Francis H. McDougal and Mrs. Luna Hutchinson of California. With a steel-plate engraving of Dr. Randolph.

Price $1.50, post-paid by mail.

D. M. BENNETT
141 Eighth St., N. Y.

THE OUTCAST.

By WINWOOD READE author of "Martyrdom of Man."

This is his last work. Mr. Reade was unquestionably one of the ablest writers of the present century. His "Martyrdom of Man" attracted extraordinary attention in Europe and in this country, for its ability, brilliancy and boldness. This last work is regarded with equal favor. The English edition was published at two dollars. We give it entire for

THIRTY CENTS IN PAPER.

ASTROLOGY.

PROF. LISTER, Astrologer, 505 W. 23d st., New York. 44 years' practice, 27 in Boston. Can be consulted by letter. Send for Circular. Address all letters 505 West 23d st., New York City.

SPERMATORRHŒA

should be in the hands of those suffering from this LIFE-WASTING DISEASE. It is an external application, and has thoroughly and permanently cured over one thousand cases, and some of them were in a terribly shattered condition; had been in the insane asylums, many had falling-sickness-fits; others on the verge of consumption, while others again had become foolish and hardly able to take care of themselves. For further information, address, with stamp, Vineland, N. J., where DR. FELLOWS is permanently located, and obtain his private circular, with cures sworn to, which is unimpeachable testimony to the doctor's skill and reliability as a physician in treating this prevalent and most dangerous of all diseases, SPERMATORRHŒA. 1tf

☞ TERMS WITHIN THE REACH OF ALL. ☜

BOOK BUYERS,

And all who wish to subscribe to periodicals should send 15 cents for No. 16 of The Evolution. Address

THE EVOLUTION, 34 Dey Street, N. Y.

BOOKS FOR THINKERS,

PUBLISHED BY

CHARLES P. SOMERBY, No. 139 Eighth Street, New York,

(A few doors East of Broadway.)

Iron-Clad Series.

	Cents.
1.—The Atonement, by Chas. Bradlaugh	5
2.—Secular Responsibility, by George Jacob Holyoake	5
3.—Christianity and Materialism Contrasted, by Underwood.	15
4.—Influence of Christianity on Civilization, by Underwood.	25
5.—The Essence of Religion, by L. Feuerbach, paper	50
6.—Materialism, by Dr. L. Büchner	25
7.—Buddhist Nihilism, by Prof. Max Müller	10
8.—The Religion of Inhumanity, by Frederic Harrison	20
9.—Relation of Witchcraft to Religion, by A. C. Lyall	15
10.—Epidemic Delusions, by Dr. F. R. Marvin, paper	25
11.—The Masculine Cross and Ancient Sex Worship, paper	50
12.—The Principles of Secularism Illustrated. G. J. Holyoake.	25
13.—Essay on Miracles, by David Hume	10
14.—The Land Question, by Chas. Bradlaugh	5
15.—Were Adam and Eve our First Parents, by C. Bradlaugh.	5
16.—Why Do Men Starve? by Chas. Bradlaugh	5
17.—The Logic of Life, by George J. Holyoake	10
18.—A Plea for Atheism, by Chas. Bradlaugh	10
19.—Large or Small Families? by Austin Holyoake	5
20.—Superstition Displayed, with a Letter of Wm. Pitt, by Austin Holyoake	5
21.—Defense of Secular Principles, by Charles Watts, Secretary of the National Secular Society, London	5
22.—Is The Bible Reliable? by Charles Watts	5
23.—The Christian Deity, by Charles Watts	5
24.—Moral Value of the Bible, by Charles Watts	5
25.—Free Thought and Modern Progress, by Charles Watts	5
26.—Christianity: Its Nature, and Influence on Civilization, by Charles Watts	5
27.—Christian Scheme of Redemption, by Charles Watts	5
28.—Thought on Atheism, by Austin Holyoake	5
29.—Is there a Moral Governor of the Universe? A. Holyoake	5
30.—Philosophy of Secularism, by Charles Watts	5
31.—Has Man a Soul? by Charles Bradlaugh	5
32.—The Origin of Christianity, by Charles Watts	5
33.—Historical Value of the New Testament, by Chas. Watts.	5
34.—On Miracles, by Charles Watts	5
35.—On Prophecies, by Charles Watts	5
36.—Practical Value of Christianity, by Charles Watts	5
37.—Progress of Christianity, by Charles Watts	5
38.—Is There a God? by Charles Bradlaugh	5

Good Discounts on Orders of $5 and Upward, according to quantity.

Send 10 cents for Prometheus containing 28 pp. choice reading matter and a Full List of Liberal Publications; or for List only, Free.

CHARLES P. SOMERBY,
PUBLISHER, BOOKSELLER, IMPORTER, AND PRINTER,
139 EIGHTH ST., Bet. Broadway and Fourth Ave., NEW YORK.

FULL DESCRIPTION OF OTHER LIBERAL WORKS FROM TIME TO TIME.

READ OUR ADVERTISEMENTS EVERY WEEK, AS FREQUENT CHANGES WILL BE MADE.

Gems of Thought.

WHAT stronger breastplate than a heart untainted?—Shakspere.

CLOCKS will go as they are set; but man, irregular man, is never constant, never certain.—Otway.

LET our lives be like the snowfields, where our footsteps leave a mark but no stain.—Mme. Swetchine.

THE wise are instructed by reason, ordinary minds by experience, the stupid by necessity, and brutes by instinct.—Cicero.

IMPRUDENCE, silly talk, foolish vanity, and vain curiosity are closely allied; they are children of one family.—Fontaine.

LET a man overcome anger by love; let him overcome evil by good; let him overcome the greedy by liberality, the liar by truth.—Buddha.

HOW OFTEN in this world the actions that we condemn are the result of sentiments that we love and opinions that we admire!—Mrs. Jameson.

HOW GLADLY would I lead mankind from the vain prospects of life to prospects of innocence and ease, where every breeze breathes health, and every sound is but the echo of tranquillity!—Goldsmith.

IN ancient days the most celebrated precept was, "Know thyself;" in modern times it has been supplanted by the more fashionable maxim, "Know thy neighbor, and everything about him."—Johnson.

GOOD words do more than hard speeches, as the sunbeams, without any noise, will make the traveler cast off his cloak, which all the blustering winds could not do, but only make him bind it closer to him.—Leighton.

IT is easy in the world to live after the world's opinion; it is easy in solitude to live after your own; but the great man is he who, in the midst of the crowd, keeps with perfect sweetness the independence of solitude.—Emerson.

IF men wound you with injuries, meet them with patience; hasty words rankle the wound, soft language dresses it, forgiveness cures it, and oblivion takes away the scar. It is more noble by silence to avoid an injury than by argument to overcome it.—Beaumont.

INFINITE toil would not enable you to sweep away a mist; but by ascending a little, you may often look over it altogether. So it is with our moral improvement; we wrestle fiercely with a vicious habit, which could have no hold upon us if we ascended into a higher moral atmosphere.—Helps.

WHAT renders man unjust? Are not errors and prejudices the causes of the abuses of power? If you really wish to prevent the commission of injustice, you must first remove error and prejudice. Any one intrusted with power will abuse it if not also animated with the love of truth and virtue, no matter whether he be a prince or one of the people.—Fontaine.

HOW MANY bitter thoughts does the innocent man avoid! Serenity and cheerfulness are his portion. Hope is continually pouring its balm into his soul. His heart is at rest, whilst others are goaded and tortured by the stings of a wounded conscience, the remonstrances and risings up of principles which they cannot forget; perpetually teased by returning temptations, perpetually tormented by defeated resolutions.—Paley.

IT is not possible to found a lasting power upon injustice, perjury, and treachery. These may, perhaps, succeed for once, and borrow for awhile from hope a gay and flourishing appearance. But time betrays their weakness, and they fall into ruin of themselves. For, as in structures of every kind, the lower parts should have the greatest firmness, so the grounds and principles of actions should be just and true.—Demosthenes.

CHRISTIANS had not better attempt to arouse the old spirit of persecution for opinion's sake; and I am pleased to believe that but few of them are sufficiently assinine to attempt it. Among Christians are some of my warmest friends, and I know that they are keenly alive to the fact that it is by the merciful and wise provisions of a Liberal and Infidel Constitution that all the rights of faith and belief (however foolish) are vouchsafed to the most humble, but let no one presume to think that the rotten and retrograde cause of Christianity can be unified by an effort to stay the waves of intellectual progress.—Dr. E. B. Foote.

YES; I am an Infidel, and proud am I to be called so. I have found the "pearl of great price." The way, the truth, and the light are mine, and oh! how dearly do I enjoy them! The grand old world never seemed half so full of love, happiness, and beauty before. I never realized how intrinsically valuable was life and all its accompaniments while I believed the world to be only God's footstool, and full of woe, sin, and misery; covered with thorns, swamps, and briers, and sickness, disease, and death lurking in every corner, with scarce a redeeming feature to make it blessed and beloved. It seemed but an abiding-place in which to prepare ourselves for a future life in some unknown and unknowable future. I now feel, when I look upon the poor duped and credulous ones around me, who dare not seek outside of their Bible and Church creeds for any light or information whatever, that I have become of a different order of beings—been born anew into a higher and better state of existence, and I long to lift all others up to this beautiful realm of thought and this glorious state of pure happiness and ever progressive knowledge.—Mrs. E. D. Slenker.

Odds and Ends.

TAKE care of the pennies, and some other fellow will take care of the pounds.

THE man who had a will of his own got on finely till he found his wife had a won't of her own.

WHY don't some man run a telephone heavenwards? Possibly he might hear the angels sing.

TO MAKE a good broil: Leave a letter from one of your old sweethearts where your wife can find it.

WHY was Robinson Crusoe's man Friday like a rooster? Because he scratched for himself and Crusoe.

JOSEPH was the gentleman of Genesis. If Genesis in these days was dependent on gentlemen like Joseph, there wouldn't be any Genesis.

THE Danbury News says: A Washington woman has applied to be appointed a constable, despairing of ever catching a man in any other way.

A PAPER says: "The school committee have decided to erect a new school-house large enough to accommodate five hundred scholars five stories high."

A SARATOGA belle, who six months ago was so languid that she could scarcely support herself at the altar, now throws a flat-iron fifty-five feet and hits her husband every time.

"NEVER do anything you would not like to see others do," remarks the Herald. Well, now that's the worst yet. If we wanted to marry a girl, for instance, we wouldn't like to see some other fellow marry her.

"SIR," said a Yankee, "you promised to vote for my bill." "Vell," said the Dutch member, "vot if I did?" "Well, sir, you voted against it." "Vell, vot if I did?" "Well, sir, you lied!" "Vell, vot if I did?"

TO WIVES.—Don't you ever believe that your husband gets drunk on his own hook. It's his intimate friend who pries his mouth open with a crowbar and pours the champagne into him by the basketful.

"MOTHER," said a little urchin, when he came home, "I have heard such a smart preacher! He stamped and made such a noise, and then he got mad: he shook his fist at the folks, and there wasn't anybody dared go up and fight him.

OVER a bridge at Athens, Ga., was the following: Any person driving over this bridge in a faster pace than a walk shall, if a white person, be fined five dollars, and if a negro, receive twenty-five lashes, half the penalty to be bestowed on the informer.

A GUEST at a hotel found a lady's night-gown in his room, and went to the clerk with it, saying, "Look a here, mister, this is a hollow mockery, a delusion, and a snare. If you can't fill it up, I don't want the darned thing in my room."

AT THE Jewish charity fair in Philadephia, instead of raffling for cakes, slippers, and smoking-caps, they take chances for $2,000 in Government bonds, a $600 piano, a $250 horse, a trip ticket to Paris, and other such useful things.

THE second night after her first husband died she sat by the open chamber window five hours waiting for the cats to begin fighting in the back yard: She said, "This thing of going to sleep without a quarrel of some kind is so new that I can't stand it! Let me alone till they begin: then I can doze off gently!"

AS YEAR after year rolls into the great sea of the past, and a man draws nearer and nearer the great port of death, he becomes more sadly convinced that red flannel wrappers will shrink in spite of the best efforts of the washerwoman. This is why it is so difficult to distinguish a last year's wrapper from a coral necklace.

IN VACATION.

When I met her at a party,
Dead in love I fell at sight;
For her beauty was bewitching,
And her conversation bright.

So I did my best to please her,
Chatted on all sorts of things;
Told her of our life at college,
With some slight embellishings.

"How do you," she asked, "like Cambridge?"
"O," I said, "the town will do;
Though, to tell the truth, its girls are Rather homely, and so blue!"

Fool I was! I saw my blunder
When her lip began to curl,
And in coldest tones she answered,
"Yes, sir; I'm a Cambridge girl."

—Harvard Crimson.

AN ESSAY ON WOMAN.—The undomesticated editor of the Newport Local thus relates his matrimonial experience: A woman is a mighty handy thing to have about the house. She don't cost any more to keep than you will give her, and she will take a great interest in you. If you go out at night, she'll be awake when you get home, and then she will tell you all about yourself—and more too. Of course she will know just where you have been, and what kept you out so late, and will tell you; yet right after she gets through telling you that, she will ask you where you have been and what kept you out so late. And after you tell her, and she won't believe you, you musn't mind that; and if, after going to bed, she says she hasn't closed her eyes the whole night, and keeps up the matinee two hours longer and won't go to sleep when she has a chance, you musn't mind that either; it is her nature.

Truth Seeker Tracts.

No.	(REVISED LIST.)	Cts.
1.	Discussion on Prayer. D. M. Bennett and two Clergymen.	3
2.	Oration on the Gods. Ingersoll.	10
3.	Thomas Paine.	5
4.	Arraignment of the Church. Ingersoll.	5
5.	Heretics and Heresies. "	5
6.	Humboldt. "	5
7.	The Story of Creation. Bennett.	5
8.	The Old Snake Story. "	2
9.	The Story of the Flood. "	5
10.	The Plagues of Egypt. "	2
11.	Korah, Datham, and Abiram. [illegible]nnett.	2
12.	Balaam and his Ass. "	2
13.	Arraignment of Priestcraft. "	3
14.	Old Abe and Little Ike. Syphers.	3
15.	Come to Dinner. "	2
16.	Fog Horn Documents. "	2
17.	The Devil Still Ahead. "	2
18.	Slipped Up Again. "
19.	Joshua Stopping the Sun and Moon. D. M. Bennett.	5
20.	Samson and his Exploits. Bennett.	2
21.	The Great Wrestling Match. "	2
22.	Discussion with Elder Shelton. "	10
23.	Reply to Elder Shelton's Fourth Letter. D. M. Bennett.	3
24.	Christians at Work. Wm. McDonnell.	5
25.	Discussion with Geo. Snode. Bennett.	5
26.	Underwood's Prayer.	1
27.	Honest Questions and Honest Answers. D. M. Bennett.	5
28.	Alessandro di Cagliostro. C. Sotheran.	10
29.	Paine Hall Dedication Address. B. F. Underwood.	2
30.	Woman's Rights & Man's Wrongs. Syphers.	2
31.	Gods and God-houses. "	2
32.	The God's of Superstition and the God of the Universe. D. M. Bennett.	3
33.	What has Christianity Done? Preston.	3
34.	Tribute to Thomas Paine. "	2
35.	Moving the Ark. D. M. Bennett.	1
36.	Bennett's Prayer to the Devil.	2
37.	Short Sermon. Rev. Theologicus, D.D.	1
38.	Christianity not a Moral System. X. Y. Z.	3
39.	The True Saint. S. P. Putnam.	3
40.	Bible of Nature vs. The Bible of Men. J. Syphers.	3
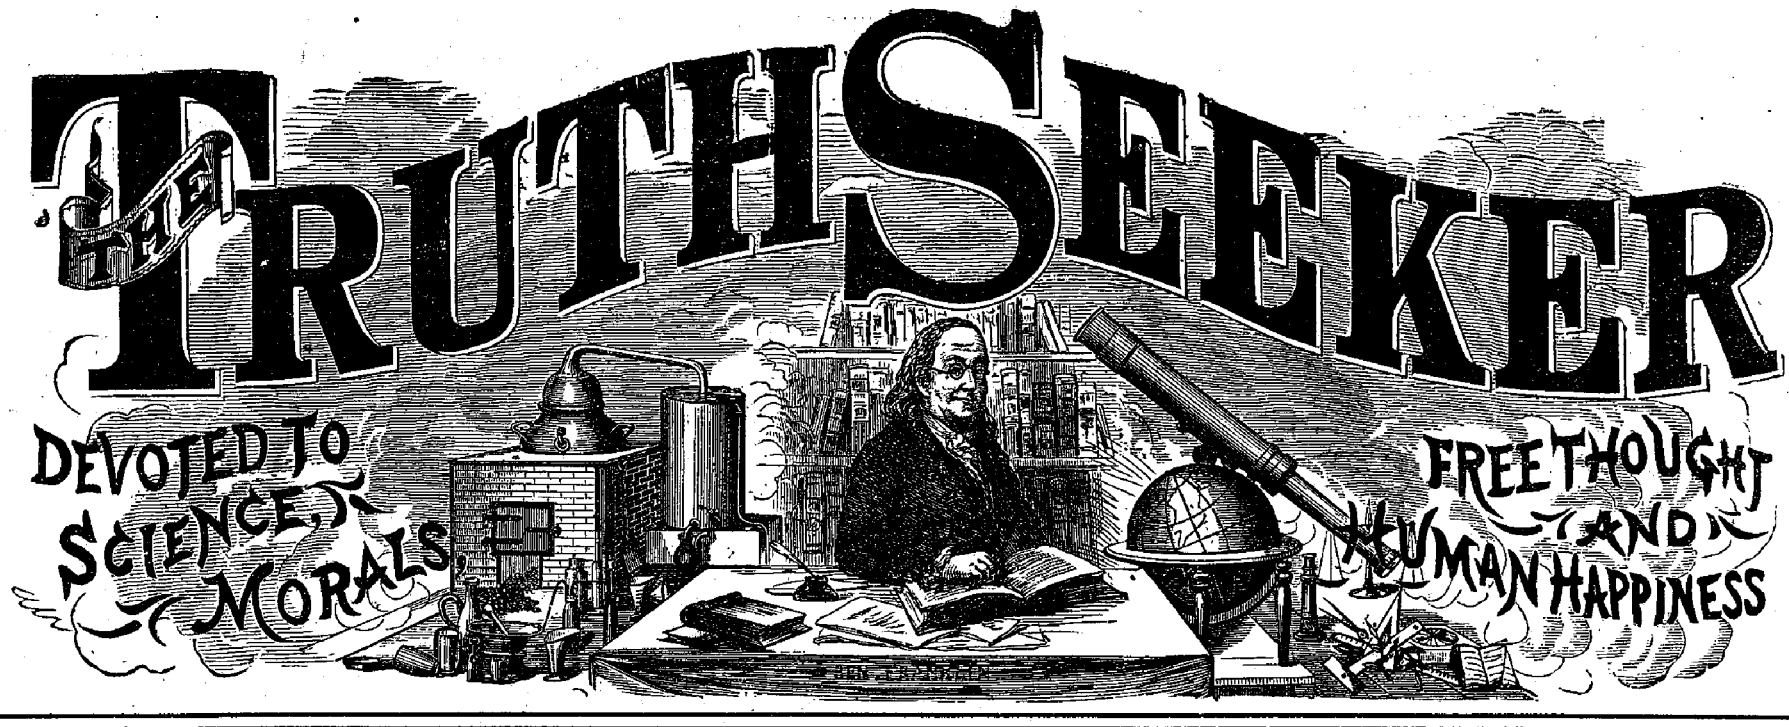
41.	Our Ecclesiastical Gentry, Bennett.	1
42.	Elijah the Tishbite. "	3
43.	Christianity a Borrowed System, "	3
44.	Design Argument Refuted. Underwood.	2
45.	Elisha the Prophet. Bennett.	3
46.	Did Jesus Really Exist? "	3
47.	Cruelty and Credulity of the Human Race. Dr. Daniel Arter.	5
48.	Freethought in the West. G. L. Henderson.	5
49.	Sensible Conclusions. E. E. Guild.	3
50.	Jonah and the Big Fish. D. M. Bennett.	1
51.	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 1.	5
52.	Marples-Underwood Debate, Underwood.	3
53.	Questions for Bible Worshipers. B. F. Underwood.	2
54.	An Open Letter to Jesus Christ, Bennett.	5
55.	The Bible God Disproved by Nature. W. E. Coleman.	3
56.	Bible Contradictions.	1
57.	Jesus Not a Perfect Character. Underwood.	2
58.	Prophecies.	2
59.	Bible Prophecies Concerning Babylon. B. F. Underwood.	2
60.	Ezekiel's Prophecies Concerning Tyre. B. F. Underwood.	2
61.	History of the Devil. Isaac Paden,	5
62.	The Jews and their God. "	10
63.	The Devils Due-Bills. John Syphers.	3
64.	The Ills we Endure—their Cause and Cure. D. M. Bennett.	2
65.	Short Sermon No. 2. Rev. Theologicus, D.D.	2
66.	God Idea in History. H. B. Brown.	5
67.	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets No. 2.	5
68.	Ruth's Idea of Heaven and Mine. Susan H. Wixon.	2
69.	Missionaries. Mrs. E. D. Slenker.	2
70.	Vicarious Atonement. J. S. Lyon.	3
71.	Paine's Anniversary. C. A. Codman.	3
72.	Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego. D. M. Bennett.	2
73.	Foundations. John Syphers.	3
74.	Daniel in the Lion's Den. Bennett.	2
75.	An Hour with the Devil. "	10
76.	Reply to Erastus F. Brown. D. M. Bennett.	3
77.	The Fear of Death. D. M. Bennett.	5
78.	Christmas and Christianity. D.M.Bennett.	5
79.	The Relationship of Jesus, Jehovah, and the Virgin Mary. W. E. Coleman.	2
80.	Address on Paine's 139th Birthday. Bennett.	5
81.	Hereafter, or the Half-way House. John Syphers.	1
82.	Christian Courtesy. Bennett.	2
83.	Revivalism Examined. Dr. A. G. Humphrey.	5
84.	Moody's Sermon on Hell. Rev. J. P. Hoppe, London.	2
85.	Matter, Motion, Life and Mind. Bennett.	10
86.	An Enquiry about God's Sons. "	2
87.	Freethought Judged by its Fruits. B. F. Underwood.	1
88.	David, God's Peculiar Favorite. Mrs. E. D. Slenker.	3
89.	Logic of Prayer. Charles Stephenson.	3
90.	Biblo-Mania. Otter Cordates.	2
91.	Our Ideas of God. B. F. Underwood.	1
92.	The Bible; is it Divinely Inspired? Dr. D. Arter.	5
93.	Obtaining Pardon for Sins. Hudson Tuttle.	1
94.	The New Raven. Will Cooper.	5
95.	Jesus Christ. D. M. Bennett.	10
96.	Ichabod Crane Papers.	10
97.	Special Providences. W. S. Bell.	2
98.	Snakes. Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker.	2
99.	Do the Works of Nature prove a Creator? Sciota.	5
100.	The Old and the New. R. G. Ingersoll.	5
101.	110th Anniversary of Thomas Paine's Birthday. Bennett et als.	5
102.	The Old Religion and the New. W. S. Bell.	1
103.	Does the Bible Teach us all we Know. Bennet.	2
104.	Evolution of Israel's God. A. L. Rawson.	10
105.	Decadence of Christianity. Capphro.	2
106.	Franklin, Washington and Jefferson Unbelievers. Bennett.	2
107.	The Safe Side. H. B. Brown.	5
108.	The Holy Bible a Historical Humbug. S. H. Preston.	1
109.	Ghosts. Ingersoll, 4 pp.	5
110.	Materialistic Prayer. Bennett, 4 pp.	1
111.	Reply to Scientific American. Bennett.	1
112.	Sensible Sermon. Savage, 8 pp.	2
113.	Come to Jesus. Bennett, 8 pp.	2

SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

1.	Hereditary Transmission. Prof. Louis Elsberg, M.D.	5
2.	Evolution; from the Homogeneous to the Heterogeneous. B. F. Underwood.	3
3.	Darwinism. B. F. Underwood.	3
4.	Literature of the Insane. F. B. Marvin.	5
5.	Responsibility of Sex. Mrs. Chase, M.D.	3
6.	Graduated Atmospheres. J. McCarroll.	2
7.	Death. Frederic R. Marvin, M.D.	5
8.	How do Marsupial Animals Propagate their kind? A. B. Bradford.	5
9.	The Unseen World. Prof. John Fiske.	10
10.	The Evolution Theory — Huxley's Three Lectures.	10
11.	Is America the New World? L. L. Dawson.	10

Discount on one dollar's worth 10 per ct. off; on two dollars' worth 20 off; on five dollars' worth 40 off; on ten dollars' worth 50 off.

As few or as many of any given kind may be ordered as desired.



RADICAL BOOKS.

SENT POST PAID AT THE PRICES ANNEXED.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

Age of Reason. Paine. Paper covers.	25
" " Cloth "	50
" " and Ex. of Proph. Paper 50; cl.	75
A Few Days in Athens. Frances Wright.	75
Apocryphal New Testament.	1 25
An Eye Opener. Paper, 50; cloth,	75
Antiquity of Christianity. Alberger.	25
Analysis of Religious Belief. Viscount Amberly. $3.00, 4.00, and	4 50
Apples of Gold. Susan H. Wixon.	1 50
Anti-Theological Lectures. Rev. R. Taylor.	2 00
Antiquity and Duration of the World.	25
Astronomy and Worship of the Ancients.	25
A. J. Davis' Entire Works.	27.00
Adventures of Elder Triptolemus Tub.	15
Bible in India. Jacolliot.	2 00
Buckle's History of Civilization. 2 Vols., 8vo.	4 00
Burgess-Underwood Debate. 50 and	80
Bible in the Balance. Fish.	1 00
Bacon's Novum Organum.	2 00
Bhagvad-Gita, or Dialogues of Christna and Arjuna.	1 75
Buechner's Man, Present and Future.	4 00
Christianity before Christ. Craven.	25
Chapters from the Bibles of the Ages.	1 50
Criticism on the Theological Idea of Deity.	1 00
Childhood of Religion. Clodd.	1 25
Childhood of the World. Clodd, 40 and	60
Christianity and Materialism. Underwood.	15
Cause of Religious Ideas. Tuttle.	1 00
Conway's Sacred Anthology.	4 00
Colenso on the Pentateuch, Abstract of.	25
Devil's Pulpit, Rev. Robt. Taylor.	2 00
Diegesis " "	2 00
Denton's Irreconcilable Records.	50
" Our Planet, Past, Present, and Future.	1 50
" Radical Rhymes.	1 25
" Who are Christians, Deluge,
Denton's Common Sense Thoughts, Be Thyself, What is Right? Man's True Saviors, Sermon from Snakspere's Text, God Proposed, Spiritualism True, Orthodoxy False, 10 cents each.
Draper's Conflict between Religion and Science.	1 75
" Intellectual Development of Europe, 2 vols.,	3 00
Darwin's Origin of Species,	2 00
" Descent of Man, (Impr'd Ed.)	3 00
Descent and Darwinism, Schmidt.	1 50
Einstein's Origin of Religious Ideas.	1 00
Exeter Hall, Wm. McDonnell.	60 & 80
Errors of the Bible, Wright,	35 & 60
Essence of Religion. Fuerbach. 40 and	80
Eight Scientific Tracts.	20
Frothingham's Elevation of Humanity.	1 50
" Child's Book of Religion.	1 00
" Stories of the Patriarchs.	1 00
" Safest Creed.	1 50
" Transcendentalism in New England.	2 50
Faraday's Various Forces of Nature.	2 00
Fiske's Myths and Myth-Makers.	2 00
God Idea in History, Tuttle.	1 25
Good Sense. D'Holbach.	1 00
Gould's Curious Myths of the Middle Ages.	2 50
" Lost and Hostile Gospels.	3 25
Graves' Sixteen Crucified Saviors.	2 00
" Biography of Satan.	60
Grey's Enigmas of Life.	2 00
" Creeds of Christendom. 2 Vols.	7 50
Heroines of Freethought, Mrs. Underwood.	1 75
Heathens of the Heath, McDonnell.	1 00 & 150
Hume's Essays and Treatises.	1 50
Huxley's Lay Sermons.	1 75
" Man's Place in Nature.	1 25
" Critiques and Addresses.	1 50
History of all Religions Sects. Evans.	1 00
Haeckel's History of Creation. 2 Vols.	5 00
Hollick's Nerves and the Nervous.	1 00
Humboldt's Works.
Ingersoll's Gods and other Lectures. 30 and	50
" etc., Large Edition.	1 25
Influence of Christianity on Civilization.	25
Infidels' Text Book. Cooper.	1 00
Jehovah Unveiled.	35
Jamieson's Clergy a Source of Danger.	1 00
Josephus' Complete Works.	2 50
Johnson's Oriental Religions. 8vo.	5 00
John's Way.	15
Kneeland's Review.	1 00
" Hymns.	35
Koran, with Notes and Life of Mahomet.	2 75
Lecky's Rationalism in Europe. 2 Vols.	4 00
" History of European Morals.	6 00
Life of Thomas Paine. Blanchard, p 50; cl	75
Lewes' Biographical History of Philosophy.	3 50
" Problems of Life and Mind.	3 00
Lizzie Doten's Poems of Progress, and Inner Life, each	150
Lubbock's Origin of Civilization.	2 00
" Pre-Historic Times Illustrated.	6 00
Lyell's Elements of Geology. 770 cuts.	3 40
" Principles " " 2 vols. and maps.	3 00
Monks and Popes. Alberger.	1 00
Morley's Life of Voltaire.	2 00
Martyrdom of Man. Winwood Reade.	3 00
Peeble's All Around the World.	2 50
" Seers of the Ages.	2 50
Plato's Divine and Moral Works.	2 20
Pro and Con of Supernatural Religion.	30 & 50
Physical Man, Tuttle.	1 50
Paine's Common Sense.	12
" Crisis. Paper, 50; cloth	80
" Rights of Man. Paper, 50; cloth	80
" Theological Works, with portrait	1 50
" " " paper.	1 00
" Political Works, cloth.	1 50
" Great Works Complete. Crown octavo, with life and portrait.	3
" Political Works, steel portrait.	1
" Life, by Calvin Blanchard with portrait Paper, 50; cloth	75
Parturition without Pain,	1 00
Plain Home Talk and Medical Common Sense, E. B. Foote, M.D.,	1 50
Proctor's Six Lectures on Astronomy.	20
Reason, the only Oracle of Man. Ethan Allen	60
Syntagma, Taylor.	1 00
System of Nature. D'Holbach,	2 00
Self-Contradictions of the Bible.	25
Studying the Bible, Mrs. Slenker.	75
Spencer's (Herbert) Entire Work.
Strauss' Old Faith and New.	2 00
" New Life of Jesus, 2 vols..	12 00
Supernatural Religion, 2 Vols.. 8vo.,	8 00
Sexual Physiology, Trall,	2 00
Talleyrand's Letter to Pope Pius vii.	25
Tyndall' (Prof. John) Entire Works.
The Christ of Paul,	2 00
The Case against the Church.	75
The Relations of the Sexes. Mrs. Duffey.	2 00
The Voices, Warren Sumner Barlow.	1 25
The World's Sages, Infidels, and Thinkers. Bennett. $3 00, $4 00, and	4 50
The Champions of the Church, Bennett $3 00, $4 00, and	4 50
Thirty Discussions, Bible Stories, etc., 75 &	1 00
Truth Seeker Tracts, Vols. I. II. III. and IV., by the lot, 50 &	75
The Truth Seeker Collection of Forms, Hymns, and Recitations.	75
The Outcast, Winwood Reade.	30
Talks with My Patients, Mrs. Gleason, M.D..	1 50
Underwood-Marples Debate.	35 & 60
Underwood's Twelve Tracts.	20
Vestiges of Creation,	75
Volney's Ruins,	1 00
Volney's New Researches in Ancient History.	1 50
Voltaire's Philosophical Dictionary,	5 00

THE TRUTH SEEKER

Vol. 5. No. 7. {PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY D. M. BENNETT.} New York, Saturday, February 16, 1878. {SCIENCE HALL, 141 8th St., NEAR BROADWAY.} $3 per Year.

Notes and Clippings.

THE most pious blacksmith has at least one vise.

THE Rev. Joseph Cook's style of swearing—"Bi-ology!"

THE ministers of Pittsburgh and its vicinity are discussing the need of better marriage-license laws.

THE days are growing longer, and this will give meddlesome people more time to mind their own business.

THE ministers' meeting of San Francisco, having apparently run short of subjects, has begun to discuss divorce.

THE sermons on Hell continue. We are not superstitious, but is not this a remarkably open winter?—Brooklyn Union.

SISTER TOWNSLEY, a new evangelist, is vigorously working among the reprobates of Middletown, Vt. Her eloquence meets with gratifying results.

THE ladies who brought charges of impropriety against the Rev. David Wells of Washington, D. C., have reconsidered and withdrawn the charges.

A SINGULAR circumstance is said to have taken place in Boston. A man down there absolutely fell in love with his own wife, until she removed her veil.

QUEER fellows those Sunday school missionaries in Iowa. One of them writes that, notwithstanding corn husking and deep mud three sinners have been converted.

Zion's Herald throws hot shot into the camp of what it calls "lawless evangelists," and says that such persons are "grievous wolves." It calls on all judicious pastors to keep the wolf from the door of the church.

THE church of Llanfairpwllgwyngyllgogerytsilliogogogoch, in Wales, is vacant, and it is suggested that the Rev. Mr. Piaratanatissatarrunanse, now located in New England, would be a good man to fill the vacancy.

BEECHER says there is no hell. There may be no more for him. Let's see—hay fever, Elizabeth, salary down twenty-five per cent., pew rents down fifty per cent., and lectures down forty per cent.—isn't that hellish enough?

NEW HAVEN is busy erecting an immense temporary building for the use of Moody and Sankey, whose services are to begin there on the third Sunday in March. The building, which will cost $6,000, will seat 5,000 persons.

THE best savings bank heard from lately is a snow-bank on Mount Washington. Sergeant Cone, who was going down hill forty miles an hour, lost his balance and was deposited in the bank. His life was saved, but it took some time to restore his circulation.

WHILE he was counting over the collection money on Sunday last, the deacon of a Washington church found an old and faded piece of paper which, being unfolded, proved to be his own nearly outlawed note for $30 and interest, which the holder, unable to collect, had turned into the treasury of the Lord.

THE Oakland Congregational church in Chicago ran down in finances so low as to be beyond the reach of Brother Kimball's eloquence. The poor concern is now disbanded, and over its remains may be written, "Gone, but not forgotten," for the creditors will remember it if nobody else does.

REVIVAL in Little Rock, Ark. But it lags and lingers on account of the great amount of drunkenness in the place. A correspondent from there urgently asks for Murphy or some other temperance apostle, remarking that whiskey is considered in Little Rock as much of a daily necessity as bread and butter.

SOME of the German Baptists of the First German Baptist church of Williamsburgh are very fond of beer. A trouble has been brewing in the church for some time because of this, heightened by some affairs of personal and private difficulty. Committees have been appointed to calm the troubles, but the effervescence goes on with much violence. It is to be hoped that the commotion will end in froth.

A LONG STRETCH ON PRAYING.—A woman was found in the German church at Madison, Wisconsin, Tuesday morning, who had been shut up there two days. The authorities thought her insane, and took her to the police station. She claimed that she was in the church praying in the hope of being cured from a disease.

SINCE our last, another heavy defalcation has come to light on the part of good, pious, Baptist Brother Turney, of a Wall-street bank, who stole nearly $300,000, and was enabled to keep it covered for some three years. His piety and religious activity were his most conspicuous characteristics, and these, perhaps, ought to make amends for his mistakes and shortcomings.

CRAZED IN A REVIVAL.—A Methodist revival at Sylvania, O., has just been brought to an abrupt termination by the crazing of one of the converts through religious excitement, Wallace Cavell, a harness-maker, who had attended the meetings for a week or more, and, in the technique of the church, expressed hope of conversion; but the excitement of the meetings worked upon his peculiarly susceptible, morose temperament, and one night he broke out into a jargon that disclosed him to be a raving maniac. He attended the meetings several nights more, and on Sunday night, in response to a request from his friends, the meetings in the church were discontinued.

THE Christian Standard, which is the organ of the Holiness People, and advertises pills, worm syrups, liver regulators, and other nostrums, defends itself by saying that it needs the money which these advertisements bring in in order to keep up its existence. But it admits that the advertisements are not wholesome Sunday reading. It suggests that the columns of genuine holiness reading which it gives are as much as any Christian wants to read on Sunday, and that the patrons of the paper can read about the nostrums and other things on almost any week day. It "finally and forever" dismisses the question, however, as it is evidently an unpleasant one to discuss.

THE Examiner and Chronicle discusses some of the things which hinder Christianity, and especially in New Brunswick, New Jersey. It narrates about how a revival in that city culminated in a general condition of good feeling among the various denominations. All was going on swimmingly, when all of a sudden some gushing brother suggested a union communion service. This drove the Close-Communion Baptists away in frightened indignation, and introduced confusion into the loving ranks of the rest of the brotherhood. Thus, says the Examiner and Chronicle, the progress of Christianity in New Brunswick was hindered by trying to make the Baptists commune with other people when they did not want to.

THE Congregational brethren are having a spirited time discussing whether or not they constitute a denomination. Some of their leading men hold that they do, while others, just as eminent, maintain that they do not. One of the principal associations has recently been discussing the conundrum, "What constitutes a Congregational minister?" No satisfactory answer has as yet been given to this, and, as things now stand, the outlook indicates that the brethren will have to give it up. Both of these discussions have arisen out of the somewhat anomalous condition of sundry Congregational churches in Brooklyn. The question as to the ministry grows especially out of the application of a young clergyman, who is entirely without ecclesiastical standing, to be recognized as a Congregational minister in the City of Churches.

SOME of the more eminent and high-priced ministers are just now preaching on hell in a manner so reprehensible as to deserve outspoken and immediate rebuke. They pompously announce to their congregations that they are now about to preach on a subject which has been much discussed of late, and unskilfully handled by persons of comparatively little education; but that now they will utter views on it which are the genuine article and entitled to respect. In Brooklyn a few evenings ago a distinguished pulpiteer told his people that he had not yet preached on hell, and did not mean to do so for a few weeks to come; and that while it was being handled in such a sensational manner as it now is, and especially by such a shallow person as his neighbor T——, he preferred keeping hands off for a little while; but that when he did preach on the subject he would give them something very carefully prepared and well worth remembering. Hell is a subject which should be handled with becoming humility, and even the most expensive ministers ought to exercise common courtesy toward their less costly brethren in the treatment of this most difficult of topics.

THE doughty Anthony Comstock has just added another feather to his cap, another sprig to his laurels, by arresting Madame Restell, of this city, on the charge of practicing abortion. It is not known whether or not Mr. Comstock has himself fallen a victim to her unlawful practices, but it will be remembered that some time ago he wrote from Washington to several physicians in this city, representing that he had been seduced and was "three months gone"—whatever that may mean—and thus there is a dark mystery hanging over the whole affair. It seems that he has been known to visit her secretly several times, and just what passed between them will probably remain forever unknown. It is to be hoped by all good Christian people that he has sustained no permanent injury. A physician in this city has remarked that Anthony himself is the worst abortion he ever met with. We are in favor of giving the poor fellow a chance. He has, as he confesses, lost prestige lately, and if he can recover it by arresting this old lady of sixty-five summers, let him do so by all means.

THE EASTERN QUESTION.

Needles and pins, needles and pins!
When the war's ended, the trouble begins.
Says Turkey: "Our allies don't care now a toss for us,
And therefore we care not who enters the Bosporos,"
Says England: "The ruin of Turkey is loss for us,
And therefore the Czar must not enter the Bosporus."
Bulgaria says: "The great Czar is the hoss for us,
And therefore we pray he may hasten to cross for us."
Says Austria: "Dim is our hope on the Bosporus;
Naught but a congress can furnish a gloss for us."
Says Bismarck: "The Russian caviar is the sauce for us,
The banquet is spread on the banks of the Bosporus."
It seems, after all, that nothing but phosphorus
Is a real and genuine rhyme for the Bosporus,
It matters but little who lifts the latch:
Just open the door, and you strike the match.

ANTHONY COMSTOCK, after arresting Madame Restell, said he had several reasons for doing so, and among others that several physicians had urged him to that course. She says the physicians of this city are jealous and envious of the success she has met with and wish her out of the way, so they can have the field to themselves. It is thought by some that Comstock did not give the principal reason for his arresting the lady. He has met with poorer success this year than usual in funds for carrying on his holy crusade against Freelovers and Freethinkers, though begging appeals have been put forth in meetings and through the city press in the most touching manner. A year ago he received double what he did this year, and two years ago it was more than ten times as much. As Madame Restell is very wealthy and as Comstock has half the fines imposed by the State courts on the cases he takes before it, it can be seen how a heavy fine against the Madam would be of decided pecuniary benefit to Anthony. He is a man that does not work without a motive. It may be found that enough can be wrung from the lady to recuperate his waning fortunes. Probably few things would suit him better than fobbing $5,000 or $10,000 of her money. It would help him to do so much good for Jesus. One thing he will succeed in doing and that is to bring law and justice into disrepute and to render the spy and informer business, which he is so capable of performing, more infamous than it is already.

Events of the Week.

BEN WADE is still very sick.

THE office of the Troy Times has burned.

GIDEON J. WELLS, formerly Secretary of the Navy, has died.

THE Catholic Institute of Cincinnati has made an assignment.

THE Ravine Woolen Mills at South Wilbraham, Mass., were burned with contents.

THE weather for the past week has been mild and pleasant. The snow in this locality has disappeared.

A SEVERE storm visited the vicinity of Jacksonville, Fla., attended with heavy winds and rain and hail.

CANADA is offering troops to England. If the latter gets into a big fight with Russia, she will need the Canadians.

THE winter is very unfavorable for making ice. Not one fourth enough is yet gathered for the cobblers, ice-creams, etc., for next summer.

FRANCIS MURPHY, the temperance advocate, has been in Washington two weeks, attracting large audiences and obtaining large numbers of signatures to the pledge.

MORE asteroids have been discovered. This seems to be a good year for them. Our little solar system turns out to be more populous than was formerly supposed.

THE Silver Bill is nearing its end in the Senate, and is soon to be put to vote. It will doubtless pass by a decided majority, but it is feared by some that the President will veto it.

OUR dear Cardinal McCloskey has gone to Rome to help elect a Pope. The wires bring the intelligence that the conclave there assembled are already having a stormy time of it.

THE trials and investigations of the Louisiana Returning Board are creating great excitement in political circles. The country will doubtless be fully convinced that American politics are a rotten concern.

THE Pope, after a reign of thirty-two years over the sheep of Peter, has at last proved his infallibility by dying. He was the best of a long line of pontiffs, and we hope he will have a front seat and a well-tuned harp in the heavenly choir.

CHARLES BAKER, proprietor of a saloon on Light st., Baltimore, fired two shots from a revolver at his wife, and immediately afterwards shot himself, causing instant death. One ball took effect in his wife's neck and the other in her left breast. It is thought she may recover. Jealousy was the cause.

CHARLES BRADLAUGH and Mrs. Annie Besant, the Freethought advocates, who in June last were convicted and sentenced to fine and imprisonment and police surveillance, on the charge of printing Dr. Charles Knowlton's "Fruits of Philosophy"—pronounced an immoral book—have been released from the sentence imposed, the Court of Errors having decided that the omission of the objectionable words complained of were fatal to the indictment. It is said that the case will go before the House of Lords.

AN armistice was signed by the Russian and Turkish forces, and hostilities between them have ceased, but the Russians have marched on to Constantinople and occupied the strong points commanding the city, so that really, the Turks are in the position of a conquered nation. Russia is able to command conditions and compel Turkey to submit to them. England, Austria, and other European powers regard Russia as having acted in bad faith in taking possession of Constantinople, and England, especially, is becoming very much excited over it. An English fleet is being sent on to the Dardanelles, a portion having already arrived there, but the Sultan has not given consent for them to go to the city. The British power will insist upon her fleets going to the city, and upon Russia's not occupying it. The European horizon now looks warlike, and if the conflict begins again it will be bloody and general.

Robert G. Ingersoll.

Hell.

A LECTURE GIVEN BY COL. ROBT. G. INGERSOLL AT CHICKERING HALL, SUNDAY, FEB. 3, 1878.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN: The idea of hell was born of revenge and brutality on the one side, and cowardice on the other. In my judgment, the American people are too brave, too charitable, too generous, too magnanimous to believe in the infamous dogma of an eternal hell. I have no respect for any human being who teaches it. I have no respect for any man who preaches it. I have no respect for the man who will pollute the imagination of childhood with that infamous lie. I have no respect for the man who will add to the sorrows of this world with that frightful dogma. I have no respect for any man who endeavors to put that infinite cloud, that infinite shadow, over the heart of humanity. I want to be frank with you. I dislike this doctrine, I hate it, I despise it, I defy it. For a good many years the learned intellects of Christendom have been examining into the religions of other countries in the world, the religions of the thousands that have passed away. They examined into the religions of Egypt, the religion of Greece, the religion of Rome and of the Scandinavian countries. In the presence of the ruins of those religions the learned men of Christendom insisted that those religions were baseless, that they were fraudulent. But they have all passed away. While this was being done the Christianity of our day applauded, and when the learned men got through with the religions of other countries they turned their attention to our religion. By the same mode of reasoning, by the same methods, by the same arguments that they used with the old religions, they were overturning the religion of our day. Why? Every religion in this world is the work of man. Every one! Every book has been written by man. Men existed before books. If books had existed before men, I might admit there was such a thing as a sacred volume.

In my judgment, man has made every religion and made every book. There is another thing to which I wish to call your attention. Man never had an idea—man will never have an idea—except those supplied to him by his surroundings. Every idea in the world that man has, came to him by nature. Man cannot conceive of anything, the hint of which he has not received from his surroundings. You can imagine an animal with the hoof of a bison, with the pouch of the kangaroo, with the wings of an eagle, with the beak of a bird, and with the tail of a lion; and yet every point of this monster you borrowed from nature. Everything you can think of, everything you can dream of, is borrowed from your surroundings—everything! And there is nothing on this earth coming from any other sphere whatever. Man has produced it all; man has produced every religion in the world. And why? Because each generation bodies forth the knowledge and the belief of the people at the time it was made, and in no book is there any knowledge found except that of the people who wrote it. In no book is there found any knowledge except that of the time in which it was written. Barbarians have produced, and always will produce, barbarian religions. Barbarians have produced, and always will produce, ideas in harmony with their surroundings; and all the religions of the past were produced by barbarians—every one of them. We are making religions to-day. We are making religions to-night. That is to say, we are changing them, and the religion of to-day is not the religion of one year ago. What changed it? Science has done it; education and the growing heart of man have done it. We are making these religions every day, and just to the extent that we become civilized ourselves will we improve the religion of our fathers. If the religion of one hundred years ago, compared with the religion of to-day, is so low, what will it be in one thousand years?

If we continue making the inroads upon orthodoxy which we have been making during the last twenty-five years, what will it be fifty years from to-night? It will have to be remonetized by that time, or else it will not be a legal tender. In my judgment, every religion that stands by appealing to miracles is dishonorable. Every religion in the world has announced every other religion as a fraud. That proves to me that they all tell the truth—about others. Why? Suppose Mr. Smith should tell Mr. Brown that he—Smith—saw a corpse get out of the grave, and that when he first saw it, it was covered with the worms of death, and that in his presence it was reclothed in healthy, beautiful flesh. And then suppose Mr. Brown should tell Mr. Smith, "I saw the same thing myself. I was in a graveyard once, and I saw a dead man rise." Suppose then that Smith should say to Brown, "You're a liar," and Brown should say to Smith, "And you're a liar," what would you think? It would simply be because Smith, never having seen it himself, didn't believe Brown; and Brown never having seen it, didn't believe Smith had. Now, if Smith had really seen it, and Brown told him he had seen it too, then Smith would regard it as a corroboration of his story, and he would regard Brown as one of his principal witnesses. But, on the contrary, he says, "You never saw it." So, when a man says, "I was upon Mount Sinai, and there I met God, and he told me, 'Stand aside, and let me destroy these people,'" and another man says to him, "I was up upon a mountain, and there I met the Supreme Brahma," and Moses says, "That's not true," and contends that the other man never did see Brahma, and he contends that Moses never did see God—that is in my judgment proof that they both speak truly.

Every religion then has charged every other religion with having been an unmitigated fraud, and yet, if any man had ever seen the miracle himself, his mind would be prepared to believe that another man had seen the same thing. Whenever a man appeals to a miracle he tells what is not true. Truth relies upon reason, and the undeviating course of all the laws of nature. Now, we have a religion—that is, some people have. I do not pretend to have religion myself; I believe in living for this world—that's my doctrine—in living here, now, to-day, to-night—that's my doctrine, to make everybody happy that you can. Now, let the future take care of itself, and if I ever touch the shores of another world, I will be just as ready and anxious to get into some remunerative employment as anybody else. Now, we have got in this country a religion which men have preached for about eighteen hundred years, and just in proportion as their belief in that religion has grown great, men have grown mean and wicked; just in proportion as they have ceased to believe it, men have become just and charitable. And if they believed it to-night as they once believed it, I wouldn't be allowed to speak in the city of New York. It is from the coldness and infidelity of the churches that I get my right to preach; and I say it to their credit. Now we have a religion. What is it? They say in the first place that all this vast universe was created by a Deity. I don't know whether it was or not. They say, too, that had it not been for the first sin of Adam there would never have been any devil in this world, and if there had been no devil there would have been no sin, and if there had been no sin there never would have been any death. For my part I am glad there was death in this world, because that gave me a chance. Somebody had to die to give me room, and when my turn comes I'll be willing to let somebody else take my place. But whether there is another life or not, if there is any being who gave me this, I shall thank him from the bottom of my heart because, upon the whole, my life has been a joy.

Now, they say, because of this first sin all men were consigned to eternal hell. And this because Adam was our representative. Well, I always had an idea that my representative ought to live somewhere about the same time I did. I always had an idea that I should have some voice in choosing my representative. And if I had had a voice I never should have voted for the old gentleman called Adam. Now, in order to regain man from the frightful hell of eternity, Christ himself came to this world and took upon himself flesh, and in order that we might know the way to eternal salvation he gave us a book, and that book is called the Bible; and wherever that Bible has been read, men have immediately commenced cutting each others' throats. Wherever that Bible has been circulated, they have invented inquisitions and instruments of torture, and have commenced hating each other with all their hearts. But I am told now—we are all told—that this Bible is the foundation of civilization; but I say that this Bible is the foundation of hell, and we shall never get rid of the dogma of hell until we get rid of the idea that it is an inspired book. Now, what does the Bible teach? I am not going to talk about what this minister or that minister says it teaches; the question is "ought a man to be sent to eternal hell for not believing the Bible to be the work of a Merciful Father?" and the only way to find out is to read it; and as very few people do read it now-a-days I will read a few passages. This is the book to be read in our schools in order to make our children charitable and good; this is the book that we must read in order that our children may have exalted ideas of mercy, charity, and justice. Does the Bible teach mercy? Now be honest. I read: "I will make mine arrows drunk with blood, and my sword shall devour flesh" (Deut. xxxii, 42). Pretty good start for a merciful God! "That thy foot may be dipped in the blood of mine enemies, and the tongue of thy dogs in the same" (Ps. lxviii, 23). Again: "And the Lord thy God will put out those nations before thee by little and little; thou mayest not consume them at once, lest the beasts of the field increase upon thee" (Deut. vii, 22).

"But the Lord thy God shall deliver them unto thee, and shall destroy them with a mighty destruction, until they be destroyed. And he shall deliver their kings into thine hand, and thou shalt destroy their name from under heaven; there shall be no man able to stand before thee, until thou hast destroyed them" (Deut. vii, 23, 24).

"So Joshua came, and all the people of war with him, against them by the waters of Merom suddenly; and they fell upon them.

"And the Lord delivered them into the hand of Israel, who smote them, and chased them unto great Zidon, and unto Misrephothmaim, and unto the valley of Mizpeh eastward; and they smote them, until they left them none remaining.

"And Joshua did unto them as the Lord bade him; he houghed their horses, and burnt their chariots with fire.

"And Joshua at that time turned back, and took Hazor, and smote the king thereof with the sword; for Hazor beforetime was the head of all these kingdoms.

"And they smote all the souls that were therein with the edge of the sword, utterly destroying them; there was not any left to breathe; and he burnt Hazor with fire.

"And all the cities of those kings, and all the kings of them, did Joshua take, and smote them with the edge of the sword, and he utterly destroyed them, as Moses the servant of the Lord commanded.

"But as for the cities that stood still in their strength, Israel burned none of them, save Hazor only; that did Joshua burn.

"And all the spoil of these cities, and the cattle, the children of Israel took for a prey unto themselves; but every man they smote with the edge of the sword [Brave!] until they had destroyed them, neither left they any to breathe. [As the merciful God had commanded them.]

"As the Lord commanded Moses his servant, so did Moses command Joshua, and so did Joshua; he left nothing undone of all that the Lord commanded Moses.

"So Joshua took all that land, the hills, and all the south country, and all the land of Goshen, and the valley, and the plain, and the mountain of Israel, and the valley of the same;

"Even from the mount Halak, that goeth up to Seir, even unto Baal-gad in the valley of Lebanon under mount Hermon: and all their kings he took, and smote them, and slew them.

"Joshua made war a long time with all these kings.

"There was not a city that made peace with the children of Israel, save the Hivites, the inhabitants of Gibeon: all other they took in battle.

"For it was of the Lord to harden their hearts, that they should come against Israel in battle, that he might destroy them utterly, and that they might have no favor, but that he might destroy them, as the Lord commanded Moses.

"And at that time came Joshua, and cut off the Anakim from the mountains, from Hebron, from Debir, from Anab, and from all the mountains of Judah, and from all the mountains of Israel: Joshua destroyed them utterly with their cities.

"There was none of the Anakim left in the land of the children of Israel: only in Gaza, in Gath, and in Ashdod, they remained.

"So Joshua took the whole land, according to all that the Lord said unto Moses; and Joshua gave it for an inheritance unto Israel according to their divisions by their tribes. And the land rested from war" (Joshua xi, 7–23).

"When thou comest nigh unto a city to fight against it, then proclaim peace unto it.

"And it shall be, if it make thee answer of peace, and open unto thee, then it shall be, that all the people that is found therein shall be tributaries unto thee, and they shall serve thee.

"And if it will make no peace with thee, but will make war against thee, then thou shalt besiege it.

"And when the Lord thy God hath delivered it into thine hands, thou shalt smite every male thereof with the edge of the sword.

"But the women, and the little ones, and the cattle, and all that is in the city, even all the spoil thereof, shalt thou take unto thyself; and thou shalt eat the spoil of thine enemies, which the Lord thy God hath given thee.

"Thus shalt thou do unto all the cities which are very far off from thee, which are not of the cities of these nations.

"But of the cities of these people, which the Lord thy God doth give thee for an inheritance, thou shalt save alive nothing that breatheth:

"But thou shalt utterly destroy them" (Deut. xx, 10–17).

Neither the old men, nor the women, nor the maidens, nor the sweet-dimpled babe, smiling upon the lap of its mother, were allowed to live.

"And he said unto them, Thus saith the Lord God of Israel [a merciful God indeed!], Put every man his sword by his side, and go in and out from gate to gate throughout the camp, and slay every man his brother, and every man his companion, and every man his neighbor" (Exod. xxxii. 27).

Now, recollect, these instructions were given to an army of invasion, and the people who were slain were guilty of the crime of fighting for their homes. Oh, most merciful God! The Old Testament is full of curses, vengeance, jealousy and hatred, and of barbarity and brutality. Now do not for one moment believe that these words were written by the most merciful God. Don't pluck from the heart the sweet flowers of pity and crush them by superstition. Do not believe that God ever ordered the murder of innocent women and helpless babes. Do not let this supposition turn your hearts into stone. When anything is said to have been written by the most merciful God, and the thing is not merciful, then I deny it and say he never wrote it. I will live by the standard of reason, and if thinking in accordance with reason takes me to perdition, then I will go to hell with my reason rather than to heaven without it.

Now, does this Bible teach political freedom, or does it teach political tyranny? Does it teach a man to resist oppression? Does it teach a man to tear from the throne of tyranny the crowned thing and robber called a king? Let us see:

"Let every soul be subject to the higher powers: For there is no power but of God: the powers that be are ordained of God" (Rom. xiii. 1).

All the kings and princes, and governors, and thieves and robbers that happened to be in authority were placed there by the Infinite Father of all!

"Whosoever, therefore, resisteth the power, resisteth the ordinance of God."

And when George Washington resisted the power of George the Third, he resisted the power of God. And when our fathers said, "Resistance to tyrants is obedience to God," they falsified the Bible itself.

"For he is the minister of God to thee for good. But if thou do that which is evil, be afraid; for he beareth not the sword in vain; for he is the minister of God, a revenger to execute wrath upon him that doeth evil.

"Wherefore ye must needs be subject, not only for wrath, but also for conscience' sake" (Rom. xiii. 4-5).

I deny this wretched doctrine. Wherever the sword of rebellion is drawn to protect the rights of man, I am a rebel. Wherever the sword of rebellion is drawn to give man liberty, to clothe him in all his just rights, I am on the side of that rebellion. I deny that rulers are crowned by the Most High; the rulers are the people, and the presidents and others are but the servants of the people. All authority comes from the people, and not from the aristocracy of the air. Upon these texts of scripture which I have read rest the thrones of Europe, and these are the voices that are repeated from age to age by brainless kings and heartless priests.

Does the Bible give woman her rights? Is this Bible humane? Does it treat woman as she ought to be treated, or is it barbarian? Let us see.

"Let the woman learn in silence, with all subjection" (1 Timothy ii., 11).

"If they [women] will learn anything, let them ask their husbands," (1 Cor., xiv. 35). Imagine the ignorance of a lady who had only that source of information.

"But I suffer not woman to teach, nor to usurp authority over the man, but to be in silence. For Adam was first formed, then Eve. [What magnificent reason.]

"And Adam was not deceived, but the woman being deceived was in the transgression. [Splendid.]

"But I would have you know, that the head of every man is Christ; and the head of the woman is the man; and the head of Christ is God." That is to say, there is as much difference between the woman and man as there is between Christ and man. There is liberty for woman.

"For the man is not of the woman, but the woman of the man." It was the man's cutlet that was taken, not the woman's. "Neither was the man created for the woman,"—well, what was he created for?—"but the woman was created for the man. Wives, submit yourselves unto your husbands, as unto the Lord." There's liberty!

"For the husband is the head of the wife, even as Christ is the head of the Church; and he is the Savior of the body.

"Therefore, as the Church is subject unto Christ, so let the wives be to their own husbands in everything."

Good again! Even the Savior didn't put man and woman upon an equality. The man could divorce the wife, but the wife could not divorce the husband; and, according to the Old Testament, the mother had to ask forgiveness for being the mother of babes. Splendid!

Here is something from the Old Testament:

"When thou goest forth to war against thine enemies, and the Lord thy God hath delivered them into thine hands, and thou hast taken them captive;

"And seest among the captives a beautiful woman, and hast a desire unto her, that thou wouldst have her to be thy wife;

"Then thou shalt bring her home to thine house; and she shall shave her head and pare her nails" (Deut. xxi, 10–13). This was in self-defense, I suppose.

This sacred book, this foundation of human liberty, of morality—does it teach concubinage and polygamy? Read the thirty-first chapter of Numbers, read the twenty-first chapter of Deuteronomy, read the blessed lives of Abraham, of David, or of Solomon, and then tell me that the sacred scripture does not teach polygamy and concubinage! All the language of the world is not sufficient to express the infamy of polygamy. It makes man a beast and woman a stone. It destroys the fireside and makes virtue an outcast. And yet it is the doctrine of the Bible—the doctrine defended by Luther and Melancthon! It takes from our language those sweetest words, father, husband, wife, and mother, and takes us back to barbarism and fills our hearts with the crawling, slimy serpents of loathsome lust.

Does the Bible teach the existence of devils? Of course it does. Yes, it teaches not only the existence of a good being, but a bad being. This good being had to have a home—that home was heaven. This bad being had to have a home—that home was hell. This hell was supposed to be nearer the earth than I would care to have it, and to be peopled with spirits, spooks, hobgoblins, and all the fiery shapes with which the imagination of ignorance and fear could people that horrible place; and the Bible teaches the existence of hell and this big devil and all these little devils. The Bible teaches the doctrine of witchcraft, and makes us believe that there are sorcerers and witches, and that the dead could be raised by the power of sorcery. Does anybody believe it now?

"Then said Saul unto his servants, Seek me a woman that hath a familiar spirit, that I may go to her, and inquire of her. And his servants said to him, Behold, there is a woman that hath a familiar spirit at Endor.

"And Saul disguised himself, and put on other raiment, and he went, and two men with him, and they came to the woman by night; and he said, I pray thee, divine unto me by the familiar spirit, and bring me him up, whom I shall name unto thee." That was a pretty good spiritual seance.

"And the woman said unto him, Behold, thou knowest what Saul hath done, how he hath cut off those that have familiar spirits, and the wizards, out of the land; wherefore then layest thou a snare for my life, to cause me to die?

"And Saul sware to her by the Lord, saying, As the Lord liveth, there shall no punishment happen to thee for this thing.

"Then said the woman, Whom shall I bring up unto thee? And he said, Bring me up Samuel.

"And when the woman saw Samuel, she cried with a loud voice; and the woman spake to Saul; saying, Why hast thou deceived me? for thou art Saul."

"And the king said unto her, Be not afraid; for what sawest thou? And the woman said unto Saul, I saw gods ascending out of the earth.

"And he said unto her, what form is he of? And she said, An old man cometh up; and he is covered with a mantle. And Saul perceived that it was Samuel, and he stooped with his face to the ground, and bowed himself" (1 Saml. xxviii, 7-15).

In another place he declares that witchcraft is an abomination unto the Lord. He wanted no rivals in this business. Now, what does the New Testament teach?

"Then was Jesus led up of the Spirit into the wilderness to be tempted of the devil.

"And when he had fasted forty days and forty nights, he was afterwards a hungered.

"And when the tempter came to him, he said, If thou be the Son of God, command that these stones be made bread.

"But he answered and said, It is written, Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God.

"Then the devil taketh him up into the holy city, and seateth him on a pinnacle of the temple.

"And saith unto him, If thou be the Son of God, cast thyself down; for it is written, He shall give his angels charge concerning thee; and in their hands they shall bear thee up, lest at any time thou dash thy foot against a stone.

"Jesus said unto him, It is written again, Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God" (Matt. iv, 1-7).

Is it possible that any one can believe that the devil absolutely took God Almighty and put him on the pinnacle of the temple and endeavored to persuade him to jump down? Is it possible?

"Again, the devil taketh him into an exceeding high mountain, and sheweth him all the kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them.

"And saith unto him, All these things will I give thee, if thou wilt fall down and worship me.

"Then saith Jesus unto him, Get thee hence, Satan; for it is written, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve (Matt. iv, 8–11).

Now, the devil must have known at that time that he was God, and God at that time must have known that the other was the devil. How could the latter be conceived to have the impudence to promise God a world in which he did not have a tax-title to an inch of land?

"Then the devil leaveth him, and behold, angels came and ministered unto him" (Matt. iv, 11).

"And they came over unto the other side of the sea, into the country of the Gadarenes.

"And when he was come out of the ship, immediately there met him out of the tombs a man with an unclean spirit,

"Who had his dwelling among the tombs; and no man could bind him, no, not with chains.

"Because that he had been often bound with fetters and chains, and the chains had been plucked asunder by him, and the fetters broken in pieces; neither could any man tame him.

"And always, night and day, he was in the mountains and in the tombs, crying and cutting himself with stones.

"But when he saw Jesus afar off, he came and worshiped him,

"And cried with a loud voice and said, What have I to do with thee, Jesus, thou Son of the Most High God? I adjure thee by God, that thou torment me not.

"For he said unto him, Come out of the man, thou unclean spirit.

"And he asked him, What is thy name? And he answered, saying, My name is Legion; for we are many.

"And he besought him much that he would not send him away out of the country.

"Now there was nigh unto the mountains a great herd of swine feeding.

"And all the devils besought him, saying, Send us into the swine, that we may enter into them.

"And forthwith Jesus gave them leave. And the unclean spirits went out, and entered into the swine; and the herd ran violently down a steep place into the sea, (they were about two thousand) and were choked in the sea" (Mark, v. 1–13).

Now I will ask a question: Should reasonable men, in the nineteenth century, in the United States of America, believe that that was an actual occurrence? If my salvation depends upon believing that, I am lost; I have never experienced the signs by which it is said a believer may be known. I deny all the witch stories in this world. These fables of devils have covered the world with blood; they have filled the world with fear, and I am going to do what I can do to free the world of them. Small and great, they have filled the world with monsters; they have made the world a synonym of fear and ferocity. And it is this book that ought to be read in all the schools—this book that teaches man to enslave his brother! If it is larceny to steal the result of labor how much more is it larceny to steal the laborer himself!

"Moreover, of the children of the strangers that do sojourn among you, of them shall ye buy, and of their families that are with you, which they begat in your land; and they shall be your possession.

"And ye shall take them as an inheritance for your children after you, to inherit them for a possession; they shall be your bondmen for ever; but over your brethren the children of Israel, ye shall not rule one over another with rigour" (Lev. xxv., 45, 46.).

Why? Because they are not as good as you are, you will buy of the heathen roundabout.

"Now these are the judgments which thou shalt set before them.

"If thou buy a Hebrew servant, six years he shall serve; and in the seventh he shall go out free for nothing.

"If he came in by himself, he shall go out by himself; if he were married, then his wife shall go out with him.

"If his master have given him a wife, and she have borne him sons or daughters; the wife and her children shall be her master's, and he shall go out by himself.

"And if the servant shall plainly say, I love my master, my wife, and my children; I will not go out free.

"Then his master shall bring him unto the judges; he shall also bring him to the door, or unto the door-post; and his master shall bore his ear through with an awl; and he shall serve him for ever" (Exod. xxi., 1–7).

This is the doctrine which has ever lent itself to the chains of slavery, and makes a man imprison himself rather than desert his wife and children. I hate it!

Now, listen to the New Testament, the tidings of great joy for all people!

"Servants, be obedient to them that are your masters according to the flesh, with fear and trembling, in singleness of your heart, as unto Christ;

"Not with eye-service, as men-pleasers; but as the servants of Christ, doing the will of God from the heart" (Eph. vi., 5, 6).

Splendid doctrine!

"Servants, be subject to your masters with all fear; not only to the good and gentle, but also to the froward.

"For this is thank-worthy, if a man for conscience toward God endure grief, suffering wrongfully" (1 Peter ii, 18, 19).

"Servants, obey in all things your masters according to the flesh."

He was afraid they might not work all the time, so he adds:

"Not with eye-service, as men-pleasers; but in singleness of heart, fearing God."

Read the twenty-first chapter of Exodus (7 to 11).

"And if a man sell his daughter to be a maid-servant, she shall not go out as the men-servants do.

"If she please not her master, who hath betrothed her to himself, then shall he let her be redeemed; to sell her unto a strange nation he shall have no power, seeing he hath dealt deceitfully with her. And if he have betrothed her unto his son, he shall deal with her after the manner of daughters.

"If he take him another wife, her food, her raiment, and her duty of marriage shall he not diminish.

"And if he do not these three unto her, then shall she go out free without money."

"Servants, be obedient to your masters," is the salutation of the most merciful God to one who works for nothing, and who receives upon his naked back the lash, as legal tender for service performed.

"Servants, be obedient to your masters," is the salutation of a most merciful God to the slave-mother bending over her infant's grave.

"Servants, be obedient to your masters," is the salutation to a man endeavoring to escape pursuit, followed by savage bloodhounds, and with his eye fixed upon the north star. This book ought to be read in the schools, so that our children will love liberty.

What does this same book say of the rights of little children? Let us see how they are treated by this "most merciful God."

"If a man have a stubborn and rebellious son, which will not obey the voice of his father, or the voice of his mother, and that when they have chastened him, will not hearken unto them;

"Then shall his father and his mother lay hold on him, and bring him out unto the elders of his city, and unto the gate of his place;

"And they shall say unto the elders of his city, This our son is stubborn and rebellious, he will not obey our voice, he is a glutton, and a drunkard.

"And all the men of his city shall stone him with stones, that he die; so shalt thou put evil away from among you; and all Israel shall hear and fear" (Deut. xxi. 18).

Abraham was commanded to offer his son Isaac as a sacrifice, and he intended to obey. The boy (who was only thirty years old!) was not consulted.

Did you ever hear of the story of Jephthah's daughter?

"And Jephthah vowed a vow unto the Lord, and said, If thou shalt without fail deliver the children of Ammon, into my hands,

"Then shall it be, that whatsoever cometh forth of the doors of my house to meet me, when I return in peace from the children of Ammon, shall surely be the Lord's, and I will offer it up for a burnt offering.

"So Jephthah passed over unto the children of Ammon to fight against them: and the Lord delivlivered them into his hands.

"And he smote them from Aroer, even till thou cometh to Minnith, even twenty cities, and unto the plain of the vineyards, with a very great slaughter. Thus the children of Ammon were subdued before the children of Israel.

"And Jephthah came to Mizpeh unto his house, and, behold, his daughter came out to meet him with timbrels and dances; and she was his only child; beside her he had neither son nor daughter.

"And it came to pass, when he saw her, that he rent his clothes, and said, Alas, my daughter, thou hast brought me very low, and thou art one of them that trouble me; for I have opened my mouth unto the Lord, and I cannot go back.

"And she said unto him, My father, if thou hast opened thy mouth unto the Lord, do to me according to that which hath proceeded out of thy mouth; forasmuch as the Lord hath taken vengeance for thee of thine enemies, even of the children of Ammon.

"And she said unto her father, Let this thing be done for me: let me alone two months, that I may go up and down upon the mountains, and bewail my virginity, I and my fellows.

"And he said, Go, and he sent her away for two months; and she went with her companions, and bewailed her virginity upon the mountains.

"And it came to pass at the end of two months, that she returned to her father, who did with her according to his vow which he had vowed" (Judges xi, 30–40).

Is there in the history of the world a sadder story than this? Can a God who would accept such a sacrifice be worthy of the worship of civilized men? I believe in the rights of children; I plead for the republic of home, for the democracy of the fireside; and for this I am called a heathen and a devil by those who believe in the cheerful and comforting doctrine of eternal damnation.

Read the book of Job; read that! God met the devil and asked him where he had been, and he said: "Walking up and down the country;" and the Lord said to him: "Have you noticed my man Job over here, how good he is?" and the devil said: "Of course he's good; you give him everything he wants. Just take away his property and he'll curse you. You just try it." And he did try it, and took away his goods, but Job still remained good. The devil laughed and said that he had not been tried enough. Then the Lord touched his flesh, but he was still true. Then he took away his children, but he remained faithful, and in the end, to show how much Job made by this fidelity, his property was doubled and he had more children than ever. If you have a child, and you love it, would you be satisfied with a God who would destroy it, and endeavor to make it up by giving you another that was better looking? No, you want that one; you want no other, and yet this is the idea of the love of children taught in the Bible.

Does the Bible teach you freedom of religion? To-day we say that every man has a right to worship God or not to worship him, as he pleases. Is it the doctrine of the Bible? Let us see:

"If thy brother, the son of thy mother, or thy son, or thy daughter, or the wife of thy bosom, or thy friend which is as thine own soul, entice thee secretly, saying, Let us go and serve other gods, which thou hast not known, thou, nor thy fathers;

"Namely, of the gods of the people which are round about you, nigh unto thee, or far off from thee, from the one end of the earth even unto the other end of the earth;

"Thou shalt not consent unto him, nor hearken unto him, neither shall thine eye pity him, neither shalt thou spare, neither shalt thou conceal him;

"But thou shalt surely kill him; thy hand shall be first upon him to put him to death, and afterwards the hand of all the people.

"And thou shalt stone him with stones, that he die; because he hath sought to thrust thee away from the Lord thy God, which brought thee out of the land of Egypt, from the house of bondage" (Deut. xiii, 6–10).

And do you know, according to that, if your wife—your wife that you love as your own soul—if you had lived in Palestine, and your wife had said to you, "Let us worship the sun, whose golden beams clothe the world in glory; let us worship the sun; let us bow to that great luminary; I love the sun because it gave me your face; because it gave me the feaures of my babe; let us worship the sun;" it was then your duty to lay your hands upon her; your eye must not pity her, but it was your duty to cast the first stone against that tender and loving breast! I hate such doctrine! I hate such books! I hate gods that will write such books! I tell you that it is infamous.

"If there be found among you, within any of the gates which the Lord thy God giveth thee, man or woman, that hath wrought wickedness in the sight of the Lord thy God, in transgressing his covenant,

"And hath gone and served other gods, and worshiped them, either the sun, moon, or any of the host of heaven, which I have not commanded;

"And it be told thee, and thou hast heard of it, and inquired diligently, and, behold, it be true, and the thing certain, that such abomination is wrought in Israel;

"Then shalt thou bring forth that man or that woman, which have committed that wicked thing, unto thy gates, even that man or that woman, and shalt stone them with stones, till they die" (Deut. xvii, 2-6).

That is the religious liberty of the Bible—that's it. And this God taught that doctrine to the Jews, and said to them, "Any one that teaches a different religion, kill him!" Now, let me ask—and I want to do it reverently—if, as is contended, God gave these frightful laws to the Jews, and afterwards this same God took upon himself flesh, and came among the Jews, and taught a different religion, and these Jews in accordance with the laws which this same God gave them, crucified him, did he not reap what he had sown? The mercy of all this comes in in what is called "the plan of salvation." What is that plan? According to this great plan, the innocent suffer for the guilty to satisfy a law.

What sort of a law must it be that would be satisfied with the suffering of innocence? According to this plan, the salvation of the whole world depends upon the bigotry of the Jews and the treachery of Judas. According to the same plan, we all would have gone to eternal hell. According to the same plan, there would have been no death in the world if there had been no sin, and if there had been no death you and I would not have been called into existence, and if we did not exist we could not be saved, so we owe our salvation to the bigotry of the Jews and the treachery of Judas, and we are indebted to the devil for our existence. I speak this reverently. It strikes me that what they call the atonement is a kind of moral bankruptcy. Under its merciful provisions, man is allowed the privilege of sinning on credit, and whenever he is guilty of a mean action, he says, "Charge it." In my judgment, this kind of bookkeeping breeds extravagance in sin. Suppose we had a law in New York that every merchant should give credit to every man who asked it, under pain of the penitentiary, and that every man should take the benefit of the bankruptcy statute every Saturday night? Doesn't the credit system in morals breed extravagance in sin? That's the question. Who's afraid of punishment which is so far away? Whom does the doctrine of hell stop? The great, the rich, the powerful? No; the poor, the weak, the despised, the mean. Did you ever hear of a man going to hell who died in New York worth a million of dollars, or with an income of twenty-five thousand a year? Did you? Did you ever hear of a man going to hell who rode in a carriage? Never! They are the gentlemen who talk about their assets, and who say, "Hell is not for me; it is for the poor. I have all the luxuries I want, give that to the poor." Who goes to hell? Tramps.

Let me tell you a story. There was once a frightful rain, and all the animals held a convention to see whose fault it was, and the fox nominated the lion for chairman. The wolf seconded the motion, and the hyena said, "That suits." When the convention was called to order, the fox was called upon to confess his sins. He stated, however, that it would be much more appropriate for the lion to confess first. Thereupon the lion said: "I am not conscious of having committed evil. It is true I have devoured a few men, but for what other purpose were men made?" And they all cheered and were satisfied. The fox gave his views upon the goose question, and the wolf admitted that he had devoured sheep, and occasionally had killed a shepherd, but "all acquainted with the history of my family will bear me out when I say that shepherds have been the enemies of my family from the beginning of the world." Then way back in the rear there arose a simple donkey, with a kind of Abrahamic countenance. He said: "I expect it's me. I had eaten nothing for three days except three thistles. I was passing a monastery; the monks were at mass. The gates were open leading to a yard full of sweet clover. I knew it was wrong, but I did slip in and I took a mouthful, but my conscience smote me and I went out." And all the animals shouted "he's the fellow!" and in two minutes they had his hide on the fence. That's the kind of people that go to hell.

Now, this doctrine of hell that has been such a comfort to my race, which so many ministers are now pleading for, has been defended for ages by the Fathers of the Church. Your preacher says that the sovereignty of God implies that he has an absolute, unlimited, and independent right to dispose of his creatures as he will, because he made them. Has he? Suppose I take this book and change it immediately into a sentient human being. Would I have a right to torture it because I made it? No; on the contrary, I would say, "Having brought you into existence, it is my duty to do the best for you I can." They say God has a right to damn me because he made me. I deny it. Another one says God is not obliged to save even those who believe in Christ, and that he can either bestow salvation upon his children or retain it without any diminution of his glory. Another one says, God may save any sinner whatsoever, consistently with his justice. Let a natural person—and I claim to be one, moral or immoral, wise or unwise—let him be as just as he can, no matter what his prayers may be, what pains he may have taken to be saved, or whatever circumstances he may be in, God, according to this writer, can deny him salvation, without the least disparagement of his glory. His glories will not be in the least obscured—there is no natural man, be his character what it may, but God may cast down to hell without being charged with unfair dealing in any respect with regard to that man. Theologians tell us that God's design in the creation was simply to glorify himself. Magnificent object!

"The same shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God, which is poured out without mixture into the cup of his indignation; and he shall be tormented with fire and brimstone in the presence of the holy angels, and in the presence of the Lamb" (Rev., 1–10).

Do you know that nobody would have had an idea of hell in this world if it hadn't been for volcanoes? They were looked upon as the chimneys of hell. The idea of eternal fire never would have polluted the imagination of man but for them. An eminent theologian, describing hell, says: "There is no recounting up of the million of ages the damned shall suffer. All arithmetic ends here"—and all sense, too! "They shall have nothing to do in passing away this eternity but to conflict with torments. God shall have no other use or employment for them." These words were said by gentlemen who died Christians, and who are now in the harp business in the world to come. Another declares there is nothing to keep any man or Christian out of hell except the mere pleasure of God, and their pains never grow any easier by their becoming accustomed to them. It is also declared that the devil goes about like a lion, ready to devour the wicked. Did it never occur to you what a contradiction it is to say that the devil will persecute his own friends? He wants all the recruits he can get; why then should he persecute his friends? In my judgment he should give them the best hell affords.

It is in the very nature of things that torments inflicted have no tendency to bring a wicked man to repentance. Then why torment him if it will not do him good? It is simply unadulterated revenge. All the punishment in the world will not reform a man, unless he knows that he who inflicts it does it for the sake of reformation, and really loves him, and has his good at heart. Punishment inflicted for gratifying the appetite makes man afraid, but debases him.

Various reasons are given for punishing the wicked:

1. That God will vindicate his injured majesty. Well, I am glad of that; 2. He will glorify his justice. Think of that; 3. He will show and glorify his grace. Every time the saved shall look upon the damned in hell it will cause them a lively and admiring sense of the grace of God. Every look upon the damned will double the ardor and the joy of the saints in heaven! Can the believing husband in heaven look down upon the torments of the unbelieving wife in hell, and then feel a thrill of joy? That's the old doctrine—not of our days; we are too civilized for that. Oh! but it is the old doctrine that if you saw your wife in hell—the wife you love; who, in your last sickness, nursed you; who, perhaps, supported you by her needle when you were ill; the wife who watched by your couch night and day, and held your corpse in her loving embrace when you were dead—the sight would give you great joy. That doctrine is not preached to-day. They do not preach that the sight would give you joy; but they do preach that it will not diminish your happiness. That is the doctrine of every orthodox minister in New York, and I repeat that I have no respect for men who preach such doctrines. The sight of the torments of the damned in hell will increase the ecstasy of the saints forever! On this principle, a man never enjoys a good dinner so much as when a fellow-creature is dying of famine before his eyes; or, he never enjoys the cheerful warmth of his own fireside so greatly as when a poor and abandoned wretch is dying on his doorstep. The saints enjoy the ecstasy, and the groans of the tormented are music to them. I say here to-night that you cannot commit a sin against an infinite being. I can sin against my brother or my neighbor, because I can injure them. There can be no sin where there is no injury. Neither can a finite being commit an infinite sin.

An old saint believed that hell was in the interior of the earth, and that the rotation of the earth was caused by the souls trying to get away from the fire. The old church at Stratford-on-Avon, Shakspere's home, is adorned with pictures of hell and the like. One of the pictures represents resurrection morning. People are getting out of their graves, and devils are catching hold of their heels. In one place there is a huge brass monster, and devils are driving scores of lost souls into his mouth. Over hot fires hang caldrons with fifty or sixty people in each, and devils are poking the fires. People are hung up on hooks by their tongues, and devils are lashing them. Up in the right-hand corner are some of the saved, with grins on their faces stretching from ear to ear. They seem to say, "Aha, what did I tell you?"

Some of the old saints—gentlemen who died in the odor of sanctity, and are now in the harp business—insisted that heaven and hell would be plainly in view of each other. Only a few years ago Rev. J. Furness (an appropriate name), published a little pamphlet called "A Sight in Hell." I remember when I first read that. My little child, seven years old, was ill and in bed. I thought she would not hear me, and I read some of it aloud. She arose and asked, "Who says that?" I answered, "That's what they preach in some of the churches." "I never will enter a church as long as I live," she said, and she never has. The doctrine of orthodox Christianity is that the damned shall suffer torment forever and forever. And if you were a wanderer, footsore, weary, with parched tongue, dying for a drop of water, and you met one who divided his poor portion with you, and died as he saw you reviving—if he was an unbeliever and you a believer, and you died and went to heaven, and he called to you from hell for a draught of water, it would be your duty to laugh at him.

Rev. Mr. Spurgeon says, that everywhere in hell will be written the words "for ever." They will be branded on every wave of flame, they will be forged in every link of every chain, they will be seen in every lurid flash of brimstone—everywhere will be those words "for ever." Everybody will be yelling and screaming them. Just think of that picture of the mercy and justice of the eternal Father of us all. If these words are necessary why are they not written now everywhere in the world, on every tree, and every field, and on every blade of grass? I say I am entitled to have it so. I say that it is God's duty to furnish me with the evidence. Here is another good book read in every Sunday-school—a splendid book—Pollock's "Course of Time." Every copy in the world of such books as that ought to be burned. Well, the author pretends to have gone to hell, and I think that he ought to have stopped there.

The lecturer read the passages from the work descriptive of the torments of the damned, and proceeded: And that book is put into the hands of children in order that they may love and worship the most merciful God. In old times they had to find a place for hell and they found a hundred places for it. One says that it was under Lake Avernus, but the Christians thought differently. One divine tells us that it must be below the earth because Christ descended into hell. Another gives it as his opinion that hell is in the sun, and he tells us that nobody, without an express revelation from God, can prove that it is not there. Most likely. Well, he had the idea at all events of utilizing the damned as fuel to warm the earth. But I will quote from another poet—if it is lawful to call him a poet. I mean Tupper.

Col. Ingersoll quoted from that orthodox author, and continued: Another divine preached a sermon no further back than 1876, in which he said that the damned will grow worse, and the same divine says that the devil was the first Universalist. Then I am on the side of the devil.

The fact is, that you have got not merely to believe the Bible, but you must also believe in a certain interpretation of it, and, mind you, you must also believe in the doctrine of the Trinity. I want to explain what that is, so that you may never have an excuse for not knowing it.

I quote, he said, from the best theologian that ever wrote, and then he went on to give in substance the Athanasian definition of the Trinity, winding up with a long string of adjectives, culminating in the description "entirely incomprehensible." If, he continued, you don't understand it after that, it is your own fault. Now, you must believe in that doctrine. If you do not, all the orthodox churches agree in condemning you to everlasting flames. We have got to burn through all our lives simply with the view of making them happy. We are taught to love our enemies, to pray for those that persecute us, to forgive. Should not the merciful God practice what he preaches? I say that reverently. Why should he say "Forgive your enemies" if he will not himself forgive? Why should he say "Pray for those that despise and persecute you, but if they refuse to believe my doctrine I will burn them forever?" I cannot believe it. Here is a little child, residing in the purlieus of the city—some little boy who is taught that it is his duty to steal by his mother, who applauds his success and pats him on the head and calls him a good boy—would it be just to condemn him to an eternity of torture? Suppose there is a God; let us bring to this question some common sense.

I care nothing about the doctrines or religions or creeds of the past. Let us come to the bar of the nineteenth century and judge the matter by what we know, by what we think, by what we love. But they say to us, "If you throw away the Bible what are we to depend on then?" But no two persons in the world are agreed as to what the Bible is, what they are to believe, or what they are not to believe. It is like a guide-post that has been thrown down in some time of disaster, and has been put up the wrong way. Nobody can accept its guidance, for nobody knows where it would direct him. I say, "Tear down the useless guide-post," but they answer, "Oh, do not do that or we will have nothing to go by." I would say, "Old Church, you take that road and I will take this." Another minister has said that the Bible is the great town clock at which we all may set our watches. But I have said to a friend of that minister: "Suppose we should all set our watches by that town clock, there would be many persons to tell you that in old times the long hand was the hour hand, and besides, the clock hasn't been wound up for a long time." I say let us wait till the sun rises and set our watches by nature. For my part, I am willing to give up heaven to get rid of hell. I had rather there should be no heaven than that any solitary soul should be condemned to suffer forever and ever. But they tell me that the Bible is the good book. Now, in the Old Testament there is not, in my judgmeut, a single reference to another life. Is there a burial service mentioned in it in which a word of hope is spoken at the grave of the dead? The idea of eternal life was not born of any book. That wave of hope and joy ebbs and flows, and will continue to ebb and flow as long as love kisses the lips of death.

Let me tell you a tale of the Persian religion—of a man who, having done good for long years of his life, presented himself at the gates of Paradise, but the gates remained closed against him. He went back and followed up his good works for seven years longer, and the gates of Paradise still remaining shut against him, he toiled in works of charity until at last they were opened unto him. Think of that, pursued the lecturer, and send out your missionaries among those people. There is no religion but goodness, but justice, but charity. Religion is not theory; it is life. It is not intellectual conviction; it is divine humanity, and nothing else. Col. Ingersoll here told another tale from the Hindoo, of a man who refused to enter Paradise without a faithful dog, urging that ingratitude was the blackest of all sins. "And the god," he said, "admitted him, dog and all." Compare that religion with the orthodox tenets of the city of New York.

There is a prayer which every Brahmin prays, in which he declares that he will never enter into a final state of bliss alone, but that everywhere he will strive for universal redemption; that never will he leave the world of sin and sorrow, but remain suffering and striving and sorrowing after universal salvation. Compare that with the orthodox idea, and send out your missionaries to the benighted Hindoos.

The doctrine of hell is infamous beyond all power to express. I wish there were words mean enough, base enough, contemptible enough to express my feelings of loathing on this subject. What harm has it not done? What waste places has it not made? It has planted misery and wretchedness in this world; it peoples the future with selfish joys and lurid abysses of eternal flame. But we are getting more sense every day. We begin to despise those monstrous doctrines. If you want to better men and women, change their conditions here. Don't promise them something somewhere else. One biscuit will do more good than all the tracts that were ever peddled in the world. Give them more whitewash, more light, more air. You have to change men physically before you change them intellectually. I believe the time will come when every criminal will be treated as we now treat the diseased and sick, when every penitentiary will become a reformatory; and that if criminals go to them with hatred in their bosoms, they will leave them without feelings of revenge. Let me tell you the story of Orpheus and Eurydice. Eurydice had been carried away by the god of hell, and Orpheus, her lover, went in quest of her. He took with him his lyre, and played such exquisite music that all hell was amazed. Ixion forgot his labors at the wheel, the daughters of Danaus ceased from their hopeless task, Tantalus forgot his thirst, even Pluto smiled, and for the first time in the history of hell the eyes of the Furies were wet with tears. As it was with the lyre of Orpheus, so it is to-day with the great harmonies of Science which are rescuing from the prisons of superstition the torn and bleeding heart of man.

Answers to Inquirers.

L.—What is the address of Col. Robt. G. Ingersoll? Ans.—1417 G street, Washington, D. C.

N. S. W.—Please give me the addresses of Rev. O. B. Frothingham and Geo. Francis Train. Ans.—The first is 50 West Thirtieth street, this city; the second, Phœnix House, corner Broadway and Twelfth street.

W. S. B.—What is a good paste for attaching labels to mineral specimens? Ans.—It is doubtful if there is anything better than flour paste, made by stirring flour in water to a batter and then cooking, stirring constantly to avoid burning.

D.—What is the best cure for opium eating? Ans.—Nux vomica, or its salt, strychnine, if given in careful and judicious doses, has been beneficial. The most successful cure, perhaps, is the drug itself, or in changed form, lessening the dose from day to day until reduced to nothing. A good strength of will is required. Other stimulants and narcotics are also substituted.

Mrs. A. L. H.—Who obtained the premiums offered by Mrs. Elizabeth Thompson for the best essay on the Labor Question? Ans.—The first premium was not awarded to any one, as it was decided that none of the articles merited the prize. The second premium was awarded to R. G. Eccles, and the first premium was divided into four parts and given to Miss C. A. Blodgett, a minister in Long Island City, and two others not now remembered.

W. F. P.—Who was the founder of Sunday-schools? Ans.—Robert Raikes, of Gloucester, England, is universally reputed to be "the father of the Sunday-school." He was born in 1735 and died in 1811, having during his highly useful life employed his large acquired fortune in all kinds of educational charity, among which was the establishment of a number of Sunday-schools, in which, to commence with, he required only "clean hands, clean faces, and combed hair."

T. S.—Where is the passage to be found, "He that believeth not shall be damned, and he that doubteth is damned already"? Ans.—There is no passage that reads like that exactly. Mark xvi, 16, reads, "He that believeth and is baptized, shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." John iii, 18, reads, "He that believeth on him is not condemned; but he that believeth not is condemned already, because he hath not believed in the name of the only-begotten Son of God."

S. M. T.—Did David Hume write any other works besides his histories. If he did, what are their titles, and where can they be found? Ans.—Hume's works, besides his histories, are "A Treatise on Human Nature," 1738; "Moral Essays," 1742; "Enquiry Concerning the Human Understanding;" "Political Discourses," and "Enquiry Concerning the Principles of Morals" (his best work), 1752; "Natural History of Religion," about 1756; and "Dialogues Concerning Natural Religion," which appeared after his death. We think all of his works are in print, and we can fill all orders.

E. R. R.—What was the length of a day at the time of Adam and Eve? Could the assertion that a day with the Lord is a thousand years be any more truthfully applied to that period than now? Ans.—If there were such a pair as Adam and Eve, they lived about six thousand years ago. At that time the days and nights were doubtless of precisely the same length as now. The saying that a thousand years are as a day is a loose and extravagant one at any time, and applies as well to one period as another. It is used to show the disregard of time which an imaginary character was supposed to entertain.

Correspondence Extraordinary.

Letters from the Devil.

NO III.

My Dear Readers: It is not my fault that you have had to wait so long for my third letter. I was willing to write you, and would have done so, but there was such a pressure upon the columns of your paper that your humble servant, with his usual good nature, stepped aside and gave others a chance who had something more important to say.

It was not much of a disappointment to me, and I presume it was not to you. I have had a good deal of other business to attend to and you have had plenty to read, so there is no harm done to anybody.

Let me tell you now how my Brother and myself amused ourselves in getting up worlds and suns and the space to put them in. After we had been in existence an indefinite period of time—say, something like a million years or two—and we had got strong and began to feel a little ambitious, we commenced to lay our plans for the future, and to devise projects to be carried out at our leisure.

We felt the creative power growing within us; we felt that we could not fulfill our destiny unless we put it into active operation. We began to look around for means and objects by which to work off the surplus of physical and mental strength that seemed to swell within us. Up to this time you must know that there were no worlds, no suns, and no earths in existence, nor even a place to put them.

It is hard to tell which is the most wonderful species of mechanism, the multitudinous worlds that exist, or the space which contains them; for, by the metaphysical theory which we have under consideration, there had to be a beginning to them and to time, and it was only the powers of good and evil that were capable of producing them.

I fear I will not be able to explain to your comprehension how we created time and space, which necessarily must precede the existence of substance or matter. Can you imagine my Brother and myself, one fine morning in the early part of time, which we had but just set in operation by setting the great clock of eternity at ticking off the moments which make up the ages that have since followed—for you must know that time had to have a beginning as much as space and the Universe that fills it—when we started out to create immensity? Before you can realize the magnitude of the task we had undertaken in forming time and space, you must try to imagine how it was when there was no space as well as no time.

Lest I get your minds in a muddle upon this vast theme, I must dwell briefly upon it, and merely say that we went forth and opened space out before us, and spread it on, on, forever, never, never stopping. You must readily understand that we had to manufacture it very rapidly or, as it extends forever, we never could have completed it. I will not undertake to explain to you minutely how it was done, but seeing the necessity of having a place to put something in before we undertook to get that something up, we just went forth, and as it were by a breath, or mere force of will, we made all the space that has since existed, and we just willed it to be interminable. Realizing how awkward it would be to have bounds and limits to space and to the Universe, and to have the whole affair shut in by a wall or boundary line beyond which there should be no more space and no more Universe, we at once decided that space should be infinite, and that the Universe which should occupy it should also be infinite.

Infinite is a very big word, and in its meaning takes in a vast amount, but when we talk about space and the Universe, it must be employed, for they and they only are absolutely infinite. I presume I shall not be successful in making you understand how it was we originated so much space or prepared such a vast amount of room for the countless worlds and systems to occupy and in which to course and revolve unceasingly, but you may well conclude it was a very difficult feat to perform, and required the most active exertions of both my Brother and myself. We accomplished it in a certain way, by will power. We just willed that space should be and then it had to be, and after we had succeeded in preparing space in every direction from the starting-place, for a few thousand quintillions of miles, we had become so familiar with the process that we found it not beyond our ability to extend it interminably. I know the idea is vast, and so is truth vast.

How long it took us to prepare all existing space, I can hardly tell you. There is so much of it, it necessarily took a somewhat protracted time to accomplish the task. Even to return to the starting point from the farthest removes in space in a single direction, though we traveled with the velocity of light or electricity, would require very many millions of years. In view of this you cannot wonder that just to prepare the place to put the Universe in must necessarily have occupied us millions of your years. You must remember, however, that we were very smart, and at that time we were full of vigor, energy, and enterprise. When we willed to do anything we went at it with all our might, and the force of our will was tremendous. Nothing was too great for us to accomplish; so in a reasonably short time all the space was brought into existence that exists to-day.

There is one good thing we accomplished in that long ago time. What we did was for permanence. The space or expanse we made then has never shrunk up, contracted, or ceased to exist. It is still there and ever will be, a lasting memorial to the ability of those who devised it and established it. In the familiar language in use among you, "it is the biggest thing out," and in grandness is surpassed only by one entity, and that is the Universe which occupies it.

Now, about the making of the Universe. Can I ever convey to your minds an idea of the magnitude of the job and the interminable nature of the difficulties that constantly arose? When we essayed to create a Universe, we found the greatest difficulty imaginable to perform the task without anything to make it of, for you must know there was no raw material of any kind, either in a solid, fluid, or gaseous form with which to commence operations. Had we been favored with a vast quantity of raw material with which to have created a Universe, the work would have been far less difficult. But as our operations commenced before anything had an existence, you will perceive at once that we had to create all our material.

To give you a faint idea of the magnitude of our enterprise let me suggest that you undertake to make a little something out of nothing. You cannot succeed with the help of all the scientists and wise men in the world in making one atom of matter from nothing. The feat has never been accomplished. Your friend Ingersoll was quite correct when he said that "nothing, in the light of a raw material, is a decided failure." Nobody has ever succeeded in converting nothing into something, or something into nothing. They are utterly uninterconvertible. Still, as it is a part of the metaphysical belief that all things had a beginning in some remote point of time, we must pursue the subject of creation in that line.

You may well conclude that after we had discovered the art of making something from nothing questions arose as to how many kinds of simple substances we should bring into existence and how many combinations we should make possible between these various primary substances. I will not weary you with a detail of the innumerable trials and experiments we found it necessary to make before we succeeded in converting nothing into something, and then in getting up the simple or primary elements of which the matter of the Universe is composed.

The chemical affinities existing between the various forms of matter, causing them to unite in different proportions, forming entirely different compounds or results, was a nice thing to arrange, and required vastly more planning and experiment than you can possibly comprehend. This difficulty, however, had to be overcome very early in the business of creation, and it was one of the greatest magnitude. Unless the attraction of one form of matter for another form could be established, we very early saw that our undertaking would prove a very imperfect affair.

This led us to understand the necessity of having subtle but vital forces to permeate all forms of matter and to make them absolutely inseparable in all time. Some of these forces, as light, heat, electricity, magnetism, attraction, cohesion, chemical affinity, etc., you understand something about, but of the forces of still higher subtlety you know but little up to this time. You can understand, however, that in establishing endless life and motion in all we intended to bring into existence, these subtle forces had to be early provided for. This vast study occupied our minds for a long time. Many experiments had to be tried and abandoned before we struck upon what gave us full satisfaction.

Just how we made matter out of nothing, and infused it with never-ending motion and life, would require some time to explain to your full comprehension, and probably it is not best that I should undertake it in this letter. These are too vast subjects, too grand and extensive, perhaps, for you and I to enter into now, and I fear I shall never succeed in explaining it to your full satisfaction. Suffice it to say I was there as much as my Brother was, and did my full share in devising, planning, and performing. Many and many a time he got greatly perplexed in his trials and experiments, and many a time did my suggestions and advice render him essential aid. I assure you the undertaking was quite enough for both of us, and probably neither, unaided by the other, could have accomplished these great feats of making something out of nothing.

I will not, in this letter, undertake to tell you how we accomplished the task of making matter, originating force, and perfecting the Universe. I mean to be careful and not make my letters too long. The subject isvery extensive, and I will not weary you in considering it. We can revert to it again.

In the meantime, wishing you great happiness and peace of mind, I am sincerely your friend,

Lucifer,
Vulgarly called "Splitfoot."

Discussion.

The Bennett-Teed Discussion.

I.—Jesus Christ is not only Divine, but is the Lord God, Creator of Heaven and Earth.

MR. BENNETT'S SEVENTH REPLY.

Mr. Cyrus Romulus R. Teed, Dear Sir: Your last letter was lengthy, but I cannot see that it advanced your object at all. You undertook to prove to me and our readers that Jesus is Lord God, and Creator of Heaven and Earth. I insist that you have not, in the more than three months that we have been discussing this question, advanced the first proof in favor of your proposition, and I am fully convinced that you have none to offer. The only way you can make a semblance of showing it is by a species of chimerical, visionary vaporings and speculations, that have no foundation in fact and are peculiar to yourself.

As you have already admitted that matter or substance was never created, but has had an eternal existence, your proposition falls to the ground. If the Universe, as you admit, was never created, Jesus, of course, did not create it, and you might as well drop the proposition as untenable and unprovable. I claim, then, that you have lost your case. Until you can demonstrate how one grain of matter can be created from nothing, you must relinquish the claim that Jesus created the Universe. If the grain of matter and the Universe have ever existed, then of course there was no Creation and no Creator.

You accuse me of persisting in misrepresenting you, and hope it is unintentional. If I have done so, it was not intentional. I have not had the slightest wish to misrepresent you. If I do not understand you, it argues that your positions are mystical or beyond ordinary comprehension, or that I am dull and obtuse. I have tried my best to understand you, but if I am incapable of the task, I am, perhaps, not altogether to blame.

You have distinctly said that mind is substance, and that it has existed perpetually. If that is true, it certainly exists independent of an organized form. An organized form is made up of organs which had a growth, an origin. How, then, I am guilty either of inconsistency or of misrepresentation, in asking you to prove the existence of mind independent of organized form, I fail to see. That is the very thing I have been wanting you to do all along. If mind is a substance, and of eternal existence, I ask you to prove it in full, and produce some of it. If you cannot do this, I am under no obligation to believe that it has an existence. If this eternal, unorganized mind you tell me of is a real substance and exists everywhere, you ought at least to obtain a small quantity and exhibit it. But if you cannot procure as much as an ounce or two, it is your privilege to believe in its existence, nevertheless, but you have no right to demand that I shall also believe it when you have not tendered me the slightest proof of it. I very readily admit that mind, as a result of organization, exists, but not otherwise.

How you can prove that Jesus was any more the Creator of the Universe, or any more God than the very numerous other similar characters that men have acknowledged as leaders, teachers, messiahs, and founders of systems of religion in the times that are past, is what I have been anxious to see. The history of the religions of the world is full of the accounts of such teachers and messiahs, many of whom had an existence far more susceptible of proof than had Jesus, and who had ability at least equal to his, admitting all that is claimed for him to be true.

Among these great teachers and founders may be mentioned Menu, Christna, Zoroaster, Sakya-Muni (Buddha), Confucius, Lao-tse, Pythagoras, Socrates, Plato, Judas Maccabeus, Judas the Galilean, Barchocab, Apollonius of Tyan, before Jesus, and since, Mohammed, Paracelsus, Swedenborg, Joanna Southcote, Ann Lee, Rammohun Roy, Joseph Smith, the Taeping leader in China, and Ali Mohammed, founder of Babism in Persia, within the present generation. There are, of course, hundreds of others more or less deserving of mention, but these especially were looked up to as great teachers, and some of them venerated almost as demi-gods or messiahs, and some of them are said to have performed miracles as wonderful as those ascribed to Jesus. They were nearly all regarded as personages far above and more divine than the ordinary mass of mankind, and the following of some of them has been far greater than that of Jesus.

The moral teachings ascribed to Jesus are held by believers in him to be superior to anything the world has known, but this claim will not hold good under a critical examination. His morals were far from perfect, while the teachings of several of those named were at least equal to his. Among the inculcations credited to him there was little that the world had not had before, and little worthy of the Supreme Creator of all things.

There is no proof that such a person as Jesus ever had an existence, save what is found in the narratives ascribed to four unknown persons, who died, if they ever existed, a century before their narratives were known to be in existence. I defy you to show that either of what are called the four Gospels were known to anybody before the second century. How easy it was for those stories to have been written by Christian fathers or bishops, and ascribed to some persons who either had no existence or had long been dead, I scarcely need to state. This much is known, that in the early centuries of the Christian era, great disputes arose between the contending

Christian sects as to whether Jesus had a corporeal existence; the Gnostics, at one time a numerous sect, insisted that he did not have a body or an existence in the flesh; but they were finally suppressed by superior force, and it became an established dogma that Jesus, the son of God, had had a bodily existence here among men. The proof upon which the belief is founded is extremely weak to say the least. If, however, Jesus was a man, he does not seem to have possessed remarkable ability. Many men who lived before him and since displayed far greater talent and capacity than did the Judean reformer. Admitting that he had amiable traits of character and a kind, genial disposition, he did not display any marked power in life or bravery in the hour of death. In these respects he has been thrown far into the shade by many persons.

His moral teachings, when examined without the over-veneration which his followers very naturally feel for them, do not present evidences of being superhuman or extra wise. His Sermon on the Mount, containing what are called his Beatitudes, in point of high-toned morality, can be successfully criticized. His appeals were made to the selfish propensities of his hearers. Not taking into consideration the wide discrepancies that exist between the versions of Matthew and Luke as regards what he did say in that sermon, by a little scrutiny we will perceive that what he said, especially that which was original, was not, after all, as high and as pure and as grand as some of the utterances of other men.

His incentive to virtue was not the love of virtue itself in the present time, but the reward or pay that would be accorded at some point in the future. Those that were persecuted for his sake were not consoled by the satisfaction which kindness and fealty to a friend in need inevitably produce, but they were pointed to future rewards in heaven. The idea of pay in the future for deeds performed in the present is not an incentive so high as the inculcation of good deeds from a real, innate love of goodness itself. Crowns of pearls or streets of gold fall far short of an inherent love of virtue. Danger of the judgment, of the council, and hell-fire were appeals to the selfish fears of his hearers—mere secondary motives. The lines of Juvenal indicate a higher motive:

> "Bad men hate sin through fear of punishment;
> Good men hate sin through very love of virtue."

"Compromise with thy legal opponent quickly, lest he persecute thee and get thee cast into prison," is not above human wisdom, and not of the highest quality at that. It certainly would not require a God to give such counsel.

The advice to cut off a limb or pluck out an eye did not show superior wisdom. It would be far better to cure them and let them remain. The threat of hell-fire was most unbecoming for a God of love.

In his prohibition of swearing, he neither defines the crime nor gives an explanatory reason for the prohibition. An ordinary man could have done that much.

The command to "be perfect even as God is perfect," as has been well said, "shoots as much too high as other precepts too low. It not only commands a simple impossibility, but it propounds nothing tangible or intelligible." A requirement that is impossible is simply pernicious.

The command to do alms in secret that God might reward openly appeals again to the same selfish or mercenary principle in man before alluded to. The precept "Judge not, lest ye be judged," is of the same narrow character.

The command to forgive trespasses in order to secure forgiveness in return is of the same description. It is not an appeal to man's higher nature to forgive because it is grand and noble to forgive.

It is untrue to say that a lustful look is equivalent to the act of adultery. There is no comparison in the amount of wrong committed by the two. Out of a score of men who might indulge the eye by looking upon a neighbor, perhaps but one would yield to the performance of immoral conduct in the same direction. Because a man takes pleasure in beholding a pretty woman it does not follow that he would commit a crime with her.

The advice in case we are smote on one cheek to turn the other also to be smitten is simply absurd; and the giving the cloak to the thief who has stolen our coat is equally ridiculous, and advocates the giving of a premium for the commission of crime.

The instruction to make no provision for the future if followed strictly would destroy all enterprise in the world, and reduce mankind to mendicancy, ignorance, and barbarism. "The argument," as Prof. Newman observes, "drawn from the lilies and birds is as unwise as it is pretentious. Birds do not sow, or reap, or gather into barns. True, and therefore they perish in a hard winter. Civilized man lays up stores of food, and thereby generally escapes the worst horrors of famine." It is only savages and barbarians that live by hunting and fishing and such food as they can pick up from day to day. It is well known that the nations and families that do not make any provision for the future are left to suffer and starve. How delusive, then, the argument that they would be provided for by the powers above the same if they did not toil as if they did. How much less sensible, then, are the teachings of Jesus than those of many of the old sages and leaders of thought who preceded him!

His conduct, also, was not on all occasions what we might expect from a being all-wise and all-good, who had skill and wisdom enough to create worlds, suns, and constellations. A case in point is where he visited a fig tree at the season of the year when fig trees were not in bearing, expecting to find figs upon it, and because he was disappointed, to get in a rage and curse the tree and cause its death. A man of the most ordinary mind in our country and time would not expect to find apples growing upon a tree in the winter, nor would he get mad about it and kill the tree because he found it not in bearing. It is wholly unlikely that the Architect of the Universe would act so foolishly.

His conduct in the temple, where he became enraged at the money changers whom he found transacting business, when he whipped them and scourged them and drove them out of the temple in the most abusive manner, was not of a faultless, amiable character, any more than that exhibited in his parable of ten pieces of money, when he said: "But those of mine enemies, which would not that I should rule over them, bring them hither and slay them before me" (Luke xix., 27).

Had he been a perfect being, and one powerful and wise enough to have created the Universe, he would not have taught his disciples that moral merit depended upon a certain line of belief, when he must have known that belief is not under the control of the will, and is governed by the evidence of facts as presented to the mind, and that a man cannot believe in direct opposition to evidence.

He would hardly have pardoned an adulterous women upon the false ground that others had also commited similar offenses. He would hardly have replied to a poor woman, not of the Hebrew nation, who appealed to him to heal her child. "It is not meet to take the children's bread and throw it to the dogs." Had he been Creator of Heaven and Earth, he would not have exhibited such narrow national prejudices. He would not have made the vain and foolish promise to his disciples that if they remained faithful to him they should be enthroned upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel. He would not have denounced whole cities because some of the citizens declined to receive the disciples he sent forth as teachers. He would not have uttered the harsh unmerciful sentiment, "Whosoever shall deny me before men, him will I also deny before my father which is in heaven." He would hardly have proved himself a false prophet by saying, "Verily, I say unto you, this generation shall not pass away before all these things are fulfilled," while scores of generations have since passed away and those things predicted are still unfulfilled.

An all-wise and truthful being would not have made the unreasonable promise to his disciples that they should have the power to speak with new tongues, drink poison, and handle deadly serpents with impunity. He would not, had he been Creator of the Universe, have discarded the laws he had himself established, and based everything upon the supernatural. He would not have told his disciples that whatever they asked believingly, they should receive.

A being of infinite mercy and wisdom would not condemn to endless punishment those who should refuse to assist believers or be unrepentant at his promised coming. He would not have talked of the torments of everlasting fire prepared for the devil and his angels, and made it necessary that nine-tenths of his own creatures should suffer the torments of eternal flames.

Had he been a being of perfect prescience and wisdom, he would not have chosen for one of his followers and personal friends one who should betray him and cause his ignominious death. He would not have taken the course that necessarily led to his own personal destruction.

Had he been a being of infinite wisdom and benevolence, he would have condemned human slavery, and all forms of tyranny which tended to the degradation of mankind. He would have pointed out the wrong and injustice of despotic governments among men. He would have taught that all just governments derive their rights to govern from the people themselves. He would have recognized and enjoined the great maxims of political and social freedom which are now far better understood. He would have guaranteed religious freedom and the rights of conscience. He would have advocated the same civil and social rights for woman and for man, and in providing for a change in the Jewish divorce laws he would have given women the same facilities as men. He would have encouraged the mental and moral progress of the human race. He would have advised the study of science, philosophy, and art, the great promoters of progress and civilization. He would have given the world new truths, new inventions, and new discoveries. He would have furnished new light, new understanding to the race of man.

But Jesus did none of these things. He merely reiterated the maxims and sentiments that many times had been uttered by other teachers, and based all his theories and belief upon the supernatural and the unreasonable. He gave the world little or nothing that was new, and little or nothing that was true. We see error and ignorance bristling out in all his teachings. He gave the world no knowledge it did not before possess.

You assert that Jesus had a thorough knowledge of all things, physical, spiritual, and substantial, that he was familiar with the laws of involution, evolution, etc., etc., all of which I deny. You give no proofs of his superior learning or knowledge. There is no evidence that he ever went to school, or that he possessed aught of scholarship. There is no proof that he ever wrote a word on parchment or paper, or that he taught or understood anything of what are denominated sciences. It does not appear that he knew anything of astronomy, geology, chemistry, mathematics, mechanics, biology, philology, psychology, or any of the kindred branches of knowledge. How absurd, then, to talk about such a mediocre man—who at maturity had not as much information as is now possessed by a school-boy ten years of age—being the Lord God and Creator of heaven and earth! A person of the limited information that he possessed could not have originated, could not possibly have been the founder of the sciences.

You are, perhaps, quite correct in saying, "If modern science (so-called) is true, then the religion of Jesus Christ is false." I shall not contend with you upon that declaration, for it is too self-evident. There is no harmony or similarity between them. It is wholly improbable that he knew the earth was round, that it revolved upon its axis, or that it coursed every year around the sun. A pretty creator of the sun, moon, and stars, indeed! It seems to me extremely idle for you to spend more time in the endeavor to prove anything of the kind. It would be quite as pertinent for you to claim that you yourself were the creator of the Universe, for, with all your vagaries, you are a person possessed of double the intelligence of Jesus Christ. For the present I am content that you should claim Jesus, and I will adhere to science.

It is amusing to hear you denounce science, and then to use half your letter in a scientific dissertation on the density of gases and ethers, the laws of reflection, refraction, etc. Have a care that you do not show yourself to be inconsistent If science is anti-Jesus, and hence anti-God, it also ought to be anti-Teed, and you ought not to touch it with a ten-foot pole. If it is opposed to Jesus, the creator of all things, it must be of the devil, and if that is so, you want nothing of it.

It is also amusing to hear you say in the same breath, "Opposition to the claims and teachings of Jesus has its origin in modern science. If there were no great system of science there would be no great opposition to the religion of Jesus," and immediately afterward, "The system presented to the world by Jesus the Christ, had its origin in the highest department of knowledge—in an all-comprehensive understanding of the human structure with its accompanying functions and their relations to the physical creation." If I can understand your language, you make Jesus both opposed to science and in harmony with it. What is science but knowledge, classified and approved? If Jesus had his origin in the highest department of knowledge, and he understood all about the human structure and physical creation, he must have been a scientist of the first water. I fear, Bro. Teed, you have the faculty of blowing both hot and cold with the same breath. If you despise science why do you talk it so much?

I see you do not like to relinquish your theory about a vast supply of hydrogen above the atmosphere. There is doubtless some gaseous form of matter there, but that it is pure hydrogen seems still to be as improbable as to suppose that oxygen and nitrogen are to be found in vast strata below it. None of these gases are found anywhere in a pure state. Combination is the order of the Universe. You hardly made a happy hit when by your imaginary stratum of hydrogen above the atmosphere you undertook to account for Noah's flood. Because hydrogen is from a root-word that means water-producing, it does not follow that hydrogen can be converted into water without oxygen, which is indispensible in the formation of water. If the hydrogen is there, its lightness would prevent its falling in floods and deluging the earth, and where the necessary amount of oxygen comes from you do not explain. You will have to try again to make the old flood story at all probable.

I despair of getting any positive proofs from you that Jesus has performed all the wonders you claim for him. I do not think your incomprehensible talk about the "foci of electrical force converged by the operations of atmospheres through the refraction and reflection of the force focalizing it" and all that, has anything to do with it; you will have to give me more solid and substantial arguments before I can yield. The foci you speak of are a trifle higher than I can reach.

Neither can I see what the laws of refraction—the density or rarity of the ether in interstellar space—has to do with the question whether Jesus created the Universe or not. Suppose I yield to you that that ether is fifty per cent. more dense or fifty per cent. more rare than I formerly supposed it to be, what would that have to do with Jesus? Come, Brother Teed, give us something more palpable than your thin ether, or let us drop the subject. Our readers wish something heartier than mere moonshine.

Sincerely yours, D. M. Bennett.

What Do They Know About It?

The discussions that are going on at the present concerning hell remind one of the pros and cons urged at a debating club by a set of schoolboys. After all, gentlemen, what do you know about the question and what have you proved? All that you have done is to show that you know nothing at all about it. We defy any one to prove either that there is a hell or that there is not one. The general tendency of such works as Spencer's "Social Statics" and Lecky's "History of Rationalism" is to show that the world is slowly growing better. These works and others like them do not actually demonstrate beyond question that such is the fact, but they certainly show that this is the tendency. Now, if it be likely that the world constantly tends to improve, it would seem to be true that there is a bettering force in nature that habitually exerts itself. Extending the field of vision it would seem to be likely that this bettering force exists in the spirit world—on the assumption that there is a spirit world—and that consequently everlasting progress is the law controlling all beings who inhabit it.

We know of only one line of reasoning which can prove to the satisfaction of anybody that such a thing as a world of eternal suffering exists. This line consists in the assumption that the Bible is the direct declaration of God to man, and that being such it is worthy of unquestioning belief. In this case you will have to make the two assumptions mentioned, or you have to take them on faith. Adopting the latter course—infinitely easy to people of an unquestioning and unanalytic turn of mind—it would seem undeniable not only that such a world exists, but that the majority of all creatures born are going to it.

In connection with this subject one thought presents itself which is not complimentary to humanity. If the existence of an eternal hell be true then the conduct of people who believe in it, and who profess to lead a religious life, is a monstrous outrage upon those tender and sympathetic principles which occupy the breasts of gentle and cultured people.—Telegram.

The Truth Seeker.

D. M. BENNETT, Editor.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

The largest and cheapest Radical Journal published in Europe or America, containing nearly seven hundred square inches more of Reading Matter than any other Journal of its class.

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, FEB. 16, 1878.

The Champions of the Church.

This volume was commenced several months ago, but the necessity of other works, etc., being taken in hand, requiring pretty constant attention, this large book was for the time being laid aside. The calls for it, however, have been pretty constant, and now we feel that the work must be completed at the earliest possible date. It is to be regretted that it could not have been completed and given to the public before the present time, but it is now hoped its appearance will not be deferred beyond some date in the coming spring.

It will be a work of one thousand pages, octavo, and will be a very appropriate accompaniment and counterpart to the "World's Sages, Thinkers and Reformers." It will contain biographical sketches of the designing, tyrannous, cruel, and blood-thirsty characters who have been the champions, leaders, and propagandists of the Christian Church, and will portray in clear and vivid colors the means by which the Christian religion spread from a small beginning until it became a political power, the means it employed to secure control, its bloody wars, its cruel and deadly persecutions upon the battle field, in civil courts, at the stake, and in inquisitorial chambers and dungeons.

It will give a full history of the bloody wars of the Crusades, the persecutions and extermination of the Vaudois, the Albigenses, the Waldenses, the Moors and Jews of Spain, the Huguenots of France, the Protestants in the Netherlands, the Independents, Quakers, and Dissenters of England, the Quakers and witches in New England, etc. It will give a graphic history of Jesuitism for the last three centuries, of the granting and selling of indulgences to commit all kinds of crimes and immoralities.

Among the characters treated will be Jesus, Peter, Paul, Polycarp, Eusebius, Constantine, Clovis, Pepin, Charlemagne, Irene, Pope Joan, John XII, John XII, Alexander I, Alexander III, Innocent III, Boniface VIII, Benedict XII, John XXII, Alexander VI, and some fifty others of the cruel, lascivious popes; Godfrey of Bouillon, Guy Lusignan, Simon Montfort, St. Dominic, Peter the Cruel, Sigismund, Louis XI of France, Loyola, Ojeda, Torquemada, Luther, Calvin, Munzer, Ferdinand and Isabella, Cortez, Pizarro, Henry VIII of England, Bloody Mary, Alva, Cranmer, Elizabeth, Charles IX of France, Catherine de Medici, Philip II of Spain, Guy Fawkes, Oliver Cromwell, Jeffrey, Charles II, Louis XIV of France, John Graham (Claverhouse) James II, Parris, Cotton Mather, Ephriam R. Avery, Bishop Onderdonk, L. D. Huston, Anthony Comstock, his first lieutenant Joseph Britton, and numerous others of the pious fraternity, including wily, designing, libidinous, lecherous fathers, bishops, priests and pastors for many centuries.

This volume will contain a greater amount of damaging truths against the Church than is contained in any other volume in existence, giving, as it will, a panoramic view, with the aid of biography, of the crimes and corruptions of the most tyrannous system of religion the world has ever known. An important feature of the work is that its facts are principally drawn from Christian authorities, so that it can hardly be disputed on the score of authenticity.

We have purchased new type for this volume, and it will be a better executed work than any heretofore issued from our establishment, and we doubt not it will give full satisfaction to every person who orders a copy.

As our time is rapidly passing by, and as there is much other work which we have allotted to ourselves to perform, we feel the necessity of pushing this to completion without unnecessary delay.

We shall occasionally, as the work progresses, give a specimen of the contents, that our readers may judge of the quality of the volume when finished. Subjoined we give a short article on Saint Cyril.

We would remark here that we need to sell a large number of copies of THE CHAMPIONS, and wish every person who wants a copy to let us know soon. Already a goodly number are ordered, but we wish to receive orders for a large number more. It will cost $2,500 to bring out the work, and it necessarily requires that many take a copy to enable us to publish it and not sustain a loss.

We repeat, let every friend who feels able and willing to take a copy of THE CHAMPIONS order it now, that we may know how large an edition to publish. Those who order and are willing to advance the money will confer a special favor upon us, and for the use of the same we will mail them a copy of "The Priest in Absolution," or the same value in TRUTH SEEKER tracts.

Despite the false representations that have been made about our "enormous wealth," we are, in fact, poor, and have but little money. We have been obliged to use the funds we have received very freely, and our weekly expenses are heavy. Unless the inflowing stream is pretty constantly kept up, our little reservoir is bound to be exhausted. Our friends will please bear in mind that we have no stockholders at our back to advance funds, and no rich friends to call upon in time of need. We depend solely upon the small remittances which come in to us from all parts of the country, and if these fail, our power to go on is broken. Will not those who have not renewed for THE TRUTH SEEKER be kind enough to do so? If you cannot send all, send a part. Every little helps. If you can send in a new subscriber it is a direct benefit to us. If you want books of our own publishing, or of others, be kind enough to send to us for them. It will be of some benefit to us. We wish to do all we can to further the cause of truth while life and health are spared us, and every dollar that comes to us we use in the work we have in hand.

THE CHAMPIONS will be published low. In cloth, $3.00; in leather and red edges, $4.00; in morocco and gilt edges, $4.50. Postage included. We will give place to the extract referred to.

ST. CYRIL.

A millennium and a half ago, Alexandria was the intellectual and commercial centre of civilization. In the mulitudinous life that poured through its two great, wide streets commingled representatives from all the nationalities of earth. At that time it vied with Constantinople itself. Its lofty temples and theatres, gymnasiums, and synagogues, and its marvelous porticoes and palaces, rose in unrivaled magnificence on every side, and were the pride and glory of the East. Its harbor was a forest of masts. Countless boats brought in the abundant harvests of the Nile to feed the many-mouthed multitude, and long trains of camels from the yellow sand hills of the desert wound through the thriving streets of trade. It was the favored seat of science and learning, to which flocked philosophers from all parts of the world. Botanical gardens, zoological menageries, chemical labratories, and anatomical and astronomical schools, afforded all that was needed for scientific pursuits. Its university contained fourteen thousand students, and its two splendid libraries over seven hundred thousand volumes. But Christianity, with its baleful accompaniment of ignorance and superstition, intolerance and bigotry and bloodshed, had here entered upon its cursed career, seeking to suppress all that was lovely and valuable in the antiquity of thought, and to inaugurate a fit prelude to the Dark Ages which followed erelong. Christianity, with its brutal club, here met and shivered the polished steel of Grecian philosophy, and extinguished the last remaining spark of classic art and intellect. In the Serapion was a magnificent library of four hundred thousand volumes, and the astronomical and geometrical instruments which had once been assiduously employed by Euclid, Eratosthenes, and others, but which were now regarded by Christian ignorance and bigotry as devices of the devil. In digging the foundation for a new church to be built upon the site of an ancient temple of Osiris, some symbols of Phallic worship were discovered. These were exhibited for the derision of the rabble in the market place, and a riot ensued. The Pagans made the Serapion their headquarters. Theophilus, formerly a monk of Nitria, a bad, bold man, was at this time Archbishop of Alexandria. He, armed with a rescript from the emperor, ordered the destruction of the building. The library was destroyed, the treasures of the temple were pillaged, the image of Serapis was broken to atoms by battle-axes, the whole structure was razed to the ground, and a Christian church constructed in its precincts. The other temples forthwith shared the same fate; the brutal, black-cowled monks now began to tyrannize over the ancient faith and philosophy, and convulse Alexandria with Christian riot and conflict. Finally Archbishop Theophilus went the way of all flesh, and his nephew, the subject of this sketch, succeeded him

This cruel, fanatical Father of the Church was born in 376. He was called to occupy his uncle's throne in 412. From all that can be learned of him, he appears to have been a testy, turbulent, headstrong prelate, who quarreled with everybody and everything. He had been expressly prepared for his holy office by a residence of five years among the monks of Nitria. There were at this time within the walls of Alexandria not less than forty thousand Jews. St. Cyril signalized his unscrupulous zeal by sacking the synagogues, pillaging the houses of the Jews, and finally, at the head of his old associates, the Nitrian monks, who had swarmed into the town from the desert, succeeded in driving them from the city. Orestes, the Governor, while endeavoring to stop the riot, was assaulted, and wounded in the head by a stone thrown by one of the monks.

The Alexandrine school was celebrated for its mathematicians. It had produced some of the most remarkable men in the history of science. Here Euclid taught, and wrote that immortal work on geometry which still bears his name, and which has extorted admiration from all posterity as the model of correct and perspicuous exposition. Here had the great Archimedes made his mechanical discoveries and inventions, and conveyed his magnificent sense of mastery and trust in the universality of natural law in the well-known saying, "Give me whereon to stand and I will move the world."

Here Eratosthenes demonstrated the rotundity of the earth, Apollonius invented the first clock, Hero the first steam engine, and here flourished Hippocrates, the father of medicine. Here also lived in the time of Cyril, Theon the Younger, the famous mathematician and Platonic philosopher. He wrote commentaries on the Almagest of Ptolemy, and edited the works of Euclid. The beautiful and gifted Hypatia was Theon's daughter. She had become celebrated all through the East by her expositions of the Neo-Platonic and Peripatetic doctrines of philosophy in the academy at Alexandria. The wealth and fashion of the emporium of the oriental world crowded her lecture room, and long trains of chariots daily stood before her door. She was honored for her virtue and grace and talents, and her aristocratic audiences rivaled those of Cyril, the Archbishop. She was considered by Christians as a Pagan sorceress. At last it could be no longer borne that the learned and lovely enchantress should divide the great metropolis with the powerful prelate. In the sweet person of Hypatia seemed typified the witchery and magic of classic Greece, her art, her poetry, her philosophy. Cyril was the personal embodiment of ecclesiastical ambition and intolerance. These two now stood face to face in the city of Alexandria—the former, armed with the bright sword-blade of reason—the latter, with the iron mace of brutal power. The finely-tempered Grecian steel is shivered by one swift, tremendous blow.

And now occurs one of the most tragic scenes that blacken the long, bloody catalogue of Christian crime. One day in 414 Hypatia went forth to her academy. She is met by Cyril's mob—a merciless mob of many monks. These brutal, bare-legged, black-cowled fiends drag her from her chariot and strip her naked in the public street. They drag her into a Christian church, and in that sacred edifice she is killed by the cruel club of Peter the Reader. The murderous monks then outrage the naked corpse, dismember it, scrape the flesh from the bones with oyster shells, and cast the remnants into the fire. A Christian saint has glutted his vengeance. He had removed the great obstacle in his way to uncontrolled power in the city. With his clumsy club of bigotry he had given science a deadly blow, and it must now sink into obscurity. And it did; it finally expired in the intellectual metropolis of the world. It henceforth, through the long, dark Christian ages, lay dead and prostrate at the feet of the Church.

Thus perished in her fresh, fair youth the loveliest and most intellectual lady that ever fell a victim to religious riot and persecution. Her crime was having taught Homer and Plato, and expounded the teachings of Apollonius and Aristotle in the academy of Alexandria. For this a Christian saint incensed the populace against her, and her naked and bleeding body was dragged into a Christian church to be outraged and burnt. Though this crime of Cyril passed unquestioned; though in his privacy he might laugh at the tragic end of his charming antagonist; his memory will have to bear the weight of the righteous execration of mankind through all the after ages.

This saint and Champion of the Church died in 444.

The Coming Contest.

Mr. Samuel Colgate, President of the Society for the Suppression of Vice, on Tuesday evening of last week at the hall of the Y. M. C. A., in allusion to the work performed by their faithful agent, Anthony Comstock, said he had suppressed a large amount of indecent and immoral literature, and said but little remained now to exterminate save Freelove and Freethought publications, which ought to be extinguished, for the same were of immoral tendency and calculated to do injury to the rising generation. He did not see why that class of immoral literature should not be suppressed as well as any other. Here is the key note to the campaign we may look for in the near future. Freeloveism and Freethought are not to be tolerated by our pious Christian friends. The people of free America are not to be allowed to entertain honest convictions in these directions, nor dare to differ from Colgate, Comstock & Co.

Col. Ingersoll said to us, a great struggle was soon to be inaugurated. The fire would be opened all along the line. Every hall in the cities of our country that can be controlled by Christians, will be shut against him and every means be used to stifle free speech and free thought. Our Christian opponents feel that power is slipping from their grasp, and they will make a terrible effort to retain it. We can look for nothing less than violent and continued opposition to the rights guaranteed us by the Constitution of our country The duty incumbent upon the lovers of mental liberty is to maintain their rights, to flinch not in the hour of trial, and to use every reasonable effort to shed abroad the light of truth over the land. Superstition and bigotry may make desperate and determined struggles to regain what they have lost, but right and truth must triumph in the end.

COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL closed his course of lectures in this city on Sunday evening last, at Chickering Hall. Few recent events have created greater excitement in this city than have Ingersoll's lectures. They are in everybody's mouth, and all admit that he has hit old theology some very telling blows. Of course, the clergy and their immediate supporters condemn him and denounce him, but large numbers speak highly of him and praise his masterly efforts. He has set many to thinking and querying whether the old shams of theology are longer worth following and believing. From here he went to Washington, where he also delivers a number of lectures. He makes a long mark wherever he goes.

NEW BOOKS.—Let us again call attention to the interesting character of "The Popes and their Doings," No. 3 of "The Holy Cross Series," recently issued by us Bro. Hudson Tuttle, who receives many books to read and review, writes us that he found it so interesting that he had read it all, something rather unusual for him to do. A lady friend, Mrs. Humphrey, wife of the Rev. G. H. Humphrey, also writes us that she read it with great pleasure, finding it very interesting, and she thanked us warmly for publishing it. Price in paper 50 cents; in cloth 75 cents.

"Auricular Confession and Popish Nunneries" by Wm. Hogan, for twenty-five years a confessing priest, being No. 8 of "The Holy Cross Series," is just out. It is very readable. 220 pages. In paper 50 cents; in cloth 75 cents.

Will be ready in a few days. A revised edition of "Maria Monk and Her Awful Disclosures," or the mysteries of a convent, or monks and their maidens, being No 9 of "The Holy Cross Series." A very interesting book. Paper 50 cents; cloth 75. Postage included.

THE POSITIVE THINKER.—No. 1 of this paper, issued by friends Henderson and Brown in this building, has made its appearance. It is a bright, sprightly-looking sheet, and contains many readable articles. It aims at construction as well as the demolition of old effete systems of faith. We were in error when calling attention to it in intimating that it was in some sense to be an organ of the Church of Humanity. We are informed that such is not the case. It is an independent enterprise of friends Henderson and Brown. If there is a general want of a sheet of this kind, we doubt not the Liberal public will take it by the hand, and accord it a generous support. We certainly wish it nought but success, and recommend our friends to at least send for specimen copies. It is an eight-page monthly, and it is hoped to be made a weekly at $1.50 a year.

THE SPIRITUAL SCIENTIST, which has been resting for several months, has reappeared in the form of a monthly magazine of thirty-two pages. It is full of good, readable articles of a solid, scientific character. Its aim is to present such facts relative to Spiritualism as are demonstrated, leaving alone the mythical and unreliable. We have, this week, been favored with a call from its enterprising editor, Mr. E. Gerry Brown, and found him an agreeable, interesting gentleman. He is fully devoted to the enterprise he has in hand, and is resolved that his periodical shall be worth the price he asks for it, 15 cents per copy, or $1.50 per year. Address Spiritual Scientist, Boston, Mass.

A TOBACCO ANTIDOTE, manufactured and sold by J. A. Heinsohn & Co., of Cleveland, O., is advertised by the proprietors in another column. The firm, we believe, is responsible, and the remedy is highly spoken of by those familiar with its effects.

MOSES HULL speaks in Harry Hill's Theatre, 26 East Houston street, on Sunday night, February 17. Subject: "God's Revelation—What It Is, and What It Is Not."

CORRECTION.—A paragraph in the "Gem" column last week was credited to Dr. Foote which should have been credited to the Popular Medical Monthly.

Christian Literature.

As a specimen of the ignorance and bigotry of the Christian pulpit and press, we cite the following paragraph from the Harrisburg Daily Telegraph of the 5th inst:

There never was an Infidel but what died in remorse and terror, or a scoffer who, when death confronted him, but what shrank in guilty terror from his summons. It is unbecoming an age of light and reason, like ours, to encourage any man or set of men who seek to cast doubts on revealed religion—on the corroboration in nature of what is proclaimed in revelation. The world's progress in the perfection of government is marked by its devotion to the Christian religion. There is no code of law containing any sense of justice, except where the Christian religion is recognized and practiced. Every invention for the benefit of mankind, every improvement in science, all the light of literature that increases the happiness of men, are due to the influence of the Christian religion—the material used is made a blessing to mankind, as the word of God is respected. This being true, we regard all encouragement of scoffers of God's word—all recognition of those who deny the Deity in all things, as unbecoming a professedly Christian people. Let us beware then that the audacity of professed Infidels does not inject a poison into the body politic and the social organization, to such an extent, that before it can be extracted, wounds will be inflicted to mar what God has made beautiful. It is time to call a halt in the freedom of speech which challenges the truth of Divine revelation, and holds up to contempt the Word on which Christian nations based the security of all their compacts alike with the governed and with governments.

Vile Prints and the Post-Office.

The following remarks, which we copy from The Methodist, a newspaper published in this city, places this subject in a very fair light:

How to suppress obscene literature is a question before the public. The circulation of filthy or demoralizing papers and books is one of the vast evils of the time; and it offends our public feeling to know that the Government of the United States is, through the mails, the agent for the distribution of this foul matter. It is therefore proposed to arm the Government with the power of search as a means of suppression, and to relieve the Government of its unwilling service in distributing such literature. The evil is shocking, and the use of the post-offices for such devil's work a very painful fact. But the remedy is worse than the disease. The mails ought to be, and are, open to judicial examination; vesting a discretionary power of scrutiny in public officers is quite another matter and of most dangerous tendency.

The liberty of correspondence is fundamental and has become a part of the freedom of the press. In taking charge of mail matter, the Government cannot undertake to be in any sense responsible for what goes through the mails. Seducers, thieves, and murderers use the mails to deceive, plot, and ruin. Every day, the Government, according to the logic of some people, helps to corrupt women, break into banks, and take human life. For messages that produce these results are constantly received and delivered by postmasters. Any checks that are consistent with liberty we should earnestly favor, but we should not reason that the smallest responsibility attaches to the Government for sins committed by the use of a free Post-office.

The power that is asked for is certain to be abused. We remember when Southern postmasters refused to deliver the Tribune to subscribers on the ground that it was "incendiary matter." Nobody needs to be told that, in any political campaign, any political party having control of the post-offices would use its power to hinder the other party, that the sacredness of private letters would be subject to the needs of partisans and the whims of ignorant or rabid postmasters. An inspected mail-bag is the sign of the vilest despotism. That thing became so vulgarly shameless in Italy that travelers were unblushingly told the office had not yet read their letters. To the last the Pope's postal agents read as much as they liked of your private letter, and gave it to you or not as suited their stupid notions of propriety.

The evil must be reached in other ways. Liberty has evils of its own, but it is worth a hundred fold more than the best despotism. The people who would like to suppress sin by main force believe that they would suppress only sin. Pius Ninth believed that he suppressed only sin while ruling the most vicious and ignorant population in the Italian Peninsula. Despotism may mean well in its sources; it becomes wicked and corrupt long before it reaches the masses under it. You must meet sin chiefly by moral and religious restraint; a little can be done in a free country through its laws, and that little we shall always favor. But we are not willing to sacrifice, or even put in peril, a free correspondence and a free press for any purpose whatever. Parents, teachers, and ministers must correct the tastes, protect the ignorance, and promote the purity of lads and lasses. They cannot invent a machine to do their work, or lighten it, or make it easy. It is a mighty task, a war in which there are no truces, a laboring day that never ends, a burden to be borne by each one of us while life lasts, to be borne by somebody so long as sin exists in the world.

Political Organization.

To H. L. Green, and all Liberal Leaguers in the United States:

Inasmuch as there is now a special call and increasing necessity to bring to the front the best wisdom of our perishing republicanism, I embrace this method of placing myself in communication with all whose brains and hearts respond to a combined effort to save our country from destruction at the hands of incompetent and corrupt politicians who fatten on what they do not produce and squander that which belongs to others.

While I do not belong to any league, I am in full sympathy with every movement for the most complete liberty of conscience and action, limited only by the rights of others. But I cannot waste my time or force on any organization with only one "idea." I will be better understood by a statement.

1. While we boast of this as a land of liberty, and the Constitution, in terms loud and long, declares that the rights of life, liberty, and property are and shall be sacred, there is no law or method, State or national, by which these rights can be enforced, or redress obtained for their violation by the agents and emissaries of Government. It is therefore a fraudulent pretence—a deception and a snare.

2. There is not a single department in the Government of this country where rascality can be made profitable, or incompetency can be made to rule to ruin, that these things are not done.

3. There is no statesmanship in public men (political knaves who accept positions for which they are not competent and take pay for services they cannot perform) adequate to deal with the problems underlying the foundations of society and the perpetuity of the present forms of civilization. Blind leaders of the blind—all of them.

4. All offices and all powers are used for personal and party aggrandizement instead of the public good. The country is impoverished by high salaries for small and poor services, while the real work is performed by men and women at low wages.

5. Thousands are idle and starving, with $3,000,000,000 of surplus which we cannot use or sell abroad. We are paying at least $700,000,000 of interest, besides taxes, while industries are paralyzed, and property will soon sink to 25 per cent. of what it was worth ten years ago. Universal bankruptcy stares us in the face, while confidence in public men and measures is at zero.

6. No sectional movement, as Grangers, Unions, Labor Party, Greenbackers, and no organization with a single idea as its basis can rescue us from our dilemma.

7. The true order of the science of society is: 1. The absolute guarantee of natural rights; 2. The economical administration of public affairs; 3. The enactment of universal and equitable laws for the regulation of the conduct of the people in their relation with the Government and with each other; 4. Laws providing common things which cannot be provided by individuals or limited communities, such as money.

Under the first is embraced all, and more than all the Liberal League provides. Under the fourth properly comes the whole financial question, and yet the Greenbackers make it the corner stone of their building; and I predict that no permanent structure will be reared on either of these ideas. They are temporary hallucinations which occupy and satisfy in the absence of better; each is important in its place, but neither, nor both can solve the problems of society. To succeed, we must comprehend all the fundamental propositions essential to a permanent reconstruction of the whole body politic. No halfway work or measures will fill the bill. Our theories and practices are wrong and suicidal. No modification can save us. Change is not cure. There is no public justice, and no way of enforcing private rights against the despotism of an irresponsible government. While this is true, it is simple madness to attempt to patch a fabric which has no foundation in principle or mode beneath its crumbling walls.

Now, then, I am ready to formulate or aid in formulating the principles and methods of a movement which will reconstruct our civilization on higher and more enduring foundations; and I have thought the Liberal Leagues might, organized as they are, wheel into line, march to the front, and lead the scattered forces of reform to battle and victory. I wait for a response before moving on the enemy in another direction. Our power is wasted by diffusion and for lack of unitizing purposes and plans. Speak through your paper, or to 920 L. street, North West, Washington, D. C. JOHN B. WOLFF.

Flogging Mamma.

To take rank with men, 'tis not needful here, as with Hottentots, that a boy flog his mamma.

The devotion of our worthy fellow-citizens—modern iconoclasts—whose province it is to inter or cremate the no longer useful theologies of the past, is commendable. Their affections for the names—ideas—of their adoption, are, at least, excusable. In the performance of their last duty to the mortal remains of the mammas that gave them suck, guided their inexperienced feet, made men of them, they will please do us the favor to remember that we are not in Hottentotdom, nor subject to her laws.

Seventy years ago, I began cautiously, reverently, to examine, one at a time, previously imbibed religious ideas, and try them upon their merits, in the light of the then present. The High Court of Judication has been in session from that day till now. I have been educated in all the current religions of the age. Can't say that any ever did me any harm, but some good. That there is a Power that rules over in the affairs of men—a wisdom—a prescience—largely surpassing mine, I have satisfactory evidence. That the religious element in the human make-up is the efficient lever whereby that Power, that wisdom, that prescience, will lift us to higher planes of being, I verily believe. And this orator in equity, as in duty bound, will ever pray—for a square meal. OLIVER PRENTISS.

ABOUT 140 miles northeast of Brindisi, in the neighborhood of Manfredonia, on the Adriatic coast of Italy, the ancient city of Sipuntum has been discovered. It was not buried under showers of volcano ashes, but it gradually sank into the earth through some subterranean disturbance. Its preservation is remarkable. Some of the buildings are now about 20 feet below the level of the surrounding country, and part of the present town of Manfredonia is built over a portion of Sipuntum. Exploration has already brought to light a temple of Diana, and colonnade 65 feet long, and an underground necropolis. Many minor objects of interest have been deposited in the National Museum at Naples. Systematic research is in progress under the new rules of the Italian Government relating to archæological discoveries.

The Labor Question.

Mr. Cumming and Hard Times.

I see in your paper of Feb. 9, 1878, a communication from Mr. Robert Cumming, criticising my so-called labor article. He is evidently a firm believer in the saving power of money, and, like Oliver Twist, wants "more." I don't blame him for wanting more. I want more. But he makes some strictures upon what I said, which, in justice to myself, cannot pass unnoticed.

Among the numerous things that he wants, is an explanation of the statement that "a country where every person had a moderate competence would never suffer from hard times," after which he goes on to say, "If by that he means that a country where every person in it had an everlasting, ever-renewing supply of all things necessary for their comfort, could not suffer from hard times, he is clearly understood; but where is such a country? Does any one know? I wish I knew; I'd surely emigrate there, post haste, and take the oath of allegiance."

Mr. Cumming has the good sense to admit that a man who is rich has money. But will he please point to the place where I said a country such as is in his imagination existed. If he will, I will tell him where it is. Of course, if every man in a country produced more than he consumed, the nation would be an exporting nation and consequently a prosperous one, for a man who receives more money than he spends must be prosperous, whether he reckons his wealth by millions or hundreds.

Again he quotes me and criticises: "'Another statement which our learned political economists will not question, is, that there are more men in this country than there is work for.' That, in one sense is true, and in every sense a shame to American intelligence." It may be that it is a shame to American intelligence, but it is a credit to American hearts, for had our shores not been a haven for the oppressed and a paradise for the poor of Europe, we should not be in our present condition, which is but the result of a cheapening—through a plethora of workers—of labor. Always, in any country, immediately after a long and costly war, business is brisk. There is so much to replace that has been destroyed, that everybody is kept busy. People from other countries rush into it because labor is scarce and commands a much higher price than in the countries which have remained at peace and increased in population, thus raising wages in one country through the emigration of the workers, and lowering them in the other through the immigration. Finally the nation gets caught up and beyond where it was before its war, and has nothing but flattened graves, ten-volumed histories, and a big debt to remind it of the travail and pain through which it has passed.

This is our condition. After our late Civil War we had all the immense damage done by both armies to repair; we had a cheap currency forced upon the people by necessity; laborers got high wages and paid high rents; and everybody was extravagant except those who saw that such flush times could not always last and stingily laid by their money. To make matters worse, the poor population of Europe poured in upon us, flooding the country with cheap and unskilled labor. After a few years of such recklessness, the people woke up and found themselves—where? Sitting on a powder-magazine. The magazine exploded a little last summer, and now we are looking around to find the cause of the explosion, while at the same time we are carefully collecting another and larger magazine. It is a fact which might as well be recognized now as at any time, that, although our land is large, we cannot furnish work for the world.

"Mr. Macdonald tells us, like hundreds of others, that the market at present is glutted. True, and our bellies are stinted, and our rags whip us nearly to death." The fact that the market is overstocked with workers cannot be denied, and stinted bellies and rags are the direct and unavoidable results of an overstocked labor market.

My friend Mr. Cumming, like all who look only at one side of the question, falls into a great many errors. Here is one, and a very common one. It has been made a great many times and will continue to be made until people take into consideration the immense producing power of machinery: "Another surface fact the gentleman puts forth is, that a man with two children can live cheaper than a man with seven. We can reverse the proposition by saying, a man with seven children creates more demand in market than a man with two, for while the one calls for only two pair of shoes, the other calls for seven, and all other things likewise in proportion."

There is no doubt that seven children could wear out more shoes than two, if they only had them. But does the father get a cent more wages because he has seven children? I never heard of an employer grading wages by any such measure. If Mr. Cumming has, I shall be obliged to him if he will let me know. A man cannot lay out on his family more than he earns, and it makes a vast difference in the comfort of that family whether he spends it on two children, or whether he has to stretch it out to cover seven. I should rather be one of two than one of seven. The same principle, magnified, applies to nations. There are not so many of us in the United States to the square mile as there are in China, therefore we live better; and I think the condition of the average American laborer is preferable to that of the Chinese. But if the Chinese are allowed to swarm in upon us as has hitherto been done, it is only a question of time and toleration as to when we shall be in the same undesirable condition as the Celestial nation. Capitalists will use the cheapest labor, and if three Chinamen at fifteen cents per day can be made to take the place of one Irish, German, or American laborer at one dollar per day, it is bound to be done. The law of the survival of the fittest must soon come into operation in this country, and the weak must go to the wall. It is a barbarous law of Nature, but man has not as yet succeeded in overcoming it.

We saw last summer the evil effects of over-population when the fetid breath of famine touched and poisoned the heart of India. Over a million and a half of human beings sank gasping upon the parched earth that yielded no sustenance. Over the seas came a cry of agony from the Queen of the East for help for her dying people. The wail of want was heard even on the shores of this distant land. The charity of nations was asked, and to our honor, to the honor of humanity, it was not asked in vain. The treasures of Europe and America were given with a willing hand. But how little could man do when Nature was unpitying, implacable! The people of India had broken her laws. The earth, though pinched by the hand of desperation, would not give them life, and they died by thousands, begging for food. The population was reduced by the horrible method of starvation until there were no more than could force a miserable existence from the stingy soil. The equilibrium between production and consumption was restored, but at what a cost! Better, a thousand times, that only one should be born than that a hundred should live to be murdered by the fiend of hunger! In the northern provinces of China to-day, there is a convulsion of Nature—a struggle between man and the blind forces which form him to their will. Nine million human beings are dying. Famine is holding her hideous festival, and death is among the people gathering his victims. Starvation is the servant that is doing his work. Soon the stalking spectre of pestilence will be a partner in the revel of death, and then we shall hear stories from the stricken land that will make our hearts sink. Millions of prayers will go up from our Christian friends for divine aid, but not one of them will be answered. Divinity will be as cold as the white-faced rocks, and man will be left to help himself. A part must die that the rest may live. Man may use the law but he cannot remove it Nature never pities. Her changing moods are not the result of a whim. If she smiles to-day she may frown to-morrow. She is a sphinx that cares nothing for the sorrows of humanity. Men may pray and plead and coax and threaten—may offer sacrifice and incense at her shrine—but she will never swerve from her course. Man is as much her plaything as the red leaf of autumn. She takes life with the same indifference with which she gives it, and if a hundred men are drowned to-day, to-morrow the sun will shine just as bright—the winds blow just as gently. The sobbing sea has no heart to break—the rushing whirlwind no rebuking conscience.

There may be one million of money in circulation in a nation or there may be one million million. It makes but a temporary difference. Ten men with improved machinery can get more from an acre than a hundred with their bare hands, and from their toil the ten can live in luxury. How uncharitable, then, is he who would force a hundred to divide among them what ten ought to consume!

If I understand Mr. Cumming rightly, and I think I do, he places the cause of our present affliction in the fact that "the people are deprived of the means of purchasing their requirements." And he thinks that an increase of the circulating medium would again give that power. It would, undoubtedly, for a time, and for that reason I am in favor of it. Anything that helps us even temporarily must be a blessing; and perhaps before the breaker of poverty, which inevitably follows the wave of prosperity, strikes us, the people will have seen below the surface, where the waves are ever changing, into the depths which in reality determine the course, for good or ill, of the grand ocean of humanity. There are tides in the affairs of men—flood tides and ebb tides. But under the shifting waters there is the eternal sea which flows on forever. The Gulf Stream moves in obedience to a law as fixed as the everlasting hills. It works good for one people and ill for another. Its presence renders Southern Europe fertile and its absence keeps Newfoundland sterile. Its workings can be changed, perhaps, by prodigious labor, but the principle is there. The law of population is like the Gulf Stream. You can shift the surplus population of China to the United States, but it relieves China only at the expense of this country. I would make the Gulf Stream flow all over the world. Plenty of money would give an impetus to the wheels of industry, but it is a perpetual motion that we want. A gilded spur may start the tired steed, but hay and oats are better for a long journey. Suppose Mr. Cumming should keep his ragged shoemaker at work from sunrise to sundown; suppose his shoeless weaver should have work; supposing the manufacturers were making and the producers were producing everything; supposing every spindle in the country was whirling and every loom was filled with broadcloth; supposing every freight-car was jammed and every passenger-car crowded; supposing every coal-mine was yielding all the "dusky diamonds" we could burn; supposing every planer and lathe was going; supposing every shaft and wheel and pully in the land was turning and every laborer in the country was employed, how long would it last? How long would it be before all Europe and Asia would be grinning at our side, putting out their grimy, yellow hands to take our work? How long would it be before the man who owned the shoe-shop would say to his now well-clad workmen, "You must work for lower wages, so I can compete with the shoemakers of England, or I must get labor from abroad—I must get Chinamen"?

That was done in North Adams in the "flush" times a few years ago.

How long would it be before the capitalists who controlled the coal-mines would say to the sooty toilers, "You must work for lower wages, so I can compete with the coal-mines of England and Wales, or I must get laborers from Wales"?

That was done in Pennsylvania during the flush times of the war, and now there are fifty thousand Welshmen in the coalfields of the Keystone State; and the courts are kept busy in convicting and the Governor in signing the death-warrants of Molly Maguires. Last summer those fifty thousand Welshmen struck, and starved in the mountains rather than work for almost nothing.

How long would it be before the railroad contractor told his Irish laborers that unless they worked for less he would get Chinamen?

That was done on the Northern Pacific, and the honest Irishmen were replaced by a horde of thieving Celestials.

How long would it be before the weaver, toiling at his loom, would be told to give way for the lower-priced labor of Manchester? How long before Sheffield and Leeds would fill our machine-shops with their idle laborers?

A Chinaman would sit on every shoemaker's bench; every spindle and loom would be tended by a foreigner; every wheel and shaft and pully would be put in motion by somebody who could not tell whether Maine was a backwoods town in Texas or whether Washington or Benedict Arnold was the Father of his country. It is easier to fall than to rise, and it would be a struggle between us and them, whether they should drag us down or we lift them up—with the law of gravitation and their weight in their favor. The wealth of the nation would cause poverty to the individual, and out of an abundance of money would grow the evil of monopoly and the division into castes and classes of our people. The workingmen must get up a corner in labor.

We have experienced this; and the only reason why immigration has partially stopped is because mechanics have recently been going abroad for the work they could not find at home. In competing with the world, we must work for the world's prices or not at all. If manufactured goods can be produced cheaper in some other country than here, the laws of trade will take the purchasers to that country. How often did we hear the capitalists complaining that they could not compete with other countries on account of the high price of labor! It is only since the panic that our exports have exceeded our imports and we have been able to undersell other nations. It was done by cutting down wages, and wages were reduced by the importation of foreign labor. It was a dear error, but let us hope our people will profit by it.

There is a law now—enacted in self-defense—against paupers being landed on our shores; why should not other and more stringent laws be enacted in behalf of American workmen? It is a question of life and death with them. Another ten years of "flush" times and this country would be overrun with the idle laborers of older countries. China, with its population of 400,000,000, can send us 50,000,000 a year and still have more than it can support in comfort.

These ideas, of course, will meet with the opposition of the capitalists and the churches, who want cheap labor and cheap souls, for the good of themselves and the glory of God, but the sooner these two aristocrats of society are made to understand that this country is not run in their exclusive interest, the sooner will working people have the means of "purchasing their requirements."

EUGENE MACDONALD.

An Open Letter to Eugene Macdonald.

SIR: While not agreeing with you altogether on the "Labor Question," I thank you for giving your candid opinions. I am a laboring man, but I respect honest opinions on any subject, though they be erroneous and subject me and my belief and practice to severe criticism. The best way to seek truth and dispel error is by discussion. Truth does not fear controversy. Bigotry tabooes discussion through fear that it may propagate error. But the best way to keep down error is to never let it go unchallenged.

Every adult person of sound mind should do his own thinking. He that will only hear one side thinks by proxy; he that will hear both sides thinks for himself; he that will hear neither thinks by himself, and is like a mechanic with dull and inadequate tools.

Brother Bennett does not necessarily endorse the views of his correspondents. Shall THE TRUTH SEEKER belie its name, and reject articles because they are unpopular with certain classes of thinkers? Better be orthodox, then, and float with the big current. Free thought, free speech, should be popular. Can we not have at least one free paper in the world? My ideal of a philosophical or Liberal paper is one that is large enough and free enough to hear all sides of all subjects of interest to humanity. May THE TRUTH SEEKER prove to be my ideal and a pattern from which the press may take precedent and become free!

Land monopoly, tariff laws, despotic and extravagant governments, Church and State, partially (as in this country) and wholly united, are the chief arbitrary obstacles to a more even distribution of wealth, health, education, labor, and happiness. Ignorance, superstition, rum, disease, tobacco, coffee, crime, prostitution, etc., are the natural results when natural laws are subverted. Remove the obstacles, and man, being a progressive creature, and having his natural rights, will slowly but surely correct the evils that have followed in the wake of the subversion of natural laws. Our petit larceny is mostly from the laboring class; and our criminals are, from the fact that the rich are seldom convicted. I believe also that our daughters of shame are mostly from the ranks of ignorance and poverty. But drunkenness and rascality are more evenly distributed than you seem to think. From experience I have come to the conclusion that there is no healthy prevention of progeny but abstinence from sexual intercourse.

The remedy is that parents should manage so as to make their children earn a home, and give it to them when marriageable. Every parent could easily do it if the reforms indicated were brought about.

No, brother Macdonald, economy, energy, education, etc., would work wonders, but these things are retarded by the necessary labor with which the poor classes are burdened on account of the arbitrary measures that make the rich richer and the poor poorer. You wish to commence at the wrong end. It is like giving a man medicine who is all the time violating the laws of health.

Yours in the cause of humanity,

Mineral Springs, Ark. OBADIAH JONES.

Communications.

Mr. Humphrey's Persistency.

MR. EDITOR: As the Rev. Mr. Humphrey persists in attempting to criticise Col. Ingersoll, it is no more than just that the absurdities contained in his attempts should be persistently pointed out to him.

He accuses Col. Ingersoll of inconsistency in advocating free thought and at the same time charging for admission to his lectures. To the ordinary mind the connection between the right of free thought and the right to a free share in the property of others may not be apparent; but, judging by the reverend gentleman's criticism, a severe course of theological training removes all difference between the two ideas. Doubtless, in the reverend gentleman's elastic lexicon, "free thought" and "free tickets" are synonymous terms. That terrible barrier of seventy-five cents, which the eloquent orator places between the sound of his voice and the ears of the reverend gentleman, is not as great a bugbear to the majority of people as the barrier of hell which the reverend gentleman is so persistently endeavoring to maintain between humanity and happiness, but which the Infidel lecturer is so nobly striving to remove. Seventy-five cents does not seem an extravagant price to pay for having the fear of hell supplanted by the love of humanity as an incentive for doing good and avoiding evil. Those who cannot afford to pay that sum can read the lectures in THE TRUTH SEEKER, but those who can afford it should be as willing to pay for the pleasure of listening to the Colonel's eloquence as they are to pay for their bread or beef or boots. If I mistake not, the reverend gentleman earns his own bread and butter by the sound of his voice, and he should accord the same right even to an Infidel without accusing him of persistent inconsistency. In persisting that Liberalism is inconsistent with earning an honest support for one's family, even on the rostrum, lies the reverend and persistent gentleman's first absurdity.

The second so-called inconsistency seems very much like hair-splitting. Supposing the lecturer to have said what he is charged with, what of it? It could only be looked upon by an unbiased critic as a figure of speech or a slip of the tongue—saying a little more or a little less than was meant. The persistent gentleman can see no inconsistencies in the figures of speech with which God's Lectures so much abound, nor in those used in the pulpit every Sunday by his brethren in the special service of the Lord; but Mr. Ingersoll, being an Infidel, and not being judged by the theological rules of rhetoric, cannot use a figure of speech without being considered persistently inconsistent. Such strictures would not be altogether out of place in a schoolboy, but they do seem very absurd coming from a consistent and persistent college graduate. But, despite the reverend gentleman's assertion to the contrary, Col. Ingersoll did not use the language attributed to him, as a perusal of a correct report of his lecture will show.

The reverend and consistent critic accuses the lecturer of the grievous, I might say blasphemous inconsistency of allowing himself to be addressed by the title of Colonel when divers and several histories of our late civil war do not state that he led or followed anybody to victory. This reminds one of the old story of the man who stole a pair of boots. There were but a few witnesses who saw the theft, and the accused thought to establish his innocence by producing witnesses to prove that they did not see him take the boots. This method of attempting to prove that Col. Ingersoll has no right to his military title appears rather ridiculous—to a layman.

Not being as well posted upon military matters as the reverend gentleman persists in appearing to be, I will not say it is absurd to insinuate that the validity of a commission in the army depends upon its bearer's having led or followed somebody to victory; but I do say that it is absurd to "persist" that any history of the Rebellion mentions the names and services of the million or more men who took part in that struggle, or even of all the colonels. Of course, all this is not as ridiculous as it would be to assert that because there is no mention of Col. Ingersoll in last year's almanac or Swinton's Geography he should not use the title; but, with all due respect for the reverend gentleman's sacred calling, I must say that it appears to possess all the necessary qualifications for a first-class absurdity.

Col. Ingersoll organized and led to the battle-field the 11th Illinois Cavalry, and took part in the battles of Shiloh and Corinth and many other engagements in that part of the country. His military record may not be as brilliant as his record in the lecture field, but it is honorable, and is open for the inspection of any person who desires to search it.

In the fourth article of the persistent and reverend gentleman's list of inconsistencies, he accuses the jovial Colonel of not only articulating about the liberty of man, woman, and child, but of doing so "fast and furiously," while in the campaign of 1860 he was a Democrat. To a persistent parson, seventeen years may seem to be a very short space of time in which to reason one's self out of an erroneous conviction; but it seems quite possible that Col. Ingersoll could do so without being at all inconsistent. Wise men change their opinions as they grow wiser; other men never change theirs unless an order comes from those who do their thinking, when, presto, they are changed suddenly, as we change the cut of our garments—and for the same reason, to keep up with the fashion. Col. Ingersoll does his own thinking; and a few hundred years in the future, what would now be called the orthodox may be far enough advanced to accept his present mode of thought for the fashion, and govern theirs by it. It has always been so. Those who were Infidels a few hundred years ago would be considered quite orthodox to-day.

Perhaps the reverend critic himself does not think now exactly as he did seventeen years ago. Many estimable and God-fearing clergymen who used to prove by the Bible that slavery was a divine institution, now prove just as conclusively by the same Bible—which has not changed a particle meanwhile—that it was an institution of the devil; and some ungodly Infidels insinuate that both conclusions are correct. The reverend gentleman himself—according to his own statement—was a skeptic but little more than ten years ago, yet he to-day accuses others of inconsistency—for only doing what he himself has done—with as good grace as though he had aways been a consistent Christian.

It is hinted in some Church history that the great Calvin once changed his mind. Of course, Col. Ingersoll is not as great a man as Calvin was, never having founded a religion or even burned a man to death for difference of opinion, but, nevertheless, the reverend critic should draw the mantle of charity over the Colonel's inconsistency of growing older and wiser. St. Paul was at one time, according to the Bible, a persecutor "even unto death" of Christians, but he changed his views and became the most pious Christian of them all in the space of a few minutes. Even though the Colonel did not persecute and put to death any Republicans when he was a pious Democrat, the slow and gradual change should count in his favor and relieve him of the charge of inconsistency. The reverend gentleman should admit that the slow change of years, as in the case of Col. Ingersoll, is more rational and sensible than the sudden "flop" of St. Paul. Even Omnipotence repented itself and changed its mind, according to the Bible.

The foregoing remarks will apply equally well to Paine. His ideas, as expressed in his various works, are the result of development. From reasoning upon the tyranny of temporal rulers he progressed to reasoning upon the tyranny of the spiritual rulers. There is no evidence, excepting the reverend gentleman's assumption—and his absurd criticisms fix the value of that—that Mr. Paine had given theology any serious thought at the time of the Revolution. Had we some of Calvin's or Luther's pre-Reformation writings, we might find evidence to prove that they were Catholics before they had their eyes opened to the corruptions of that religion; yet very few could allow their bitterness to so far warp their judgment as to accuse them of pretending to be Catholics at that time. But Paine was an Infidel and they were Christians, and that makes a vast difference in the eyes of a Christian critic.

As to the reverend gentleman's uncharitable and un-Christlike slur about the bottle and the lady, it does no credit either to his head or his heart, and does not speak well for his theological training. He is undoubtedly a gun of large caliber, but this handful of mud plainly shows the character of his ammunition, and indicates to what depth even a Christian clergyman will descend when he cannot honestly and honorably meet the arguments advanced by an opponent. Those who would rob the dead of their reputation require the fear of a hell to keep them from appropriating the valuables of the living.

The greatest compliment Col. Ingersoll's lectures can receive is that his persistent and habitual critics must descend to such puerile absurdities as those under the caption of "Bob Ingersoll's Inconsistencies," in your issue of the 9th, or remain silent. H. J. T.

New York, Feb. 10, 1878.

Mr. Teed Answered.

MY DEAR BENNETT: Your readers in this vicinity were startled by the new astronomical theory advanced by Cyrus Romulus R. Teed, in his seventh letter upon the subject of the divinity of Jesus, and fearing that the new revelation might be too copious for the diminutive comprehension of the ordinary student, with your permission I will volunteer a few words by way of elucidation.

Mr. Teed says, "the heavenly bodies are foci of electrical force converged by the operations of atmospheres, through the refraction and reflection of force focalizing it, at regular points in space, within the atmospheres connected with earth. These points are not great distances from us, and they constitute the windows of heaven in the material or physical domain of creation. The sun as perceived is an atmosphere investing a central star, an astral center which appears by reflection to be in another point or direction in the stellar realms."

Just so. But the writer should have further stated by way of explanation the fact that the centrifugal and centripetal forces which operate upon the planets, and co-operate with that heterogeneous mass of foci centering about and within the orbs, or heavenly bodies as they evolve and revolve, cause them to diverge as it were in an elliptical or circularly rectangular manner, while they often converge at their extremities or poles to such a degree that, metaphorically speaking, they are no longer within the realm of elimination. True, "the specific gravities and levities of primals indicate the normal relative positions of those primals in space," but the exasperating influence of such primals operating upon inorganic matter often causes the posemagottus or posemagotti to fall upon the flumgudgeon, utterly obliterating and permantly destroying the illusion. Had it not been so, I should have told you.

Syracuse, N. Y., Feb. 5, 1878. JOHN JONES.

Inconsistencies.

MR. EDITOR: The Rev. G. H. Humphrey is exercised about what he calls "Bob. Ingersoll's Inconsistencies." He thinks it shameful that a man who in 1860 was a Democrat should now talk so furiously about liberty. None but original Abolitionists and Republicans have a right to do it. He thinks it disgraceful to flourish the title of "Colonel" conferred only by brevet. Only "Reverend" soldiers of the cross and followers of the Lamb have a right to flourish brevet titles. He thinks it abominable for a man to style himself a "Liberal" and then lecture for pay. None but illiberal clergymen ought to do such things. He thinks it an outrage for a man to say in one breath that "he respects every man who thinks for himself," and in the next breath "declare he has no respect for any man who believes in a hell." Here I do think brother Humphrey has made a point, that is, if Col. Ingersoll used those words, for if there is such an anomaly as "a man who thinks" and yet believes in the orthodox hell, I have no doubt the Colonel would entertain for that man the most pitiful respect.

It is hardly worth while to notice Mr. Humphrey's reiteration of the senseless and baseless charges against Paine. So long as the clergy deem it consistent with their high calling to kick dead lions, let us not hinder the spread of that kind of Gospel. W. H. B.

Washington, D. C., Feb. 10, 1878.

Book Notices.

Americanity;

OR, THE RELIGION OF THE REPUBLIC: An Essay Toward the Development of a National and International Creed, Cult, and Conscience, is the suggestive title of an elaborate work now being prepared by a gentleman of this city, who, by the by, is an extensive traveler, facile lecturer, and versatile writer and author of many years' standing. The volume will be the ripe fruit of deep and prolonged study and research at home and abroad. In its salutary and remedial bearing on all the leading questions of the day the work will aim to be of vital interest to all American citizens, without distinction of class, sex, or previous nationality. It will bear on its title-page the significant head-line "Religio Republicana," and, as mottoes, the following pregnant apothegms from the pen of the worshipful Father of His Country:—"The name American must always exalt the pride of Patriotism;" and "Let us with caution indulge the supposition that Morality can be maintained without Religion." The author is a collateral kinsman, and an inheritor of at least the religious and ethical depth and earnestness of the great and good President Edwards, but entirely devoid of his theological and metaphysical shibboleth and severity. Why the newly-coined word "Americanity" (which was adopted only after mature reflection) has been used as the head-title as well as throughout the body of the work will be fully explained in the Introduction.

The following sonnetoid, rapidly penned by the author under the inspiration of a most jubilant and yet most solemn occasion, faintly shadows forth the gist of his essay:—

INDEPENDENCE HALL.
ANNO REIPUBLICÆ, 101.
(July 4, 1876.)

Th' Unknowable—The Infinite—The All—
Sire Cosmos—Grandam Nature—Mother Earth—
E'en Great Humanity from her savage birth
Through her eonic rhythm of rise and fall,
Kindle but motives all too vaguely vast,
Or, at their best, but dreamily diffuse,
For deeds full worthy of modern truth and use.
The Modern Man demands a nearer Past
And dearer Present for his higher To-Be!
Yet Self—Friends—Family—Town—City—State,
However dear, are far beneath his rate
Of highest worth and love.—
AMERICANITY!
Whose temple this fair land, whose worship we,
Whose destiny the world, we offer all to Thee. ***

THE BIBLE DOCTRINE OF THE SOUL; or Man's Nature and Destiny, as Revealed. By Charles L. Ives, M. D., Philadelphia: Claxton, Remsen, & Haffelfinger. 1878. In these exciting days of orthodox and heterodox hell-discussion and hell-explosion (for the latter of which little five-year-old Mary Newton, daughter of General Newton of Hell Gate and Talmage-snubbing fame, is mainly to blame), it is cheering to find the non-immortality of the wicked so ably discussed from a Bible standpoint by the accomplished author of the above book. A mere Doctor of Divinity would doubtless have presented us with a mass of gloomy, misty pedantry on the subject of the human "soul" and its destiny. But Dr. Ives is a Doctor of Medicine—late Professor of the Theory and Practice of Medicine in Yale College—and, as is the habit with really able medical practitioners of all schools and of no school, he probes directly but carefully into the very "root of the matter," and proves to his own entire satisfaction that the soul is neither exclusively human, nor immaterial, nor yet immortal, but on the contrary common to man with the lower animals, material and mortal; and that immortality, or eternal life, is nothing more or less than the free gift of God to those whom he deems worthy of it; and that the fate of the wicked will be practical annihilation—"not that the elements of which it is composed will be annihilated, but that its organization will be totally destroyed, so that the individual, as such, no longer exists."

We are strongly inclined to believe that this comes very near the true Bible doctrine of the "soul," no matter, at present, how very different and entirely unbiblical our belief may be on this sensational question.

WE ACCIDENTALLY OMITTED to notice in due time the change of The Shaker and Hull's Crucible to pamphlet form. The first named is a decidedly neat publication.

Letters from Friends.

Call To Organize.

CITIZENS of the United States who endorse the appended political platform adopted in convention by the National Liberal League at Rochester, N. Y., Oct. 26, 1877, are requested to meet in their respective cities and towns on Washington's Birthday, Feb. 22, 1878, for the purpose of organizing themselves into local auxiliary Liberal Leagues in accordance with the provisions of the National Liberal League Constitution. Copies of the latter and blanks for organization can be obtained from W. H. Hamlen, Secretary, 231 Washington street, Boston, or from H. L. Green, Chairman of the Executive Committee, Salamanca, N. Y.

FRANCIS E. ABBOTT,
WILLIAM H. HAMLEN,
J. A. J. WILCOX,
H. L. GREEN,
D. G. CRANDON,
} Directors N. L. L.

BOSTON, Jan. 1, 1878.

PLATFORM OF THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution; including the equitable taxation of Church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.

2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.

3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.

N. B.—The nomination of candidates upon the above platform was postponed to a future Congress of the National Liberal League.

Freethinkers of the West—Greeting.

FRIEND BENNETT: Please publish the accompanying call in the next issue of THE TRUTH SEEKER. We hope to see a full attendance of the Liberals of Iowa and of the West. All our Eastern friends who can possibly be present are requested to attend.

Especially should we like to see D. M. Bennett, in whom the Freethinkers of the West have the fullest confidence.

The eloquent Mrs. Mattie Hulett Parry and Mr. J. R. Baker have promised to attend, and it will be ample compensation for all expense and inconvenience which may attend the visit to Des Moines, to listen to the brave words of these noble champions of "universal mental liberty."

Other good speakers will be in attendance, among whom we hope to number Mr. Underwood and W. F. Jamieson. Our friends in Des Moines are making ample preparations for the entertainment of visitors. Particulars soon. In a few days I shall be able to report the reductions of fare which the railroad companies are willing to make. It is specially requested that any Liberal in the State who can will secure the insertion of the call in his local paper. The widest publicity should be given to the call, and we hope that every free man and woman will do his and her duty in this respect. We ought to have representatives from every county in the State, and to secure this result the proposed convention should be widely advertised.

Liberals of the West, let us compete in generous emulation with our brethren of the East. On to Des Moines!

E. C. WALKER.

MASS CONVENTION OF IOWA LIBERALS.

To Each Friend of State Secularization, Individually, this Call is Addressed:

We want you to attend and take part in a mass convention of the friends of national unity, State secularization and universal education, which will convene at Des Moines, Iowa, Thursday, March 7th, 1878, at 10 o'clock A. M., and continue for two days, day and evening sessions. Mr. B. F. Underwood and other distinguished speakers from abroad are expected to be present. It is proposed to organize a State association or league, and we hope that every county in the State will be represented. Liberals of adjoining States are cordially invited to attend.

We are approaching a crisis in the relations of Church and State. The signs of the times are portentous of coming trouble. The Church is encroaching slowly and stealthily, but surely, upon the domain of the State, and is remorselessly chiseling away the rights of the private citizen. The experience of all times and the lessons of history warn us to be on the alert to resist the first attempt to render the State subordinate to the Church. The attempt to Christianize the United States Government, the exemption of Church property from taxation, the use of the Bible, of religious hymns, of sectarian text books, and the utterance of prayer in our common schools; the use of public school buildings as places of sectarian worship; the appointment of chaplains in the army and navy and in State and national institutions; public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character; the appointment by the President of the United States and by the Governors of the various States of religious feasts and festivals; the use of the judicial oath; the enactment and enforcement of Sabbatarian laws, and of laws intended to give to one class of religious believers any legal advantage or immunity which is not equally granted to all citizens—these and countless other indications of the hold which the Church has upon the State call upon us to be up and doing.

Therefore we earnestly call upon every lover of equal rights and justice; upon every one who desires that ours shall be a land of civil and religious liberty in deed as well as name; upon every man and woman whose desire is that the magnificent heritage left us by the founders of our Government shall not be stolen from us by the rapacious hand of an ecclesiastical hierarchy; and upon every one who believes in the natural equality of all men and in the right to follow in the footsteps of science by the enlightened reason of man—upon each and all of these do we call to take hold and help us at Des Moines. The agents of reaction and ecclesiasticism are at work in every nook and corner of Europe and America. Shall the soldiers of freedom sleep while the fetters are forging which shall bind the limbs of their children in gyves of steel? This is the hour to work. We must not delay.

The call is alike to Materialists, Spiritualists, Free Religionists, and Christians—to any and to all who are willing to work for the complete separation of Church and State. Let there be a full attendance. The arrangements made for the accommodation of visitors at Des Moines, the reduction in fare made by railroad companies for the occasion, the speakers engaged, the subjects on which they will speak, will be announced by the committee in due time. For any information on the subject address the members of the committee.

J. C. MICHENER, M. D., Adel,
J. H. STRONG, Des Moines,
C. DEROBERTS, Red Oak,
E. C. WALKER, Florence,
E. H. GIBBS, Oskaloosa,
State Committee of the National Liberal League.

Other papers please copy.

Convention of Spiritualists and Liberalists.

The twelfth annual meeting of the Michigan State Association of Spiritualists will be held at Union Hall, Kalamazoo, commencing on Thursday evening, March 21st, and closing Sunday the 24th. A cordial invitation is extended to Liberalists to gather and participate in the deliberations of this meeting. Among the speakers expected to be present are Hudson Tuttle of Ohio, Rev. J. H. Burnham (independent and Liberal) of Saginaw, Dr. J. L. York of California, G. B. Stebbins and Susie M. Johnson of Detroit, T. H. Stewart of Indiana, Mrs. R. Shephard of Chicago, and others well known in the Spiritualistic ranks, including the missionaries and officers of the Association.

MRS. L. E. BAILEY, Sec'y. — A. B. SPINNEY, M. D. Pres.

NEWARK, N. J., Feb. 11, 1878.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I wrote you a few weeks ago that we here in Newark were making an effort to organize a Liberal Club. I now write to inform you that the club is fairly started, under the name of "The Newark Liberal Club," with a membership of eighteen charter members, with the following gentlemen as officers:

F. J. KIEB, President,
J. WITHAMS, Vice-President,
SIG. A. BONDY, Secretary,
A. TRIER, Treasurer,
JOHN COOKE,
MARTIN RYERSON,
JAMES ELVERSON,
F. B. PASSE,
} Executive Committee.

An organization of this nature has long been needed in this city of churches and prejudice. Newark ranks second to Brooklyn as a city of churches, but ranks first in rank bigotry and intolerance. To pit yourself against the prevailing superstition here in Newark is like butting your head against the Orange Mountains with the expectation of tunneling through; but notwithstanding the great odds against us, we have started with good material and earnest, intelligent minds, and with a broad, free, and Liberal platform, a platform upon which any man can stand whose religious prejudice does not blind him to the truth. Our organization so far is composed of men who have cut loose from all forms of superstition, and who will welcome the truth in any shape upon all questions of vital interest to mankind; in short, we propose to be a band of "truth seekers." Respectfully yours, J. B. PARSE.

A good friend in a Pennsylvania town writes: I can't conceive why Payne should pursue the course he does. It will do him great injury. I wrote to him, giving him friendly advice. It seems you are victorious at all points. You have made hosts of the warmest friends here. All are astonished at the work you are doing.

NATIONAL MILITARY HOME, OHIO, Feb., 9, 1878.

DEAR MR. BENNETT: I have received two circulars from Seth Wilbur Payne asking me to subscribe to his paper. I wondered how he came into possession of my name, for I am an obscure person, and my name had not been in print. I then took the trouble to inquire of your other patrons here, and I learned that they had received similar circulars. I then came to the conclusion that Mr. Payne had some way, honorably or dishonorably, come into possession of your list of subscribers. You may have some one in your employ who has let him have your list, or he may have obtained it in some other way. I believe in men's doing what is honorable and right.

WEBSTER, MASS., Feb. 10, 1878.

DEAR BENNETT: I enclose in this a copy of a letter I have just sent that self-made —— Seth W. Payne. Mr. Bennett, I did not believe that Payne was telling the truth when he published the amount of money you had made during the past four years. Neither was I influenced by him. I shall try and help Heywood to what I promised you. If I had money by me, I would help you both. But it was my luck to be born poor, and I have just about held my own. Mr. Forbes and I are the only two that take Payne's paper here, and Forbes is fully as disgusted with it as I am. I feel as though Dr. Russell, of Bell county, Texas, will feel as though we had slighted him, out and out. The Index, Common Sense, and Age of Reason have eulogized Comstock for his wanton abuse. I think some of us Liberals should send in a card of thanks to that mob that led Dr. Russell from his home at midnight and whipped him to their heart's satisfaction. My blood has boiled in my veins when I have read Peterson's abuse. I do not see how you can keep cool as you have. The Index is jealous because your paper takes so much better than The Index does. Mr. Bennett, you must be strong and keep up the best of courage, for I think that THE TRUTH SEEKER will live and grow when the three other papers are dead and forgotten. There is only one copy of The Index taken here in town, and that by Dr. Burnett, who is a two-hundred-dollar shareholder. I do not care how few of Frothingham's lectures find their way into your paper. Few care to read his "cultured thoughts," and I have often heard that he could get but few out to hear his lectures. Try and be strong and live your enemies down. Very truly yours,

MARGARET FLINT.

WEBSTER, MASS., Feb. 10, 1878.

MR. S. W. PAYNE, Dear Sir: Having become thoroughly disgusted with the course that you have been, and are, pursuing with Bennett, of THE TRUTH SEEKER, I feel that my most direct way out of the unpleasantness is to ask you to send me no more of your papers. I have not one bit of relish for them, so please drop my name from your list. I did not subscribe for your paper for the purpose of helping you to spread rank falsehoods, or beat around the bush with your technical quibbling. Previous to starting your paper, you sent me a notice saying: "The Age of Reason will be intensely Infidel, but, in the purpose of its editor, it will be a fearless, fair-dealing, first-class Liberal family journal." Your first paper I liked; the second and third numbers I did not receive, and it is just as well that I did not, for, as I look back over the last three or four copies, I feel that I have more than enough of them.

MARGARET FLINT.

STOCKTON, IND., Feb. 1, 1878.

DEAR FRIEND: I am sorry to see the evident bad spirit the Age of Reason exhibits towards you, and its friendliness to the monstrosity Comstockism. The wet blanket it spreads over you will wilt it sadly

A. T. HUDSON.

PRATT, ILL., Feb. 6, 1878.

FRIEND BENNETT: I find the following in Payne's Age of Reason of Feb. 2: "The cause of Liberalism is the cause of purity, of truthfulness, of justice, of common kindness, of a noble morality, in the very best sense of that word." Now, all of this I heartily indorse. But when I read in that paper of your and the editor of the Investigator's wealth, and their left-handed apology for those statements, and then again their statements in regard to yourself and the Comstock matter, I am forced to admit that they do not fill the bill of a true Liberal. And unless they make an apology or else prove their statements, I shall be compelled to strike them out of my list of true Liberals. What could have been their motives, I cannot tell. I should like to have them rise and explain. You are at liberty to publish this if you see fit, and I should like to have you do so that they may know how I feel in the matter, and that they may have a chance to be heard if they have any excuse for their conduct. Yours for the cause of truth. Let the chips fall where they may.

JAMES M. PRATT.

IOWA CITY, Feb. 7, 1878.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: At two different times I received letters from Seth Wilbur Payne asking me to subscribe to his Age of Reason. As I cannot afford to take so many papers, I must be satisfied to read but one good Liberal paper; but thinking some one else might take that cheap paper which you had recommended, I took one letter to a friend to whom I regularly loan your paper, expecting help in obtaining some subscribers for Payne. But when I found in your next paper fourteen questions and answers to the same, and other remarks about the Age of Reason's attacks, I at once went to my friend and stopped further proceedings in favor of the said Age of Reason. I think Mr. Payne never will succeed in breaking down THE TRUTH SEEKER. Mr. Ingersoll's lecture is very interesting, plain, and convincing. Mr. Teed travels a long way to convince your readers that Jesus is the creator of the world. Yours truly, THEODORE JENSEN.

PRINCETON, MASS., Feb. 11, 1878.

DEAR MR. BENNETT:—Your appeal is helping me. Last week, in Boston, I saw for the first time, a copy of Payne's Age of Reason. His article about you was ineffably mean. I wonder how such a fellow can induce any decent people to subscribe for his paper. Yours as ever,

E. H. HEYWOOD.

MIAMISBURGH, O., Feb. 5, 1878.

BRO. BENNETT: Is Seth Wilbur Payne what he pretends to be? or is he a fraud? I can hardly tell what to make of him. I must say I don't like to see him misrepresenting our Bennett, but it seems he has, in several different ways. I believe he is a Comstock man, and, as the old Dutchman said, "I no likes him for dot." When he said you were worth $200,000 I believe he told a big falsehood, for it is not possible for a man in four years to make that amount of money by publishing Infidel literature. I do not believe a man can honestly accumulate that amount of money in a whole lifetime. If he gets it, there must be some rascality about it. I cannot believe our Bennett is a rascal. It will take more than Seth Wilbur Payne to make me believe that. Please tell me, is Seth Wilbur Payne an Infidel? or is he a Comstock Christian?

Truly your friend, GEORGE WEIDEL.

COSHOCTON, O., Feb. 7, 1878.

BRO. BENNETT: I enclose you postal order for $10 for goods. By the way, I see that Payne's Age of Reason is not friendly to you, and adopts a very mean course to vent its jealousy, or something else (I rather suspect that you would not employ him). I took his paper—the only one here—but I shall not encourage it while he manifests his present spirit. I am going to write him and tell him plainly what I think. I enclose you some late clippings—if they related to Infidels or Spiritualists how the saints would howl and say that was the cause. Ventilate them. Yours truly. W. S. WOOD.

TORONTO, ONT., Feb. 5, 1878.

DEAR MR. BENNETT: I send my subscription for THE TRUTH SEEKER for the present year. Vol. 5, Nos. 4 and 5 arrived yesterday. Nos. 2 and 3 have not yet come. Were they posted? Missing THE TRUTH SEEKER for four weeks, I began to be afraid that you had been seized by the fangs of the law, but am glad to find that such has not been the case. I am surprised at the course taken by Mr. Payne in the Age of Reason. I had intended to become a subscriber, but after reading the account of his petty attempt to injure THE TRUTH SEEKER as given by you in

No. 4 of your paper, I will have nothing to do with it. It is my conviction as an old Freethinker that you are making herculean efforts in the cause of free thought and free speech, and are worthy of every possible help from all earnest Freethinkers. If it were possible for me to be rich in this world's goods, I think I should feel inclined to place at your disposal a very large sum of money to aid you in the glorious cause of the advancement of mental freedom.
Yours sincerely, JAMES BODY.

LA CROSSE, Feb., 7, 1878.

FRIEND BENNETT: I want to say a few words in THE TRUTH SEEKER to Geo. Francis Train, John A. Lant, and S. W. Payne. Some time over a year ago I sent two dollars for Geo. Francis Train's paper. I received five or six copies and then he stopped sending it to me, for what cause I never knew. I wrote to him two or three times since, but could get no answer. I wrote to him again about ten days ago that "I wanted the paper or my money," but have seen nothing of either paper or money yet.

Now, Mr. Editor, does not this look like a swindle? It is not the value of the two dollars that I care so much about, but the loss of the paper, as I would not have subscribed for it if I had not wanted it. Now, what can be thought of such an "evolutionary reformer?" Is he honest? He says in a card he had "100,000 copies struck off every week"—and could only send me six numbers.

He is now bragging and swelling in your paper from week to week about his "evoluting," and in your last paper blowing that he "put D. M. B. out of court, so that ends it!" While Train is blowing about his evoluting, let him be honest enough to evolute to me those two dollars or the paper. All who read this remember the evoluting P. E. 48, of Geo. Francis Train.

Last July I sent two dollars to John A. Lant, for two copies of the Labor, one for myself and the other for a friend. We received twelve or thirteen numbers each. I wrote to him two or three times; the last time I wrote I received a card that he was "moving from 34 Park Row, now 46, to 37 Park Row, now 30, also, removed family, which has taken up time, but the paper will be out soon." It is nearly three months since I received that information, but no papers have come to hand yet. Now, what can be thought of such reformers? When he was in the penitentiary I sent donations two or three times to his wife. Are these men, calling themselves reformers, who act in this way really honest? I am well aware that Lant is poor, but if he had been honest about it, and stated that he was not able to bring out the paper any longer, I should have been perfectly satisfied.

Mr. Editor, I have just read in Payne's Age of Reason, (No. 2.) an editorial wherein Payne appears to pay Comstock very great compliments, and after reading I sent him a card stating that "I hoped he had not gone over to Comstockism, and joined the Y. M. C. A., and the S. F. S. V., for if he had I thought he was acting the hypocrite to the Liberal public, and also to the Liberal cause." He states in the article referred to, that "Comstock has shown a leniency towards Liberals." What do you think of that, Mr. Editor? Did he show any leniency towards you when he forced you before Commissioner Shields, and seized your property?

Payne adds further, "Not until after complaints by citizens and by the post-office officials had been repeatedly made to him for two years, and not until he himself was threatened with prosecution for refusing to do his duty and comply with the terms of his oath of office, did he recently notice a well-known Infidel publisher, who was accused of sending obscene matter through the mails; and then no arrest was made." Mr. Editor, did Comstock never arrest you? Is it all humbug? Is it possible you have deceived us? And furthermore, have you and the Liberal press of this country "attached a lasting odium to the term Liberal" by giving the history and doings of one Anthony Comstock, and "if they will not apologize for the lies they have published about Comstock" will it be "a lasting odium to Liberals?"

Have all your friends and correspondents become "scheming, unprincipled outlaws and quacks," by publishing the doings of Comstock, and "arrayed the whole Liberal movement on the side of obscenity, vulgarity, and filth?" Is it possible, I say, that such language can come from an Infidel, an admirer, a follower, and a descendent of Thomas Paine, the true and genuine Infidel? I think not, by any means! I think Payne is a hypocrite, and a member of the Y.M. C. A., and perhaps a member of the S. F. S. V. But, Mr. Bennett, and Liberals all, I think you have not much cause to fear, for while such men as S. W. Payne are attempting to slay you and all other genuine Liberals, the piece has turned around, and he is shooting himself. I believe he is jealous of your defense fund, and I have no doubt he would have had a grab at it if he had half a chance. You have too much influence to please him; you are getting too popular; it will not do.
Your well wisher, J. PETTY.

LAWRENCE, MASS., Feb. 11, 1878.

FRIEND BENNETT: Please change the address of my paper from 497 Common street to 531 Essex street. Payne has, by his uncalled-for attacks upon you, lost fourteen subscribers in my shop. F. J. FREESE.

COLOGNE, IND., Feb. 7, 1878.

DEAR MR. BENNETT: I am a little girl, and I like THE TRUTH SEEKER very much; but I am writing for the paper for my grandpa. He sent you fifty cents last summer for the paper for three months, but he only received five papers. Do you know I think some of the Christian postmasters stole them out of the mail, so I told grandpa I would send for it and have it come in my name, and they would think it was a Sunday-school paper, if you will wrap it up well so they cannot see the name. Please send the back numbers from the first of January.
Yours respectfully, MISS KITTY E. GLASS.

OAK RIDGE, MO., Feb. 6, 1878.

MR. D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Having read quite a number of sympathetic and congratulatory letters in your paper touching your late arrest and discharge, I hope a few lines from Southeast Missouri will not be considered out of place.

I have been a careful reader of your paper for one year. I am delighted with it, as well as the "Humphrey-Bennett Discussion." Mr. H. is an able man, and said, perhaps, all that could be said on his side of the question. Teed Romulus Cyrus Mr. is a remarkable compound of oxygen, nitrogen, hydrogen, platinum, gold, silver, and greenbacks, and considerable common gas. Any other compound could not attempt the solution of such a problem—namely, "Jesus Christ is not only divine, but is Lord God, Creator of heaven and earth." It would have been better for Mr. Teed had he practiced his genius for a time upon the marsupial or "Open Letter" before entering the "house of Avatar"! From his skirmish-lines one would have thought his artillery in the rear perfect and monstrous. The gentleman can with equal propriety and ease prove the moon to be a yellow pumpkin, its light produced by a tallow dip in its cavity. Such discussions are indeed Teedious.
M. J. HINES.

CORSICANA, TEXAS, Jan. 28, 1878.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Enclosed find P. O. order and list of seven new subscribers to THE TRUTH SEEKER, which I have obtained in the last few days. I think I can send you more in a short time. I am a Spiritualist, and claim to be able to give a reason for "the hope that is within me," and consequently differ from you and many of your contributors in regard to the future life. Yet I feel that ours is a common cause, and I, for one, am with you heart and hand. I believe the time has come—even at the door—when Spiritualists and Liberalists of all shades of opinion should unite and stand shoulder to shoulder in the great cause of freedom—freedom of thought—freedom of speech—to express that thought. If any luke-warm, half-asleep, half Christian, Spiritualist, or Liberalist thinks the liberty of speech is in no danger, let him look at the case of Dr. Russell, in my own State, who was decoyed from his home and family at midnight by a lying, intriguing, pious, Christian mob, under the pretext that his medical skill was needed at a mover's camp, in a creek bottom, some distance from his house, who then, with six-shooters in hand, demanded him to strip, addressing him as follows: We know you are an honest man and a good physician, but we will tolerate no Infidels in Bell county, so by the help of God we will stop your career of Infidelity. They then gave him one hundred lashes on his bare back. And all for what—for the crime of free speech! because the Dr. would think and express his thoughts—because he did not and could not believe in the creeds of these merciless Christian devils. Yet after this damnable and hellish outrage upon one of our best and most useful citizens, there are some fawning, sycophantic, half-way Spiritualists and Liberalists that cry, Oh, there is no danger to free speech in this free and glorious nineteenth century! I think after they read the doings of St. Anthony Comstock and his saintly crew, the Y. M. C. A.—"ye saints of the Lord"—as set forth in THE TRUTH SEEKER of Jan. 19, they will begin to feel they are not on such a firm foundation, if they are living in the boasted enlightened nineteenth century. Your friend and well wisher, H. J. HOWELL.

LONGTON, KAN., Feb. 1, 1878.

MR. EDITOR: The enclosed list of subscribers was obtained despite many obstacles. Perhaps a special providence has been behind it all. If I thought so, I would let up; but, like a heathen in his blindness, I will stave ahead and endeavor to increase the list. The main trouble has been hard times. Perhaps old "Jealous" has assumed that role. If so, we must "go to the Devil." He is able to help us, for, according to "the best book the world ever saw," he has defeated his brother G. many a time—and then for the latter to talk about chaining him! He can't do it! But this pious view of the matter, as seen through the spectacles of faith, this divine providence business, looks quite different to the naked eye. So many are praying for bread and receiving a stone, and so many are not praying at all and are receiving bread, that the average human begins to wonder if there is not some mistake about it.

I lately heard a man state publicly, that he had settled upon an upland claim, a poor tract of land, and had gone to work to support his family. He was devout, and intermingled with all his labors earnest prayers and every other service to God his mind had known. But instead of the fruition of his hopes, the drouth came, and grasshoppers, and chinch bugs, and last, but not least, the malaria struck his wife and little children. Then it was that he deserted the spot where his means and his faith were buried together. Said he: "He created me and cursed me without a cause. He taught me the lesson, and now I will curse him while I live."

I said to him: "Sir, you have 'the cart before the horse,' You created him, and then cursed him because he would not do your bidding; but you are not alone; the greater part of the human race has served at the same trade."

Thousands in Kansas, and millions throughout the world, have, like this man, undertaken, with God's help, to defy and overcome the laws of nature, and always with the same dread result. But those who suffer the worst learn the most. Confidence lost in God is found again in man. The thousands of abandoned homes on the sterile uplands of Kansas remain, as so many tombstones to "faith," while uplifted humanity goes forth in obedience to the voice of nature, which says: "Put your plows in the rich soil of the valleys and live; expend your strength on the desert plain and die."

A select few, the "salt of the earth" among us here, continue, at the usual period, to break out in the same old spot, but with little effect, judging from what they show up. "Overhauling and repairing" would stand well for all they achieve in this region, and, in fact, it keeps them busy at that. Our township can boast of an average of fifteen preachers, not including "tramps," and when a schoolhouse is vacant there is a rush to see who will get to preach! These support themselves by manual labor, though we must withhold credit, for if the "filthy lucre" was in reach, most of them would be dishonest enough to take it and give only in return the interminable old story.

The excuse that the people want them to preach is not acceptable, in view of the fact that the people are educated so to do, in infancy, by the preachers! What a proud boast! That they have captured the minds of little children; dwarfed their little reason; seared over their little intellect with a blighting superstition, and led them captive to priestly authority! There are many sects here but only one church building, and its appearance confesses the failure of their revivals. No converts; no money. The building needs paint. I often think, as I pass by it, of the words of Preston, in one of his orations: "The blackened, age-cursed structure of Christianity is seamed and swaying to its fall." A labor bill of four years' standing was paid by having a festival and inviting in the Devil—he paying his fare and bringing his little games with him.

They pray like mad here sometimes, but, unlike Hamlet, there is no method in their madness; and perhaps that is the cause for their not subduing us Infidels! They are not united in their efforts. Some kind souls among them volunteer to approach the throne of grace and timidly venture a prayer for our conversion; but the more zealous, full of confidence in their own merits, and full of faith in "the promises," openly pray that we may be jerked into hell with an impetus, on a new and improved plan. One who often fills the pulpit here, in a fit of meekness, declared that hell was full of such as I already. This may give consolation to some poor creatures yet living.

Yours was a narrow escape from the henchman of the Y. M. C. A. (Your Most Consummate Asses). Comstock may yet say with Dogberry: "Write me down an ass." Your friends down this way—and they are many—have watched the progress of the affair anxiously, and though money is scarce, had it come to the worst, you would have received material aid from your fellow-Liberals in the far West. As it is, a feeling has been aroused that will be a benefit to the cause of mental freedom everywhere. THE TRUTH SEEKER enlarged, coming to us crisp and heavy and well freighted, is another source of encouragement. We live in the reign of big things, and our journals must not be out of style. If Freethinkers would no longer hesitate to "take up their cross," it would not be long ere their journals would rank among the best in our country, demonstrating to the world the existence of that oft-attempted but never perfected institution, with all that the words imply—a FREE PRESS!

Go on with your Freethinking! Be just, be generous, be resolute, as you are; and not long hence we shall see you, by the mere breath of your nostrils, sweeping the sleuth-hounds of the American Inquisition, like "dead flies," from your path. —— A. A. BARNES.

OTTAWA, KANSAS, Jan. 28th, 1878.

DEAR MR. BENNETT: The few Liberals here breathe freer since our friend Bennett is safe, and I can assure you you have no warmer friends than the few Liberalists here in Ottawa. And we will do all we can for the best Liberal paper ever published—the great and good TRUTH SEEKER. We do not want "a fountain filled with blood," but we do want and we do get a fountain filled with truth, knowledge, and good things every week in the great TRUTH SEEKER. —— W. W. FRASER.

MANASSAS, VA., Jan. 11, 1878.

DEAR FRIEND BENNETT: Without wishing to interfere in the discussion now pending beween yourself and your shrewd opponent, the Rev. Teed, I hope you will excuse me for making a few remarks, and accept my motives in a kindly spirit. In Vol. 5, No. 1, of the TRUTH SEEKER, you have, I fear, made an admission favorable to Mr. Teed's course of argument, and how you will avoid the inevitable conclusion I am unable to conjecture. It is the doctrine, omne vivum ex vivo, or life from life. This doctrine, fully carried out, leads to the conclusion of an eternal, infinite life, or living being, which is the favorite theory of the theist. This doctrine is fallacious, for if it be true, as Prof. Wm. Thompson declares, that at one time the earth was a red-hot ball, then no life could have existed on this globe. Subsequently, when the earth cooled down, and vegetable matter appeared suitable for food, then animal life appeared upon the earth. Was this anything else than spontaneous generation on a large scale, similar to what Dr. Bastian demonstrated on a small scale? Where, then, is the life from life doctrine? If "no physical and mental structure was ever propagated that was not preceded by a physical and mental structure," still it must be admitted that similar structures came into existence without propagation, for the all-sufficient reason that no living beings could exist upon a red-hot globe. If no such structures could have existed without propagation, and as you say, "in propagation there must be a parent for every child," then it follows, conclusively that there must be an eternal, infinite parent, as the original source of all physical and mental structures. This is granting the whole question in dispute.
Yours fraternally, T. R. KINGET, M. D.

ST. CATHERINE'S, ONT., Jan. 29, 1878.

BROTHER BENNETT: Enclosed with this I send you one dollar to continue my subscription to your paper. I send it in this manner for the reason that if it should go astray, it will be less than the full year to lose, and I can send the oftener. The last year's subscription I sent to the Banner of Light, I lost outright.

I have carefully watched your Comstock case all the way through, and must say he got the wrong pig by the ear when he meddled with you. The final result of it will, no doubt, be the bustification of Comstockism throughout the country, and that the Y. M. C. A. may go with it, is my prayer. Everything is working well for our side. Beecher, Farrar, Thomas, and others have knocked a big hole through the bottom of hell, and the white-choker gentry are becoming quite alarmed about it, for they well know that if they can't preach the devil, hell-fire and damnation to their flocks, their occupation is gone, and they will have to shut up their shanties dedicated to the Lord.

In your explanation in the last number of your paper, you touch off the Index right well. I don't believe in half-way work in anything. No compromise, no surrender in anything pertaining to orthodox theology is my motto. Nothing whatever is too sweeping or radical for me that pertains to the destruction of all useless orthodox mummery. I see that some take exception to some of your phraseology, such for instance as the heading of your epistle to Jesus Christ. Well, I presume it does sound harsh and blasphemous to those who have been taught to believe in his lordship's divinity and power, and it might be better in some instances to use milder expressions.

But the course that Comstock is taking is not the course to put down the like. It invariably results in the eagerly seeking, from curiosity, for the same, however bad, by the whole reading public, and I have no doubt that ten of your "Open Letters to Jesus Christ" are now read to one before. This Comstock maneuvre (undesignedly) is a bonum magnum advertisement for you.

Doubling the size of your paper is a fine improvement, and you fill it with the best of reading matter, and no reasonable person can object to much of it, whatever may be their creed.

If you have or do publish Ingersoll's lectures on "Ghosts" and "Liberty for Man, Women, and Child," please send them to me and I will circulate them as I did the others you sent me.

Some of my friends (business and otherwise) think me an awful critter for circulating your "Open Letter to Jesus Christ," although most of them have an itching to read it, notwithstanding their pretended piety.

I hope you may, before long, have the pleasure of informing the public that you have hundreds of subscribers in the Dominion of Canada. Underwood is forming a number of societies in this province, which will naturally call for such reading matter as you send forth to the world.
Yours in the good cause, C. B. THOMPSON.

George Francis Train.

Mr. Train holds himself responsible for the utterances here made and entirely exonerates the Editor from all responsibility therefor.

Train Jumps the Track.—Last Epistle to The Truth Seeker.

GODS IN GENERAL AND GHOSTS IN PARTICULAR.

Evolution.—The Sardine Fishery of Galilee.—God and His Little Apple.—The Overshadowing Operation.—The Holy Ghost at His Wash-Tub.—God and Devanaguy.—The Spelling-Book—Better than the Bible.—100,510,001 Priests in Five Thousand Years.—Noah and His Happy Family.—Benefactors of Our Race.—Apostrophe to the Universe.

NATURE'S GRAND MYSTERY.

MADISON SQUARE, P. E. 48.

CITIZEN D. M. B.:

According to Humboldt and Spencer, there are scattered over our globe at the present time some 320,000 species of vegetable life, and 2,000,000 species of animal life, and if to these are added the numbers of animal and vegetable species which have existed but have now become extinct, the number would not fall short of ten millions of species. Which is the more probable, that these ten millions of species of organized life are evolutions and modifications of an original germ or germs, or that they were all separate and distinct creations? We decidedly yield our assent to the former proposition.—D. M. B.; Tract 27.

And it is said one man represents all this! That history is only the individuality of one human being stretched through all time and space! And yet think of such ignoramuses as Moody, Beecher, and McCloskey anchoring this universal tea party down in that little sardine fishery of Galilee! What ages of bigotry, fanaticism, superstition, to stamp Comstockism on an entire people! But the rapids are past and daylight is near! The rotten old fabric of priestly gods will soon be the myth of deluded ages! The Psychologic tidal wave is advancing!

OVERBOARD WITH GOD.

But the fable that God once made man from clay, woman from a rib bone; that an apple cursed the whole world, and peoples hell for millions of years; that God was born of a young girl; that his creatures put him to death to appease his own anger or to satisfy his own sense of justice; that he has his eye constantly upon the 1,500,000,000 of individuals that exist on this globe; that he has the hairs of their heads all numbered, as well as of the quintillions of beings who preceded them, and that this is the Deity who reigns in, rules, and controls countless millions of other worlds, is an idea too preposterous to claim the credence of a sensible person for a moment.—D. M. B.; Tract 27.

But by discussing this monstrous lie do you not fan the flame? Are you not perpetuating the imposture? Why advertise the old Munchausenism by continual debate? Does anybody dispute the Goody Two-Shoes story? the Little Jack Horner fable? the Old Woman who Lived in a Shoe? 'Tis you Freethinkers that keep up the fight. You must stop debate by changing ot once the Anno Domini chronology.

A WHOLE NEST OF HOLY GHOSTS.

Christna was said to be begotten by God, and born of the virgin Devanaguy a thousand years earlier than the story was revamped in reference to Mary and Jesus. Nearly in the same age of the world, Buddha was believed to have been divinely begotten of the virgin Mahamia. Alankee, Genghis Khan's grandmother, was held to have been impregnated when a virgin by divine influence—by a ray from heaven. The Greek mythology is also full of the stories of gods and females cohabiting together, thus producing demi-gods. Mercury was the son of Jupiter and Maia (almost Mary); Apollo, the son of Jupiter and Latona; Hercules, the son of Jupiter and Alcmena; Bacchus, the son of Jupiter and Semele; Proserpine, the offspring of Jupiter and Ceres; and she was aftewards carried off by Pluto, and gave birth to Vulcan. Juno was the daughter of Saturn and Ops, and became the wife of Jupiter, and Pallas was the daughter of Jupiter and Metis.—D. M. B.; Tract 22.

Of course, the whole Immaculate falsehood was stolen bodily from lies much more ancient! But the wonder is that we continually try to prove that Jack the Giant Killer or Blue Beard did or did not exist! We conjure up ghosts, and Don Quixote the hob-goblin windmills! We manufacture those myths in order to argue about natural impossibilities! Frothingham, Alger, Adler, are only reproducing Bennettism! Stop the debate!

THE POLICE GAZETTE OF JERUSALEM.

We think the spelling-book, the reader, the grammar, and arithmetic are better than many parts of the Bible. Works on astronomy, chemistry, geology, physiology, botany, history, and all the sciences are better. Among the special authors we would prefer to the Bible are Shakspere, Pope, Byron, Moore, Burns, Combe, Macauley, Buckle, Lecky, Froude, Darwin, Huxley, Spencer, Mill, Tyndall, Fiske, Draper, Emerson, and many, many others. These teach a man something he ought to know, and the knowledge improves him and leads him on to higher and grander elevations of usefulness.—D. M. B.; Tract 22.

Yet these very men all cringed to the religious deception! They all became silent partners in the fraud! Its fables, legends, parables, lies, were all endorsed by science, poetry, and oratory.

You yourself are doing more to perpetuate the terrible delusion than all the so-called Liberals in the world. Your research is so thorough, your logic is so unanswerable, it Mosbyizes Comstock and brings the Shylock world to his assistance to battle you. The way to win is to throw the Bible where it will do the least harm and give up the contest. Relinquishment is possession?

CONCENTRATED DAMPHOOLISHNESS OF THE PRIESTHOOD.

If Elder Shelton and the sixty thousand other clergymen in the United States, and the five hundred thousand priests in the different varieties of religions on earth, together with the one hundred millions of priests which are estimated to have lived and preyed upon man in the last five thousand years—if all these were gods, and worked in concert, we do not believe they could make a universe out of nothing. By the by, this universe is a big thing to make. The sun, the earth, and all the other planets, asteroids, and satellites, are but an infinitesimal portion of the universe, whose millions of suns and systems reach so far into the abyss of space that it would require light, traveling at the rate of 200,000 miles per second, millions of years to travel from them to our solar system. As distant as these farther suns are, space and the universe still extend trillions of times farther, and so on forever, without limit, without end. What absurdity to talk about all this being made by a being and from nothing!—D. M. B.; Tract 22.

Is it not astonishing that priestcraft has been able so long to hoodwink mankind? Think of this lilliputian planet in this gigantic solar system absorbing all the universe, and riding through the Via Dolorosa on a one-horse jackass! Imagine the cheek of Saint Paul, Rome, and Moody in anchoring the whole world on the banks of Jordan! Chaos before cosmos indeed! Just as though it were possible to make something out of nothing! Bennettism is mighty and must prevail. Stop the debate, I say!

THAT COCK-AND-BULL DELUGE.

Who believes that the animals and birds from all latitudes and zones of the earth gathered together of their own accord, and marched into the ark in pairs or sevens, lions and calves, wolves and lambs, dogs and rabbits, cats and mice, hawks and chickens, swallows and flies, poisonous serpents and gentle doves, in all, over three hundred thousand animals—fowls and insects of all varieties of character and disposition—crowded into an ark pitched without and within, with a single door and window, and they closed, and thus, deprived of air, light, and appropriate food, they remained over a year—Noah's family, stench, filth, and all.—D. M. B.; Tract 22.

How this astounding delusion has shrouded the ages! And yet, the sixty thousand pulpit-tramps preach this every Sunday in unison! But have you not the moral courage to stop the argument? Is discussion so inborn in your nature that you must keep up the old fight? Why not evolute out of Infidelity, skepticism, and Spiritualism into the Psychologic Era? Have you culminated? Can you not advance a little further, and kill the swindle by letting it alone? It takes two to make a bargain or a fight. Why should you be a contestant? Let the dead bury its dead.

WHO WANTS TO BE AN INFIDEL?

We claim as Infidels all who have not believed in Christianity, and we are proud to acknowledge them the noblest moral heroes and benefactors of our race. We begin back with Socrates, Plato, Pythagoras, Zeno, Aristotle, Marcus Antoninus, Cicero, Seneca, and come down to Hobbes, Bolingbroke, Condorcet, Spinoza, Descartes, Gibbon, Diderot, Voltaire, Volney, Shelley, Helvetius, Goethe, Schiller, Humboldt, Byron, Paine, Franklin, Jefferson, Ethan Allen, Parker, J. Stuart Mill, Buckle, Lecky, Tylor, Darwin, Huxley, Spencer, Tyndall, Helmholtz, Lincoln, Sumner, Schmidt, Draper, Fiske, and a host of others that might be named. They are among the grandest men that ever lived. They were not Christians, and did not require the fear of a devil or hell to keep them from being cut-throats and robbers, as the Elder tacitly admits Christians do.—D. M. B.; Tract 22.

Admit that those Infidels are bigger men than Christians. Allow them to discount the whole evangelical outfit. What of that? Why glorify them? They all died comparatively young. None of them were five score, and many not three score years and ten. They all ate meat—a worse stimulant than opium, alcohol, or tobacco. Their opposition to the Christian fraud only helped to fasten the swindle on the world. If there is anything I must denounce worse than a Christian 'tis an Infidel. Why not be a man?

LOUD CHEERS FOR THE UNIVERSE!

We view with profound admiration thy grand mountains, thy beautiful valleys, the undulating landscapes, the broad plains and prairies, the sombre forests, the pleasant groves, the teeming meadows, the luxuriant fields, the grand old oceans, the expansive lakes, the smaller sheets of water, the majestic rivers, the lovely streams, the grand cataract, the laughing cascade, the sparkling springs, the gentle rill, the violent storm, the lightning flash, the reverberating thunder, the rushing wind, the gentle breeze, the portentous clouds, the descending rain, the silent dew, the reappearing sun, the beautiful rainbow, and every expression alike of thy power and beauty. We admire the ever-recurring seasons as they pass—lovely spring, genial summer, fruitful autumn, and even frosty winter.—D. M. B.; Tract 110.

Your apostrophe to the universe is good. I like the eternal requiem of nature. Those little tracts of yours are loaded with sparkling gems. I am glad that I have fallen in with your writings. All that is worth reading, you have written in lasting beauty. Where all are so noble, I hardly know what to select. If these thoughts of yours reached all mankind, what a revolution would take place in the minds of men!

G. F. T.

The Victory of the Atoms.

Now glory to the molecules, from which all creatures came!
And glory to the scientist who spreads abroad their fame!
Oh, hear him tell the wondrous tale that old Lucretius told!
How danced, and jumped, and rolled and thumped around the atoms bold;
How hither, thither, up and down, through all the realms of space,
Till every little molecule was joggled into place.
Hurrah! Hurrah! A single speech hath beat the sermons all—
Before the Atomic theory all other systems fall.
There was a time in history, or many years before,
When men made gods of dead ones, or even something lower.
Then sons of them grew wiser and laid the gods aside,
But first the great Democritus the little atoms spied
Before the swarm of Goths and Huns o'er Greece and Rome was hurled,
Which covered up for centuries the wisdom of the world.
And then wise Epicurus—who didn't care a fig—
For life or death, or anything; for little gods or big,
In his quiet garden sat and watched them as they tumbled o'er.
Till their subsequent proceedings interested him no more.
Next the whirling atoms struck the rude Tarpeian rock,
Evolving, as they fell, the great Lucretius from the shock;
And, after falling silently through all the realms of time,
Harmoniously arranged themselves in his resounding rhyme.
But then, alas! for centuries the molecules were hid
By Popes, and Monks, and Fathers all beneath the Bible lid,
Who strove, with all the pupils of the stupid Stagirite,
By logic and theology to keep them out of sight:
Till Copernicus appeared and brave Giordano Bruno,
Cassendi and the bishop good (not quite so bright, you know);
While Bacon, Newton, Hobbes, and Bolye for Darwin cleared the way,
To show how all creative power deep hid in Matter lay:
And slowly worked, age after age, to make or change a feather,
Or teach the bees Economy and Euclid—both together;
How Wit and Wisdom, Love and Hate, and all that stirs the soul,
Are only sparks that fall from atoms, clashing as they roll,
To spread the glorious Gospel, which tells how it is rife
With the potency and promise of every form of life.
Let every age its dream contrive of all that lies beyond—
Fit labor for each mighty mind to frame some fancy fond,
While men shall come and men shall go, as clouds of atoms made
In heaven's azure distance into viewless atoms fade.
Then glory to the molecules, from which all creatures came!
And to the great philosophers who celebrate their fame!
Hurrah! Hurrah! The victory is with the Atoms small;
Before their undivided throne all combinations fall.

The Battle of Change.

BY CHARLES MACKAY.

Great thoughts are heaving in the world's wide breast;
The time is laboring with a mighty birth;
The old ideas fall.
Men wander up and down in wild intent;
A sense of change preparing for the Earth
Broods over all.
There lies a gloom on all things under heaven—
A gloom portentious to the quiet men
Who see no joy in being driven
Onward from change, ever to change again;
Who never walk but on the beaten ways,
And love the breath of yesterdays—
Men who would rather sit and sleep
Where sunbeams through the ivies creep,
Each at his door-post all alone,
Heedless of near or distant wars,
Then wake and listen to the moan
Of storm-vexed forests nodding to the stars—
Or hear, far off, the melancholy roar
Of billows, white with wrath, battling against the shore.

Deep on their troubled souls the shadow lies;
And in that shadow come and go—
While fitful lightnings write upon the skies,
And mystic voices chant the coming woe—
Titanic phantoms swathed in mist and flame,
The mighty shapes of things without a name,
Mingling with forms more palpably defended,
That whirl and dance like leaves upon the wind;
Then marshaling in long array their hosts,
Rush forth to battle in a cloud-like land,
Thick phalanxed on those far aerial coasts,
As swarm the locusts plaguing Samarcand.
O! who would live, they cry, in time like this?
A time of conflict fierce, and trouble strange,
When old and new, over a dark abyss,
Light the great battle of relentless change!
And still before their eyes discrowned kings,
Desolate chiefs, and aged priests forlorn,
Flit by—confused—with all incongruous things,
Swooping in rise and fall on ponderous wings—
While here and there, amid a golden light,
Angelic faces, sweet as summer morn,
Which gleam an instant ere extinguished quite,
Or change to stony skulls, or spectres livid white.

But not to me—O! not to me appear
Eternal gloom. I see a brighter sky,
I feel the healthful motion of the sphere;
And, lying down upon the grass, I hear,
Far, far, away, yet drawing near,
A low, sweet sound of ringing melody;
I see the swift-winged arrows fly;
I see the battle and the combatants;
I know the cause for which their weapons flash;
I hear the martial music and the chants,
The shock of hosts, the armor clash,
As thought meets thought; but far beyond I see,
Adown the abysses of the Time to be,
The well-won victory of the Right;
The laying down of useless swords and spears,
The reconcilement ardently desired,
Of universal truth and might—
Whose long estrangement, filling earth with tears,
Gave every manly heart, divinely fired,
A lingering love, a hope inspired,
To reconcile them, never more to sunder.
Far, far away above the rumbling thunder,
I see the splendor of another day.
Ever since infant time began.
There has been darkness over man;
It rolls and shrivels up! it melts away!

JUST OUT!

AURICULAR CONFESSION AND Popish Nunneries.

BY WM. HOGAN.

Twenty-five years Confessing Priest. A very interesting work. 220 pages. Paper, 50 cents. Cloth, 75 cents. D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth st., New York.

TWO BOOKS ON FINANCE.

SPECIFIC PAYMENTS BETTER THAN SPECIE PAYMENTS.

BY EDWARD D. LINTON.

CONVERSATIONS ON THE CURRENCY.

BY EDW'D D. LINTON AND GEO. D. DRURY.

The question to be met and settled now is, Shall money continue to rule and curse mankind, or shall it be made to serve and bless? Price 25c. For sale at this office.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. H. HALLETT & CO., Portland, Maine. 1y7

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine. 1y7

GOLD Any worker can make $12 a day at home. Costly outfit free. Address TRUE & Co., Augusta, Maine. 1y7

RICH, RARE, RACY reading. The Lantern, With catalogue of novelties, rubber goods, etc. A. T. THAYER, 10 South Fifth ave., N. Y. 4t7

GHOSTS! GHOSTS!! GHOSTS!!

Send five cents for COL. INGERSOLL'S lecture on "Ghosts," as delivered at Albany, N. Y., Jan. 14, 1878. Just out, flashing with wit and genius. It is crammed with logic, arguments, sarcasms and facts. It is beautiful, it is grand, and more, it is true. Only five cents. With a photograph of its eloquent author for fifteen cents. With cabinet size of the same, thirty cents.

"Ghosts and other Lectures." A new work by Col. Ingersoll, soon to be issued. Send me stamp, and as soon as the book is out, will send you descriptive circular and price thereof. Send three-cent stamp for Catalogue of Books, Tracts, Photographs, etc.; also, club rates for Liberal and scientific newspapers and periodicals. Address, E. C. WALKER,
616 Lock Box B, Florence, Iowa.

LECTURES,

BY MRS. CLARA NEYMAN.

This talented lecturess will give the following lectures, at a reasonable compensation, before Liberal audiences, as may be desired:

1. German Skepticism.
2. What is True Religion?
3. Woman's Reform Work in Europe.

Address MRS. CLARA NEYMAN,
97 Maiden Lane, New York.

THE MAGNETIC TREATMENT.

Send 25 cents to DR. ANDREW STONE, Troy, N. Y., and obtain a large, highly-illustrated book on the system of Vitalizing Treatment. Also The New Gospel of Health for $1.25, a masterly work on progressive medicine and healing by magnetism, 519 pages, illustrated with 120 cuts for personal manipulations, explanatory of the sublime science of healing without medicine. 1y5

SEEDS.

Best and Cheapest in America, or Money Refunded.

Buy direct from Grower, postage or express paid, and get fresh, true, and reliable seeds. I can and shall beat any firm in America in quality and low prices. Beautiful illustrated Seed Catalogues and Garden Guide free.

Address R. H. SHUMWAY,
10'5 Seed Grower, Rockford, Ill.

BROUGHTONS
INVIGORATING
SYRUP. 25 CTS.

A certain cure for Headache, Constipation, Piles, Stomach, Liver or Kidney Diseases, Weakness, &c. 25 cents per bottle. Incurable cases solicited and cured or money refunded. The same ingredients put up in powders to be sent by mail. Sample bottle, circular, and 2615

Advice Free, 495 Broome St., N. Y.

READER, that little cottage contains one of the choicest libraries in the country. I buy my books of J. FRANCIS RUGGLES, Bibliopole, Bronson, Mich. Rare O. P. works a specialty. Lists for stamp. 3m1

ATTENTION, LADIES!

THE BEST THING OUT.

An Excellent, non-Rusting, Durable Galvanized Iron Plater,

with directions for using the same, will be sent, post-paid, on receipt of $1.25, with order and address. E. D. BLAKEMAN,
Circleville, O.

The Priest in Absolution,

The first Number of the "HOLY CROSS SERIES," is from the abridged London edition of the same work, which created so much excitement in England. The original volume was issued by the "High Church" authorities as a guide to the clergy in the confessional, and was designed to be introduced into the English Church. Price 25 cents,

D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth St., New York.

☞ The other twenty-five numbers of the "Holy Cross Series" are being brought out as rapidly as possible.

DO YOU WANT Photographs, Albums, Gold Pens, Pencils, Paper, Stationery, Knick-knacks, Notions, Novelties of every description? Beware of unreliable dealers—send risk-need only to the old, original and only "HEADQUARTERS." Established, 1860. We originated what is now an enormous trade. We import books weekly. Supply all, Scientific, Legal, Medical, Sermons and other books not often to be obtained—in fact, supply ANYTHING AND EVERYTHING in the Book or any other line. Our large store has four floors crowded with goods of books on every known subject, and all offered very low. CATALOGUES FREE. Information given. Send stamp, and send now. Address, HUNTER & CO., PUBLISHERS, HINSDALE, N. H.

THE TRUTH SEEKER COLLECTION

OF

FORMS, HYMNS, AND RECITATIONS.

Forms for organizing Societies, Forms for Constitutions and By-laws, for Funeral Services, Marriage Services, Naming of Infants, Obituary Notices, Epitaphs, Wills, etc. Also, nearly 500 Liberal and Spiritualistic Hymns, original and selected; for Public Meetings, Funerals, Social Gatherings, etc., etc. The whole supplemented by a fine selection of Recitations, comprising many of the finest poetical gems in the language. Nearly 600 pages, at the extremely low price of 75 cents in cloth. The price is made low, so that every family can have a copy. Let none fail to have it. D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth St., New York.

PROFESSOR MARTINEZ, the great Spanish Seer and Wizard, will for 25 Cents, with your age, height, color of eyes and look of hair, send to you a correct picture of your future husband or wife, initials of real name, the time and place where you will first meet, and the date of marriage. Address, Prof. MARTINEZ, 42 Province St., Boston, Mass. This is no humbug!

TRUE TIME A perfect GEM for the pocket of every traveller, trader, boy, farmer, and for EVERYBODY desiring a reliable Time-Keeper and also a superior Gem pass. Usual watch size, steel works, glass crystal, all in a neat CHROIDE case. Perfection Guaranteed. WARRANTED to denote correct time and to keep in order—if fairly used—for two years. Nothing like it! This perfect triumph of mechanism will be sent in a neat case, prepaid to any address, for only $1.00; 3 for $2.00. Circulars sent Free. BEWARE of a "bogus" article offered as a "premium." —Get the BEST.—Get the Genuine. Send all orders to the sole Agents, J. J. KING & CO., Brattleboro', Vt.

TIME-KEEPER.

The Popes and Their Doings.

NO. 3 OF THE "HOLY CROSS SERIES."

Being brief stories of fully one hundred and fifty of the conspicuous and sinful Popes—the Vicars of Christ and Vicegerents of God—who filled the chair of the Holy See in Rome during several centuries. The cheapest and most popular history of the Popes ever written. A friend styles it "rich, rare and racy." 273 pp., 12mo. Sent by mail at the very low price of 50 cents in paper; 75 cents in cloth.

Address D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth St., N. Y.

HISTORY OF THE CONFLICT BETWEEN RELIGION AND SCIENCE. Truly one of the most valuable works that have appeare within the last ten years. By PROF. DRAPER. Price, $1.75.

PRO AND CON OF SUPERNATURAL RELIGION; or an answer to the question, Have we a Supernaturally-Revealed, Divinely-Inspired and Miraculously-Attested Religion in the World? By E. E. GUILD, ex-Universalist clergyman. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

Works of Thomas Paine.

COMMON SENSE. His first and most important political work. Clear type. Paper, 15 cts.

THE CRISIS. Containing Nos. I. to XVI., inclusive. Written in the "times that tried men's souls" during the American Revolution. 12mo. Full, clear type. Paper, 50 cents; cloth 80 cts.

THE RIGHTS OF MAN. Written in defense of his fellow man. A work almost without a peer in the world. On full, bold type. 12mo. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

THE AGE OF REASON. On large, clear type. Paper, 25 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

THE AGE OF REASON AND AN EXAMINATION OF THE PROPHECIES. Full, bold type. 12mo. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

PAINE'S POLITICAL WORKS. Complete in one volume, on full, bold type. Containing "Common Sense," "The Crisis" (sixteen numbers), and "The Rights of Man," with a fine steel portrait. Cloth, $1.50.

PAINE'S THEOLOGICAL WORKS. Complete. 12mo. Composed of the "Age of Reason," "Examination of the Prophecies," "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," "Letter to Mr. Erskine," "Letter to Camille Jordan," "An Essay on Dreams," "Of the Religion of Deism," etc., etc., with a life and fine steel portrait of Paine. Cloth, $1.50.

THOMAS PAINE'S GREAT WORKS. Complete. New edition. The cheapest and best ever sold. Containing a Life of Paine, his POLITICAL WRITINGS—"Common Sense," "The Crisis," "Rights of Man"—his THEOLOGICAL WRITINGS—"Age of Reason," "Examination of the Prophecies," "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," "Letter to Mr. Erskine," "An Essay on Dreams," "Letter to Camile Jordan," "Of the Religion of Deism"—all in one large volume, crown-octavo, of THE TRUTH SEEKER LIBRARY, with a fine steel portrait of Paine. Cloth, $3.00; colored leather, red burnished edges, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

LIFE OF THOMAS PAINE. By Calvin Blanchard. 12mo. Large, clear type, with a fine steel portrait of Paine. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents. Published by

D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth st., New York.

LIST OF PHOTOGRAPHS

For Sale at The Truth Seeker Office.

Thomas Paine.	F. E. Abbot.
Paine's Bust.	Frothingham.
Paine's Monument.	Wendell Phillips.
Voltaire.	Emerson.
Rousseau.	Garrison.
Humboldt.	Henry Bergh.
Goethe.	Peter Cooper.
Schiller.	D. R. Burt.
Aug. Comte.	S. P. Andrews.
Heine.	Walt Whitman.
Alex. Pope.	Froude.
John Milton.	Max Muller.
Goldsmith.	Warren Chase.
Shelley.	Jas. Parton.
Byron.	Wm. Denton.
Burns.	Dr. Slade.
Washington.	A. J. Davis.
Franklin.	Foster.
Jefferson.	J. M. Peebles.
John Adams.	Frances Wright.
J. Q. Adams.	E. V. Wilson.
Madison.	G. L. Henderson.
Jackson.	Prof. Fiske.
Lincoln.	Fred Douglas.
Lincoln's Monument.	N. P. Banks.
Gerrit Smith.	P. V. Nasby.
Henry C. Wright.	Beecher.
J. S. Mill.	Tilton.
Sumner.	Moulton.
Edgar A. Poe.	G. W. Curtis.
Greeley.	Th. Nast.
Castellar.	J. G. Bennett.
Tennyson.	Chas. A. Dana.
Darwin	Phoebe Carey.
Tyndall.	Alice Carey.
H. Spencer.	Elizabeth C. Stanton.
Huxley.	Susan B. Anthony.
Proctor.	Lucy Stone.
Draper.	Julia Ward Howe.
Bradlaugh.	Chas. Cheney.
Holyoake.	Paulina Davis.
Ingersoll.	Mary F. Davis.
Underwood.	Emma H. Britten.
Mendum.	Lizzie Fowler.
Seaver.	Mrs. Slenker.
L. Colby.	Susan H. Wixon.
Dr. Hare.	D. M. Bennett.
Judge J. W. Edwards.	W. S. Bell.
Lizzie Doten.	J. O. Bundy.
Mrs. J. Conant.	S. S. Jones.
Dr. Mary E. Walker (full figure).	Asa K. Butts.
	W. F. Jamieson.

Geo. Francis Train.

and hundreds of others, including generals, statesmen, poets, actors, actresses, etc. at 15 cents each singly, or eight for one dollar.

Neat Albums, by mail, to hold 30 photos., 30 cts., to hold 50, $1.

D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., New York.

THE SPIRIT OF '76 AND NOW. Charming Chromos, or a fine Dictionary, cloth, 251 pages, only $1. Trial Trip, three months, 15 cents. Specimens FREE. Don't put it off but SEND NOW. Address, "STAR SPANGLED BANNER," Hinsdale, N. H.

THE OUTCAST.

By WINWOOD READE author of "Martyrdom of Man."

This is his last work. Mr. Reade was unquestionably one of the ablest writers of the present century. His "Martyrdom of Man" attracted extraordinary attention in Europe and in this country, for its ability, brilliancy and boldness. This last work is regarded with equal favor. The English edition was published at two dollars. We give it entire for

THIRTY CENTS IN PAPER.

ASTROLOGY.

PROF. LISTER, Astrologer, 505 W. 23d st., New York. 44 years' practice, 27 in Boston. Can be consulted by letter. Send for Circular. Address all letters 505 West 23d st., New York City.

SPERMATORRHŒA

should be in the hands of those suffering from this LIFE-WASTING DISEASE. It is an external application, and has thoroughly and permanently cured over one thousand cases, and some of them were in a terribly shattered condition; had been in the insane asylums, many had falling-sickness-fits; others on the verge of consumption, while others again had become foolish and hardly able to take care of themselves. For further information, address, with stamp, Vineland, N. J., where DR. FELLOWS is permanently located, and obtain his private circular, with cures sworn to, which is unimpeachable testimony to the doctor's skill and reliability as a physician in treating this prevalent and most dangerous of all diseases, SPERMATORRHŒA. 1tf

☞ TERMS WITHIN THE REACH OF ALL. ☜

BOOK BUYERS,

And all who wish to subscribe to periodicals should send 15 cents for No. 16 of The Evolution. Address

THE EVOLUTION, 34 Dey Street, N. Y.

Christianity and Infidelity

A JOINT DISCUSSION BETWEEN

REV. G. H. HUMPHREY, Presb't'n. Clergyman,

OF NEW YORK, AND

D. M. BENNETT, Editor of The Truth Seeker.

It was conducted in the columns of The Truth Seeker, a letter alternately from each contestant appearing each week, beginning April 7, 1877, and closing Sept. 29, 1877, thus continuing just six months, giving thirteen letters from Humphrey and thirteen replies by Bennett.

The subjects discussed were as follows:

PART I.—The relative services of Christianity and Infidelity to American Liberty.

PART II.—The relative services of Christianity and Infidelity to Learning and Science.

PART III.—Is there a stronger probability that the Bible is divine than that Infidelity is true?

The discussion has excited a large share of interest, both among believers and unbelievers; and as both sides are fairly presented, it is suited to readers of all shades of opinion.

The New York Advocate, a paper having a very extensive circulation, in speaking of the volume, says, "Perhaps a more able and exhaustive presentation of both sides of the great questions which have agitated the civilized world for centuries has never been made. At any rate, in this volume will be found a perfect magazine or storehouse of arguments, pro and con, which every intelligent man and woman should peruse with candor and with an earnest desire to arrive at sound conclusions on themes of the highest importance to all mankind. . . . Light is what we need. Let the controversies proceed. Let the blows descend upon the error-dispelling anvil. Let the sparks fly in all directions from the heated steel. The truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, is what the people demand on all the great questions of the day, whether of Finance, Science, Politics, or Religion, and discussion will elicit it." Let every person who feels the slightest interest in theological questions, whether on one side or the other, read the Humphrey-Bennett Discussion.

A thick 12mo volume of 550 pages, well bound sent, post-paid, to any address, for the low price of one dollar.

Address D. M. BENNETT, Publisher
141 Eighth St., New York.

JUST ISSUED.

BEYOND THE VEIL.

A very neat and entertaining volume, giving beautiful descriptions of life, occupations, etc., in the Spirit World. Dictated by the spirit of Percy B. Randolph, through the mediumship of Mrs. Francis H. McDougal and Mrs. Luna Hutchinson of California. With a steel-plate engraving of Dr. Randolph.

Price $1.50, post-paid by mail.

D. M. BENNETT
141 Eighth St., N. Y.

BOOKS FOR THINKERS,

PUBLISHED BY

CHARLES P. SOMERBY, No. 139 Eighth Street, New York,

(A few doors East of Broadway.)

39.—Labor's Prayer, by Charles Bradlaugh..... 5
40.—Poverty: Its Cause and Cure, by M. G. H..... 10
41.—The Value of Biography, by G. J. Holyoake..... 10
42.—Science and the Bible Antagonistic, by Charles Watts... 10
43.—The Christian Scheme of Redemption, by Charles Watts. 5
44.—The Logic of Death, by G. J. Holyoake..... 10
45.—The Character of Christ, by Charles Watts..... 5
46.—Atheism and the Gloucester Execution, by Chas. Watts. 5
47.—Poverty: Its Effects on the People, by Chas. Bradlaugh. 5

Other Iron-Clads are in active preparation.

The Manna Series.

	Cents.
1.—Original Manna for "God's chosen.".....	5
2.—B. F. Underwood's Prayer, per dozen.....	10
3.—New Life of David, by Chas. Bradlaugh.....	5
4.—Facetiæ for Free Thinkers.....	10
5.—200 Questions Without Answers.....	5
6.—A Dialogue Between a Christian Missionary and a Chinese Mandarin.....	10
7.—Queries Submitted to the Bench of Bishops by a Weak but Zealous Christian.....	10
8.—A Search After Heaven and Hell, by Austin Holyoake..	5
9.—New Life of Jonah, by Chas. Bradlaugh.....	5
10.—A Few Words about the Devil, by Chas. Bradlaugh.....	5
11.—The New Life of Jacob, by Chas. Bradlaugh.....	5
12.—Daniel the Dreamer, by Austin Holyoake.....	10
13.—A Specimen of the Bible: Esther, by Austin Holyoake...	10
14.—The Acts of the Apostles: A Farce, by Austin Holyoake...	10
15.—Ludicrous Aspects of Christianity, by Austin Holyoake...	10
16.—The Twelve Apostles, by Chas. Bradlaugh.....	5
17.—Who Was Jesus Christ? by Chas. Bradlaugh.....	5
18.—What Did Jesus Teach? by Chas. Bradlaugh.....	5
19.—New Life of Abraham, by Chas. Bradlaugh.....	5
20.—New Life of Moses, by Chas. Bradlaugh.....	5
21.—A Secular Prayer, by Austin Holyoake, per dozen.....	10

Other numbers of Manna for all sorts of hungry people are in preparation.

Good Discounts on Orders of $5 and Upward, according to quantity.
Send 10 cents for Prometheus containing 28 pp. choice reading matter and a Full List of Liberal Publications; or for List only, Free.

CHARLES P. SOMERBY,
PUBLISHER, BOOKSELLER, IMPORTER, AND PRINTER,
139 EIGHTH ST., Bet. Broadway and Fourth Ave., NEW YORK.

FULL DESCRIPTION OF OTHER LIBERAL WORKS FROM TIME TO TIME.

READ OUR ADVERTISEMENTS EVERY WEEK, AS FREQUENT CHANGES WILL BE MADE.

Gems of Thought.

INNOCENCE is like polished armor, it adorns and it defends.—South.

EVERY inordinate cup is unblessed and the ingredient is a devil.—Shakspere.

THE march of intellect, which licks all the world into shape, has even reached the devil.—Goethe.

AS NO roads are so rough as those that have just been mended, so no sinners are so intolerant as those that have just turned saints.—Colton.

WHATEVER be the motive of insult, it is always best to overlook it; for folly scarcely can deserve resentment, and malice is punished by neglect.—John son.

I NEVER drink. I cannot do it on equal terms with others. It costs them only one day; but me three—the first in sinning, the second in suffering, and the third in repenting.—Sterne.

THE conflict of the ages has been the conflict between the received religion and the tendency of civilization. The saviors of the world, one and all, have suffered martyrdom at the bloody hands of religion.—Hudson Tuttle.

IT is no proof of a man's understanding to be able to confirm whatever he pleases; but to be able to discern that what is true is true, and that what is false is false, this is the mark and character of intelligence.—Swedenborg.

THE slight that can be conveyed in a glance, in a gracious smile, in a wave of the hand, is often the ne plus ultra of art. What insult is so keen, or so keenly felt, as the polite insult, which it is impossible to resent?—Julia Kavanaugh.

SOME men will not shave on Sunday, and yet they spend all the week in shaving their fellow-men; and many folks think it very wicked to black their boots on Sunday morning, yet they do not hesitate to black their neighbor's reputation on week-days.—Beecher.

THE superior man is he who develops, in harmonious proportions, his moral, intellectual, and physical nature. This should be the end at which men of all classes should aim, and it is this only which constitutes real greatness.—Douglas Jerrold.

EVERY apartment devoted to the circulation of the glass may be regarded as a temple set apart for the performance of human sacrifices. And they ought to be filled up, like the ancient temples in Egypt, in a manner to show the real atrocity of the superstition that is carried on within their walls.—Beddoes.

THE habit of using ardent spirits, by men in office, has occasioned more injury to the public, and more trouble to me, than all other causes. And were I to commence my administration again, the first question I would ask, respecting a candidate for office would be "Does he use ardent spirits?"—Jefferson.

NOT to return one good office for another is inhuman; but to return evil for good is diabolical. There are too many even of this sort, who, the more they owe, the more they hate. There is nothing more dangerous than to oblige those people; for when they are conscious of not paying the debt, they wish the creditor out of the way.—Seneca.

THE past needed sects and the battle of conflicting creeds; the present has no use for them. They are dead bodies, once pregnant with vitality, now festering in decay. Something else is required. It is positive knowledge, scientific accuracy of thought and demonstration. Blind belief finds its last hold with the ignorant.—Hudson Tuttle.

LET all remember that the days of the Inquisition and intimidation are among the dark and gloomy things of the past. There may be small and obscure and benighted places in Texas, or the torrid regions of old orthodox hell, where brute force is above and intellect below par; but such regions only wait the plowshare of progress to become productive vineyards, yielding a rich and golden fruitage.

WHATEVER may be a success in the primary education of boys should be adopted in the primary instruction and training of girls. Were girls permitted to exercise as boys do, unrestrained by maxims and trammels which ignorance imposes at home and abroad, in the nursery and the school-room, they would become nearly as muscular, and much more expanded—their chests broader—but an instinctive delicacy never forsakes them. Women would not be so nervously excitable and petulant were they not only permitted but compelled to retire and rise earlier, and have plenty of cheering exercise to strengthen all the muscles.—Ways of Women.

FAITH must succumb to facts—dogmas to the stern and immutably severe decrees of Nature. Law is impartial; and disregarded, strikes every transgressor, unmindful of penance and prayer. All the sacrifices and supplications of the race cannot avert the suffering that will surely succeed an abuse of the laws of life. The shaking hands and shattered nerves of the drunkard cannot be cured by counting beads, or belief in the mediatorial blood of any Christ. Disease and pain and premature age will be the punishment of every person who trifles with the laws of his being; and if we would live happily we must learn the glorious gospel of health, and lead pure and noble lives. Evil can not be condoned; and the only pathway to peace and happiness is by ruling our lives in accordance with natural law.—Sara B. Chase, A. M., M.D.

Odds and Ends.

A TEACHER says: "In one evening I counted twenty-seven meteors sitting on my piazza."

NOAH had no Welsh rabbits in the ark. They are the result of postdiluvian evolution and a depraved appetite.

THE nationality of Adam and his faithful and virtuous better half has at length been ascertained. They were Germ'uns.

A YOUNG lady the other day, after a sun-shower, was heard to exclaim, "What an elegant trimming that rainbow would make for a white lace overdress."

THERE is nothing more mortifying to a man who is anxious to be published as a hero than to seize a drowning woman by the hair and then have the hair come off.

IT is announced as a cheering sign of the progress of civilization among the Indians that the Cherokee nation has a debt and is unable to pay the interest on it.

"GO, MY son, and shut the shutter"—
This I heard a mother utter.
"Shutter's shut," the boy did mutter;
"I can't shut it any shutter."

A BACHELOR, in speaking of an infant, said, "It is a meaningless, shapeless mass of abominable pink, hedged round with a faint suggestion of damnable blue and black. It is a monstrosity."

OLD Kenipp Kenipkins, otherwise known as "Old Four Eyes," says that the reason why he sometimes ornaments his proboscis with four pairs of glasses is that they give him great foursight.

A DEVOTED wife will always speak plainly but kindly to her husband. Here is a case in point: "When I die," said a married man, "I want to go where there is no snow to shovel." His wife said that she presumed he would.

A FREE-AND-EASY actor passed three festive days at the seat of the Marquis and Marchioness of ——, without invitation, convinced that as my lord and lady were not on speaking terms, each would suppose, as proved to be the case, the other had asked him.

THE mother-in-law finds a defender in the San Francisco Mail, which says: If Adam had had a mother-in-law to look after him and his wife, it is more than probable that to this very day we might have been able to caper about in the light and airy costume of our first parents.

BROWN had been in love with a young lady, and asked permission to call her by the expressive name of some animal, which was granted on condition that she should have the same privilege. On leaving, Brown said, "Good night, dear!" "Good night, bore," said she.

HIS WIFE caught him with his arms around the hired girl's neck, but his courage even in this trying moment never forsook him. "I suspected some one of stealing the whiskey on the preserves, Jane, for some time, and you know her breath would have to smell if she was the guilty party."

AT a school examination a visitor asked a boy if he could forgive those who wronged him. "Could you," said the inspector, "forgive a boy, for example, who had insulted or struck you?" "Y-e-s, sir," replied the lad, very slowly; "I—think—I—could." But he added in a much more rapid manner, "I could if he was bigger than I am."

AS A party of gentlemen were taking dinner at a country inn, one of the guests found the poultry rather tough. After exercising his ingenuity to no effect in trying to dissect an old fowl, he turned to the waiter and asked, "Have you such a thing as a powder-flask?" "No sir; we have not. Do you want one?" "Why, yes. I think the shortest way would be to blow the fellow up."

GREENLAND has no cats. Imagine cats in a country where the nights are six months long! A scientist says that cats are born blind at the sea level and both blind and deaf at 7,300 feet above the sea, but he has not yet discovered at what elevation they are born deaf, dumb, and blind. He may have our cat to experiment on. Old man Skeezicks has invented a new kind of cat. It is a dead cat, and much superior to the old-fashioned kind. The new patent improved cat, when built after Skeezicks' plans and specifications, is composed of straw and rags carefully inserted into the outer shell of a second-hand old-fashioned cat. These patent cats never serenade. Those who prefer the common cat will be glad to know that they can cure them of their bad habits by killing them about once or twice a month.

A TIMID girl entered an editor's office and laid a poem on his table. It read thus:

How dear to my heart is the goat of my childhood,
When fond recollection presents him to me;
The beautiful beast which whene'er he was riled would Make everything fly from the presence of he.
My mischievous Nan was the frowsiest butter
That ever did butt a stone fence till it fell;
He'd see it a coming, a scream he would utter,
Then brace his fore legs and go at it pell-mell.
Oh, how he would buck it! An iron-bound bucket
He once tried to buck at—and died in the well.

The editor read it over, and fancied the lines seemed a little familiar, and he asked her if she wrote it herself. She fixed one eye on him while the other strayed out of the window, and in a faltering voice said she did. The editor then accepted the lines as a very pathetic picture of rural felicity, but despite all he could do he thought he had heard something like it somewhere.

Truth Seeker Tracts.

No.	(REVISED LIST.)	Cts.
1.	Discussion on Prayer. D. M. Bennett and two Clergymen.	5
2.	Oration on the Gods. Ingersoll.	10
3.	Thomas Paine.	5
4.	Arraignment of the Church. Ingersoll.	5
5.	Heretics and Heresies. "	5
5.	Humboldt. "	5
7.	The Story of Creation. Bennett.	5
8.	The Old Snake Story. "	2
9.	The Story of the Flood. "	5
10.	The Plagues of Egypt. "	2
11.	Korah, Datham, and Abiram. " nnett.	2
12.	Balaam and his Ass. "	2
13.	Arraignment of Priestcraft. "	3
14.	Old Abe and Little Ike. Syphers.	3
15.	Come to Dinner.	2
16.	Fog Horn Documents. "	2
17.	The Devil Still Ahead. "	2
18.	Slipped Up Again. "
19.	Joshua Stopping the Sun and Moon. D. M. Bennett.	5
20.	Samson and his Exploits. Bennett.	2
21.	The Great Wrestling Match. "	2
22.	Discussion with Elder Shelton. "	10
23.	Reply to Elder Shelton's Fourth Letter. D. M. Bennett.	3
24.	Christians at Work. Wm. McDonnell.	5
25.	Discussion with Geo. Snode. Bennett.	5
26.	Underwood's Prayer.	1
27.	Honest Questions and Honest Answers. D. M. Bennett.	5
28.	Alessandro di Cagliostro. C. Sotheran.	10
29.	Paine Hall Dedication Address. B. F. Underwood.	2
30.	Woman's Rights & Man's Wrongs. Syphers.	2
31.	Gods and God-houses. "	2
32.	The God's of Superstition and the God of the Universe. D. M. Bennett.	3
33.	What has Christianity Done? Preston.	3
34.	Tribute to Thomas Paine.	2
35.	Moving the Ark. D. M. Bennett.	1
36.	Bennett's Prayer to the Devil.	2
37.	Short Sermon. Rev. Theologicus, D.D.	1
38.	Christianity not a Moral System. X. Y. Z.	3
39.	The True Saint. S. P. Putnam.	3
40.	Bible of Nature vs. The Bible of Men. J. Syphers.	3
41.	Our Ecclesiastical Gentry. Bennett.	1
42.	Elijah the Tishbite. "	3
43.	Christianity a Borrowed System. "	3
44.	Design Argument Refuted. Underwood.	2
45.	Elisha the Prophet. Bennett.	3
46.	Did Jesus Really Exist? "	3
47.	Cruelty and Credulity of the Human Race. Dr. Daniel Arter.	5
48.	Freethought in the West. G. L. Henderson.	5
49.	Sensible Conclusions. E. E. Guild.	3
50.	Jonah and the Big Fish. D. M. Bennett.	1
51.	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 1.	5
52.	Marples-Underwood Debate. Underwood.	3
53.	Questions for Bible Worshipers. B. F. Underwood.	2
54.	An Open Letter to Jesus Christ. Bennett.	5
55.	The Bible God Disproved by Nature. W. E. Coleman.	3
56.	Bible Contradictions.	1
57.	Jesus Not a Perfect Character. Underwood.	2
58.	Prophecies.	2
59.	Bible Prophecies Concerning Babylon. B. F. Underwood.	2
60.	Ezekiel's Prophecies Concerning Tyre. B. F. Underwood.	2
61.	History of the Devil. Isaac Paden.	5
62.	The Jews and their God. "	10
63.	The Devils Due-Bills. John Syphers.	3
64.	The Ills we Endure—their Cause and Cure. D. M. Bennett.	2
65.	Short Sermon No. 2. Rev. Theologicus, D.D.	2
66.	God Idea in History. H. B. Brown.	5
67.	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets No. 2.	5
68.	Ruth's Idea of Heaven and Mine. Susan H. Wixon.	2
69.	Missionaries. Mrs. E. D. Slenker.	2
70.	Vicarious Atonement. J. S. Lyon.	3
71.	Paine's Anniversary. C. A. Codman.	3
72.	Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego. D. M. Bennett.	2
73.	Foundations. John Syphers.	3
74.	Daniel in the Lion's Den. Bennett.	2
75.	An Hour with the Devil. "	10
76.	Reply to Erastus F. Brown. D. M. Bennett.	3
77.	The Fear of Death. D. M. Bennett.	5
78.	Christmas and Christianity. D.M.Bennett.	5
79.	The Relationship of Jesus, Jehovah, and the Virgin Mary. W. E. Coleman.	2
80.	Address on Paine's 139th Birthday. Bennett.	5
81.	Hereafter, or the Half-way House. John Syphers.	1
82.	Christian Courtesy. Bennett.	2
83.	Revivalism Examined. Dr. A. G. Humphrey.	5
84.	Moody's Sermon on Hell. Rev. J. P. Hopps, London.	2
85.	Matter, Motion, Life and Mind. Bennett.	10
86.	An Enquiry about God's Sons. "	2
87.	Freethought Judged by its Fruits. B. F. Underwood.	1
88.	David, God's Peculiar Favorite. Mrs. E. D. Slenker.	3
89.	Logic of Prayer. Charles Stephenson,	3
90.	Biblo-Mania. Otter Cordates.	2
91.	Our Ideas of God. B. F. Underwood.	1
92.	The Bible: is it Divinely Inspired? Dr. D. Arter.	5
93.	Obtaining Pardon for Sins. Hudson Tuttle.	1
94.	The New Raven. Will Cooper.	5
95.	Jesus Christ. D. M. Bennett.	10
96.	Ichabod Orane Papers.	10
97.	Special Providences. W. S. Bell.	2
98.	Snakes. Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker.	2
99.	Do the Works of Nature prove a Creator? Sciota.	5
100.	The Old and the New. R. G. Ingersoll.	5
101.	110th Anniversary of Thomas Paine's Birthday. Bennett et als.	5
102.	The Old Religion and the New. W. S. Bell.	1
103.	Does the Bible Teach us all we Know. Bennet.	2
104.	Evolution of Isrsel's God. A. L. Rawson.	10
105.	Decadence of Christianity. Capphro.	2
106.	Franklin, Washington and Jefferson Unbelievers. Bennett.	2
107.	The Safe Side. H. B. Brown.	5
108.	The Holy Bible a Historical Humbug. S. H. Preston.	1
109.	Ghosts. Ingersoll, 4 pp.	5
110.	Materialistic Prayer. Bennett, 4 pp.	1
111.	Reply to Scientific American. Bennett,	1
112.	Sensible Sermon. Savage, 8 pp.	2
113.	Come to Jesus. Bennett, 8 pp.	2

SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

1.	Hereditary Transmission. Prof. Louis Elsberg, M.D.	5
2.	Evolution; from the Homogeneous to the Heterogeneous. B. F. Underwood.	3
3.	Darwinism. B. F. Underwood.	3
4.	Literature of the Insane. F. B. Marvin.	5
5.	Responsibility of Sex. Mrs. Chase, M.D.	3
6.	Graduated Atmospheres. J. McCarroll.	2
7.	Death. Frederic R. Marvin, M.D.	5
8.	How do Marsupial Animals Propagate their kind? A. B. Bradford.	5
9.	The Unseen World. Prof. John Fiske.	10
10.	The Evolution Theory — Huxley's Three Lectures.	10
11.	Is America the New World? L. L. Dawson.	10

Discount on one dollar's worth 10 per ct. off; on two dollars' worth 20 off; on five dollars' worth 40 off; on ten dollars' worth 50 off.

As few or as many of any given kind may be ordered as desired.

RADICAL BOOKS.

SENT POST PAID AT THE PRICES ANNEXED.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

Age of Reason. Paine. Paper covers.	25
" " Cloth "	50
" " and Ex. of Proph. Paper 50; cl.	75
A Few Days in Athens. Frances Wright.	75
Apocryphal New Testament.	1 25
An Eye Opener. Paper, 50; cloth.	75
Antiquity of Christianity. Alberger.	25
Analysis of Religious Belief. Viscount Amberly. $3.00, 4.00, and	4 50
Apples of Gold. Susan H. Wixon.	1 50
Anti-Theological Lectures. Rev. R. Taylor.	2 00
Antiquity and Duration of the World.	25
Astronomy and Worship of the Ancients.	25
A. J. Davis' Entire Works.	27.00
Adventures of Elder Triptolemus Tub.	15
Bible in India. Jacolliot.	2 00
Buckle's History of Civilization. 2 Vols., 8vo.	4 00
Burgess-Underwood Debate. 50 and	80
Bible in the Balance. Fish.	1 00
Bacon's Novum Organum.	2 00
Bhagvad-Gita, or Dialogues of Christna and Arjuna.	1 75
Buechner's Man, Present and Future.	4 00
Christianity before Christ. Craven.	25
Chapters from the Bibles of the Ages.	1 50
Criticism on the Theoligical Idea of Deity.	1 00
Childhood of Religion. Clodd.	1 25
Childhood of the World. Clodd, 40 and	60
Christianity and Materialism. Underwood.	15
Cause of Religious Ideas. Tuttle,	1 00
Conway's Sacred Anthology.	4 00
Colenso on the Pentateuch, Abstract of.	25
Devil's Pulpit. Rev. Robt. Taylor.	2 00
Diegesis " "	2 00
Denton's Irreconcilable Records.	50
" Our Planet, Past, Present, and Future,	1 50
" Radical Rhymes.	1 25
" Who are Christians. Deluge.
Denton's Common Sense Thoughts, Be Thyself, What is Right? Man's True Saviors, Sermon from Shakspere's Text, God Proposed, Spiritualism True, Orthodoxy False, 10 cents each.
Draper's Conflict between Religion and Science.	1 75
" Intellectual Development of Europe, 2 vols..	3 00
Darwin's Origin of Species,	2 00
" Descent of Man, (Impr'd Ed.)	3 00
Descent and Darwinism, Schmidt,	1 50
Einstein's Origin of Religious Ideas.	1 00
Exeter Hall, Wm. McDonnell.	60 & 80
Errors of the Bible, Wright.	35 & 60
Essence of Religion. Fuerbach. 40 and	80
Eight Scientific Tracts.	20
Frothingham's Expansion of Humanity.	1 50
" Child's Book of Religion,	1 00
" Stories of the Patriarchs,	1 00
" Safest Creed,	1 50
" Transcendentalism in New England,	2 50
Faraday's Various Forces of Nature.	2 00
Fiske's Myths and Myth-Makers.	2 00
God Idea in History, Tuttle,	1 25
Good Sense, D'Holbach,	1 00
Gould's Curious Myths of the Middle Ages.	2 50
" Lost and Hostile Gospels.	2 25
Graves' Sixteen Crucified Saviors,	2 00
" Biography of Satan,	60
Grey's Enigmas of Life.	2 00
" Creeds of Christendom. 2 Vols.	7 50
Heroines of Freethought, Mrs. Underwood.	1 75
Heathens of the Heath, McDonnell.	1 00 & 150
Hume's Essays and Treatises,	1 50
Huxley's Lay Sermons,	1 75
" Man's Place in Nature,	1 25
" Critiques and Addresses.	1 50
History of all Religions Sects. Evans.	1 00
Haeckel's History of Creation. 2 Vols.	5 00
Hollick's Nerves and the Nervous.	1 00
Humboldt's Works.
Ingersoll's Gods and other Lectures. 30 and	50
" etc., Large Edition.	1 25
Influence of Christianity on Civilization.	25
Infidels' Text Book, Cooper,	1 00
Jehovah Unveiled.	35
Jamieson's Clergy a Source of Danger.	1 00
Josephus' Complete Works.	2 50
Johnson's Oriental Religions. 8vo.	5 00
John's Way,	15
Kneeland's Review.	1 00
" Hymns.	35
Koran, with Notes and Life of Mahomet.	2 75
Lecky's Rationalism in Europe. 2 Vols.	4 00
" History of European Morals.	6 00
Life of Thomas Paine, Blanchard. p 50; cl	75
Lewes' Biographical History of Philosophy.	3 50
" Problems of Life and Mind.	3 00
Lizzie Doten's Poems of Progress, and Inner Life, each	150
Lubbock's Origin of Civilization,	2 00
" Pre-Historic Times Illustrated,	6 00
Lyell's Elements of Geology, 770 cuts.	3 40
" Principles " " 2 vols. and maps,	8 00
Monks and Popes. Alberger.	1 00
Morley's Life of Voltaire,	2 00
Martyrdom of Man. Winwood Reade.	3 00
Peeble's All Around the World,	2 50
" Seers of the Ages,	2 50
Plato's Divine and Moral Works,	2 20
Pro and Con of Supernatural Religion.	30 & 50
Physical Man, Tuttle.	1 50
Paine's Common Sense.	12
" Crisis. Paper, 50; cloth	80
" Rights of Man. Paper, 50; cloth	80
" Theological Works, with portrait	1 50
" " " paper,	1 00
" Political Works, cloth,	1 50
" Great Works Complete. Crown octavo, with life and portrait.	3
" Political Works, steel portrait.	1
" Life, by Calvin Blanchard with portrait Paper, 50; cloth	75
Parturition without Pain.	1 00
Plain Home Talk and Medical Common Sense, E. B. Foote, M.D.,	1 50
Proctor's Six Lectures on Astronomy,	20
Reason, the only Oracle of Man. Ethan Allen	60
Syntagma, Taylor,	1 00
System of Nature, D'Holbach,	2 00
Self-Contradictions of the Bible,	25
Studying the Bible, Mrs. Slenker,	75
Spencer's (Herbert) Entire Work,
Strauss' Old Faith and New,	2 00
" New Life of Jesus, 2 vols.,	12 00
Supernatural Religion, 2 Vols., 8vo.,	8 00
Sexual Physiology, Trall,	2 00
Talleyrand's Letter to Pope Pius vii.	25
Tyndall' (Prof. John) Entire Works.
The Christ of Paul,	2 00
The Case against the Church,	75
The Relations of the Sexes. Mrs. Duffey,	2 00
The Voices, Warren Sumner Barlow.	1 25
The World's Sages, Infidels, and Thinkers, Bennett. $3 00, $4 00, and	4 50
The Champions of the Church, Bennett $3 00, $4 00, and	4 50
Thirty Discussions, Bible Stories, etc., 75 &	1 00
Truth Seeker Tracts, Vols. I. II, III, and IV., by the lot, 50 &	75
The Truth Seeker Collection of Forms, Hymns, and Recitations,	75
The Outcast, Winwood Reade,	30
Talks with My Patients, Mrs. Gleason, M.D.,	1 50
Underwood-Marples Debate,	35 & 60
Underwood's Twelve Tracts,	20
Vestiges of Creation,	75
Volney's Ruins,	1 00
Volney's New Researches in Ancient History,	1 50
Voltaire's Philosophical Dictionary,	5 00

THE TRUTH SEEKER

DEVOTED TO SCIENCE, MORALS, FREETHOUGHT AND HUMAN HAPPINESS

Vol. 5. No. 8. {PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY D. M. BENNETT.} New York, Saturday, February 23, 1878. {SCIENCE HALL, 141 8th St., NEAR BROADWAY.} $3 per Year.

Notes and Clippings.

No more prayers or hymns in the Wisconsin State University or Normal Schools.

IT is now understood that Judas hanged himself because he was paid in a debased coinage.

IT has been discovered that the reason why Aaron made a golden calf to worship was because he had not gold enough to make a cow.

"WHAT is an idol?" asked the Sunday-school teacher of his boys. Quick as a wink one bright little shaver responded: "Please, sir, I know; an idol's a lazy fellow, sir,"

THREE Christian churches have invited Col. Ingersoll to lecture for them for the benefit of their funds. This looks like robbing the belief of Peter to pay the debts of Paul.

HEAVEN is a place whence reformed wife-beaters look with satisfaction upon lost Atheists who never raised their hands to a woman, save in the way of kindness.

BROTHER ADIRONDACK MURRAY does not write his sermons, but dictates them to a lady amanuensis. She elaborates them on a type-writer, and Murray preaches from the printed pages. It is handy.

WHILE Francis Murphy gets $150 a night, Evangelist Hammond has to content himself on the beggarly sum of $200 a week. Yet Hammond is growing fat on it. His recent labors have been in Ohio.

BISHOP PEOK, the heavy weight of the Methodist Church, has been weighed in the balance and found wanting a few ounces of 350 pounds. At that rate a bushel of him would weigh 1,400 pounds. His favorite hymn is "I would not Live All-weigh."

THE singers in the choir galleries are indignant at Moody. He has expressed himself very strongly against the ungodly persons who sing in church choirs and occupy the time of the sermon in writing love-letters and eating candy and peanuts.

DR. McCOSH speaks his mind on creeds, saying: "What is chiefly required in the present day is intelligence and honesty in signing creeds. I stand up for orthodoxy—that is, adherence to Scripture—in a church; but honesty is a still more essential virtue."

TALMAGE insists that Jesus Christ went into the literal hell, the place of everlasting torment for lost spirits. The general acceptation of the passage in the Creed, "He descended into hell," is that Christ was buried, or "went into the state of departed spirits."

THE Friends' Review bewails the fact that Friends are lacking in aggressiveness, and so little disposed to do anything to bring the world to their way of thinking. It claims that the Friends have a mission to teach the world, and that nothing ought to stand in the way of it.

THE Congregationalists are in a sort of family snarl over their Home Missionary work, and their organs are devoting column upon column to the discussion. The different sects of brethren seem to find great pleasure in criticising each other's plans and the ways of carrying them into operation.

THE confessional obtains some favor from ritualists in this country, but the Archbishop of York, in reply to a memorial from some anti-confessionalists, says: "I am persuaded that any return to the practice in the Church would be, on the whole, most unfavorable to the spiritual life of the people."

BROTHER SHRACK, who miraculously came to life in Philadelphia after having been got ready for his coffin, is not teaching Sunday-school any more. The church people give him the cold shoulder, and call him unpleasant names. "Habitual fraud" is one of the epithets most frequently and forcibly used.

THE statement is now freely made that John Wesley was in favor of electricity as a curative agent in certain cases of disease. It is the custom on the part of many people who are at a loss for authority on various subjects to quote John Wesley. We may next expect to hear his views quoted on the questions of telephones, horse-cars, and raffles at church fairs.

THE REV. MR. RAINSFORD, who has become a very popular evangelist in the Episcopal Church, keeps his muscular system in good order by regularly walking ten miles a day, regardless of the state of the weather. Mr. Rainsford, who is twenty-eight years old, wears stylish side-whiskers, and is greatly admired by the ladies.

THE ALLIGATOR.

Upon a rock yet uncreate,
Amid a chaos inchoate,
An uncreated being sate.
And on the rock did incubate,
And thus became an incubator;
And of himself did allegate,
And thus became an alligator.

TRADE dollars are still taken in church collections—that is to say, when anybody chooses to put them in. But the lower denominations of silver are more generally used. The objectionable little three-cent coin is so unpopular that most holders desire to get rid of it. It makes as respectable a jingle in the collection basket as almost any other coin, and therefore is got rid of in this way.

A PRESBYTERIAN clergyman living near Montreal has to cross a wide stream in going to and from his church. On a recent Sunday, the ice being bare and smooth, he skated, instead of riding, as usual, in his sleigh. He now finds himself arraigned for breaking the Sabbath. He argues that skates were the easiest and quickest conveyance that he could have employed; yet, when the question is put to him squarely, he does not deny that he derived pleasure from the skating.

MORE hell than heaven was preached from our Christian pulpits last Sunday, and Christ, and him crucified, gave way to Ingersoll, and him scarified. The preachers appear to think that abuse of Ingersoll is equivalent to praise of God—at least they take to it more readily. Some of the dailies gave several columns of their Sunday issues to letters of criticism, misquoting Ingersoll's lectures, attributing to him language which he never used, and endeavoring to falsify history in order to prove him wrong.

WE learn from a Western paper sent by a friend that a Baptist minister, Mason Chenoweth (alias J. Mason Wells), professing to be a widower, in his application to preach a trial sermon, was arrested in a church pulpit at Bangor, on a charge of bigamy; and said party, it is alleged, is wanted in Lawrenceburg, Indiana, on a charge of forgery. But he will first be tried on several charges in Illinois. When visited in prison by old friends who knew him as Wells, he denied assuming or preaching under the name of Chenoweth, though that was the name he admitted when arrested. We expect to have further developments. His favorite text is Romans, vii. 7.

IRIS.

Iris, cruelest of girls,
Turns away in pride,
While my heart within me whirls
Like the ocean's tide.

Wherefore, Iris, deem it strange,
Since I love but thee,
I should ask thee to exchange
Love for love with me?

Ah! thy very looks concede
What thy lips refuse to say;
In thy glances I can read
Love's responsive Yea.

Through the long, eventful years
Shines a light divine!
One sweet dream the whole appears,
Since thy love is mine.

A NEAT POINT ABOUT WOMAN SUFFRAGE.—Senator George F. Hoar, who is an ardent advocate of woman suffrage, made a neat point on Senator Christiancy upon that subject the other day. Mr. Christiancy, presenting some petitions from women for a constitutional amendment to give them suffrage, and moving their reference to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, remarked: "I will take this occasion also to express my own views upon the subject. Whenever I am satisfied that a majority of the ladies of my State are in favor of female suffrage, I have not the slightest objection to it. Until then I have." Thereupon occurred the following brief dialogue: Mr. Hoar—"I desire to ask the honorable Senator from Michigan if we are to understand him to say that, in regard to that greatest of all questions of goverment—the question whether women should be admitted to suffrage—he so recognizes the capacity of woman to deal with questions of government as to propose to leave that question to them? I think that is a very important admission in favor of the petitioners, and one that the committee might do well to incorporate in their report." Mr. Christiancy—"I admit that it is so, and I accept the consequences."

THE ostentatious practice of erecting memorial windows in churches recently received a wholesome rebuke in Minneapolis. A wealthy lady wanted to erect a window in honor of a departed relation. The congregation, heavily burdened with debt, let her have her own way, in the hope that, as she took enough interest in the church to put in the window, she might be led to do something more substantial. The window was in due time sent by the Chicago concern, which had elaborately constructed it. In its glowing red, blue, green, and yellow, it was the wonder of all the Minneapolis small boys and the admiration of the grown people. But, after it had been placed in position, an alarming blunder was discovered. The lady had meant that one of the inscriptions should read:

COME UNTO ME
AND I WILL GIVE THEE
REST.

Instead of this, the careless artist had made it read:

COME UNTO ME
AND I WILL GIVE
THE REST.

There was much fun in the church over the blunder. The trustees said it was an indication of Providence that the liberal donor of the window should carry out her advertisement to the letter, and pay "the rest" of the debt. She did not see it in exactly that light, but compromised on the gift of a large part of it. Her window cost her a great deal more than she meant it should, and she is not at present putting up any more memorial stained glass.

THE LATEST FROM THE HEAVENLY WORLD.—His Holiness, Pope Pio Nono, was received by his illustrious predecessor, St. Peter, with a smile of cordial welcome. "You have had a long and tranquil reign," said the Saint. "I trust you have left the affairs of our holy Church in a flourishing condition on earth?"

His Holiness assured St. Peter that the Catholic faith was never more firmly rooted and grounded, and the influence of the Church never more firmly established, than when he left Rome; in fact, that Macaulay was right when he said that she would yet exist in undiminished vigor when that New Zealander was making his celebrated sketch of the ruins of St. Paul's.

The Saint looked pleased, and said to his Holiness, "I am glad to hear so favorable an account of your spiritual reign; was your temporal reign equally successful?"

"Not in all respects," replied his Holiness; "still, I left behind me about twenty-four millions of money."

"Indeed," said St. Peter; "we touched no such sum as that in my day. To whom did you entrust such a vast hoard?"

"To the Rothschilds," said his Holiness hesitatingly.

Something like a frown overspread the features of the Saint. "The Rothschilds," said he, with deliberation; "are they not Jews?"

"I believe—that is to say—I think—yes—they are," said his Holiness, with still greater hesitation.

"And do you mean to tell me," said the Saint, sternly, "that you, the Vicar of Jesus Christ on earth, deposited the contributions of our holy Church with the descendants of those men who reviled and spat upon and cruelly put him to death?"

"Well—ah—yes, I did."

"Why did you?" said the Saint, sternly. "You should have had a powerful reason."

"I did have a very powerful one," replied his Holiness. "The truth is, St. Peter, I did not know any Christians whom I was willing to trust with so much money."

Events of the Week.

THE Silver bill has passed the Senate.

SACRAMENTO, Cal., is partially submerged by a flood.

BAYARD TAYLOR, the well-known writer and traveler, is to be Minister to Germany.

THE King of Holland thinks of abdicating in favor of his eldest son, the Prince of Orange.

THE steamship City of Dallas was burned at the wharf in this city on the night of the 18th. Loss $1,000,000.

THE sub-committee of the House Committee on Territories have agreed to report the bill providing for secret ballot voting in Utah.

THE House Committee on Naval Affairs have agreed to report favorably upon the Howgate bill in aid of the proposed Arctic expedition.

THE Labor party is gaining strength. The labor candidates for Mayor and Treasurer in Scranton, Pa., were elected by a large majority.

IT is rumored that the Cuban patriots have surrendered to the Spanish forces, but the Cubans in this city deny the truth of the report.

THE Greeks and Turks are now having a war on a small scale. The Greeks have entered Albania and defeated the Turks, who lost 600 men.

REPORTS from Europe say that the United States are to be requested to take part in the Congress for the settlement of the Turkish war question.

THERE are seventy millions of human beings starving in China. Who should be held responsible for this state of affairs? Who guides the destinies of man?

MASSES for the "eternal repose"—whatever that may mean—of the Pope's soul have been the principal attraction at the Catholic churches during the past week.

MRS. BEN PITMAN, of Cincinnati, was cremated in Pennsylvania recently. Cremation makes slow progress in public favor, though it makes quick work with the dead.

IT has just been discovered that all the horrors of the Inquisition have been revived and used in the discipline of prisoners in the New Jersey State prison. The State Legislature is investigating.

CONGRESSMAN BUCKNER is about to introduce a bill into the House which proposes to substitute for national bank notes a new description of Treasury notes. The new notes will be receivable in payment of taxes, customs, excises, debts, and demands of every kind due to the United States.

TWO PRESBYTERIAN churches and several other buildings, including an armory, were burned in this city on Sunday, the 17th inst. Loss between four and five hundred thousand dollars. The firemen almost broke the Sabbath in their efforts to subdue the flames. Cause of fire, carelessness.

ON the 15th Senator Bayard presented to Congress the petition of the National Liberal League, signed by the officers thereof and 10,660 persons residing in every State of the Union, favoring the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution separating Church and State. It was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

CARDINAL JOACHIM PECCI has been elected to fill the papal throne. The conclave made quick work of it, having been in session but little more than a day. Leo XIII, as the new Pope will be styled, is an Italian, about sixty-eight years of age, and is moderate in his views. For nearly two weeks God had no recognized representative on earth, but the world jogged along as usual.

THE Medical Department of the University of the city of New York, at its annual commencement, on the 19th inst., gave diplomas to one hundred and fifty newly-fledged doctors. Considering the fact that this country has two or three times as many physicians in proportion to the population as any European nation it seems that some of them will be compelled to join the army of tramps. Among the graduates were citizens of every State in the Union, and some natives of Turkey and Russia.

Radical Romance.

The Darwins.

BY MRS. ELMINA D. SLENKER.

CHAPTER II—CONTINUED.

As the three girls walked homeward, Myra began wondering how it was that Rose and Minnie could be factory girls and yet be so refined, ladylike, and intelligent.

"Oh," said Edith, "it is easily explained: they have an intelligent home-circle, and use all the means they have to cultivate themselves. I have always thought if it had been necessary for me to go into some one's kitchen to work that I would have studied and endeavored to make something of myself, and never have given way to a low or vulgar habit. There is no reason why a kitchen girl should be less a lady than her employer. True, she has not the same advantages, but if she uses those she has, she need not fail of becoming truly refined and ladylike. But there comes Sue, and now if you will all go into our house, I'll tell you what I've lately learned about Mr. Paine—you remember speaking of him the other day."

With curiosity all aroused to know what could possibly be said in favor of "such a wretch," they eagerly accepted Edith's invitation, and were soon seated in a circle around her, waiting for her to commence. Taking a letter from a small box on the table, she said, "My uncle, Robert Moore, who is a sailor, was here some months ago on a visit, and I said something about Paine being so bad and wicked. He made no reply then, but two weeks ago I received a letter from him, which I will now read to you," and opening a closely-written sheet she read as follows:

"MY DEAR AND BELOVED NIECE: My special object in writing at this time is to enlighten you upon some points concerning the worst-abused man the world has ever known—Thomas Paine. Now, don't start in holy horror at the very mention of his name, for in spite of all the anathemas you have heard from the pulpit and press, from parents and Sunday-school teachers, and from hundreds of other sources, Mr. Paine was really a good man, and very good, too. He was a philosopher, a savior, and a redeemer, just as much as were Christna, Buddha, Osiris, Alcides, Salvahana, Zoroaster, Yu, Bacchus, or Christ."

"Oh! please stop a moment, Edith," said Sue, "Your uncle surely don't mean that there ever was more than one crucified savior, does he?"

"It looks as if he did," replied Edith, "but I've thought so little about that part of his letter I haven't tried to make out what he did mean; but I know if he says there were other saviors it must be so, for he is a man who never speaks without being certain of his ground. But it is about Mr. Paine we now wish to hear," and she continued reading as follows:

"I do not speak without authority these things concerning Mr. Paine, for I have seen and talked with an old man who knew him well, and who spoke in very high terms of him as a neighbor, friend, and citizen, and this man was a Quaker, and of good standing in his society. He says Paine spent a pure and blameless life and one full of good deeds and great services to humanity. His thrilling words, written in the crisis of a nation's struggle for independence, did more to accomplish this great result than the efforts of any other single individual in the world. He gave all his available means to advance the cause of liberty and alleviate the woes of a suffering army. He was a warm friend of Washington, Jefferson, Franklin, Adams, Madison, Monroe, and many of the greatest and best men of his age. John Adams declared that even 'Washington's sword would have been wielded in vain had it not been supported by the pen of Paine.' 'His pen brought about unity of thought as well as men and money—the sinews of war—and independence was won by the sacred trinity of the council, the pen, and the sword. The names of Jefferson, Paine, and Washington should not be separated by prejudice or bigotry.' The pulpit denounces him as illiterate, coarse, drunken, and vulgar, yet history says, 'Men of genius and men of high standing sought his acquaintance, and that acquaintance was soon converted into friendship by his conversational powers, the urbanity of his manners, and the goodness of his heart.' He came to this country 'to introduce a more elevated system of education in our female schools,' and therefore you women, my dear niece, should be especially careful how you malign and traduce one who labored for your elevation in the scale of humanity; one who wished to give you the only means that will ever raise you to an equality with your brother man—knowledge! No class of people possessing equal knowledge with another can ever be kept in social bondage by that other; so, if you wish for equality or power, if you desire to be somebody, by all means seek knowledge, and give those who would aid and have aided you all due credit. Paine's personal habits were those of a gentleman of that day. He used liquor as a common beverage, as people here in the South now do in many places, and as was then common where he lived. But he never used it to excess, for he was temperate in all things. He was one of the rare few who cultivate the mind and heart and feelings instead of giving undue license to the appetites and passions. Mr. Jarvis, an intimate friend of Paine, says, 'Few people are aware of the morals and decorum of Mr. Paine. He never used vulgar oaths, and even good-humoredly reproved those of his friends who did. I once advised him to recant, and publish his recantation as a hoax. He replied, Tom Paine never told a lie; and I never discovered in Mr. Paine even a prevarication.'

"The report of the Quakers who lived near him at New Rochelle is that he was a temperate, moral, religious, kindly old man, living at peace with all the world. When only eight years old, he heard an account of a sermon upon the atonement, on the vulgar principle of God's anger being intercepted by the voluntary sacrifice of his son, Jesus Christ; and he remarks to the effect that he could not help thinking that God, so represented, behaved very much like an angry and revengeful man. This was the simple origin of his free inquiry, which afterwards produced the first part of his 'Age of Reason,' a mild, philosophic work of much originality, and so clearly expressed that he who reads generally becomes a convert. And this mild work, the 'Age of Reason,' is, my dear Edith, the real cause and origin of all the cruel calumnies the world has circulated about the scholar, the philosopher, the hero, the scientist, the inventor, the humanitarian, and the savior—Thomas Paine. I have this book myself, and have read and re-read it, and was really surprised to find it so moral and pious, for, like you, I had heard the meanest things said of its author that could be said of any man. The book was written in defense of natural religion and in direct opposition to Atheism; though were Paine now living he would undoubtedly be an Atheist. And now, my dear girl, if you wish to know more about this good man, who was 'born five hundred years too soon for the comfort of his days,' and who is deserving of all the commendatory adjectives in the language, get Vale's life of the author-hero and satisfy yourself that he was even greater and better than I have been able, with my feeble pen, to portray him.

"Your affectionate uncle, ROBERT MOORE."

"Well, I am indeed surprised," said Jennie, drawing a long breath, as Edith closed the letter, folded it up, and carefully laid it back in the box. "I never had the least doubt that Mr. Paine was just as bad a man as ever lived, and that he fully deserved every anathema that has been uttered against him. This is the very first word I have heard in his defense from any one. It seems even now as if there must be some mistake about it. How is it possible that all the world can be wrong and only Robert Moore right?"

"But, Jennie," said Edith "you forget that he quotes from others, and gives authorities and reference. And you must also remember that it has been in the interest of the Church to make people believe him a bad man so as to keep them from reading his books; and the united labors of hundreds of thousands of pious zealots can effect great results when concentrated upon so small a thing as the life and morals of one man; the intensest effort being made by each and all to destroy every vestige of good in his record and fill it up with the vilest substitutes they could."

"But, Edith, you do not mean to say that really good and pious people have willfully lied about Mr. Paine, do you?"

"Well, Jennie, it must be that they have. Look around this little village and see if you would put full confidence in the word of some of its most pious inhabitants if it was to their interest to deceive."

As Edith said this, the girls involuntarily thought of Deacon Conway, and even Sue could not help remembering how many times her father had been guilty of prevaricating and misrepresenting, to call it by no worse name. Had he not, to her certain knowledge, slipped a counterfeit two-dollar bill into the funds that were collected the week before to buy a new carpet for the church, and abstracted therefrom a genuine one for his own use? True, he did not see her, as she was hidden in a recess by the window, reading; but she knew he had the bad bill, for he had got it in change from a drover the day before, and had blessed the man high and low about it when he discovered it. And when he left the room, Sue examined the collection funds and saw the identical two-dollar bill among them as she surmised she would.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

The Duty of the Hour.

Liberalism is born of freedom and intelligence, and seeks, above all things else, to establish and perpetuate for coming generations a still larger freedom and a still higher intelligence. What nobler impulse can move the human heart than the desire to enlighten mankind and clothe them with greater liberty? We certainly know of no cause which ever enlisted the head, heart, or hand of man that was nobler than the cause of Freethought. And what better method for the reform of society can be instituted, in these "times that try men's souls," than that of organizing Liberal leagues? In fact, this matter of forming leagues seems to be the imperative duty of the hour.

W. S. BELL.

Scientific Department.

A Nibble at Mr. John Fiske's "Crumb for the Modern Symposium."

In the January-February number of The North American Review the reading public are asked to partake of an intellectual crumb furnished by Mr. John Fiske to the "feast of reason" which The Nineteenth Century has recently provided for its readers under the title of "The Modern Symposium"; and it is interesting to note that, whatever may be Mr. Fiske's shortcomings when treating of matters of philosophy and science, which are the great subjects discussed in this article of his, he shows a true appreciation of the value of his article as a whole when he designates it as a "crumb." The only amendment to his title that I would propose would be the insertion of the short word "sour" before "crumb," when scientific exactitude of expression and description would be perfect and complete. Before this article in The North American made its appearance, people of culture would generally have been disposed to allow considerable merit to Mr. Fiske as a fair-minded and faithful student of nature, of no small philosophical acquirements, and with a receptive mind for truth wherever found; and they would have supposed him quite incapable of showing such a spirit of dogmatism and intolerance towards rival systems of thought and philosophy as crops out so unmistakably in his article.

Mr. Fiske's self-assigned task, he tells us, is to clear away some of the prevalent fallacies of the age, and, in carrying out this laudable undertaking, common sense comes in for some very rough treatment from him. He dismisses very summarily and contemptuously all systems of philosophy that are opposed to Bishop Berkeley's idealistic view of matter; and materialism, especially, is treated with unsparing severity. He gives two definitions of materialism from what he calls different points of view. One is that "the phenomena of conscious intelligence are supposed to be explicable as momentary results of fleeting collocations of material particles," and the other is "the endeavor to interpret mind as a product—as the transient result of a certain specific aggregation of matter." It is difficult to see wherein these definitions differ greatly, for it seems as proper to say of the one as of the other that mind is a product. But any scientific and philosophical materialist would demur to either of the definitions of Mr. Fiske, and, if asked to define his position, would do it in very different terms. The corner-stone of philosophic materialism, he would say, was the denial of the existence of mind or spirit apart from organized matter, and the assertion that mind was a function, not a product, of the organism. He considers that the negative evidence that spirit has no independent existence is sufficient. So far as human experience goes, he would say, mind is only found in conjunction with highly organized matter, and the legitimate presumption is that it only exists thus. Mr. Fiske charges materialists with being unacquainted generally with the idealism of Bishop Berkeley, but whether that be so or not, he undoubtedly lays himself open to the retort that he shows but slight acquaintance with the views of representative materialists; and, although it can hardly be credited, it would appear that he is even unacquainted with the "reasoned realism" so powerfully and logically advocated by Geo. H. Lewes. It does not come within the aims of this paper to enter into a defense of materialism—least of all, the materialism set up by Mr. Fiske—although a case might easily be made out for advanced scientific materialism good enough to prove to any unbiased mind that Mr. Fiske is by no means justified in his dogmatic assertion that materialism contains no truth of value or importance. The main object of the present writer is to caution Mr. Fiske's readers against accepting as final and conclusive his dicta in regard to several of the unsettled problems of life. Among the many controvertible statements made by him it may be well to limit our attention to a few of the principal ones; and I have selected the following:

1. That matter has no real existence apart from the cognizing mind.

2. That there is an unknown and unknowable something left in what is called matter after all its attributes are eliminated.

3. That the (alleged) mystery of the connection between mind and matter is forever insoluble.

4. That the relation between motion and feeling can never be demonstrated.

In my attempt to refute Mr. Fiske's arguments and show the unsoundness of the conclusions he comes to on these questions, I shall draw largely from the writings of Mr. Geo. H. Lewes, whose name and authority Mr. Fiske will admit are not to be lightly set aside, and whose reasonings will stand a strong assault. Mr. Lewes is no less eminent as a master of "subjective analysis," which, with Mr. Fiske, is the all-important test of a man's power to deal with philosophy than he is as an experimenter and investigator of the nerves and ganglia which Mr. Fiske holds in such dire contempt.

In the first place, then, let us see what this life-long student of philosophy has to say in regard to this idealism which is held up by Mr. Fiske as a demonstrated and irrefutable fact. On pp. 162–3 of the American reprint of "Problems of Life and Mind," first series, vol. i, Mr. Lewes defines his doctrine of reasoned realism thus:

"It is a doctrine which endeavors to rectify the natural illusion of reason when reason [idealism] attempts to rectify the supposed illusion of sense. I call it realism because it affirms the reality of what is given in feeling; and reasoned realism, because it justifies that affirmation through an investigation of the grounds and processes of philosophy when philosophy explains the facts given in feeling.

"The reality of an external existence, a not-self, is a fact of feeling so indissolubly woven into consciousness, that the very terms in which idealism seeks to disprove it are themselves derived from it. Now, this fact, because it is a fact of feeling, and ultimate, can neither be got rid of nor explained by interpretation of it into terms of more general fact."

Before proceeding any further with Mr. Lewes' exposition of reasoned realism it will be well to give Mr. Fiske's statement of what constitutes idealism, so that the two views may be brought sharply in contrast. "It was demonstrated," he asserts, "a century ago that the group of phenomena constituting the table has no real existence whatever in a philosophical sense. . . . Take away the cognizing mind, and the color, form, position, or hardness of the table, all the attributes that characterize it as matter, at once disappear. That something remains we may grant, but this something remains unknown and unknowable; it is actually not the group of phenomena constituting the table. Apart from consciousness there are no such things as color, form, position, or hardness, and there is no such thing as matter."

It will be seen that Mr. Fiske uses very emphatic language in defining his position. But what we have already quoted from Mr. Lewes, as well as what now follows, seems to show that this position of Mr. Fiske's is not so impregnable as he would have us believe. In section 79, page 166 (Problems, vol. i), we have a marvelously clear statement of the radical defect of idealism, which should forever clear "common sense" from the stigma that philosophers of the school of Mr. Fiske seek to cast upon it:

"By cultivating the tendency to look away from the given reality in search of its prior conditions or its presumed factors, men have learned to slight the plain, indubitable facts of feeling, in favor of the obscure and doubtful representations of these facts in thought—that is to say, replacing perceptions by conceptions, facts by theories and hypotheses, men have come to distrust the logic of feeling, even within its own domain, and to rely on the logic of signs, even when it contradicts that of feeling. Accustomed to attach exclusive importance to symbols irrespective of the realities, they have forgotten that ideas can be valid only as representatives of sensations, and symbols can be useful only when capable of interpretation. For, what was the starting point of every theory? An observation. And what is the test of the theory? A reduction of its inferences to sensations. The theory started to explain a fact; the inferences were intended to represent what would be presented in feeling, were the inferred facts, facts perceived. Obviously, therefore, every theory must be a failure which ends in denying or ignoring the original fact. Yet this assuredly is the case with the current theories of perception, idealistic and realistic. The original fact given to all is that of an external reality present in feeling; the fact that a not-self exists, that objects affect us by their presence, and have qualities variously felt by us—this, I say, may possibly be explained, interpreted in other terms of feeling, and classed with other facts, but cannot be ignored or denied without violation by first principles of first principles."

A little further on, on page 167, we find this: "From of old they [metaphysicians] made the false step of proclaiming the natural illusion of sense; founded on a precipitate conclusion from practical mistakes, this notion of the senses as sources of deception led to the conclusion that reason was the only ground of security. If sense deceived us, reason corrected the false reports—reason henceforward became authoritative, final. This, which may in time be called the natural illusion of reason, can only be dispelled by a thorough investigation of the genesis of reason; and since that genesis exhibits it in the light of a derivative from the primary facts of feeling—the virtual representation of what would be actual presentation—we cannot hesitate to assign a lower validity to its symbolical constructions than to the primary facts which those constructions render intelligible. It is surely obvious that no theory of perception can have the certainty that belongs to perception itself; no explanation of a conclusion can be valid which ignores the very facts conceded, shut up in the starting-point.

"It was to explain the perception of an external reality that philosophy started on its quest. The idealist schools find the explanation to be, that there is really nothing to explain except the illusion that an external reality exists."

I feel much tempted to go on with the quotation, but as it is already one of considerable length, I must not make it too long. To do justice to Mr. Lewes' views, his whole argument as given on pp. 162-180 should be quoted, but that, of course, is not practicable. I cannot refrain, however, from transcribing his admirable summing up of the whole matter in the chapter on the "Course of Modern Thought" ("Physical Basis of Mind," Problems, second series) pp. 351-2:

[CONCLUDED IN OUR NEXT.]

Discussion.

The Bennett-Teed Discussion.

I.—JESUS CHRIST IS NOT ONLY DIVINE, BUT IS THE LORD GOD, CREATOR OF HEAVEN AND EARTH.

MR. TEED'S EIGHTH LETTER.

MORAVIA, Feb., 1878.

MR. BENNETT, Dear Sir: You open your seventh letter by saying, "I insist that you have not, in the more than three months that we have been discussing this question, advanced the first proof in favor of your proposition, and I am fully convinced that you have none to offer. The only way you can make a semblance of showing it is by a species of chimera, visionary vaporings, and speculations that have no foundation in fact, and are peculiar to yourself." Of course you do not make the above assertion and place it before your readers as argument. I might as broadly assert that you have not, as yet, given the first proof to the contrary, but my mere assertion would not make it so. Yet my assertion would contain as much truth as your own. The statement you make in the above—that the views are peculiar to myself—I repudiate as utterly false, though I will not charge you with intentionally making a false statement, for I believe you to be ignorant of the fact that the writers of the Bible and other eminent books entertained and expressed the same ideas.

I lay no claims to originality in the conclusions reached and expressed in previous letters, while I do claim I have acquired them by the application of my mind to the investigation of facts, as exhibited through the laws of physical, social, mental, spiritual, and psychical involution and evolution. I have been astonished sometimes when making the discovery of a law, supposing it to be, for the moment, a new presentation of truth to the mind, to find by subsequent research and thought that the idea is as old as the generation of man.

When the almost overwhelming knowledge flashed upon my mind, as the legitimate sequence of the processes of infoldment and unfoldment, after diligent and persistent investigation in the various domains of inquiry, that the perpetuation of human life depends upon the successive incarnations of Deity, or the outward manifestation of the Lord God in his real and only form—the human—I supposed, for the instant, that I was the first to make the discovery. The fact that God—a being embodying in one perfect structure the most complete human organism, father, mother, son in one personal central function, not existing outside of man, but constituting in man's interior the focal point and sensorium of sentient being, the congeries of all the mental, spiritual, and psychical activity of humanity—through regular processes of law, and at regular and stated intervals emerges from the obscure heights and depths of the celestial and spiritual worlds into the outward visible humanity, is no new doctrine. In view of certain truths that I shall soon present, through the columns of your paper, if permitted, I heartily rejoice that you have so persistently kept before the minds of your readers the truth that Jesus was not the first (in time) and only manifestation of the messiah or the Christ to the world. The Bible itself presents a succession of six with one to come, which shall complete the steps leading up to the entrance of the grand temple of Jehovah, the resurrected and perfected humanity. According to Scripture, Jesus was the sixth in time belonging to the cycle of one immortal evolution. You are accomplishing much, though ignorant of the fact, toward opening the mind of the reading public to the fundamental truth of the repeated and successive manifestations of the Lord in his outward natural human image and likeness of the invisible functional personality, as begotten in time, propagated through, and born of human parentage. The so-called heathen are much in advance of the modern so-called scientist in the conception and adoption of the real truth regarding man's relation to God.

In your second paragraph you say, "As you have already admitted that matter or substance was never created, but has an eternal existence, your proposition falls to the ground." I have made the statement that mind and matter are perpetual and coextensive; that neither can exist independent of and absolutely separate from the other; but that they were never created I have not claimed nor admitted. This is not the first time you have made the charge. I do not believe that Mr. B. intentionally misrepresents me, but that he does misrepresent me in the above assumption is nevertheless a fact; and that the psychic will of Infidelity—anti-Christ—which moves him does consciously and intentionally shut out the truth from his mind, and by so doing causes him to misinterpret my presentations of fact, I as firmly believe. It is easy to perceive the ground of our difference in this particular. It rests wholly upon the fact that you and I employ the term create for different valuations. Before we discuss the question of creation further would it not be well for us to settle the question of the significance of the word create? It is derived from the Latin word creo, to produce. The Greek word epoiesen is from epos, which signifies a word or speech and implies to produce from a word or speech. From the fact that men are ignorant of the source and the substance of language, ignorant that in its supreme origin word is veritable substance generated in the will, has arisen the false idea that God spake and the universe sprang into existence from nothing, while the declaration is that from a word God created the heavens and the earth, and not, as you put it, from nothing. The English word make possesses the same valuation, or nearly the same, as the Latin creo, and does not imply in any of its uses the formation of something of substance or material from no substance or no matter, but rather the formation of something with suitable form or shape from the proper and suitable substance.

Man exists. He has existed through all past ages, and he will exist through the perpetual cycles of the future. He exists, male and female, perpetually that he may as perpetually reproduce or recreate himself. But to say that the natural sensual man will exist through perpetual ages without being continually made, formed, or created, would be to state that which is not true. The seed of man, generated in the body, is produced from the substance of the mind generated in the will, as psychic force, and by processes of mutation, converted in the body to spermatozoa and ova. From these germs are formulated, produced, or created, the new organic structure.

If I were to say that because man has perpetually existed it therefore follows that he has not been created, formed, propagated, generated, or produced, I would be employing your own profound logic, but I would not expect it to make a deep impression on the public mind. The process of making or creating and its antithet, that of unmaking, are constantly in progress. The same, or nearly the same thoughts are embraced in the terms integrate and disintegrate. These operations are continuous.

You tell me I have distinctly said that mind is substance, and that it has existed perpetually; then you assert, if that is true, it certainly exists independent of an organized form. It does not follow. All organized forms are the products of like organized forms. No organized form ever existed that was not propagated from a form of like character, and no mind nor mental structure ever existed independent of and separate from the organic form in which it exists and upon which it depends for its functional power, and through which it transmits its energies to the purposes for which it is designed, including the creation of new organic forms. You say, "an organic form is made up of organs which had a growth and origin." I will add that the origin is a life form—and the origin involves the destiny for effect—is identical with its cause. If my origin or cause is God, my destiny is God. This is not only the great, grand doctrine of Jesus Christ, but for this supreme end and highest aspiration of the human soul he gave himself, the involved seed of the Deific will, from the planting of which in the human soul the genus Theos, the sons of God, shall come forth through evolution, into the resurrection from the dead.

Your statement that "there is no proof that such a person as Jesus ever had an existence, save what is found in the narratives ascribed to four unknown persons who died, if they ever existed, a century before their narratives were known to be in existence," is the outgrowth of ignorance coupled with an intense repugnance to the fact that Jesus did exist, and that upon his advent and planting as the divine germ or seed depends the salvation of the world. Your energies, impelled by a power behind you, the consolidated force of anti Christ, are bent upon the one dominant idea of disproving the existence and authority of Jesus. As a consequence, all the adverse testimony is magnified, while all in favor is degraded and, through the power of bias, ignored. The testimony against the advent and messiahship of the Lord Jesus, brought to bear by the power now mobilizing for the destruction of the Word, is in the category of a murderer in danger of the gallows—in favor of his own innocence. It is a life and death struggle, and anti-Christ will resort to extreme expedients to maintain his ascendancy.

In looking over the variety of mineral, vegetable, and animal productions of the earth, I am furnished the proof that each kind has previously existed. The apple, with its germ, is proof to me that seeds, trees, and apples existed before the present one, or the tree upon which it was produced, had an existence. The same law applied to the animal kingdom in relation to orders, genera, species, and individuals leads to the same logical deduction. In ascending higher into the domains of moral, political and social life, we gather into our perception and comprehension the product of the kind, fruit, or germs previously existing and without the planting of which, and their propagation, they could not at present exist. The bare fact that the millions of professed Christians and Mohammedans found their belief upon the existence of Jesus, the Christ, is demonstrative proof that he lived and taught as declared. Present Christianity and Mohammedanism are as positive proof that Jesus came into the world eighteen hundred years ago as that the fruit on yonder tree came from the germ, or that the seed previously existed from which the tree and fruit sprang. As the knurly crab apple which hangs profusely on the tree is no proof that the fruit from which the seed was taken from which it is produced was not a pound-sweet apple, so modern Christianity and Mohammedanism are no proof that the true impress of the divine archetype has been transmitted to the babbling Christianity of modern times.

In combining oxygen, nitrogen, and carbon in certain definite proportions we obtain a definite degree of friction, agitation, and combustion. It matters not by what name the substances are called, the contiguity or combination of the substances produces the like definite results. The conjunction or combination of various forces is attended with specific phenomena. The contact of mental, spiritual, and psychical energies, antagonize, combine, and decompose by the same definite law. Christ and anti-Christ meet and contend upon the same principle. If there had been no Jesus, the Christ, the source of the prinples against which the powers of hell now contend, there would be no friction between these antagonistic forces. The proof is absolute. The fact of his existence is self-evident.

Had I time and space I might reply to your arguments in detail—those especially bearing upon the relative merits of the doctrines of Jesus and others who may have expressed apparently similar thoughts. I will simply take up one point, and the strongest one made in your last letter, and meet it squarely. That will suffice for all. Verily, I say unto you, this generation shall not pass till all these things be fulfilled. In the first chapter of Matthew, we may gather something of the Christ idea of generation. It opens as follows, "The book of the generation of Jesus Christ, the son of David, the son of Abraham." The word generation here is equivalent to production. We discover by a careful examination of the chapter that forty-two generations (productions) were required to produce the generation under consideration; namely, the production or the generation of Jesus, the Christ. The prophet Isaiah had long before declared that "the Lord sent a word into Jacob" through Abraham and Isaac, and in this word or seed was concealed the hope or expectation of the messiah who was to be generated, propagated, or brought forth through forty-two cycles or revolutions of the sensual human will. That is, forty-two natural generations were required to effect the one great generation of the Lord Jesus from the germ planted in Jacob. This embraced a period of over eighteen hundred years. But the generation was still incomplete, for not till the resurrection of the dead was his generation to pass away. His declaration was made in reply to his disciples, "When shall these things be?" &c.

He declared to his disciples, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." The end here, as can be shown, gathered from the whole tenor of the Scriptures, refers to the end of the dispensation which should complete the generation of the kingdom of Christ—fulfilled in the final triumph of the Church over death and hell. Jesus was the seed of a new dispensation. In his translation he did not pass away. His external form was absorbed by the Church—the soil prepared for his reception. In that soil the divine germ or seed has to pass to dissolution, precisely as seed sown in physical soil, through the operation of light, moisture, heat, and magnetic forces, are dissolved and mingled with the elements of the earth and air. The seed, together with the fertilizing principles of the soil—the Church—passed to dissolution, and the process of generation progresses till the end, when the harvest, which is the resurrection of himself and his people, completes the generation or production of that which should continue in the process of generation or growth, or that should not pass, till all should be fulfilled—even the manifestation of anti-Christ. The proofs that "this generation," the generation (production) of Jesus Christ, has not passed, need not be sought in the Bible, for they are openly manifest in the great conflict, now to come, and to which the powers of Christ and anti-Christ are marshaling their forces, in fulfillment of the very prediction referred to in your last letter and now answered. If you were not blinded, you could perceive in the events now transpiring the literal fulfillment of the predictions of Jesus and his apostles.

You intimated in your last that I am inconsistent in my opposition to so-called science, while, at the same time, I make science the continent or foundation of my belief in Jesus and his mission as regenerator of the world (reproducer of the Church triumphant). I denounce so-called modern science, because it is not science (knowledge), but the blankest ignorance. Your most advanced knowledgists admit that the next step in the direction of discovery may entirely set aside the present hypotheses regarding the highest departments of what is termed science, as recent investigations have rendered null the so-called scientific conclusions before reached. Nothing short of absolute knowledge is science. Absolute knowledge cannot be acquired short of a positive solution of the problem of the origin and destiny of man.

In the process of the generation or development that should not pass till all is fulfilled, Jesus is accomplishing the very things, in the absolute methods of infoldment and unfoldment, which you claim he would have done had he been the great and good teacher that it is claimed he was. He was wise enough to perceive that by the actual planting of his organic form, by his absorption into the invisible Deity, and the precipitation of the essential substance of his body, love and wisdom, as the seed of reproduction, he would be able to accomplish what could not be effected by presenting truths which, even in this late day, cannot be comprehended by the world. He came into the world as the seed of all the highest aspirations of the human soul, and a knowledge that in his own disintegration (of which his natural crucifixion, burial, and resurrection were but a figure or symbol), was involved the pangs of hell for all who believed on him, caused that agony in Gethsemane that can only be appreciated by those who awake out of great tribulation into the resurrection. He shrank not for his personal and individual selfhood from his sacrifice for the world, but he saw in that sacrifice a long and fearful struggle, not for himself alone, but for his church, who believed in him, with the bells which he knew could only be overcome at the last day, when he should have power to resurrect his people and give them power over the last great enemy, death. I am not disappointed that you made no attempt to refute the irrefragable arguments in opposition to so-called scientific hypotheses. They cannot be met, for in these truths resides the power that shall overthrow modern science, so-called, the only hope and foundation of Infidelity and anti-Christ. Yours respectfully,

CYRUS ROMULUS R. TEED.

Correspondence Extraordinary.

Letters from the Devil.

NO. IV.

MY DEAR READERS: In this letter I propose to give you some account of how my Big Brother and I made the universe, including all the suns, worlds, planets, moons, and comets that have had an existence, or rather how we produced from nothing the material of which to make it all. After we got back from the extensive job of creating space and time—the work had been great and the distance we were compelled to travel had been immense—you may well suppose we were weary, and that we needed to rest before taking in hand the herculean task of creating hundreds, yes thousands and millions of suns and worlds. A great feat had been accomplished already. We had prepared a place for these suns and worlds, and that was a great point gained. Without a place for them, it would have been impossible to have produced them, and could we have created them, even, we could have done nothing with them without a place to put them in.

It may as well be borne in mind, then, that after preparing space to contain the universe, we rested from our labors and cogitated upon the great work still before us, for you must know that we could not think of engaging in such a vast enterprise without due thought and preparation. I think we must have rested four or five hundred years before we did much towards the universe save to contrive how the labor should be performed, in drawing up plans and specifications, and in talking over the best and most sensible way of perfecting what was in our minds to perform. Five hundred years soon passed away, and at the expiration of that term we felt equal to the grand work before us.

Can I ever tell you so that you can comprehend me how we began the manufacture of worlds? I fear I cannot, for the process of making something from nothing is most difficult to describe. Probably there is nothing in all the great deeds that have been performed since the morning of time so worthy a clear and explicit description as that great work of bringing substance from nothing—existence from nihility—but I can give you a very inadequate idea, for you must know that there had to be a beginning to everything that existed, and everything had to be created, and as at that time there was no matter in a solid form, in a fluid form, nor in a gaseous form, there was nothing to commence operations with.

It would have been comparatively a light task to have gotten up a universe, had we had the material at hand of which to manufacture it. We could have divided the forces and attractions that we afterwards brought into being, and caused the different substances to come into combination and form, had they only an existence. There was the great difficulty that we had to surmount; and probably there are not and never were two beings more capable of performing the godlike task than my Brother and myself. The world of mankind has given my Brother credit for doing this all alone by himself, but this is altogether a mistake. He had no more to do with it than I had. In fact, as I have always been a little more quick and active than he, I think I may fairly claim that I performed the largest share of the work. I was always more untiring than he was, and I could rest and recuperate quicker than he could. I have always noticed that. Besides, I could bear disappointment and adversity better than he could. If our plans did not go off all right the first time, he would get petulant and out of patience, and scold like a tired housewife, while I would remain as placid as a May morning and never get vexed at all. There is wherein I have always had the advantage over my fretful Brother.

If any of you entertain the slightest doubt of the difficulty of creating this grand old universe from nothing, you just try the experiment of making one pound, one ounce, or even one atom of any kind of substance from nothing. I will give you a hundred years, with all the books and all the wise men in all the nations of the earth; you may try as many experiments as you please, and test as many processes as you wish, and I will wager my very existence that you cannot succeed in making something from nothing, not even one grain. When you shall have experimented upon this for half a century, I think you will be willing to acknowledge that my Brother and I—if we did make this infinite universe from nothing, if we did bring existence from non-existence—are decidedly immense fellows, and all that we pretend to be, and eminently worthy of your highest esteem and veneration.

All that is necessary for me to do, is to convince you that I am making a true claim, that my Brother and I really did create the universe from nothing. I perceive that there is, and must be a slight difficulty in the matter. I shall be compelled to ask you, as the theologians do, to take some of my statements on faith. The fact is, it is so difficult to prove my assertions, or even to give you a clear understanding of what I wish to impress upon your minds, that I shall have to ask you to exercise a good deal of credulity or faith, and take considerable for granted. You must know that is the way all the metaphysicians and theologians do; they ask you to accept a great deal for granted, and that it is necessary for them to do so in order to make out a case. Now, as I am, in giving you the history of how we two got up the heavens and the earth and all that has an existence, pursuing, to some extent, the theories of those classes, you will see the propriety of my adopting their tactics.

Well, then, you must understand that after my Brother and I had rested about five hundred years, I began to think it was time to take in hand the vast contract we had resolved to carry to completion, and I urged him to throw off his lethargy, to arouse himself, and that we defer operations no longer. We had started time, and it was speeding away in an unexceptionable manner, but, as yet, there was nothing to mark it. We had made space and spread it everywhere, and in all the other places we could find, but up to that moment, there was nothing to put in all that vast vacuum. I tell you, that was the emptiest field of expanse that you can possibly imagine. For billions of trillions of quintillions of decillions of leagues in every drection, there was nothing—no worlds, no fluids, no gases, no atmosphere, no ether, no light, no heat, no magnetism, no electricity, no anything. The vast abyss aforesaid was one vacant, dark, empty void. All there was there was simply nothing, and that was all we had to commence business with. It was a pretty slim capital I assure you, and your friend, "Bob" Ingersoll, as I have remarked once before, hit the nail on the head exactly when he said, nothing, as a raw material, did not amount to much. It is decidedly the thinnest and lightest commodity that can possibly be imagined, but that is what we had to commence with, and that was all we had, and if, of this very diaphanous material, a universe could possibly be manufactured, we were just the boys to do it. We made the grand effort, and we were more than triumphant.

I said to Jah one day—I used to call him Jah, for short, and he used to call me Luce: "All we have to work with is this eternal nothing, to which there is no limit or bounds, and it devolves upon us to put it to some use and make something out of it. Now, there ought to be a shade of difference between this nothing in one extreme of space and that in the opposite extreme; now, if we can bring these two extremes together and mix them, perhaps we may produce some result. Let us start out in opposite directions, and let us go 987,000,000,000,000,070,000,010 leagues, and let us bring back with us a quantity of this nothing, and mix them together, and stir them thoroughly, and see what the result will be."

After debating the matter, without being able to suggest any better plan, we started out, taking a number of large sacks with us—never mind where we got the sacks—and we went, and went, and went—we evolved those sacks from our inner consciousness, come to think—and we went, and went—he, his way, and I, mine—and we went, and kept agoing until we got a long distance beyond nowhere, and when we thought we had traveled the distance prescribed, we filled our sacks with the nothing we found there, and made our way back to the starting point. I need not tell you how long it took us to make the journey, because that little matter is not of much consequence. You can easily understand, perhaps, that there was nothing in the way to impede our progress, and, as we were full of vigor and activity, that we could travel with a velocity of at least ten times that with which light or electricity travels now, so in due course of time we made the trip.

Then we tried our grand experiment of mixing the two specimens of nothing together—from the North and the South—and we stirred it, and blended it, and passed through it, and tested it, and we thought after the space of a few days that we began to perceive some result. We fancied there was a trifle of density in the compound—if compound it may be called. Then we stirred it more and more, and passed through it time and again, and we could perceive that it was acquiring a little the nature of ethereal substance, and in the course of several weeks, by dint of constant stirrings and manipulations, we were glad to find that it acquired the consistency of very thin air, perhaps the hundredth part of the weight of the atmosphere that surrounds your earth. You can hardly imagine how rejoiced we were when we discovered this result. We comprehended that if we had succeeded in making something, though extremely thin and light, by mixing two varieties of nothing together, that we had made a grand start towards getting up a universe. And let me tell you now, if you ever find yourselves outside of the present universe, where there is nothing at all, if you can only succeed in making a very light grade of something, the thinnest kind of ether or air, for instance, you will have made a very good start towards making a world.

This was what Jah and I had accomplished. We had made a beginning. We had discovered the secret of how to make something from nothing, and we had made our fortune. That was a long time before patent rights were secured, or possibly we might have availed ourselves of the right of obtaining a patent for our invention. But we were perfectly secure any way; there was nobody to steal our discovery or to take advantage of us, and as there has since been nobody able to produce the same result; we have had nothing to fear upon this ground.

As time passed along, and we found that by stirring and manipulating the thin ether we had produced, it acquired more consistence and activity, and that by stirring it forwards and backwards to the right and the left, different results, or different varieties of ether—slight it is true—were thus produced, we plucked up great courage; and the way we stirred and mixed and added more and more nothing to the thin mass was a caution to young gods, and our hopes and ambitions kept pace with the results produced.

We were glad to find, too, that we could extend the result we had accomplished, and that by stirring in more nothing from all the adjacent regions, we could increase almost indefinitely the quantity of ether we had produced. Having gained this point, we perceived we could extend the product we had accomplished throughout the entire domain of space. We saw the necessity of doing this, and in order to accomplish it, we stirred and stirred almost incessantly, and we got up currents and counter-currents so as to keep constantly blending the vast mass, and working in more nothing, and thus converted it into something. It was a great work to perform, and with all the ability we possessed, it taxed our powers to the utmost.

We found that the currents we had devised were of immense utility in saving labor, and we gave special attention to that branch of the business. That gave us the idea of the necessity of creating subtle forces like magnetism, attraction, electricity, affinity, etc. We perceived it was necessary to have these forces to permeate the mass of matter we had produced, and that they were necessary to give it life and activity. We could not be stirring it up ourselves all the while, and those subtle forces must perform that work for us. We produced those forces by agitation and friction. They were comparatively weak and imperfect at first, but by a vast amount of manipulation, we not only effected a starting point, but found we could, with this fulcrum and leverage, improve and extend our operations in this line to an unlimited extent.

But I must not weary you too much in a single letter. I have opened up the great mystery to you in this letter how something was made from nothing, with an inkling about the origin of the subtle forces of the universe, which you can believe just as much of as you please. I will recur to the subject again in my next letter, and explain to you how we produced more dense forms of matter from the thin ether we had been fortunate enough to prepare and extend through all the vast expanse we had established.

In the meantime, wishing you continued health and happiness, I am your devoted friend,

LUCIFER,
Vulgarly called "Splitfoot."

Communications.

A New Health Journal.

To save and bless the bodies of men as well as their souls; to promote physical purity and perfection, and to promulgate the glorious gospel of the laws of health; to distribute knowledge, and dissipate the dreadful shadows of disease; to redeem men from ignorance, vice, and degradation, and point out the pathway to peace and happiness; to redress wrong, and preach the righteousness of right living; to alleviate suffering, and add to the joys of human existence; to correct the antiquated abuses of the ages, and to usher in a more intelligent future—such is the mission of The Physiologist and Family Physician, a monthly paper published by the N. Y. Physiological Society, at $1,50 per year, under the editorial management of Sara B. Chase, A. M., M. D., Physiological rooms, No. 56 West 33d street, N. Y., to whom subscriptions and communications should be addressed.

The following table of contents of No. 1, will give an idea of the scope of the work proposed. "The Cause and Prevention of Disease," Walter S Bartlett. M. D.; "A Short Sermon upon Health;" "Equality of Women," Elizabeth Oakes Smith; "Husbands and Wives," Sara B. Chase, M. D.; "Ozone, the great Disenfecting and Sanitary Power in Nature," E. G. Cook, M. D.; "Poisonous Gases in Sleeping Apartments;" "Freaks and Follies of Fashion," S. H. Preston; "Better Beings Needed," S. B. C.; "When Conception becomes a Crime;" "The cause of Diseased Mental Conditions," Nelson Sizer; "Greeting," The N. Y. Physiological Soc'y; "Hints on Nursing the Sick;" "An easy mode of Ozoning a sick room;" "Constipation, its Pathology and Treatment;" "Constipation During Pregnancy;" "Constipation of Infants;" "Infanticide by Opium.—Case in Practice;" "Emergencies—Opium, Laudanum Poisoning, Antidotes;" "Domestic—New York Fashions, Recipes for Cooking;" "Questions Answered."

Subscriptions should be sent at once, as it is desired to issue the initial No. by the 1st of March, 1878. By order of the N. Y. Physiological Society,

S. H. PRESTON, Rec. Sec.

The Liberal League Platform.

EDITOR TRUTH SEEKER: Mr. John B. Wolff, in a letter addressed to "H. L. Green and all Liberal Leaguers in the United States," published in last week's TRUTH SEEKER, claims that the Liberal League platform is not comprehensive enough—does not include a sufficient number of planks—that it is a "one-idea" platform.

Friend Wolff will remember that when the American Colonies demanded independence, it was a "one-idea" demand, all other questions for the time being becoming subordinate to it. When William Lloyd Garrison and his compeers demanded the emancipation of the slave, they forgot, for the time being, that any other reform was required. This one, they considered the vital question of the hour. To-day every citizen of the United States who is not a Christian stands unequal before the law with his Christian neighbor. He is compelled in many ways to pay tribute to a religion he does not believe; to have his children, at his own expense, educated into a religion he deems false and pernicious. He is, in fact, deprived of his religious liberty. That is not all. There is already organized in this country a very large and influential party of Christians, banded together for the sole purpose of depriving Liberals of the few religious rights they still possess under the Government. Already, in various sections of the country, Liberals are being arrested, fined, imprisoned, and in some cases tortured, on account of their religious opinions, and these occurrences are becoming more and more common.

This state of things has convinced many that the question of the hour is "religious liberty;" and for myself, I am prepared to say, that until the Liberals of the United States stand equal before the law in every particular with other citizens, I will know no other political issue than this one. At present, Bro. Wolff, you and I are slaves under a Christian despotism, and until we are liberated I will not interest myself in other questions that bear on the Christan and Freethinker alike.

My Liberal friend, the Liberal League platform, in my humble opinion, is the second declaration of American independence; the three planks include the fundamental principles of a truly republican government:

1. "Total separation of Church and State."
2. "National Protection for National Citizens."
3. "Universal Education the Basis of Universal Suffrage."

This I think the grandest political platform ever laid down in this country, and if the Liberals of America are wise, they will arrange themselves upon it, in a body, and know nothing politically but this platform until its principles are incorporated into the Constitution of the United States and every man and woman, whatever may be his or her religious or non-religious views, stands, an American citizen, equal before the law with every other American citizen. To me all the other questions that friend Wolff mentions sink into insignificance compared with this.

Liberals of America, be assured that there is a new "irrepressible conflict" in this country, as momentous, if not more so, than the one recently settled by a bloody war. It is a conflict between Christian bigotry and religious liberty, which must be decided in a few years either one way or the other. And that decision will leave you slaves or free men. Are you prepared for the conflict, and resolved that it shall result in a victory for universal mental freedom and equal rights for all? H. L. GREEN.

Answers to Inquirers.

REPORTER.—Which daily paper in the United States has the largest circulation? Ans.—The New York Daily News has a circulation of 132,000; The Sun has 100,000; The Herald 65,000; The Times 35,000; The Tribune 30,000; The World 15,000.

J. B.—Do pagan nations date time from the supposed birth of Christ? Ans.—We know of no pagan nation that, in taking note of passing time, makes the least allusion to the birth of Christ. Christian nations alone enjoy a monopoly of this luxury.

W. S. B.—Please give the recipe for seidlitz powders. Ans.—Seidlitz mixture is composed of Rochelle salts, three parts; bi-carbonate of soda, one part. Of this mixture, dissolve in about a gill of water, two drams and two scruples, or one hundred and sixty grains, equivalent to a dessert spoonful, and in another tumbler, and in half a gill of water, dissolve thirty grains, or half a teaspoonful of tartaric acid; pour the two solutions together, and drink while effervescing. A good aperient and stomachic.

W. L. E. D.—A friend and I have had a dispute relative to the religious belief of Mrs. Elizabeth Thompson; will you please state what it is? Ans.—Mrs. Thompson is what may be called a conservative Liberal, in the broadest sense of the phrase. She has little reverence for ancient creeds and superstitions, but fully reveres all that is grand and good. She is effectually emancipated from dogmas and errors, but still does not belong to the most radical school. She is not an Atheist. She is a most generous lady, and has given for charitable and educational purposes fully $100,000

R.—Is not Christianity warmer than Infidelity? Ans.—Yes, if you mix in a free proportion of hell-fire, it is decidedly warmer; but it is a kind of warmth that is far from agreeable. In Infidelity—which is only another name for disfellowship with myths and dogmas and shams—exists all the warmth that belongs to human nature, and that is just about as much as mortals can enjoy and be happy with. When the fires of hell or of the stake are mixed in, the heat is too hellish to be enjoyable.

SUB.—What were the indecent passages of Scripture for quoting which George Francis Train was imprisoned for six months? Ans.—Among them were Gen. ix, 23; Gen. xvi, 1-12; Gen. xix, 1-6; Gen. xix, 30-36; Gen. xxx, 1-10; 14-17, 22-24, 25-30; Gen. xxxi, 19-35; Gen. xxxiv, 1-29; Gen. xxxv, 22; Gen. xxxviii, 6-30; Lev. xv, 1-33; Lev. xviii, 1-30; Lev. xxi, 27; Num. v, 12-22; Num. xxv, 1; Deut xxxii, 13-30; Deut. xxiii, 1, 2, and 12-14; Judges xix, 22-29, xxi, 11-23; 2 Sam. xi, 2-27; 2 Sam. xiii, 1-20; 2 Ezek. iv, 9-15; Ezek. xvi; Ezek. xxiii, 17-21, etc.

X.—If that sacred book, the Bible, is taken from us, how will we get along? Ans.—A great deal better than we do now. It costs this country at least $200,0 0,000 annually to get up our Bibles and to pay the black-coated gentlemen for expounding them; and after it is expounded to us, in at least forty-leven different ways, we don't know any more about it than we did before, nor are we benefited in the slightest degree by the expounding. If all that money was employed in providing homes for the homeless and in furnishing occupation to the unemployed, we should all be a great deal better off.

M. W. R.—Is it not a fact that to teach an utter disbelief in God tends to overthrow all virtue in man and woman? Ans.—It is by no means a fact. A belief in any or all of the thousands of gods which men have devised neither makes men any more humane, any more merciful, nor any more moral. Almost every god that men have acknowledged allegiance to for thousands of years has possessed monstrous and cruel characteristics, and their qualities have been more or less transferred to their worshipers. A belief in a god who kills or destroys or torments his own creatures to gratify his own spirit of revenge and hatred tends to make man cruel and hard-hearted. A belief in such gods is the great superstition around which all the other superstitions of the world have clustered and from which they all have sprung. The highest motive a man can have is to serve and bless his fellow-creatures, whom he can see and know; while it is the most abject servitude he can be guilty of to bow down and demean himself before an imaginary god, of whom he knows nothing and never can know anything.

M. W. R.—Will Infidelity make a man a better citizen—better to himself, and better to the community at large—than Christianity as taught by our orthodox ministers? Ans.—Perhaps, as a rule, a man's religious belief is not what most controls his actions. If he has the principles of truth and honor in his nature, he will act them out, let his religion be what it may. But it may be set down as a standing truth, that a religion which teaches that a man is going to heaven upon the merits of some other individual, and that his own actions have little influence upon his happiness here or hereafter, is not promotive of morality. The religion and moral ethics which teach men that their happiness depends upon their own conduct, and that their highest and only duties are to themselves and their fellow-beings, that the surest way to get to heaven is to make it here in this world, is the religion that best promotes human happiness. The best and grandest men the world has known were unbelievers in the Christian religion; and some of the meanest, cruelest, and most despicable, were those who claimed to be defenders of that system, and were ready and glad to put their fellow-creatures to death in the most cruel manner in the name of that religion.

H. B. L.—Please give me the origin of the Baptist Church—what particular Church it sprang from—the date and causes of its separation—also the date and cause of the separation of the present branches from the parent stem. Ans. Although there were several Baptists (in the sense of immersionists), among the Albigenses, Waldenses, and the followers of Wickliffe, it does not appear that they were formed into a sect or faction of any importance until Munzer, Stubner, and others in Germany began their wild fanatical, seditious, murderous, Anabaptist work in the year 1521. The Mennonites, divided into Flandrians and Waterlandians, are the surviving outcome of the great Anabaptist epidemic. They date from about 1536, and are called after Menno, who first organized the fanaticism into a form of stability. We may date the first public acknowledgement of the Baptists as distinct from the Anabaptists, from their petition to the English Parliament in 1620. It is probable that those of that time were General Baptists. About 1638 they entirely separated from the "Independents" in England, and set up for themselves; and having renounced their former baptism, they sent over one of their number to be immersed by one of the Dutch Anabaptists of Amsterdam, that he might be qualified to baptize his friends in England after the same manner. In 1644, the Baptists began to make a considerable figure in England, and spread themselves into several separate congregations. But five years previous to that, Roger Williams formed the first Baptist Church in America, at Providence. The principal Baptist sects are the General, who profess the doctrine of universal redemption; the Particular, who adopt the doctrine of particular election; the Disciples (or Campellites), who reject all symbols of faith except the Bible; the Seventh-Day Baptists, or Sabbatarians, who keep holy the seventh as against the first day of the week; the Free Will Baptists, who profess the doctrine of free salvation; the Tunkers, who are mostly distinguished for their simplicity of dress and manners; the Anti-Mission Baptists; the Six-Principle ditto; the Winnebrennarians; and last, but not least, the Hard-Shells. At one time, most of the Baptists were "Close Communion," but have of late been fast liberalizing in that respect. We find Baptists equally among Calvinists, Arminians, Trinitarians, and Unitarians, so diffused have been their peculiar ism among other sects. The Baptist Societies of all descriptions adopt the Independent or Congregational form of Church government, the ecclesiastical assemblies being simply advisory. See Zell, Buck, Haywood, and Cramp's History.

The Radical Pulpit.

Apocryphal Books of the New Testament.

A SUNDAY AFTERNOON LECTURE BY REV. O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

After stating the fact that the apocryphal books of the New Testament are made up of various gospels, letters, and visionary revelations by the primitive fathers among the early Christians, many of which books we have no knowledge of excepting by title and occasional reference by cotemporaneous authors, the speaker said that he should limit his remarks to a few of the more important gospels which had not been so fortunate as to be called "canonical." In the pleasant conversational tone which makes his afternoon talks so entertaining, he spoke as follows:

The dates of these writings are very uncertain. The oldest apocryphal gospels go back no further than the fourth century, and the latest reach on to the tenth. They were all written in Greek, for popular use entirely—not for ecclesiastical use. Their character is much misapprehended. The people who were not Christians, the so-called Infidels of the last century, made great account of these books, urging that they were of equal authority and as genuine as the gospels included in the New Testament, and that they were repressed by the orthodox authorities because they were dangerous to the authority of the Church or to the other gospels—that they contained utterances or statements of fact inconsistent with the recognized beliefs. This has been the general impression circulated through the anti-Christian world. Every now and then we see a statement to the effect that if it were only known what these gospels contain, the prestige of the Church would be overthrown. The simple facts are that the books are worthless, that they fell out of use by their own want of character, that they never had any respect among the dignitaries of the church. They had vogue in certain quarters. There were things in them that caused them to be spoken of respectfully at times, but as a whole, as a collection, they have never been respected. As to their being discarded or disowned by some ecclesiastical council, that of Nice in 325 for instance, it is doubtful whether any of these books were in existence at that time. The council of Nice did not entertain the question of the canon of the New Testament.

These writings have been collected together and edited at various times—the earlier editions in the dead languages. An English edition was published in the early part of the nineteenth century by a man by the name of Hone. He undertook to edit the apocryphal gospels in the interest of Infidelity as a class of books in dangerous competition with the New Testament. He divided them into chapters and gave them an extensive title, which made them pass for more than they were worth. Subsequently to his edition, other garbled editions were published in England, and you may find some of them for sale on the shelves of antiquarian book stores. They were worse than Hone's, edited without any ability whatever or any knowledge of the original text, for the simple purpose of undermining the reputation of the New Testament books. The reasons why these apocryphal books were discarded are unknown. The motives for writing them were several.

In the first place, there was a biographical need. The authentic accounts of Jesus are very scanty. Nothing is known of his infancy, youth, education, or early manhood. Next to nothing is known of the causes of his death, and nothing whatever of the stories in regard to his resurrection or ascension, or what passed between these two events. These gospels were written, and there were a great many of them, to fill up these gaps—to complete, as it were, the biography of Jesus, to tell what the accepted gospels did not, and to authenticate a great many passages which the gospels told, leaving out the the testimony.

The parentage of Jesus, the early days of his childhood, whether he went to school or not, whether he had companions like other children, whether he played like other children, whether he was brought up to a trade like other Jews of his time, whether he went into his father's shop, how he employed his time, what he and the doctors talked about in the temple, what passed between Jesus and the devil when he was tempted in the wilderness—filling up the gaps in the conversation—what passed on the Mount of Transfiguration when he held his sacred interview with the spirits of Moses and Elias—all these matters are fully elucidated. There was more evidence wanted in regard to his crucifixion, his death, burial, and resurrection, and the objects of these books was to supply such desiderata. Accounts were given of the descent of Jesus to the under world to fill up the interval of time, the three days between his crucifixion and resurrection—what became of him, how he went into hell, what transpired, whom he saw, who was there—all this information it was the object of these books to give. They were written with honest and earnest intent and with childlike simplicity by pious Christians who felt the deficiencies of the biography of Jesus.

In those days there were no means of deciding upon the value of a book except by the measure of its appreciation. Anybody wrote anything he pleased, and if a writing met a local demand, it had its vogue, its reputation, and its authority. It all depended on the welcome it received. If it fell, then no matter. If it did not, then it was taken up and quoted, read, kept and translated; and in the course of time, not a very long time either—especially if the welcome were cordial—it obtained a kind of authority.

